Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on House joint resolution 232, extending the operation of the act for the control and the regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes; and in that connection I ask unanimous consent for the reading of the accompanying statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York if the statement was printed in the RECORD?

Mr. SULZER. It was not. I ask unanimous consent now to have the statement read.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that in order to get it up he will have to ask unanimous consent to call up the conference report, because the rule has not been complied with in regard to printing the statement in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is the reason why the Chair asked the question. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. The Clerk will read the statement.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 446).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the resolution (H. J. Res. 232) extending the operation of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: To insert after the word "hereby," in line 4 of the resolution, the words "reenacted and"; and to strike out, in lines 5 and 6 of the resolution, the words "May 1, 1912," and insert in lieu thereof the words "March 4, 1913"; so that the resolution shall reads as follows:

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the aforesaid act be, and they are hereby, reenacted and extended from March 1, 1912, being the date of the expiration of said act, to March 4, 1913."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2 and 3: That the House concur in the amendments of the Senate numbered 2 and 3 to the preamble, viz, by striking out the word "expired" before the word "March" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "and further extended to"; and after the words "August 22, 1911," inserting the words "expires March 1, 1912"; so that the preamble shall read:

"Whereas the provisions of the act entitled 'An act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes,' approved June 29, 1906, and extended to June 29, 1911, by joint resolution (Public Res. No. 56), and further extended to March 1, 1912, by joint resolution (Public Res. No. 9), approved August 22, 1911, expires March 1, 1912."

And the Senate agree to the same.

WM. SULZER,
HENRY D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.
THEODORE E. BURTON,
ELIHU ROOT,
A. O. BACON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the resolution (H. J. Res. 232) extending the operation of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying report.

The resolution as it passed the House extended the so-called Burton Act regarding Niagara Falls to the 1st of May, 1912. The Senate extended it to the 1st of January, 1914. In conference it was agreed by the conferees to extend the so-called Burton Act to the 4th of March, 1913.

The entire matter is fully set forth in the conference report printed in the RECORD March 26, 1912.

WM. SULZER,
H. D. FLOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this conference report?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make this statement: I appreciate the fact that gentlemen on that side of the House come to the matter of making conference reports somewhat new, and therefore may be properly excused for not fully complying with the rules, and on this occasion I shall not object; but gentlemen who make conference reports must remember that it is quite necessary to have statements made in connection with them for the information of the House, and that the rule requires those statements to be made and printed in the RECORD. On this occasion I shall not object, but may do so in cases hereafter.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is technically correct, but the conference report sets forth the entire matter so fully and completely that it was not deemed necessary to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. No; but the rule requires the report and the statement. Has the gentleman any motion to make?

Mr. SULZER. I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of H. R. 19212, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 19212, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, with Mr. SIMS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering House bill 19212, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913.

The CHAIRMAN. There was a point of order pending when the committee rose.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to be heard briefly on the point of order. The pending question on Tuesday was as to whether the paragraph under consideration was subject to a point of order on the ground that there was no authority in existing law for the appropriation. I now have before me the treaty between this country and other countries establishing the International Institute of Agriculture, and I call attention to article 7 of that treaty, which reads as follows:

The permanent committee shall be composed of members designated by the respective Governments. Each adhering nation shall be represented in the said committee by one member.

That is the authority upon which we rely. That, of course, is existing law and provides for the appointment of this member of the permanent committee, for the payment of whose salary this appropriation is made.

Now, I desire to call the attention of the Chair, in connection with that——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from California if the pending point of order does not refer to the paragraph beginning with line 3 and ending with line 6, on page 16.

Mr. SULZER. The point of order is made against the paragraph beginning at line 3 on page 16.

Mr. HAYES. As I understand it, the point of order is against the paragraph beginning with line 3 and ending with line 6.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order was made against the paragraph beginning with line 3 and ending with line 6 on page 16.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the way the Chair understood it.

Mr. SULZER. That is the present law. That has been the law ever since this institution was created. There is absolutely no change in the words.

Mr. HAYES. Will the gentleman wait one moment? I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 3687 of Hinds' Precedents, volume 4, which reads as follows:

In the absence of a general law fixing a salary the amount appropriated in the last appropriation bill has been held to be the legal salary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to be very clear that existing law has created this member of the permanent committee from this country, and this item appropriates exactly the same amount, in exactly the same words, as was appropriated last year for the salary of this member of the permanent committee. to wit, the sum of $3,600. Therefore it seems to me very clear that the paragraph in question is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it not customary to use the word "hereafter" when it is proposed to make such appropriations in order in the future?

Mr. HAYES. So far as I have examined the precedents the decisions have been uniform in support of the rule, as I have stated it, without a single decision against it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The appropriation for last year simply appropriated that amount for the current year.

Mr. HAYES. That is all that is necessary.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But nowhere is it fixed as being the permanent law.

Mr. HAYES. It does not have to be in such a case as this. The treaty having created the position or given the authority of law for its creation, and the House having appropriated the amount to pay the salary of the position, under the decisions that is regarded as sufficient authority of law for a further appropriation to pay the salary for the following year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is it the gentleman's contention that if an amendment is offered to this or any other appropriation bill, making a new appropriation, it may not be properly challenged by the point of order, even if a previous appropriation had been made, but which had not been specifically authorized by law?

Mr. HAYES. I will say, in reply to the gentleman, that the decisions are absolutely uniform without a single exception; that in such a case, under the present rules, an amendment offered to this section increasing the salary could be stricken out on a point of order. According to the decisions the salary is fixed by the appropriation of the last year, in the absence of other statutory authority fixing the salary. There is not a single exception to this, as far as I have been able to find.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California rely on the language of the treaty as authority for the making of the appropriation?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly; that is the law creating the position, and I rely upon the language of the appropriation bill of the last Congress as fixing the salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist that the language of the treaty is the existing law authorizing an appropriation?

Mr. HAYES. Absolutely.

Mr. MANN. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I believe I made a point of order against this paragraph in the bill when it was under consideration at the previous session of Congress; but after an examination of the treaty I came to the conclusion that the point of order would not lie against the item, because the treaty provides for the creation of the position. It does not provide for the salary; but under the interpretation of the rules, which is constantly made, the salary in the current law, if followed in the pending bill, is sufficient authority for the salary fixed in the present bill, so it seems to me that the point of order does not lie.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. SULZER. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of the language of the treaty, the Chair would be inclined to hold that there is no legislation authorizing it; but the attention of the Chair has been called to the language of the treaty, and the Chair is satisfied that the point of order is not well taken under the rule. The point of order is therefore overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the expenses of delegates to the next General Assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, to be held at Rome, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of State.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] gave notice that he would make a point of order against it.

Mr. MANN. I will say that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] is not present, being detained on account of illness in his family to-day, or he would have made the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. In that connection I am requested by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] to ask that he be given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] wishes to extend his remarks already made.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Missouri asked me, on account of his absence because of sickness in his family, to make a request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FOSTER. On this subject, in the speech that he made the other day.

Mr. SULZER. I have no objection to the gentleman from Missouri having leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he is making a point of order or reserving it?

Mr. FOSTER. I am reserving it for the present.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to discuss the point of order. If it is in order, I will state that this paragraph, from line 7 to line 11, clearly is not subject to the point of order any more than the former paragraph. In that connection I want to call attention to article 2 of the treaty, which provides:

The institute shall be composed of the general assembly and a permanent committee, the composition and duties of which are defined in the ensuing articles.

Article 3 says:

The general assembly of the institute shall be composed of the representatives of the adhering Government. Each nation, whatever be the number of delegates, shall be entitled to the number of votes in the assembly which shall be determined according to the group to which it belongs, and to which reference will be made herein in article 10.

In article 10 it is provided that this country comes in group 1, which entitles us to five votes in the general assembly. The general assembly is created by this law, and this provision in the bill is intended to pay the expenses of the delegates to that general assembly from this country.

As has already been stated, a similar appropriation was made to defray the expenses of delegates from this country to the general assembly who attended at the last general assembly, and I can see no possible ground for a point of order against this provision of the bill. Clearly this general assembly is provided for in the existing law, and it certainly will not be claimed that when this general assembly is provided for the House has no authority to pay its expenses. It seems to me very plain that it is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I concur substantially in all that the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] has said regarding this provision of the bill. By virtue of the treaty it is provided as follows in article 3:

> Each nation, whatever be the number of delegates, shall be entitled to the number of votes in the assembly, which shall be determined according to the group to which it belongs.

Under this provision of the treaty the Government of the United States has been represented by delegates at Rome. The last delegation from this country consisted of the late Congressman Foster of Vermont, Representative Scott, of Kansas, Mr. Durand, of the Census Bureau, a representative from the Agricultural Department, and a representative, I believe, from the State Department. There is no doubt as to just what this provision in the treaty means. It means that this Government shall be represented at these congresses, and I call the attention of the Chair to the law on page 1290 of Statutes at Large, Sixty-first Congress, which says:

> For the payment of expenses of delegates to the general assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture to be held at Rome during the year 1911, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be immediately available.

Here is a precedent. This provision in the present appropriation bill is identical with the provision carried in the last appropriation bill. Hence, in my judgment, in view of the treaty and in view of the existing law, the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois is untenable under our rules.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, there is, in my judgment, no doubt that according to this treaty we are expected in carrying it out to pay the expenses of a delegate to the institute to be held in Rome. Now, this provision of the law provides for five delegates and an appropriation of $10,000.

Mr. SULZER. It does not say so.

Mr. FOSTER. The fact is, the treaty does not provide how many delegates we shall send to this institute, but it does provide for the one which has been declared in order and which is in the bill so far read.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman is mistaken; we have not made any provision for a delegate in the bill.

Mr. FOSTER. In the paragraph we have just passed.

Mr. KENDALL. That is not for a delegate.

Mr. FOSTER. That is for a permanent delegate.

Mr. SULZER. That is for our member—our permanent representative there. Quite a different matter.

Mr. KENDALL. He is not a delegate at all.

Mr. HAYES. He is a member of the permanent committee who resides in Rome. The delegates to the general assembly are entirely different.

Mr. KENDALL. They are in addition to the permanent delegate.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, the general assembly is a legislative body that meets once in two years. The delegates are entirely different from the member of the permanent committee. The paragraph that has just been passed provides for a member of the permanent committee who resides in Rome and remains there permanently, whereas this paragraph applies to the delegates to the general assembly, which is a biennial meeting of the representatives of the different governments in a sort of agricultural parliament.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I want to reenforce what the gentleman from California said. Last year, when the meeting of this institute was held in Rome, our representative was there—that is, the representative which has been provided for in the second section of this item. The member of the permanent committee of the International Institute, Mr. Lubin, of California, was there at that time, but he is not regarded or designated as a delegate as contemplated in the third provision. The delegates were Representative Foster, Representative Scott, an official of the Department of Agriculture, the Supervisor of the Census, and a representative from the State Department.

This provision that we are now considering relates to defraying the expenses of the delegates who shall be appointed to attend the institute the coming year, and has no connection at all with the permanent representation that we maintain there. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say further that this treaty provides for biennial meetings of the assembly. We appropriated last year for delegates under that treaty, and admitting that that is true, we would not be liable this year for another appropriation under the treaty.

Mr. HAYES. This is for the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. MANN. When is the meeting to be held?

Mr. HAYES. Next year.

Mr. MANN. If it is held before the 1st of July this appropriation would not be available.

Mr. SULZER. It will be held early next year.

Mr. KENDALL. It is to be held in May, 1913. It is held biennially.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I do not think we should be called upon to make an appropriation each year for this purpose.

Mr. HAYES. We had no appropriation last year; that was in the nature of a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. The chairman of the committee says that we did have an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. SULZER. To pay the expenses of the preceding congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield? I want to ask him a question, as he has given considerable attention to this matter. I want to ask him if this institute is a good thing, and if the delegates are necessary, is it necessary to have so many delegates as is provided for here?

Mr. SULZER. There is no number designated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They provide for expenses of delegates.

Mr. SULZER. Of course, that is all.

Mr. FOSTER. They provide for $10,000. I suppose that is more than one.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; five delegates attended the last congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They had five two years ago, did they not?

Mr. HAYES. Five, yes; at the last assembly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was supposing that five would be sent next year.

Mr. KENDALL. Not necessarily at all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. They are going to use up all of the appropriation.

Mr. KENDALL. They did not use it all last year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman shocks me. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the gentleman from Illinois give his views of the language of article 2 of the treaty wherein it says that the international institute of agriculture is to be a Government institution in which each adhering power shall be represented by the delegate of its choice.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we provided for delegates.

Mr. SULZER. No; Mr. Lubin is a member. He is not a delegate.

Mr. FOSTER. We provide for a member who is permanently located there.

Mr. KENDALL. He has no vote in this institute at all.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that is the provision that refers to the delegate that we have there all the time, to whom we pay $3,600 a year. But even if that is true, it is not in order to make an appropriation this year when the treaty provides that it shall be biennial. It is not in order to appropriate each year.

Mr. SULZER. No appropriation was made for this last year.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg the gentleman's pardon. He has just read from the law in which an appropriation was made.

Mr. SULZER. That was the year before.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no; it was last year.

Mr. SULZER. I will ask the gentleman to look at the law.

Mr. FOSTER. This is 1911.

Mr. KENDALL. For expenses to be incurred in May, 1913.

Mr. SULZER. I have here the appropriations for last year, and I will show them to the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. It is right here.

Mr. SULZER. That is the law of the year before.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman read it.

Mr. SULZER. I did; but it is the law of the year before. Last year's appropriation bill carried no appropriation for delegates to this international agricultural congress.

Mr. KENDALL. It carries it only biennially.

Mr. SULZER. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Last year the bill carried an appropriation that was made immediately available.

Mr. SULZER. That was a deficiency appropriation for the expenses the year before.

Mr. HAYES. It was in the nature of a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. FOSTER. If that is true, I do not think we should make one this year.

Mr. SULZER. This appropriation is for next year.

Mr. HAYES. And you will have to have a deficiency appropriation next year if you do not make this appropriation this year.

Mr. SULZER. That is about correct.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in looking at this treaty I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that article 3 of the treaty provides that delegates may be sent to this assembly, but there is nothing in the treaty that provides how these delegates may be selected.

Mr. KENDALL. The Chair has ruled on that point.

Mr. SISSON. This committeeman, upon provision for which the Chair has just ruled, is a part of a permanent organization, and this committeeman lives at Rome, but until this Congress shall by some law, by some statute, designate the authority to carry into effect the appointive power so that this Government may have an official representative, there is absolutely no law for this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Mississippi what this language means as contained in article 2:

The international institute of agriculture is to be a Government institution, in which each adhering power shall be represented by delegates of its choice.

Mr. SISSON. How can the United States Government, unless there is some legislation upon the subject, have representatives there to represent it, unless by law we provide the manner in which they shall be selected? Who has the authority to name them? The Secretary of Agriculture? The Speaker of the House of Representatives? The Vice President of the United States? The governor of some of the different States? The chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce? The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs? How are you going to be able to determine under this treaty how these representatives may be selected? I challenge these gentlemen who are advocating the making of this appropriation as authorized by law to show me one line of authority anywhere in the treaty, and so far as I have been able to see in the statute one single authority authorizing the Congress to make this appropriation, because there is no authority whereby men may be legally selected to represent the United States Government at this meeting. The Government might do so. This would be the basis for the legislation. This would be that basis which would lead up to a representation which would guarantee that this conference would be held, and that this conference would have representatives from the various Governments; that it would not be a failure; but this treaty does not bind the Federal Government at all until the Federal Government shall devise a method by which it will select its own representatives; and until some law is passed giving somebody the right to select them there is not a line or a syllable which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to appoint anyone, or that authorizes the President of the United States to do it. There is nothing that authorizes the Secretary of State to do it.

Mr. HAYES. Oh, yes.

Mr. SISSON. Not a line.

Mr. HAYES. Not in the treaty.

Mr. SISSON. Where is the law for it?

Mr. HAYES. It has been done right along.

Mr. SISSON. There is absolutely no law authorizing this to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair is not without doubt on this matter, but it seems to the Chair that anything like a fair and reasonable construction of article 2 of the treaty authorizes an appropriation to pay the expenses of delegates therein authorized.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the Chair indulge me for a minute? Has the Chair decided?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to hear the gentleman.

Mr. FOSTER. I just want to call the Chair's attention to a further matter. Article 10 says that at no time shall the expenses ever exceed 2,500 francs.

Mr. HAYES. Per vote.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not say anything of the kind. The gentleman has not read it and I have, and I know what it says.

Mr. SULZER. The treaty says, Mr. Chairman, article 10:

The number of votes which each nation shall have and the number of units of assessment shall be established according to the following graduations.

We are entitled to a certain number of votes in this congress, and our pro rata share of the expense is assessed according to the number of votes we have. The gentleman is taking the unique position that, although we have under the treaty these votes in this congress, we must not send anybody there to represent us and to do our voting. It would be absurd for us to be charged for our votes in this congress and then send nobody there to do the voting.

Mr. HAYES. I call the gentleman's attention to the wording of article 10, which provides that not more than 2,500 francs per unit. Now, we have 16 units, and this has nothing whatever to do with the expense for this assembly, but for the general expenses of the institute.

Mr. SULZER. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels constrained to overrule the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph beginning with line 7 and concluding with line 11.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a preferential motion. I move to strike out, on page 16, line 9, the word "ten" and insert the word "three," so as to read "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, line 9, by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "three."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, last year there was appropriated $10,000, which was made immediately available, and under that appropriation five delegates were appointed to attend this congress or institute, absolutely, in my judgment, there being no occasion for sending five over there to represent the United States. It may be a very pleasant trip for certain gentlemen to make, but two delegates are amply sufficient—one might be, but two are amply sufficient—and the $3,000 would pay the expenses of two delegates to this institute on the same basis that a little less than $8,000 paid the expenses of five delegates. It seems to me that this institute, which is nothing very great at the best, is well taken care of by the United States, so far as we are concerned, when we provide the expenses of one gentleman as a permanent committee and two other gentlemen as special delegates from this country to go over to that institute—quite enough.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois let me say that this institute is doing a great world work. It is making unique experiments and disseminating valuable information, and it is all benefiting beyond the conception of the finite mind the farmers of our country and the consumers of this country; and anything that will contribute to our agricultural resources, anything that will help the consumers of our country along the line of getting the necessaries of life cheaper is a world work that demands the favorable consideration of every Representative in this House. It will be a mistake to strike out this provision or to reduce this appropriation. The Committee on Foreign Affairs have carefully considered this matter. We have been economical. We have been careful. We have pruned these estimates just as much as we possibly could. We have been criticized for cutting down some of the appropriations, but I want to repeat that we have cut no appropriation that we deemed necessary for the adequate administration of the service. We did not cut this appropriation because we deemed it as essential for the good of the country as any other appropriation in this bill, and I earnestly submit the whole matter to the sober, sensible judgment of the Members of the House and ask them to stand by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in our efforts to do something to decrease the cost of living of the consumers of our country.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, the question is not whether we are going to interfere with agriculture here or elsewhere. Crops will still be planted and will go on growing, and perhaps under the direction of the present Secretary of Agriculture, who is himself a good deal like Tennyson's brook. The question is whether the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Illinois is a practical one and ought to be adopted. This paragraph in the bill provides for the expenses of delegates $10,000. He proposes to cut that appropriation to $3,000. If he had cut it to $2,000 it would have been 33⅓ per cent better in my judgment. Two delegates will certainly be an abundantly large representation from this country to the institute, which he says at its best is not any great shakes. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be adopted.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Certainly; or I will yield the gentleman the floor.

Mr. GARRETT. Whether or not he can state, and if he can not state if he will yield to the gentleman from New York to state, if he knows of a single instance in which a single thing has been done by this institute that has helped in any respect whatever any farmer in the United States.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will tell the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Chairman, that when this bill was up here on Monday, or Tuesday, perhaps——

Mr. GARRETT. Tuesday.

Mr. SLAYDEN (continuing). I asked for that same information and earnestly entreated the gentlemen who were the proponents of the measure to put their finger on one single instance. That has not been done as yet. Perhaps the gentleman from California, who is hopeful and optimistic, may be able to suggest some benefit, and I yield for him to do so.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman. I want to say in regard to this matter that the figures collected by the Agricultural Department of this country relating to the products of the soil I believe to be one of the best functions that that department performs. The fact that that information is valuable is proved by the fact that the cotton speculators not long ago bribed the employees of the Department of Agriculture who had that information to give it out to them in advance of the official publication thereof. If it was not valuable they would not pay money and take the chances of the prosecution that would follow as a result of that information being given out prematurely.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman inform me how many countries take part in this institute?

Mr. HAYES. Fifty—practically all the world.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And how many delegates do other countries send to that institute?

Mr. HAYES. Other countries of like size as the United States send five delegates.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then to reduce this down to two would be to diminish our influence to that extent?

Mr. HAYES. Yes; but not our votes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; but generally it would indicate a lack of interest on the part of this country?

Mr. HAYES. Exactly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. All the votes could be cast by two delegates as well as five?

Mr. HAYES. They can.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Then that is an argument for one delegate.

Mr. HAYES. Now, Mr. Chairman, this International Institute of Agriculture is an official institution just as much as the Agricultural Department of the United States is, and the statistics which it is collecting are collected officially, just as those are collected officially which are collected in this country by our Government and in Austria and Russia and every other civilized country in the world by their respective Governments. The statistics are collected and furnished from the International Institute of Agriculture to every country that is a party to the treaty, ourselves included. Those statistics are collected and published and disseminated in exactly the same manner as ours are in regard to the agricultural interests of this country.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from California contend that without representation on our part in this International Institute of Agriculture we could not get those statistics?

Mr. HAYES. Yes. There is no other avenue that is known by which this information can be collected.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman does not mean to say that this information is collected through the institute?

Mr. HAYES. I do.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it collected by the institute itself?

Mr. HAYES. Each country collects the information respecting its own territory. The information that is collected by our Agricultural Department is communicated to this International Institute of Agriculture, and by it it is communicated to all the other countries officially, and the same way with the other parties to the treaty.

Mr. GARRETT. And the gentleman states that without this institute that information could not be obtained from the other countries?

Mr. HAYES. That is it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. HAYES. In a moment. It is true that in this country, prior to the collection of these statistics by our Agricultural Department, and in other countries prior to the establishment of the International Institute of Agriculture, those statistics were furnished to the various commercial organizations at their expense, and they were entitled to that information, only it was not a matter of public property at all. Now this information comes officially, and it can be communicated officially to the various countries, and through those various countries the producers of cotton and wheat and corn and other products of the soil are supplied with the most reliable information regarding the crop conditions that can be found anywhere in the world, and therefore these producers can not be taken advantage of by speculators in the products of the soil. That is why I am in favor of it.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYES. I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I would like to have two or three minutes more.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT. Do I understand the gentleman to say, for instance, that the cotton statistics that are gathered by this Government are not communicated to England and to the English dealers in cotton except through this institute?

Mr. HAYES. That is what I say; officially communicated; yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman from California know that on the very day those figures are given out here they are cabled to the remotest parts of the world?

Mr. HAYES. I know that; but the gentleman will understand that they are communicated officially to this International Institute of Agriculture, so that they are given out simultaneously all over the world. That is the thing which the gentleman does not seem to see the force of.

Mr. GARRETT. Does not the gentleman know that through the medium of the Associated Press and the various other newspaper agencies the very moment our agricultural statistics are made public they are cabled all over the world without being communicated directly by the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. SLAYDEN. In 15 minutes after their promulgation they are available to every broker's office in this country and Europe.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; but as soon as they are collected they become the property of the International Institute of Agriculture.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What does the gentleman mean by saying "they become the property of the International Institute of Agriculture"?

Mr. HAYES. They are all furnished officially then to the whole world.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from California now admits that there is an instantaneous communication of the crop reports all over the world without this?

Mr. HAYES. No. There would be no such reports without this institute. That is what the gentleman does not understand.

Mr. SISSON. If that is so, it would be just as useless with respect to other crop reports as it is with the cotton crop.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman must understand that most of the other countries of the world have not had such a collection of statistics as we have had up to the time of the establishment of this institute, and the proposition here is not so much to have the crop conditions of the United States brought home to us, but rather the crop conditions of the outside world brought to us.

Mr. SISSON. The Governments of France, England, and Germany have had their own crop statistics.

Mr. HAYES. Yes; but until five or six years ago there were no such statistics of agricultural products collected in other countries.

Mr. SISSON. Until five or six years ago we had none in this country.

Mr. HAYES. Oh, yes; we had.

Mr. MANN. In this country we have had the collection of official crop statistics for a great many years.

Mr. HAYES. Very true.

Mr. GARRETT. This matter of the International Institute of Agriculture has been before us ever since I have been a Member of this House, and I am anxious to know about it. What does this institute do except to collect statistics?

Mr. HAYES. It takes care of the welfare of the agricultural industry all over the world. It is a new institution. It has been in operation only about four years. We can not expect that it will revolutionize the agricultural industry of the world in one year. It is an enormous institution. It has not got into full operation yet.

Mr. GARRETT. I am asking the gentleman from California what it does besides gather and communicate statistics?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. With the permission of the gentleman from California I will answer the question of the gentleman from Tennessee as to what it does. Is it not a fact that this institute investigates and studies and reports upon the question of plant diseases all over the world, and gets the accumulated wisdom of the world on those subjects and distributes it to individual farmers over the country? This work is of great benefit to the agricultural interests of this country and I trust will be retained in the bill.

Mr. HAYES. That is what I say.

Mr. MANN. Does any individual farmer ever get a copy of it?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Oh, yes. You can send for it and get a copy of it.

Mr. MANN. I do not believe that any individual farmer has ever got a copy of it.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. You can get it if you make application for the bulletins.

Mr. HAYES. I believe I have the floor, unless my time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. If the gentleman asks me a question like that in good faith, I will answer it, because I happen to know something about farming; but I know it is not asked in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks that sufficient order be maintained to enable the Chair to know who is addressing the Chair.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to know who has the floor.

Mr. SULZER. I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] has the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Just a moment ago it was very confusing for us back here to try to tell which one of the 12 gentlemen on his feet had the floor.

Mr. SULZER. In reply to my friend from Tennessee, let me call his attention to the statement made by Mr. Olmsted, the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics in the Agricultural Department, who appeared before the committee and whose testimony is printed in the hearings. He stated that he was a delegate to the last agricultural congress in Rome of the International Institute of Agriculture.

Owing to that fact—

and my personal touch with the institute—that was why I came here to-day. This originated through the efforts of an American citizen, Mr. David Lubin. The American people felt the need of world information concerning agriculture. Mr. Lubin was a man of large fortune and he interested the various governments of the world in it, primarily the Kingdom of Italy and then the other kingdoms. He was the instigator of the adoption of an international treaty to which the United States Government is a party. That treaty was ratified in 1905. When I was at Rome last May there were 48 countries at that hearing. All the principal governments of the world and some unimportant ones; and since then two other governments have come in, making 50; and they now embrace practically the entire civilized world, with a few minor exceptions. These countries have bound themselves by a solemn obligation to sustain the institute pro rata.

You asked me, Mr. SULZER—

what the institute was doing. I have samples of what it is doing. There is a bulletin issued every month containing crop statistics. Prior to the report the institute sends a cablegram to the Department of Agriculture, so that we have the information promptly, and that is sent to the press. In addiion to that they issue a bulletin on plant diseases, and that report contains the accumulated wisdom of the world. Another bulletin issued deals with cooperation among farmers. It gives the information to us. The yields are greater than for centuries, and we grow more pro rata because of our improved scientific culture. How do these books get the best information? Because they boil down the information gathered throughout the world. These documents are now in English, but they have been translated into English out of the surplus fund.

Mr. BOWMAN. Regarding the necessity of sending delegates to this convention, is it not the purpose to send experts in their several branches of knowledge, so that a general knowledge of the subject may be given to this country?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; and I will say that there is an adage in a Great Book, recognized as an authority throughout the civilized world, that "in a multitude of counsel there is much wisdom." Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. The Clerk will again report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 9, strike out the word "ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "three."

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 33, noes 43.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SISSON. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Page 16, strike out the paragraph beginning with line 7, down to and including line 11.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, it strikes me that when you look at the personnel of this committee of five delegates who went to the last meeting, you will discover that they were not the great scientists they purported to be. It seems to me this is rather a junket that some gentlemen want to take, and the expenditure of $10,000, or $2,000 apiece, to go and spend a few days over in Italy attending this conference is an outrageous expenditure of public money. I have no doubt in the world, after the vote which has just been taken, that the committee will vote down my motion to strike this out, but I shall give this committee and these so-called economists an opportunity to determine whether or not they mean what they say. I have heard a great deal about economy from Democrats when the Republicans were in power and voting the money. But if such items as this go in many bills little economy will be accomplished. Now, that we have a majority and have the opportunity to cut out useless expenditures, let us make good our promises and not make ourselves ridiculous before the country.

Mr. BURLESON. That remark will be quoted on every stump in the country this fall.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman says my remark will be quoted. I have no objection to that. When Democrats continue the extravagance of Republicans, they ought to be quoted, and they ought to bear the brunt before the American people. I do not believe in playing hide and seek on these propositions, because, as far as I am concerned, I am a real economist.

Mr. HAY. Does the gentleman know how much money has been saved on the appropriation bills which have already been passed by the Democratic majority of this House?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that one cent has been saved yet. I know that we have cut down some estimates here, but I have got to wait to see what those committees are going to do in conference, and I have got to wait to see what the Democrats are going to do when those conference reports come back here.

Mr. HAY. In my judgment the gentleman ought to be a little more charitable to his colleagues on this floor, and not put the Democratic Party in a false position.

Mr. SISSON. I do not put my colleagues in a false position. If the facts show no economy it will not be a false but a true position. I hope that the conferees of the Democratic committees will stand squarely by the economies that they have undertaken; but when he asks me how much they are going to save I can not tell him. I do know that several million dollars were saved in the Army bill reported by his committee, for which I commend him, and I trust that the other committees will do as well. But before we can boast of economy we must make good our promises. If our conferees will stand by their guns we can effect some economy, but if we fail and the extravagance continues, then we are ridiculous.

Here is an opportunity that we have to cut off thirty-odd thousand dollars of useless expenditure.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Is the gentleman aware that this bill is $600,000 less than the bill for the same purpose passed by the last session of Congress?

Mr. SISSON. My information is that it is considerably less, but this bill is not passed yet, and it is not a law. Why not save $30,000 here and now?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Does the gentleman think it is fair to criticize the Democratic Party for extravagance, in view of the fact that the committee has reported a bill carrying $600,000 less than the Republican committee reported it in the last session for a similar purpose?

Mr. SISSON. I want to say that I commend them for every legitimate economy. I do not believe that every time you reduce an appropriation it means economy. On the contrary, there are many items that ought not to be reduced and many items that ought to be increased, but if there is one single extravagant item in the bill it does not justify the Democratic Party for leaving it there. We ought to cut it out. It is criminal to leave it in.

Mr. GARRETT. I want to say that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is to be congratulated in making a saving of over $600,000 in making up this bill, and I think they can go further and add a saving of $30,000 additional by cutting off this item.

Mr. SISSON. And I am willing to help the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Virginia to show more Democratic economy. Let us practice what we preach.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, I submit that in the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs this appropriation is necessary. It is money well spent. It will be a great mistake to strike the provision out of the bill. We have economized in every way we possibly could. We have been criticized to some extent for the way we have economized and yet we take these criticisms good-naturedly. They come from outside sources. However, I think it comes with very bad grace from a Democrat to criticize us for not going further along the lines of economy than we did. We went as far as we could consistently with common sense. We endeavored not to be penny wise and pound foolish. We are willing to take the judgment of the House.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say to the gentleman that I am not charging him with the entire fault of leaving these items in here. I charge his Democratic colleagues on this side of the House and those who have followed him in the wrong direction and the Republicans over there who have followed him.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, my friend is in error. We cut the estimates submitted in this appropriation bill $652,206, and the bill in its present shape carries appropriations of over $560,255 less than the appropriations in the bill of last year. That speaks for itself. That is saving some money for the taxpayers. I want to impress on the Members of the House that this appropriation bill, all told, carries only $3,427,000. Just think of it. We are appropriating only three and a half million dollars for one of the greatest and most useful departments of our Government, the Department of State, which stands for peace and commerce and friendship with all nations. We appropriate over $100,000,000 for the Army—that is for war. We appropriate over $100,000,000 for the Navy—that is for war. We appropriate over $150,000,000 for pensions—that is for war. And yet for peace and commerce we appropriate only about three and one-half million dollars. What a comparison! What a commentary on war and peace! And for every dollar that this Government spends for its foreign service, for the administration of our State Department, the citizens of America receive back, directly or indirectly, a hundred dollars for one, and everybody familiar with history knows it. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, that is all I want to say. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, of the cost of translating into and printing in the English language the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. Under the treaty we are expected to pay our proportion of the expenses of this institute. The treaty provides that certain things shall be done, and among them is the printing and distribution of this information which is gathered by the delegates to the institute. We have appropriated in a previous item in this bill for the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1913, $4,800. It occurs to me that this item is included in that item of $4,800, and therefore I think that this paragraph is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois in what article of the treaty does he find a provision for the payment of printing?

Mr. FOSTER. While it does not say exactly for printing, article 9 provides what this institute shall do. I do not think there can be found any authority anywhere in the treaty providing for the translation of this information into another language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not find any provision in the treaty which seems to cover the expenses for translation, but he understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that there was such a provision.

Mr. FOSTER. It was provided for in the expenses for the dissemination of information.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in article 9 of the treaty it provides what the institute shall do, what publications shall be issued, and, of course, all that is done in a foreign language. In order that the people of the English-speaking countries may be able to utilize this valuable information it must be translated into the English language.

In view of what the institute is doing, the American delegates decided informally, after consultation, and subject, of course, to the approval of Congress, that an English edition of the publications ought to be secured by direct appropriation on the part of the English-speaking countries adhering to the institute.

The estimated cost of translating into English and printing these documents is about $12,000 per annum, of which amount the delegates from the United States are of the opinion that the United States should contribute $5,000, leaving the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Dominion of Canada, and other English-speaking countries to contribute the remaining amount needed.

It is therefore recommended by the delegates that in the next estimate submitted by the Department of State to Congress an item of $5,000 be included, in addition to other moneys appropriated for the institute and for the payment of delegates thereto, as a proper amount for the United States to contribute as its share of the cost of translation of the publications into English and their printing in that language. There was an informal understanding with the executive officers of the institute that if this were done the institute would supply as many English copies of each document to the United States as is possible on the basis of its contribution, which publications will be subject to distribution by our Government, either through the Department of State or through the Department of Agriculture, or otherwise. It is believed that these copies might advantageously be distributed free of charge to agricultural colleges, agricultural societies and institutions, and the leading agricultural papers of the United States. So much for that. In regard to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to say that if it be sustained we will place ourselves in the anomalous position of appropriating money to maintain the institution, of participating in its deliberations, and then refusing to appropriate needed money to utilize and disseminate the information. What will the taxpayers of our country think of that kind of foolish legislation? It is too absurd for serious discussion.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to article 9, which provides for collecting and publishing the information:

To collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical, technical, or economic information concerning farming, both vegetable and animal products, commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets.

It seems to me there is plenty of authority for providing for the expenses of this publication. I do not see how it can be otherwise.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not provide for translating it.

Mr. HAYES. I should say it would be included. It can not be published unless it is published in the language of the country so that it can be read.

Mr. FOSTER. It can be published, however.

Mr. HAYES. That is plain to me. You can not publish a thing unless you publish it so that the people can understand it. Would the gentleman think that publishing in the Chinese language was publishing within the meaning of a statute of the United States? Of course not. It has to be published in the language of the country.

Mr. SULZER. That is self-evident.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman does not mean to make that sort of a statement.

Mr. HAYES. I do, indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the gentleman does not understand the situation at all.

Mr. HAYES. The gentleman does.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman does not, because it may be published in any other language.

Mr. HAYES. But it could not be published in this country.

Mr. FOSTER. It does not say that it shall be published in the English language.

Mr. HAYES. It says that it shall be published.

Mr. FOSTER. This is a treaty of all the Governments of the world.

Mr. HAYES. It is to be given to the public. That is what "publishing" means. How is it to be given to the public if it is not printed in the language that they understand?

Mr. FOSTER. Just as they have given a lot of them out—printed in a foreign language.

Mr. HAYES. That is a very narrow construction.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there are 48 countries adhering to this institute.

Mr. SULZER. Fifty now.

Mr. HAYES. It is growing.

Mr. MANN. Fifty. I am willing to accept the amendment. There were forty-eight when the last report was made. It is quite evident, Mr. Chairman, that if this provision were to publish the proceedings of this institute in Chinese it would be subject to a point of order; but so far as the treaty is concerned there is no distinction between our appropriating money for the publication in the Chinese language and the publication in the English language. The treaty provides for the publication of the proceedings. That is something for the committee in control to determine. Here is a proposition to make a special appropriation for a special publication in a special language. The fact that we speak English is no more justification, so far as the point of order is concerned, for making an appropriation to publish this in the English language than it would be to have it published in the Chinese language. It is for the board in control to determine; and I take it that we have no authority to make an appropriation to publish it in any special language, because that is a change of the authority now conferred upon the institute and the board. There are, as the gentlemen now say, 50 adhering countries. There were 48 at the time of the last meeting. At that time 46 of the countries were represented by a total of 99 delegates. A large number of those delegates were composed of the gentlemen acting as the permanent committee. We find here a proposition which we have just passed, that this country shall provide for 6 delegates to this institute, as against a total of not to exceed 2 delegates for each of the other countries on the average.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fine thing to provide junketing trips for various gentlemen in connection with the Government or outside of the Government. When we made the first appropriation last year no one knew what the necessary expenses would be. But we find now that we could send six delegates—five in addition to the permanent committee—abroad for less than $8,000, and provide junketing trips for five persons from the United States. I am surprised that this House has now voted to retain in this bill a provision for a junketing trip by six or seven gentlemen from the United States, in order that they may go on a pleasure trip to Rome. I am not a candidate for the place. If they would make the appropriation sufficiently large to include all Members of Congress it might appeal to us all. I had hoped that the time had come when, knowing what the expenses would be, we would cut out junketing trips to Rome or junketing trips to other places.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the word "publish," as used in the treaty, even giving it a liberal construction, does not authorize the committee to provide for the translating of the proceedings into a particular language, because in this country we have people who speak the English language, people who speak the German language, the French and the Italian, and other languages, and therefore the Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the payment of the quota of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, of the cost of the publications of the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is clearly within the rule and not subject to a point of order. We are an adhering member of this institute, and under the treaty we are obligated to pay our share of the expenses. This appropriation simply does that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi wish to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What is the quota of the United States? Is there any provision in the treaty in reference to quotas?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Respecting publication?

Mr. SULZER. Article 10 of the treaty provides for that.

Mr. MANN. What is the provision?

Mr. SULZER. Article 10 of the treaty reads as follows:

The nations adhering to the institute shall be classed in five groups, according to the place which each of them thinks it ought to occupy. The number of votes which each nation shall have and the number of units of assessment shall be established according to the following gradations.

Then it gives the gradations of these nations in the five different groups, and goes on to say what each nation shall contribute.

Mr. MANN. What does it say about the contribution? I have not the treaty here.

Mr. SULZER. The five groups are as follows:

Group No. 1, number of votes, 5; units of assessment, 16. Group 2, number of votes, 4; units of assessment, 8. Group 3, number of votes, 3; units of assessment, 4. Group 4, number of votes, 2; units of assessment, 2. Group 5, number of votes, 1; units of assessment, 1.

The treaty then says:

In any event the contribution due per unit of assessment shall never exceed a maximum of 2,500 francs. As a temporary provision, the assessment for the first two years shall not exceed 1,500 francs per unit. Colonies may, at the request of the nation to which they belong, be admitted to form a part of the institute on the same conditions as independent nations.

Mr. MANN. How many units does the United States represent?

Mr. SULZER. Sixteen. We belong to the first grade. We are a first-class Nation.

Mr. MANN. Twenty-five hundred francs is $500.

Mr. SULZER. Yes; about that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems, according to the treaty and the statement of the gentleman, that the quota of the United States could not exceed $8,000.

Mr. HAYES. No; $4,800.

Mr. MANN. Now, we have already provided in one item of the bill $4,800 and here is an item to provide $5,000 additional, and that is why I asked the information.

Mr. HAYES. The particular provision which has been read only applies to the general expenses of the institute, of which our quota is $4,800.

Mr. MANN. What provision is there in the treaty that we shall pay for a portion of the printing expenses in addition to our quota? That is what I am endeavoring to obtain information concerning. I understand the limitation of expense was the limitation of our quota to the institute. We have already provided for that in the paragraph at the top of the page. The gentleman now offers an amendment to provide an additional quota for printing, but has given us no statement. I do not know that there is an authorization for such purpose.

Mr. SULZER. Article 9 provides for that.

Mr. FOSTER. It provides what shall be done.

Mr. MANN. I asked the gentleman in respect to it with a view of giving us the information.

Mr. SULZER. I will send it to the Clerk's desk, if the gentleman desires, and have it read.

Mr. MANN. I would rather have the gentleman state it.

Mr. SULZER. Article 9 of the treaty provides what this International Institute of Agriculture shall do, and it provides for the publication of the work——

Mr. MANN. Yes; but is there any provision for an additional payment by the adhering members over the amount that they contribute as their quota of the expenses of the institute?

Mr. FOSTER. None at all.

Mr. MANN. What is the $4,800 we have already provided for in the bill?

Mr. SULZER. That amount of $4,800 in the bill is to pay our pro rata share as an adhering member.

Mr. MANN. I will read it to the gentleman. It is at the bottom of page 15 and reads as follows:

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the support of the International Institute of Agriculture for the calendar year 1913, $4,800.

Mr. SULZER. That is what we agreed to pay, whether we get any benefit from it or not.

Mr. MANN. But that is our quota for the support of the institute, and that covers all our expenses.

Mr. SULZER. Well, not exactly.

Mr. HAYES. Publication is not part of the support of the institute.

Mr. MANN. What is the $4,800 for?

Mr. SULZER. I have stated that. The $5,000, I will say to the gentleman, is for the Government of the United States to utilize by publication in English the information which comes from this institute in a foreign language. The institute publishes its information bulletins and reports in a foreign language. We get them. In order for us to utilize them we must translate them; in order to translate and publish them in English we have to pay for the translation, and we are now appropriating the money to pay for the translation and for the publication in English for our own people. If the gentleman does not want us——

Mr. MANN. The treaty provides what the institute shall do. It provides that it shall publish the reports. It provides that we shall contribute our quota of the entire expenses of the institute. That quota is $4,800, and that covers all the expense which we are authorized under the treaty to contribute to the institute. In addition to that, we have already provided for the expense of a permanent committee of one and of delegates, and all that we must contribute to the institute under the terms of the treaty as the quota of the United States is $4,800, and that is carried in the other item.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman allow me? What the gentleman says is quite true so far as it goes. But we have provided for all the things which we must do under the treaty. In consequence of that we get this valuable information, and that comes to us in a foreign language. It must be translated and published in English to be available to the people of this country who speak English. This $5,000 is for that purpose. I can not make it clearer.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman I suppose if any information is ever published by this institute which is worth translating we have a Department of Agriculture to which it comes and which is capable of translating and publishing it as a publication of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. SULZER. That department informed us it did not have the money to do it.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. In a moment. A representative of the Department of Agriculture appeared before the committee and testified that the department had no money for this purpose, and hence the Department of Agriculture and the Department of State recommend this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. The Department of Agriculture has plenty of money which it could use for this purpose to pay to publish it, and if it has not used it, it is because they have found nothing worth publishing.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my colleague if the Department of Agriculture does not translate a great many foreign languages into our language?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is doing it all the time.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman from Illinois will yield, article 9 is the article in the treaty which defines the purposes and objects of this organization. Now, in order to support that organization we have to appropriate, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, $4.800.

The article says the institute confines its operations to certain things; is a mere shell; that it shall study certain things, and report, and communicate with parties, and make known information obtained, and so forth. There are eight or nine different sections. Now, the purpose, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested, of the existence of the organization, as provided for in this section, is to enable the United States Government to do its part of the work assigned to this organization in article 9.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. Therefore we have already provided, as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, for the very thing that the gentleman from New York is asking $5,000 for.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois, his contention is that the expense to be covered in this paragraph is included in the first paragraph?

Mr. MANN. The work is there covered.

The CHAIRMAN. And the additional appropriation that has already been carried by the committee equals the amount that we are authorized to appropriate under the treaty?

Mr. MANN. That is right.

Mr. SISSON. And that covers specifically the publications as outlined in article 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the Chair is assured that this article does cover the item, he is inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. If the Chair will indulge me, I wish to say that the $4,800 appropriated in the bill is paid as the pro rata share of the United States as an adhering member of the International Institute of Agriculture. That has nothing to do with the costs to us of translating and publishing the information we receive.

Mr. SISSON. What is that made for?

Mr. SULZER. If the gentleman from Mississippi will allow me to conclude, I will impart to him the information. We get the publications of this International Institute of Agriculture. They come to us, of course, as I have said, in a foreign language, and in order to be of use to our English-speaking people they must be translated, and this money appropriated in this paragraph is for the purpose of translating, publishing, and utilizing these bulletins, these reports, and this information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from New York this: The gentleman does not claim that there is any law except the treaty authorizing the payment of these appropriations—no other existing law?

Mr. SULZER. I claim that under the treaty this appropriation is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from New York claim is the amount that can be appropriated, relying on the treaty as existing law?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, we would place ourselves——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair means, what sum should we appropriate under this treaty? What number of dollars altogether?

Mr. SULZER. Under the treaty, which is the law of the land, we can appropriate just what we have appropriated for the purposes I have indicated. That is the contention we make, and I want to say, in support of the contention, that we would place ourselves in a ludicrous position if we paid our share for the support of the institution and then, when the institution sends us our share of the benefits, we do nothing with them. It would be absurd. We should utilize the data or we are wasting money, it seems to me, in being a member of this International Institute of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. On the question of the point of order, the Chair does not see that he can take that reasoning of the gentleman as conclusive.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the conjecture of the gentleman from New York must rest upon article 9 of this treaty. Now, we have already appropriated the money to carry into effect the purposes of the treaty, as enumerated in article 9. Now, if the requirement of article 9 has been provided for in the $4,800 appropriated—and the gentleman admits that in article 9 is the authority he has for the appropriation of $4,800—and the Chair holds that he has no other authority for the appropriation of $4,800, we have already appropriated the $4,800. Within the very first clause of article 9 the subdivision is marked "A"—collecting, studying, and publishing of statistics and information are provided for or outlined. The article reads as follows:

ARTICLE 9.

The institute, confining its operations within an international sphere, shall—

(a) Collect, study, and publish as promptly as possible statistical, technical, or economic information concerning farming, both vegetable and animal products, the commerce in agricultural products, and the prices prevailing in the various markets.

(b) Communicate to parties interested, also as promptly as possible, all the information just referred to.

(c) Indicate the wages paid for farm work.

(d) Make known the new diseases of vegetables which may appear in any part of the world, showing the territories infected, the progress of the disease, and, if possible, the remedies which are effective in combating them.

(e) Study questions concerning agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit in all their aspects; collect and publish information which might be useful in the various countries in the organization of works connected with agricultural cooperation, insurance, and credit.

(f) Submit to the approval of the Governments, if there is occasion for it, measures for the protection of the common interests of farmers and for the improvement of their condition, after having utilized all the necessary sources of information, such as the wishes expressed by international or other agricultural congresses or congresses of sciences applied to agriculture, agriculture societies, academies, learned bodies, etc.

So that he has already got the $4,800 to do that work with. Now, if the $4,800 is properly allowed, it is allowed under article 9, and if it is allowed under article 9, then the gentleman has no other clause upon which to hang this appropriation now asked for. Therefore, you have already appropriated for the expenses and maintenance and publication and the study that the treaty was intended to obtain.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the $4,800 is for the maintenance of the International Institute of Agriculture and for the payment of the necessary expenses of administration. There is no part of that that is to be used for publications, if we desired them to be published so that the people of this country might use them. That is an entirely different matter.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from California yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Out of what fund do they now pay for the publication?

Mr. HAYES. Out of the special appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. We have never made any special appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. HAYES. I think we have

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr HAYES. The gentleman did not understand, probably, or was not paying attention when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] read the report of our delegates, stating what our proportion of this publication expense would be.

Mr. MANN. I have read the report of the delegates, and I did not need to hear the gentleman from New York read it. We have never made any appropriation for the publication of these reports. They have always been published out of the quota which we contributed, together with the quotas contributed by other nations, for the administration of the institute.

Mr. HAYES. I am now advised by the chairman of the committee that these publications have heretofore been published by the Department of Agriculture. But the statement in the hearings is that there is no money available for the year 1913 for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I have the reports from this institute, published in the English language, published by the institute, published from the maintenance fund, a portion of which we contributed; published in the English language. The gentleman from California is aware of that, too.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from California if this paragraph of this appropriation here is not intended for publications to be made or used in the United States?

Mr. HAYES. Certainly. It is intended to cover our proportion of the cost of publication in the English language in England, Canada, Australia, and the various other English-speaking colonies.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman contend that the treaty binds us to publish this information in our own country?

Mr. HAYES. It does not bind us to publish the information in our own country, but it contemplates and provides for such publication.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair thinks that the language used in section 9 does not authorize this appropriation, and sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL RAILWAY CONGRESS.

To pay the quota of the United States as an adhering member of the International Railway Congress for the year 1913, $400.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve a point of order against this paragraph. What is this for?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi I desire to say that membership in the International Railway Congress by the Government of the United States was invited by the Government of Belgium in 1905. The views of the Interstate Commerce Commission were solicited in the matter and were obtained in a letter from Martin A. Knapp, its chairman, who stated that "it is believed and earnestly desired" by every member of the commission that the Congress of the United States should provide for an annual adhering contribution of the same amount as is regularly given by the other principal Governments of the world, and that the commission would be pleased to cooperate, by recommendation or otherwise, in securing the requisite appropriation.

In view of this statement, the late Secretary of State [Mr. Hay] applied to Congress, through the Secretary of the Treasury, for authority for the adhesion of this Government to the International Railway Congress and for an annual appropriation of $400 for the Government's quota toward the support of the Railway Congress. It was made known to this Government that, in order to adhere to the congress, it would be required of this Government to pay annually on April 15 of each year the sum of $400 so long as it remained a member.

This International Railway Congress is a matter of some importance, especially to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to the railroads of the United States. Our proportion of this expense is very small—only $400 a year. This congress meets every two years in one of the capitals of the world, and delegates from the various Governments of the world attend at their own expense, participate in its deliberations, and discuss railroad construction, railroad management, railroad improvement, everything, in fact, in connection with railroads, from their successful building to their successful operation.

Mr. SISSON. What good does the $400 do? That does not send a delegate there, does it?

Mr. SULZER. No; it does not. That is our share of the expense for getting the reports. These reports are published and are sent to the Government of the United States, and the information is utilized in various ways through the State Department. The delegates pay their own expenses. We have been appropriating this $400 a year as our share of the expense since 1906.

Mr. SISSON. It went out of the bill last year, did it not?

Mr. SULZER. Yes. It went out of the bill on a point of order, and it is subject to a point of order. There is no authority of law for it, so far as I can find out; but I want to say to the gentleman that heretofore every man who has been a delegate from this country to these international railway congresses has paid his own expenses. He has been some expert, some railroad builder, or some railroad operator, and has paid all of his expenses out of his own pocket, so it has cost the Government nothing except $400 a year, for which we get the benefit of the proceedings of the convention.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that there is no authority of existing law. It went out of the bill last year without any contest.

Mr. SULZER. I ask my friend to reserve the point of order. This is important.

Mr. SISSON. I will reserve it, Mr. Chairman, so that the gentleman may make his statement.

Mr. SULZER. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from the American Railway Association.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York admit that there is no existing law authorizing this appropriation?

Mr. SULZER. Nothing except the fact that we have been an adhering member of the International Railway Congress ever since 1905. We have been represented in every one of these congresses, and all that we have paid is $400 a year—too small an amount to quibble about. In this connection I want to read this letter:

THE AMERICAN RAILWAY ASSOCIATION,
New York, January 11, 1912.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * *

I think that investigation of the facts of the case will find that this supposition was not correct. This subject was first brought before the Fifty-seventh Congress at its second session, in Document No. 398, which was a communication addressed by Mr. O. L. Spaulding, Acting Secretary of the Treasury Department, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, dated February 16, 1903. This communication transmitted a letter from the Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated February 13. In Secretary Hay's letter, after stating the facts of the case, Mr. Hay writes: "In view of the foregoing, I have the honor to request that you will bring the matter to the attention of Congress, in the hope that it will commend itself to the favorable consideration of that body, that its authority will be given for the adhesion of this Government to the International Railway Congress, and that the sum of $400 will be appropriated annually as this Government's quota toward its support."

In the communication from Acting Secretary Spaulding to the Speaker of the House of Representatives he recommends that "authority be given by Congress for the adhesion of this Government thereto and an appropriation of $400 annually as its quota toward the support of said International Railway Congress."

No action was taken by the Fifty-seventh Congress in response to those communications; but under date of December 16, 1903, as shown in Document No. 140 of the second session of the Fifty-eighth Congress, Hon. L M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury Department, sent a communication to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, transmitting a letter from Hon. Francis B. Loomis, Acting Secretary of State, dated December 14, 1903, in which he says: "I have the honor to renew the recommendation made in this department's letter to you of February 13, 1903, that the authority of Congress be obtained for this Government's adhesion to the International Railway Congress, the next session of which is to be held in the city of Washington in May, 1905, and that the sum of $400 be appropriated annually as this Government's quota toward its support."

I am not able to state the time that the appropriation bill was passed; but under date of August 15, 1904, I received a letter from the Hon. F. B. Loomis, Assistant Secretary, Department of State, which refers to the action of Congress in providing for this Government's participation as a contributing member of the International Railway Congress.

I understand this appropriation has been accordingly made every year since until last year.

In view of the facts above stated, was not the House in error in striking out this appropriation on the point of order that it was not authorized by law, and that the Department of State had assumed the obligation of this subscription without securing the consent of Congress?

There is another point which, I think, should be considered in connection with the failure to pass the appropriation last year. The principal expense in connection with the maintenance of the congress association is that connected with the sessions of the congress, which are held in various parts of the world every five years. In Secretary Hay's communication of February 13, 1903, above alluded to, he says: "The expenses of the session are distributed over five years, so that it would be expected that this Government's membership would continue for that time at least."

The expenses of the session held in Berne in 1910 have not yet all been paid, and if the last year's appropriation is not provided for in the deficiency bill, the United States Government will be placed in the position of refusing to pay its proportion of the expenses of the congress which it officially appointed delegates to attend.

As showing the importance in which this congress is held by the Governments of other countries, I inclose a copy of a list of Government adherents and the amounts contributed annually by them, which was included in the document submitted by Secretary Hay in 1903.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. F. ALLEN, General Secretary.

That letter speaks for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. SISSON. The late Mr. Foster of Vermont was chairman of the committee, and he conceded that there was no law for it, and it went out without a contest last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY BUREAU.

For the annual share of the United States for the maintenance of the International Sanitary Bureau for the year 1913, $2,830.79.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SISSON. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. All I was going to do was to suggest whether it should not be amended by inserting the words "calendar year." In some places in the bill you have the words "calendar year" and in some places not.

Mr. SULZER. I think it should be "calendar year."

Mr. SISSON. I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether that appropriation is authorized by law, and if so, what is the authorization?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, we have made this appropriation every year for some time.

Mr. SISSON. I do not care about that. I should like to know the authority for the appropriation—not what we have done heretofore.

Mr. SULZER. Of course, it is subject to a point of order. If the gentleman makes it he must take the responsibility.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on this last item I hope the gentleman from New York will move to amend by inserting the word "calendar" in line 24.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, before the word "year," in line 24, page 16, the word "calendar," so that it will read "calendar year."

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 24, after the word "the," insert the word "calendar," so that it will read "calendar year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL OFFICE OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

For the payment of the quota of the United States for the year 1912 toward the support of the International Office of Public Health, created by the international arrangement signed at Rome December 9, 1907, in pursuance of article 181 of the international sanitary convention signed at Paris on December 3, 1903, $3,015.62.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from New York that he insert the word "calendar," in line 25, page 17, before the word "year."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by inserting the word "calendar" before the word "year," in line 25, page 17, so that it will read "calendar year."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, line 25, after the word "the" at the beginning of the line, insert the word "calendar," so that it will read "calendar year."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL SEISMOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

For defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of the United States delegate in attending the meetings of the commission, $1,300.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York if that has relation to the variation of the sun's rays?

Mr. SULZER. No. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that this provision applies to experiments which are being made in all the civilized countries of the world regarding earth tremors and earthquakes. It is purely scientific and a very important matter. Our share of the expense is very small. We are a member of this association, and we ought to pay our pro rata share of the expenses. We get all the benefits. The item was omitted from the diplomatic and consular act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912. That was a mistake. We should defray our necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of the delegate of the United States in attending the meetings of the commission.

Inasmuch as the Government of the United States, by its formal notification of adherence to this association, became a member of the association, its status is determined by the agreement regarding the organization of the association, according to article 5 of which those nations are members of the association which have declared their adherence thereto, and by article 16 of the agreement which provides that the agreement is concluded for a period of 12 years, beginning April 1, 1904. Consequently, the earliest date on which this Government could withdraw from the association is March 31, 1916.

Mr. KENDALL. It is under a treaty, is it not?

Mr. SULZER. Well, hardly.

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. It went out on the point of order last year.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. SISSON. I will withhold it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find in the report, page 8, a paragraph that covers this:

Another item omitted from the diplomatic and consular act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, is that of defraying the necessary expenses in fulfilling the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of the delegate of the United States in attending the meetings of the commission.

I am not sure that they had any authority to become an adhering member, but, still, we did become an adhering member. Now, it seems to me that we might properly pay our quota until we have under the terms of the agreement withdrawn from it.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that, of course, if the United States Government, by any proper authority, has entered into an obligation with any Government, whether it was wise or unwise, after having entered into it, we ought to carry it out in good faith. But I notice in the RECORD that when the paragraph was reached last year the late Representative Foster stated that he conceded the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but with due deference to Mr. Foster, who has passed to the other shore, I want to say that he did not have the information and did not know anything about it at the time.

Mr. SISSON. If that obligation resting upon the Government is one made by proper authority of the United States, having the right to bind this Government, of course the point of order could not and ought not to be sustained, and I have no disposition to make it; but if gentlemen who entered into a quasi agreement, or some individuals belonging to some association entered into the agreement, then it ought not to bind the Government.

Mr. MANN. We became an adhering member by action of our officials representing the Government in an international relation. I do not now recall whether it was by treaty or not; but an organization was perfected by different nations, and there was a provision that other nations might become adhering members on certain terms. We accepted the terms, became an adhering member with the agreement, which may or may not be binding, that that should be good for 12 years.

Mr. SULZER. That is about the status of the case.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Illinois appreciates the danger in a Government like ours of men occupying an official position making agreements that will tend to bind the Federal Government, without authority so to do, which would put us in an embarrassing attitude.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I appreciate all that; and yet if the State Department believes that it had authority to and did make this Government an adhering member, I would rather make a small appropriation for the item provided in the agreement and have no question arise about our paying our honorable obligations, even if we put in a provision that we shall recede from the agreement thereafter.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Illinois think the department had any authority to make us an adhering member?

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether they followed the requirements of the Constitution or not; I do not now recall.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to know the manner in which we became bound, the manner in which the provision has been made heretofore.

Mr. MANN. We undertook to become an adhering member in accordance with the terms of this international agreement. For instance, we have what is known as the convention of 1818, relating to war vessels on the Great Lakes. I believe that never was entered into by constitutional authority, and yet it has been observed now for nearly 100 years. Of course, we are not required to make the appropriation in any event; even if there had been a treaty we would not be required to make an appropriation. But in reference to this matter, in good faith, we became an adhering member—whether it was a constitutional treaty or not I do not now recall—but the appropriation is not large, and I think we are in a way honor bound to make the appropriation. It is a little different from some of these other voluntary associations.

Mr. SISSON. I want to ascertain whether we entered into it through the proper officers of the Government. The chairman of the committee informs me that he believes it was not done by treaty; if so, we ought not to make the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the chairman of the committee would index his hearings, we might be able to tell.

Mr. SULZER. These simple hearings need no index.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi make the point of order?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall make the point of order unless they can show that this agreement was made by some authority which would bind the United States Government. I do it because I do not believe these people representing the State Department or people in any capacity or through any organization ought to endeavor to bind Congress, either directly or indirectly, to pay money out of the Treasury. It ought to come in the regular constitutional way.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is made in accordance to custom. However, it seems to me that the United States, by a formal notification, having become an adhering member of this association, is pledged to continue as such by virtue thereof until March 31, 1916. It seems to me it is binding on Congress for us to carry out our obligations in the matter in good faith.

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order the Chair does not know, and therefore is asking the gentleman from New York whether there is any existing law by treaty or otherwise?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, as I said, by impression is there is no treaty—merely a formal notification.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] would not bind the United States Government. Neither the President nor the Secretary of State can enter into such an agreement and bind Congress by it without authority of law.

Mr. SULZER. Quite true.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York permit an interruption?

Mr. SULZER. Certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, several of the most important nations of the earth have established a convention or conference with the purpose in view of investigating the subject to which this title relates. What I now state is from memory of what was disclosed in the Committee on Foreign Affairs. After the conference had been in operation for a period of years, the United States Government was invited to become an adhering member and to participate in the conference as the years elapsed. I think the term of membership is 12 years, and by the proper authority, whatever that may have been, whether the President of the United States or the Secretary of State, I do not now remember—certainly not by any subordinate official—by an authority who was competent for that purpose, the United States Government associated itself with these other Governments to promote the investigation of the subjects which are to be inquired about by that conference. That has gone on now for several years, and the arrangement has been in full force and effect. We are an adhering member of that conference, sharing its benefits and responsible for its support. The appropriation is provided "to fulfill the obligations of the United States as a member of the International Seismological Association, including the annual contribution to the expenses of the association and the expenses of our delegate in attending the meetings of that commission." This is a matter in which the Geological Survey primarily is interested, and I remember quite distinctly, although it does not appear in the hearings, that the gentleman representing that survey, who was before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, expressed very great solicitude that this provision be continued for the ensuing year.

The Secretary of State, when he was before the committee, as is disclosed on page 61 of the hearings, together with Mr. Smith, conceded that this item was omitted from the appropriation act of last year, but insisted that we were obligated to continue membership in the association until 1916. We are just in this situation: The Secretary of State or the President has by official act associated us with this conference, and we have become an adhering member of the institution. We have made appropriations as the years have gone by to defray the expenses of the conference and of our delegates who have attended it. We are obligated to continue that relation for a period of 12 years from the beginning, and that term will not expire, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests, until 1916.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KENDALL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was authorized to make this Government an adhering member?

Mr. KENDALL. My impression is it was made so by the Secretary of State.

Mr. FOSTER. But without any authority of law?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state to gentlemen that there must be something definite shown here upon which the Chair can base a ruling that this paragraph is in order.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I was about to suggest to the gentleman from New York that he allow this item to be deferred until we can ascertain definitely.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, this may be a very worthy and very proper object of investigation, but I do not believe that the President of the United States or the Secretary of State ought to enter into these obligations that require expenditures from the Treasury unless they do it in a constitutional way. Now, the assumption of authority, even of a very worthy matter, may sometimes embarrass the Congress and embarrass us in the future very greatly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order for a moment?

Mr. SISSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was under consideration by the Committee on Foreign Affairs and this item was under consideration there seemed to be as much information in the committee on the subject as there is in this committee at present. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KENDALL] made this remark:

> There is not any doubt but that this will be brought up on the floor of the House, and I think it is very important for somebody on the committee to make the inquiries that they are now proposing, so that we may have definite knowledge as each item is attacked. We will certainly have to defend these items.

Mr. KENDALL. I hope the gentleman will not read something without disclosing from what document he is reading.

Mr. MANN. And yet in spite of the warning given by my friend from Iowa we have no information about this item when it comes on the floor.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KENDALL. My attention is just directed to this statement quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, and I discover that he has not applied it to the subject under discussion there. The statement which I made was in reference——

Mr. MANN. The subject of discussion was this item in the bill.

Mr. KENDALL. No; the specific proposition being considered was this: The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] had inquired of the Secretary of State:

Was this amount ever carried in one of those secret vouchers, this $3,000—was that covered by a secret voucher?

Secretary KNOX. I can not tell you about that. I can not imagine it would be.

And then after some little discussion Mr. GARNER, of Texas, said:

Now, they are trying to ascertain whether or not this money was paid, as our part of membership in this association, out of any other money appropriated for the diplomatic and consular service.

Then I employed the language quoted by the gentleman from Illinois, because I remembered the jealousy gentlemen are constantly professing as to the prerogatives of Congress and the sanctity of the Constitution generally, and I was merely suggesting that we should have assurance that this money was not expended out of the emergency fund.

Mr. MANN. I supposed the gentleman was talking about the item under consideration. I gave him credit of saying that some one on the committee representing the committee on the floor ought to have information. Now the gentleman retracts, so I suppose no member of the committee at that time thought it was necessary when you bring a bill in the House to have information regarding it.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I desire to say that, so far as I know, there is no law behind this appropriation save an official notification by which the United States agreed to become an adhering member of this International Seismological Association. It is true, nevertheless, that we have been paying our pro rata share for its maintenance, except last year, when a point of order was made against the appropriation, and it went out on the point of order. In my judgment, the appropriation should be made. It is a matter of some moment. I ask for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARBITRATION OF OUTSTANDING PECUNIARY CLAIMS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN.

For the expenses of the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims between the United States and Great Britain, including the compensation of arbitrator, umpire, agent, counsel, clerical and other assistants, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be immediately available, $50,000.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. What are these claims?

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi, I will say the Government of the United States and Great Britain have entered into a convention to arbitrate claims of their respective citizens. These claims, on our part, date back a hundred years or more, and consist of claims of various citizens of the United States against the Government of Great Britain and claims of citizens of Great Britain against the Government of the United States.

Mr. SISSON. Is there any law for this appropriation?

Mr. SULZER. Yes; there is a law for this appropriation. There is a treaty. I will say that an immediate appropriation in the matter was of so much moment and urgency that the Committee on Appropriations carried part of this appropriation in the urgent deficiency bill. We are appropriating now the balance required for the next fiscal year.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman is sure it is covered by a treaty which binds the Government, I have no objection to the item being included in the bill.

Mr. SULZER. There is no question about it.

Mr. KENDALL. The Secretary of State said there was a convention ratified last year.

Mr. MANN. A fresh treaty.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, these claims, I will say, cover a period of over 100 years. After a great deal of trouble our distinguished Secretary of State was successful in getting the Government of Great Britain to consent to arbitrate them. For many, many years there has been an effort to make a wholesale adjustment of these claims. Some of them are of rather an embarrassing nature. Efforts have been made from time to time to get a treaty with Great Britain that would refer all of these claims on both sides to an international tribunal, a special tribunal, or a general tribunal, as the case might be, and we have at last succeeded in negotiating such a treaty, and it has been ratified by the Senate. Now, it will necessarily require years to try out the cases of the Americans before that tribunal, and we will also have to take up the cases that the British make against us before that tribunal. This is one of the most essential things, I think, that the State Department has accomplished, and will have more to do with clearing up any differences between ourselves and Great Britain, as to any possibility of international difference, than anything we have done for a long time. The appropriation asked for was $75,000. The urgent deficiency bill carried an appropriation of $25,000, so I cut this down to $50,000. That is all, I think, that is necessary for me to say.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

For the continuance of the preliminary work necessary in preparing for the meeting in the United States, in the year 1913, of the Fifteenth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, in pursuance of the invitation extended by the President of the United States in virtue of the joint resolution of the Congress thereof approved February 26, 1907, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment: In line 1, page 19, I want to move to strike out the word "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twelve."

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, would it not be better to insert when we reach that point, if we do, before the word "year" the word "fiscal," so it will read "in the fiscal year"?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the point of order has been reserved and the amendment is not now in order.

Mr. COVINGTON. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the first amendment I am now offering does not affect this appropriation one way or the other; it is merely to cover a detail.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a point of order pending.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that this is not authorized by law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard a moment on the point of order.

In the year 1907 we passed a joint resolution, which became a law, to the effect that—

The President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, held at Berlin in 1907, to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington, D. C., in 1909 or 1910.

There was some error in the number of the congress named in that joint resolution. The congress was not held in 1909 or 1910, and we subsequently passed a joint resolution, which I do not have here, covering the same thing, authorizing that the time be extended for holding the congress on invitation of the President until 1912, this year; so that the invitation for this congress to be held in the United States is by authority of law passed by Congress.

Now, then, the question is whether, under that law which authorized an invitation to be extended for that congress to meet in the United States this year, there is any authorization for an appropriation. The Chair will notice that this item is "for the continuance of the preliminary work necessary in preparing for the meeting in the United States in the year 1913 of the Fifteenth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography." I am not sure whether that number is correct or not, but the number of the congress has been correctly fixed in the resolution which was passed. This item of the bill is in the current law, "for the continuance of the preliminary work necessary in preparing for the meeting in the United States" of this congress. The sum of $10,000 is carried in the present appropriation law. An appropriation was made several years ago by Congress, according to my recollection—which I am sure is correct—for preparing for this congress to meet here first in 1909 and now in 1912.

Now, here is an invitation to an international congress to meet in the United States—an invitation extended by the President by direction of Congress. Thereupon Congress makes an appropriation for the preparation for the meeting in the United States. It is expressly stated that that appropriation is to prepare for the meeting. Then an appropriation is made to continue the preliminary work necessary for the meeting. It seems to me perfectly plain that that is one of those cases where it is a work in progress. We have extended an invitation to the congress to meet here. We have made an appropriation for preliminary work, with no limit of cost fixed upon it. We then made an appropriation to continue the preliminary work of preparing for the meeting in the United States this year. Here is an item to carry along that work of preparing for this congress. It seems to me there can be no question about its being a work now in progress, and not subject to a point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I was trying to listen to the gentleman's statement, but was interrupted while I was trying to listen. Do I understand the gentleman to say that we have issued an invitation to some foreign or international association to come to the United States?

Mr. MANN. We first issued an invitation by direction of Congress for this international congress to meet here in the United States in 1909 or 1910. Then by another joint resolution passed by Congress we authorized the President to extend the invitation and extend the time until 1912, which is this year, as the time when that congress is to meet. Now, having issued these two invitations, we made an appropriation for the preliminary work of preparing for the meeting of this congress. Then we made another appropriation to continue the work of preparing for the congress, there being no limit of cost, and everybody understanding that the preparation for the congress must continue up to the time of the meeting of the congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What I wanted to inquire of the gentleman is whether we have made inadequate provision, or no provision whatever, for the extension of decent hospitality to the gentlemen whom we have invited to come. Is that right?

Mr. MANN. We have not yet made provision enough for the meeting of the congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Do we not have to do that at the present session?

Mr. MANN. The congress meets in the fall or this summer.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This meets in September.

Mr. MANN. It meets in the fall, I say, and unless we make an appropriaton at this session of Congress of course we will not make the proper preparation for this meeting of the international congress.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Having issued the invitation, we certainly ought to do the correct thing in taking care of the company invited.

Mr. COVINGTON. I would like to ask this question, Whether or not it is a fact that the invitations were transmitted through the foreign Governments and not through the association itself?

Mr. MANN. I think that is correct.

I want to make this additional statement, Mr. Chairman: The original resolution under which the first invitation was extended went through the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I was a member, and I became somewhat interested in the proposition, partly because of the name "demography," which excited my attention, and I gave some consideration to the subject at that time. Subsequently, when it was learned that the congress could not be held and properly prepared for at the time stated, in 1909 or 1910, I introduced a resolution authorizing the extension of the time until 1912, and I did that at the request of Dr. Fulton and others who were preparing for the congress. That matter came up in our committee, and I was rather of the opinion that while we had entertained jurisdiction over the original resolution, possibly it ought to have gone to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I either had the resolution introduced afterwards by Mr. Perkins, who was the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or else sent my resolution to his committee; I do not remember which. But growing out of it I became interested in the subject in a way, and learned what they were proposing to do. This congress will be of immense value to the health authorities not only of our country but of the world.

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman that, while I believe the paragraph is subject to a point of order—because I do not know that the invitation would authorize the appropriation—the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COVINGTON] has stated to me that he would not offer the amendment which he had intended to offer to increase the appropriation which the committee has reported. No, of course I have no objection to a correction of the clerical errors, and with the understanding that the appropriation will not be increased I shall be glad to withdraw the point of order and permit the $10,000, the amount which was agreed upon by the committee, to be appropriated.

Mr. SULZER. That is satisfactory. This matter will be taken care of in ample time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentlemen on the Committee on Foreign Affairs whether, in their judgment, they were fully warranted in reducing the estimate of $40,000 to $10,000? I take it that if we are going to have this congress here, as we are going to have it, if we are going to do anything about it at all, every Member of the House thinks that we ought to do it in a decent way.

Mr. SISSON. Before the gentleman from New York answers the question, I believe $40,000 has already been appropriated, has it not?

Mr. SULZER. No; $10,000. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I desire to say that, in my judgment, this appropriation is not subject to a point of order, because it is made in pursuance of a joint resolution of Congress which is the law, and the Congress, in pursuance of that provision, appropriated last year $10,000 for the preliminaries of this International Congress of Hygiene and Demography. The matter came before our committee, and we considered it very carefully. It is an important matter. This international congress gives every promise of being largely attended. Of course, having invited delegates here, it is incumbent on us, it appears to me, to receive them courteously, and to give them such entertainment as our well-known hospitality requires. No one in this Congress is more in favor of doing that in the most liberal and hospitable way than I am. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that if he will content his soul in patience, I doubt not everything will ultimately be quite satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman misunderstands my position. I have been making an argument to keep the item in the bill. The gentleman evidently was listening to some one else.

Mr. SULZER. No. I was listening to the gentleman. We agree, and I say now that if this appropriation of $10,000 is not sufficient I will do my part to make it more, so that we can receive and entertain the distinguished representatives in the most hospitable way. There is time enough for that. We desire more information, however.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Mississippi to withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SISSON. If I can have an assurance that the item will not be amended in the House so as to increase the amount of the appropriation, I will not object to it.

Mr. MANN. I will make this suggestion to the gentleman, if I may: We had a tuberculosis congress here a few years ago, which was a very large affair and did work of great value. We appropriated $40,000 to provide a place for the meeting, and we did not consider that we were extravagant at that. That was done by unanimous consent, practically. That was in addition to the preparation of the exhibits and the other work necessary in connection with the Congress.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know whether this would have any bearing upon the point of order or not, but I suggest to the Chair that we passed a resolution inviting this institute to hold its sessions in this country—I think in the city of Washington. Of course we did not, in that resolution, obligate ourselves, as I understand it, to any expense, but we did invite the delegates to meet in the city of Washington, and while I do not know and am not prepared to say whether that is an authorization by law, it occurs to me that there is some obligation in a moral way for us to do what other countries have always done in the way of providing the necessary expenses for this institute.

I want to say further in this connection that it has been 60 years since the International Institute of Hygiene and Demography has been held in the United States, and it is one of great importance, because scientists from all over the world will gather here at this meeting. If the Chair will indulge me, I remember that a few years ago we appropriated $40,000 for the meeting of the Tuberculosis Society of the World, which held its meetings in the city of Washington, in the building which is now used by the National Museum and the Smithsonian Institution. The questions of hygiene and demography are of such vital importance to the people that I think our country will be highly honored and benefited to a great extent by having a meeting of men who have given their lives to the study of hygiene and vital statistics, and that it will be of immense value to our people; because the health of a nation is in large measure improved and maintained by proper sanitary conditions.

But we realize the fact that all over the country we have seen at times great epidemics of typhoid fever and other infectious and contagious diseases, so that this is of so much importance to the health and life of our people that I look for great results from this institute which is to be held in the city of Washington in the year 1912.

Mr. KENDALL. In December?

Mr. FOSTER. I think in September. I hope that this appropriation may be permitted to remain in the bill whether the resolution inviting this association to meet with us is an authorization for the appropriation or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the language of the resolution?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make a point of order against this item.

Mr. SISSON. I would not make the point of order, but I understand that an amendment is going to be offered to the item that will increase the appropriation very materially.

Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. COVINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to make an additional statement in line with what the gentleman from Illinois has just said—that is, that Dr. Welch, of Johns Hopkins University, has stated to me personally that the expenses of this Congress will be in excess of the $40,000 that the State Department recommended, and that a further sum will have to be provided in some other way to meet the necessary expenses of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Mississippi to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that the amendment which was proposed will not be offered, and I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. WEDEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, in this connection I want to read a letter from a very prominent scientific man, living in my home city of Ann Arbor, Mich. This gentleman is the dean of the department of medicine and surgery in the University of Michigan. His letter is as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN,
Ann Arbor, January 26, 1912.

Hon. W. W. WEDEMEYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WEDEMEYER: The various nations of the world have been asked to participate in the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography, to be held in Washington next September. The invitation to these countries came from Congress, and was made by the Secretary of State. The congress was first recommended for 1910, but no appropriation having been made, it was postponed for two years. Now, the State Department has asked for an appropriation of $40,000, and this is before the Committee on Foreign Affairs and also the Committee on Appropriations. May I ask you to interest yourself in this matter and see the chairmen of these committees? The appropriation asked for is very modest. The last of these hygienic congresses was held in Berlin, and cost something over $100,000. The committee on organization will be compelled, even with this grant of $40,000 from the Government, to go and beg for further subscriptions. The congress concerns itself with matters pertaining to health, and has proved itself to be of great service to the foreign countries in which it has been held. I hope you will take an interest in this matter and be kind enough to see the chairmen of the committees mentioned above.

With great respect, I am,
Yours, very truly,
V. C. VAUGHAN.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I deem this International Congress of Hygiene and Demography a very important meeting, one which considers matters affecting the health and welfare of all the people of our country. The importance of it should appeal to every Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 18, line 26, before the word "year," by inserting the word "fiscal."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 26, insert the word "fiscal" before the word "year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding a new paragraph after line 6, on page 19.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert, after line 6, page 19, the following:

"That for the necessary expenses of the meeting in the United States of the International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations, including a tour by the foreign delegates of the principal commercial, industrial, agricultural, and social centers of the United States, for the purpose of acquainting them with our institutions and enterprises, $50,000 be, and hereby is, appropriated.

"That the Secretary of State is hereby requested to ask the Governments of the commercial nations of the world to notify the leading business organizations of their respective countries of this action by the Congress of the United States of America and suggest their cooperation."

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, speaking to the point of order reserved by the chairman of the committee, I want to say that 100 members of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, at their own expense, visited the principal cities of Europe last year, and in no case was the expense of any of these gentlemen less than $1,000 each. In the course of their travel it occurred to them that it might be possible to hold a similar convention in this country to the four that had been previously held in Europe. The idea met with general approval in our section, and some $75,000 has been already subscribed by the chambers of commerce in Massachusetts.

The Boston Chamber of Commerce has communicated with various chambers of commerce throughout the entire country, and all are in accord with this movement. Now, it is apparently the purpose of the majority in this House, and apparently is the sentiment of this country, that the time is rapidly coming, if it is not already here, when we must change our methods of doing business. If it is only possible for us to maintain a permanent working force in our manufacturing establishments for eight months in the year to meet the needs and requirements of the people of this country, it must be apparent to every man that our export trade must increase beyond the $2,900,000,000 at the present time.

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the best way to increase our export trade is to establish and maintain friendly relations with other Governments of the world, and there is no better way to impress upon the representatives of other countries the great resources of this country, the great opportunities that abound here for doing business with this country, than by bringing them here and having them meet the leading business men of this country and meet them in the right manner.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary that the same national recognition be given to this International Convention of Chambers of Commerce by the United States of America as has already been accorded by the various other foreign Governments. The value that may result from holding an international convention of this character, if it were only to apply to the possibilities for an increase of trade with our southern neighbors, is best attested by the statistics that are furnished of the trade with South American countries.

I presume my friend from Mississippi, and even my friend from New York, chairman of the committee, will insist on the point of order to rule this proposition out. But when you consider in a period of five years that the trade on the Pacific side of South America has increased 100 per cent, or from $250,000,000 to $500,000,000 of exports, and when you consider the tremendous exports to other sections of South America, that the bulk of that trade is controlled largely by England and Germany and results in large measure from the establishment of proper relations with them. In the fiscal year of 1910 the export trade in beef from Argentina was in the neighborhood of 265,000 tons, while in the same period of time the total exports of a similar character from this country was 55,000 tons.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, when you consider the intense character of the competition that is being carried on by the various Governments of the world to develop trade and social relations, you get some idea of the value that may result in consequence of holding a convention of this character. I had occasion in the last month to read a South American paper from the Argentine Republic where the Government had subsidized the Vicars Shipbuilding Co. to the extent of $5,000,000, giving them water rights, giving them land rights, in establishing a dry dock, on the simple condition that they would build a repair yard for shipping at Argentina. I have here a communication from our Chamber of Commerce at Boston, which reads:

MARCH 25, 1912.

Hon. JAMES M. CURLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CURLEY:

* * * * * * *

In the matter of the international congress, there have been four biennial congresses previously held in Europe, and at each one of those congresses there have been from 100 to 200 delegates specifically appointed by the Governments, therefore they were official representatives of the Governments. The balance of the delegates were the very biggest business men in the countries represented.

At London, in 1910, there were 500 delegates from 29 nations of the earth. We are inclosing the records of proceedings of the congress in London. Of course, the great basis of these congresses is to strengthen international good will in a most practical way, as business men certainly of the nations of the earth are opposed to war or friction.

Now, then, if it is our purpose not to continue to build battleships or destroyers, then we must do something to replace that which we fail to present, and the only way to my mind that we can replace it is by establishing international amity between the nations of the earth. [Applause.]

The letter continues:

There are scarcely any universal commercial practices between nations pertaining to postal affairs, commercial statistics, maritime affairs, regulations between banks of issue, consular invoices. Some of the topics that are likely to be discussed at this congress are cost of living, double taxation, business education, a staple international monetary standard, an international unit of exchange, and the establishment of a permanent international court of arbitral justice.

These great topics simply give you a hint of the tremendous importance of these congresses. The $50,000 which we specifically ask is for the cost of special compartment trains to take these delegates over as much of our country as lies within their physical possibilities. One hundred delegates to a train will cost $20,000 to cover 10 cities. If we have 300 delegates, it will be $60,000 to cover 10 cities, and already we are being importuned very strongly from the far West, the Southwest, and the South to include cities in those sections in our itinerary, so that the $50,000 will not begin to cover the cost of the trains alone.

The merchants in each city which the delegates visit will furnish at their own expense all entertainment and official recognition of the delegates. The merchants of the city of Boston alone will contribute handsomely toward the entertainment of the delegates while in Boston. This amount can not, of course, be definitely stated, because it will depend wholly upon the number of delegates, but the merchants of Boston, besides entertaining at least the 300 foreign delegates, will entertain at their own expense probably 400 men from all parts of America, so that you can readily see that the men of Boston have got to go down very deep in their own pockets to provide entertainment for 700 or 800 delegates, foreign and American, during the five days of the congress in Boston.

It seems to me that with the printed material which we are sending you that the first strong argument for you on the floor of the House is that this appropriation carries with it the stamp of national recognition, of the tremendous importance of these congresses, and when our National Government provides the transportation for these men from thirty-odd countries to see our country, to feel our hospitality, to study our institutions, to gain more direct and intimate knowledge of our resources, it certainly goes far toward impressing the men of these nations as to the greatness of the United States and the solicitude of our Government and our people to get into closer touch with the men of the world in all human relations.

I think it is conservative for you to make the statement that the business men of Boston will raise somewhere between $50,000 and $75,000 by private subscription and that the city of Boston will contribute $25,000. These figures, of course, you can use at your own discretion, but I can assure you that the men of Boston will contribute as handsomely for this project as the most open-minded man could possibly expect.

Very truly, yours,

GEORGE S. SMITH,
Chairman Executive Committee.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, with all that my friend from the good old Bay State has said concerning this matter I am in substantial accord. I am in favor of the proposition. As an evidence of it, I will say that his colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS], introduced a bill to appropriate $50,000 for the expenses of this International Congress of Chambers of Commerce. The Committee on Foreign Affairs promptly granted a hearing on that bill, and after the hearing the Committee on Foreign Affairs on my motion unanimously reported the bill and directed the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CURLEY] to make the report. The report has been made, and the bill is now on the calendar. The gentleman can call it up at any time. The gentleman can put it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. The gentleman can move to suspend the rules and pass the bill at any time. There is no good reason why the gentleman should ask us now to infringe the general rules of the House to put the item on this appropriation bill. It is out of order. It is a bad way to legislate. Hence I make the point of order. Let ths bill come before the House for consideration in the regular and orderly way.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Amend, page 19, after line 6, by inserting a new paragraph, as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of State to acquire in the City of Mexico, in Mexico, a site and building and to alter, repair, and furnish such building, such building to be either purchased or erected, as to the Secretary of State may seem best, for the use of the United States embassy to Mexico, both as a residence for the United States ambassador to Mexico and for the offices of the embassy, which site and building and alterations, repairs, and furnishing of such completed building shall not exceed in cost the sum hereby appropriated, $100,000."

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. MANN. I do not care to have the gentleman reserve it; I hope he will make it.

Mr. HAY. I will make the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. HAY. I make the point of order that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, by act of Congress approved February 17, 1911, it is made in order—explicitly provided for by act of Congress—and I send the act to the Chair.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, there is no use taking up time discussing the point of order. This appropriation is authorized by law. I hope, however, it will not be ingrafted on this appropriation bill in this unconventional and precipitate way. If the gentleman from Illinois wants to know the reasons why I say this, I shall be very glad to state them.

Mr. MANN. Let us have the point of order determined first.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is in order. Congress has passed an act to acquire embassies and has said that not more than $500,000 shall be appropriated in any one year.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I also call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Secretary of State has estimated for this building, and I send the estimate to the Chair. The act authorizes an appropriation for the purchase of embassy buildings abroad, or for the purchase of diplomatic and consular buildings abroad, not to exceed $500,000 a year.

Mr. SULZER. I trust the point of order will be withdrawn.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the gentleman from New York. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I was in hopes that we could have a ruling upon the point of order. The estimate of the Secretary of State for this building was $150,000. The amendment I offer is for $100,000, which I am inclined to think is sufficient for the purchase of a building in the City of Mexico. It seems to me it would be a very gracious and a very politic thing just at this time to make an appropriation for this embassy building. For years in the discussion of the general proposition we have frequently stated upon the floor of the House, without special objection from anyone, that it would be desirable for us to have an embassy building in the City of Mexico, and that it might be desirable to have some buildings in China. The situation in Mexico is such that at present we should make this appropriation. It would be worth more in dollars and cents to the United States many times over what it would cost, and probably would be worth as much to the Government of Mexico. I do not desire to discuss the situation in Mexico, but if this provision does not go into this bill, it will not be made at all this year.

I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] will say that he will have some other bill in which it may be taken up. I do not believe that the House would be willing to appropriate a half million dollars this year for the various buildings which have been estimated for. I think we can well afford to appropriate $100,000 for this building, making that the limit of cost, instead of the $150,000 which was suggested by the Secretary of State.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I am in sympathy with much that the gentleman from Illinois has said. The gentleman is correct in saying that Congress has authorized the purchase of embassies abroad, and that the act says that not more than $500,000 shall be appropriated for their acquisition in any one year. In pursuance of that act, the Secretary of State has sent to the Congress a statement in which he suggests that one of the places where we shall purchase an embassy is the City of Mexico. The other places mentioned are Berne, Switzerland; Tokyo, Japan; and Hankow, China. The Committee on Foreign Affairs will give careful consideration to the recommendation of the State Department. The committee has already given the matter some attention. I can say that in a very short time I shall introduce a bill, and it will be carefully considered. Then the question will arise as to the places mentioned as the most feasible, and what it is going to cost to purchase a site in these different places. Then other questions in connection with the matter will naturally arise which should be very carefully considered before the committee reports legislation for the judgment of the House of Representatives. It is a mistake to do it in a hasty, haphazard way.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SULZER. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Do I understand the gentleman to give assurance that such a bill will be reported and brought in on this floor?

Mr. SULZER. I shall soon introduce the bill, and I assure my friend I shall do everything in my power to expedite its report and the passage of the legislation. As the gentleman knows, I have always been in favor of it. For years I have been advocating the proposition on the floor of this House. My position is well known. I want to say, however, to the Members of the House that it is unfair and an injustice to the Committee on Foreign Affairs to engraft upon this appropriation bill an amendment such as the gentleman from Illinois now proposes, without consideration, without giving the committee an opportunity to deliberate and report to the House just what should be done. Be patient and you will be satisfied.

Mr. LONGWORTH. At what time was the letter written by the Secretary of State filed with the committee? How long has the committee been considering this?

Mr. SULZER. It came in recently.

Mr. MANN. On January 16.

Mr. SULZER. Yesterday we had the Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Wilson, before the committee, and this is one of the things that I discussed with him. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, there are two statements of the distinguished gentleman who is the chairman of the committee that are a little hard to reconcile. He said for years he has championed such legislation as that which is proposed to be accomplished by the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SULZER. Not at all. What I said, and I think I made myself clear, is that for years I have been in favor of the policy of this Government acquiring and owning and maintaining its own embassies. I voted for the bill which is the law now.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes; I understood the gentleman to say that, and I repeat that the gentleman said for years he had been in favor of having the Government acquire and own embassies, which is precisely what the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois proposes. That is all he proposes—to carry into operation what has been authorized by law, after long deliberation and prolonged discussion by this House.

The other statement of the gentleman that I can not reconcile with the first one is that he was having this matter rushed on him now without time for consideration. It is a perfectly simple proposition. It is perfectly well understood by this House. The discussion did go on for years, and finally, largely through the efforts of a former Members of this House, Mr. Lowden, of Illinois, supported by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] and many others who have recognized the importance of doing such things, an authorization was made in the statute read by the gentleman from Illinois in response to the suggestion of the point of order made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY]. The question is one of policy. Ought we to make the appropriation now? Can we afford, with a deficit in the Treasury and under existing circumstances, to adopt an amendment like that offered by the gentleman from Illinois?

Out of a very considerable experience and knowledge of conditions in the City of Mexico, I give it as my opinion that there is perhaps no place on earth, except it be in Asiatic countries, where an embassy is more needed than in the City of Mexico. I also give it as my opinion—and I am certain that I am right in this—that now for $100,000 we can buy what under normal conditions would cost twice as much money to get in the City of Mexico. Can the Government of the United States afford to invest $100,000 now for something which is confessedly needed, when it has the prospect of saving $100,000 by doing so, or shall the Government wait? That is all. I have no desire to embarrass the chairman of the committee nor the members of the committee, but the policy is a proper one. The House has said so. The occasion is a good one. We can get property there now very cheaply. I recently had a letter from the ambassador—a personal letter—with reference to the matter, and he gave it as his opinion that the time was most opportune for the purchase of property for an embassy building.

That is all I have to say. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I differ with the gentleman from Texas who says that now is the opportune time to purchase an embassy in the City of Mexico on account of the disturbances existing there. From all I know this is an inopportune time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, under normal conditions I should not have offered the amendment. The policy in reference to this was, in a way, not settled so as to bind this Congress, of course, but the policy of the country was, in a way, settled when the law was passed. I am not in favor of purchasing many embassy buildings abroad. I do not agree with some gentlemen who believe that we ought to own buildings wherever we have an agent or a representative, but it is absolutely true that there has been no time in the past for many years, and possibly there will be no time in the future for many years, when it was as possible to acquire an embassy building in Mexico City as it is now for various reasons, one of which has been given by the gentleman from Texas.

If this were a matter new to the House, I should not have proposed it. My distinguished friend from New York is new on the Committee on Foreign Affairs and has not given as much attention to this subject as he would have given if he had been a member of that committee longer. Yet in a general way he is well informed on the subject. It requires no additional information for us to know, in my judgment, that we ought to have an embassy building in the City of Mexico. If we are to have any anywhere on earth, that is the first place to get it.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SULZER. Does the gentleman think we should legislate on an appropriation bill for the acquisition of these embassies?

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the gentleman is talking about, because I have not offered any provision in regard to legislation at all. I have offered an item of appropriation. My amendment is purely to appropriate money for this purpose.

Mr. SULZER. Would it not be better to do it in a separate bill, so the House can have an opportunity to discuss it?

Mr. MANN. Why, this is the place for it of all places. This is where the item belongs, in the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. SULZER. The Committee on Foreign Affairs differs with the gentleman from Illinois. We discussed the matter in the committee and concluded that we had better bring in a separate bill. That is all there is to that.

Mr. MANN. On a separate bill you will be sending it to the winds. It never will come any closer to the House than the window.

Mr. SULZER. Again I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think the Committee on Foreign Affairs should be permitted to exercise the discretion as to where the purchases should be made rather than an individual Member on this floor should make that selection?

Mr. MANN. I am leaving it to this committee to determine. I have yet to learn that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is any bigger committee than the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. [Applause.] The gentleman may have received the impression that one of the appropriation committees is bigger than the House itself. That is not the case.

Mr. BURLESON. It is not a question of whether or not the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is bigger than the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The question I asked the gentleman is whether the Committee on Foreign Affairs ought not to be permitted to exercise the discretion in the selection of the places where these purchases are to be made. It may be that a more opportune occasion, a greater opportunity, for making an investment in China at this time is afforded than in Mexico, or in Turkey than in Mexico.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but the Committee on Foreign Affairs could not make a recommendation for an embassy building in China nor in Turkey. It is confined to items recommended by the Secretary of State, one of which has provided for an embassy in the City of Mexico and the other at Tokyo. It is far more important for us at this time to make a purchase of an embassy building in Mexico City than it is in Tokyo. I do not think there is any occasion now for us to purchase an embassy building in Tokyo. I suppose if the committee reports a separate bill it will contain all four items. I would not vote for it, but with the information which we have and which the gentleman from Texas knows better than I do in regard to Mexico, we ought to purchase an embassy building there, and I leave it to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to determine.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the reason urged by the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois for an authorization for the acquisition of this building at this time does not appeal to me. The reason given is that because of the peculiar conditions existing in the City of Mexico property can now be bought more cheaply than at some other time, or, in other words, that the United States should take advantage of the disturbed condition of affairs in a neighboring friendly country to enter into an advantageous real estate speculation. [Applause.] If there be anything that is not conformable to the dignity of this Nation it is that it should take advantage of disturbances in another country to acquire real estate below what would ordinarily be conceded to be its market value. If the United States is to acquire an embassy in the City of Mexico or any other city, I believe it should pay a reasonable and fair price for the property. I would not have the Congress keep its eye upon the conditions existing in various parts of the civilized world and single out those places where, because of internal disturbances, property rights become so insecure that it would be possible to purchase property offered at a sacrifice. [Applause.] The gentleman from Illinois is peculiarly anxious at this time, for various reasons not disclosed, to make this appropriation. It took 16 years for the Republican Congress to reach the point where it even enacted a statute authorizing the acquisition of embassies in foreign lands. During the Sixty-first Congress $80,000,000 authorizations were passed over to this Congress to be met with appropriations. The gentleman from Illinois is solicitous to have the Congress appropriate the money to carry out those authorizations and thus keep our total expenditures up to the unjustifiable limit reached by his party when it was in control of the Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It seems to me that there is no urgent necessity for this particular appropriation. It would be most inappropriate at this time. It seems to me that the committee is entitled to something more than the offhand opinion of any Member of this House as to what would be a proper sum to expend for the building, for the furnishings of the building, for the equipment of the building in Mexico City. Some investigation disclosing something more than the information gentlemen volunteer upon the floor as to such matters should be had, so that the committee may act upon its best judgment in determining this question. I hope that the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, just a word. The object, the avowed object, of the law which was recently sent to the desk of the Chair by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was to make in order, at any time during the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, an appropriation for the purpose of acquiring embassies, legations, and consulates in foreign countries.

Mr. SULZER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is to appropriate $100,000 for the acquisition of an embassy site in the City of Mexico.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I say that the object was to make it in order, as the gentleman has admitted it is now in order, to make the appropriation in this bill. Now, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER] would assure me that the Committee on Foreign Affairs would bring in at this session of Congress a bill to comply with the recommendations of the Secretary of State, made to the Secretary of the Treasury according to this law, I would be willing to vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

But the gentleman from New York gives us no such assurance. We have now before us an opportunity to provide an embassy in the City of Mexico. More than two-thirds of this House last year voted in favor of the bill making such legislation in order. A unanimous vote, as I remember, was recorded on that bill in the Senate. It is not as if this were a matter of taking snap judgment, Mr. Chairman. This report of the Secretary of State was filed three months ago. Every one of us has had an opportunity to see it. It recommended the acquisition, for $150,000, of a site in the City of Mexico.

I do not think that it is any derogation of the authority of this committee to take this opportunity to vote for a proposition which has been recommended by the State Department. I see no reason why those of us who now favor the acquisition of land and buildings in other countries for embassies and legations should not support the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, just a word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio and that is to say that I am preparing a bill to do the very thing to which the gentleman refers. I hope to introduce the bill in the House in a few days. The Committee on Foreign Affairs will give hearings on the bill, and we shall be glad to hear the gentleman and have him support the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will support the gentleman's bill when it comes in.

Mr. SULZER. It is in process of preparation now. I am in consultation with the officials of the State Department. I have received letters from a number of distinguished gentlemen throughout the country who desire to be heard on the proposition. Some of them agree with the State Department as to where we should buy these embassies, and some of them do not. As a matter of courtesy to these people who desire an opportunity to present their views to the committee, and through the committee to the Congress, I think it is only fair that the committee should have an opportunity to legislate properly and intelligently on the subject matter.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is not a question of legislation, if the gentleman from New York will pardon me.

Mr. SULZER. Oh, an appropriation is legislation—especially one to buy an embassy site.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is now before us.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES, CONSULAR SERVICE.

For salaries of consuls general and consuls, as provided in the act approved May 11, 1908, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the reorganization of the Consular Service of the United States,' approved April 5, 1906," and amendments thereto, as follows: Consuls general, $303,000; consuls, $734,000; in all, $1,037,000.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I make that pro forma motion merely for the purpose of submitting a few observations on what appears to be an eccentric manner of fixing the salaries of consuls. I do not know upon what theory these salaries were fixed, whether the amount of commerce between the territory represented by the consul or consul general and this country was the basis or not, or how it may have been done; but it is irregular, and my attention has been drawn to the fact that it does not appear to have been done always with perfect justice or a proper regard for the responsibilities and importance of some of the offices.

Now, I observe that the salary of the consul general at Monterey, Mexico, a post which takes in nearly all of northern Mexico, is fixed at $3,500. That consul general represents a territory that does an enormous trade with the United States, a trade which is constantly expanding. He has to travel about a lot. He has to supervise an enormous district. If the compensation fixed for gentlemen occupying the same rank in the Consular Service in other places is proper, then he is underpaid.

Now, I want to ask a comparison with the salary paid to the consul general at Cape Town, South Africa, for example, at the Cape of Good Hope. I regret to say that I am not familiar with the volume of trade between this country and the British possessions in South Africa, but the consul general at Cape Town receives an annual compensation of $6,000, as against $3,500 for the consul general at Monterey. At Guayaquil, Ecuador, the consul general receives $1,000 a year more than the consul general at Monterey, or $4,500. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the volume of trade represented by the consul general at Guayaquil can not equal in importance, or in any way approach in importance, that between northern Mexico and the United States.

Another consul general receiving precisely the same compensation is the officer at Montevideo, Uruguay, whose salary, as I have stated, is precisely $3,500. Now, the trade between this country and Uruguay is not important. The consul general at Port au Prince, Haiti, where there have been frequent disturbances and little trade recently, receives the same compensation, $3,500. I am not prepared to offer, after the rebuke that we have just received for undertaking to change this bill in some slight particulars, an amendment adjusting these salaries, but I do think, in the interest of gentlemen who are in the Consular Service, who are doing a great deal of work and who represent a large territory and supervise, so far as a consul or consul general supervises the trade at all, an immense trade, that they ought to be better compensated than is the consul general at Monterey and some others who appear in the bill.

I withdraw my pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to change the totals of the bill to conform to the amendments which have been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to change the totals in the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now arise and report the bill to the House with the amendments and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SIMS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19212) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. SULZER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

TAX ON WHITE PHOSPHORUS MATCHES.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I move that the House do now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R.

20842) to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be limited to one hour and a half.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. One hour.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would rather have one hour than one hour and a half. I have no disposition to cut off general debate, but I am very anxious to get the bill passed to-night if I can.

Mr. MANN. I do not see how we can possibly do that.

Mr. GARNER. It is an hour and a half until 5 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. The bill is quite long, and there will be several amendments to it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I do not think there will be any objection to the amendments or any great necessity for debating them. I think the time will be largely consumed by some gentlemen who desire to speak in favor of the bill and some who will speak against it. It seems to me the actual merits of the bill will not take very long.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the wool bill will follow this.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to take up the wool bill to-morrow. There are a great many gentlemen who want to know when it will come up, and it is a matter of more importance than this bill. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] shall call up this bill and conclude it this evening.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I am perfectly willing to make an agreement to vote upon this bill at a fixed hour to-night, say 6 o'clock. I should be delighted to make that kind of an arrangement.

Mr. MANN. How long does the gentleman think he will want on the wool bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wanted the debate to run to-morrow and the next day, two days' full debate on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman have the bill up for passage Saturday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not expect to try to pass the bill on Saturday. I thought if we could get started on it to-morrow morning and have two full days' general debate, and then postpone the business of Monday until Tuesday, we could take up the consideration of the wool bill on Monday under the five-minute rule.

Mr PAYNE. I think it will take three days to satisfy gentlemen who desire to speak. There is a great deal of demand for time, and most of those who have requested it ought to have the opportunity to speak.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we can make an arrangement, as we did on the excise-tax bill, for a limit of the debate under the five-minute rule, we might run the general debate into Monday. What I am anxious to do is to take up the wool bill to-morrow and to pass it not later than Monday next.

Mr. GARNER. And conclude it Monday night.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to see the consideration of the pending bill disposed of to-day. I will state that I am not for this bill providing a tax on white phosphorus matches. It comes from my committee, but I am not in favor of it. I am perfectly willing that the House should act upon it this afternoon. I do not care to delay it. I have no serious objection to the machinery of the bill. My objection is to its purpose.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The gentleman is opposed to the principle of the bill, but, as he says, there is no objection to the machinery of it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has suggested some amendments, which, in my judgment, improve the bill. I am perfectly willing that they should be adopted, and the other members of the committee are willing to accept those amendments. There should be little or no debate upon the administrative features of the bill.

Mr. MANN. If it is the expectation to pass the bill to-night, it seems to me we had better make the general debate shorter than the time suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will ask unanimous consent that we start to consider the bill under the five-minute rule now.

Mr. GARNER. That will be satisfactory, and then if gentlemen have not sufficient time they can have their time extended if necessary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is satisfactory. I may want 10 or 15 minutes, but I will trust the House to grant me that privilege. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman to ask unanimous consent that there shall be no general debate and to take the bill up immediately under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MANN. Let the gentleman ask unanimous consent that immediately after going into Committee of the Whole the bill shall be read for amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately on going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill the bill shall be read for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the bill H. R. 20842, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that immediately upon going into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the bill shall be read for amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The motion of Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FLOOD of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 20842) to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement of the House, the bill is to be read for amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to joint resolution (H. J. Res. 232) extending the operation of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3686) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Coal Co. and the Eastern Coal & Mining Co. to exchange certain lands embraced within their existing coal leases in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nation for other lands within said nation.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3367) to amend section 2291 and section 2297 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to homesteads, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. JONES, and Mr. CHAMBERLAIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution of the following title:

H. J. Res. 263. Joint resolution to authorize allotments to Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., of lands valuable for coal.

TAX ON WHITE PHOSPHORUS MATCHES.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That every manufacturer of matches shall register with the collector of the district his name or style, place of manufactory, and the place where such business is to be carried on; and a failure to register as herein provided and required shall subject such person to a penalty of not more than $500. Every manufacturer of matches shall file with the collector of internal revenue of the district in which his manufactory is located such notices, inventories, and bonds, shall keep such books and render such returns in relation to the business, shall put up such signs and affix such number to his factory, and conduct his business under such surveillance of officers and agents as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may, by regulation, require. The bond required of such manufacturer shall be with sureties satisfactory to the collector of internal revenue and in the penal sum of not less than $1,000; and the sum of said bond may be increased from time to time and additional sureties required at the discretion of the collector or under instructions of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 1, line 8, by inserting, before the word "matches," the words "white phosphorus," so that it will read "every manufacturer of white phosphorus matches shall register," and so forth.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 8, insert after the word "of" the words "white phosphorus."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the reason I offer the amendment is because I am very clearly of the opinion that without that amendment the bill would be unconstitutional. The only tax levied by this bill is for the white phosphorus matches. I do not think that would give sufficient warrant to require anybody who was manufacturing matches that were not taxed to come under the control of the United States Government and register with the collector.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that that amendment is entirely acceptable to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Now, I move, on page 2, line 3, to insert the words "white phosphorus" before the word "matches."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 3, insert before the word "matches" the words "white phosphorus."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. On page 1, line 9, after the word "collector," insert the words "internal revenue."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "collector," insert the words "internal revenue."

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if that means collector of internal revenue of the district where the manufacturer resides, or where any collector resides.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Where the manufacturer is located. I do not think the amendment is important, but it makes it more clear.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this amendment simply for the purpose of registering my opposition to this bill and this kind of legislation. I know that a great deal of insistence has been made and effort exerted to have Congress enact legislation of this kind. I apprehend that it will not be denied that the effect of this bill and the tax imposed by the bill are to destroy the industry of making white phosphorus matches. I have read a good many articles and communications as to the injurious effects on people laboring in factories where these matches are made. This bill is an effort to exercise the powerful taxing power of the Government, ostensibly to raise revenue, which is the only basis on which the Government can exercise the power of taxation, ostensibly to raise revenue, when the real purpose of the bill is not to raise revenue, but to reach some other end and accomplish some other purpose; in this instance, to destroy the industry altogether.

The Supreme Court of the United States in a number of cases in construing tax laws has said that where it was not apparent on the face of the bill that Congress did not intend to raise revenue by the bill, but expressed the purpose to be one to raise revenue, that they would not be authorized to say that it was not intended to raise revenue, although the effect was to destroy the production of the thing taxed. The power to tax in this instance is being used as a power to destroy the manufacture of this class of merchandise and will not raise any revenue.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. With pleasure, always.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman is aware that Congress passed a law putting a 10 per cent tax on State bank issues?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; I was going to discuss that.

Mr. COOPER. The effect of that, of course, was to destroy the issue of State banks.

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes; in the case of Fenno against The Bank, in Eighth Wallace, the Supreme Court declared that they were not authorized to say that the tax was imposed not for the purpose of raising revenue, but for the purpose of destroying the issue of State banks. It had on its face the ostensible purpose of raising revenue and not to destroy the power of the State banks to issue currency. The court also upheld the act as being the exercise of the right of Congress to protect the national banks, which were agents of the Government in issuing currency, from competition by the State banks. The law did destroy the power of the State banks to issue notes, because no State bank could pay the tax imposed, and therefore the result was to destroy it. But the bill ostensibly was for the purpose of raising revenue, and I apprehend that this bill is for the same purpose, otherwise authority in the Constitution could not be found for its enactment.

As far as I am concerned I have never had a suggestion made to me relative to this legislation except by the advocates of the bill. No such industry as this exists in my section, and I do not even know where the matches are manufactured. I have not given the details of the bill careful consideration. I simply rise to voice, it may be, a futile and feeble opposition to this kind of legislation. If the manufacture of this class of merchandise in the State is so injurious to the health of those employed in the factories, then what has become of those whose duty it is to protect the employee in the State, what has become of the great police powers of the State, which were never surrendered and which by specific amendment to the Constitution were reserved to the States, by which they may protect the health, the morals, and the general welfare of the community? I know that in this day and age we have made rapid strides toward the centralization of all governmental power in Washington. I know that the old-fashioned idea of a government founded by our fathers, with its representative form, with its divisions of power into the executive, the legislative, and the judicial, has been attacked, but, Mr. Chairman, I live in the hope from recent signs that the American people have not altogether lost all sanity upon that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. I would like the gentleman to state what has always been the position of the Democratic Party with reference to this character of use of the taxing power.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I think I know something about Democracy. My idea may be a little old-fashioned. It may not be radical. It may not be very progressive, but I will stop long enough to say that, in my judgment, if the Democratic Party is to continue to succeed it must follow the ancient principles of Democracy and put its feet in the ancient ways of the fathers and follow onward to success, and not follow the ignis fatuus that sometimes looms up, which will lead us into disaster and defeat. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, Democratic doctrine, as I understand it, is that the power to tax can be used only for the purpose of raising revenue for the Government, economically administered. The Democratic Party has been in the past, ought to be in the present, and should be at all times opposed to pretexts and shams like this, which proposes, under the use of the great power of the Government, to tax, not because it needs revenue to accomplish some purpose which ought to be accomplished under an exercise of the police powers of the State and not the taxing power of the Federal Government. I have as much sympathy as anyone else for the misfortune that befalls people who are compelled to work in dangerous employment. I would protect them by law from injury. I would surround those who are compelled to work in dangerous employment in this country with all sorts of safeguards, and in the domain of Federal jurisdiction, so far as we have the power in the matter of regulating interstate commerce, I would also safeguard from danger the health of those who must labor.

But it is a far cry from regulating interstate commerce or taxing people engaged in legitimate business for revenue to call into action powers granted to Congress in the exercise of its taxing power or in the exercise of its power over commerce in order to prescribe a law which is simply intended to reach conditions which affect the health, happiness, or general welfare of the people in the local communities in the States, over which communities and conditions the State has ample and supreme power. I understand that this may be old-fashioned. I understand that the modern idea is that whatever the people want we should give to them, whether it is to tax business out of existence or to reverse the judgments of courts at the behest and by the vote of the mob. I do not believe that this is wise legislation. I do not believe that representatives should be hurried or forced from their convictions, that Congress ought to exercise this sort of power by holding up before the eyes of the Members of Congress the results of a dreadful disease contracted by people engaged in this business. That is the usual way. It is the same strong argument that Anthony used over the dead body of Cæsar.

The people were shouting for Brutus one minute, and he then pointed them to the bloody garments of Cæsar, to the places in them through which the daggers of the assassins struck their blows, and through which the blood of the great Cæsar flowed. In the sight of that, they forgot everything, and while the moment before they were shouting for Brutus, in the next moment, in answer to Anthony's suggestion, they demanded his death. The States should be left to discharge their duties of protecting the people in cases like this.

Referring to the doctrine to which my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] called my attention in the bank cases, it is the same doctrine as in the oleomargarine case——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I had not anticipated that this question was coming up. It is so in the oleomargarine case, and the Supreme Court said, although it appeared from the debates in this House that the advocates of the oleomargarine tax intended it for the purpose of destroying the manufacture of oleomargarine, although it was for the purpose of putting manufacturers of colored oleomargarine out of business, yet if it did not appear on the face of the bill that such was the purpose of the bill, if the bill ostensibly was simply a use of the taxing power of the General Government to raise revenue, then the court would not say that it was an illegitimate and unconstitutional use of the power of Congress. There is this difference, I desire to say: In taxing the issue of State-bank notes the Supreme Court also sustained that law upon the idea that the national bank was one of the agencies of the Government; that it issued the currency of the Government, and the Government had the right to protect its own fiscal agents from competition by the State banks. That was one of the reasons why they sustained that law. They sustained the power of Congress to levy a tax for revenue, although the effect of the tax was to destroy the business which was taxed. There is no question about that. This bill may be constitutional. I do not know. I have never read it carefully enough to express an opinion upon that feature, and I do not undertake to express it without having carefully read the bill. I would be glad at all times to vote for any measure which sought to relieve human suffering or to better human conditions, especially the conditions of those who have to labor and toil for their living under adverse circumstances. I would be glad to vote for any measure which would take away from the laborer the opportunity to contract disease because of working in a factory such as is said to be in the case of these men who work in the manufacture of this class of matches. But if this is a legitimate industry, if the manufacturer of phosphorus matches is not inhibited by law, what power have we, and if we have the power, why should we exercise the policy of destroying an industry of this kind simply because we have not yet been able to discover some means by which men who work may not become sick and incapacitated by a disease. Are we to gather from all over this vast country the men who become sick or diseased from labor, a vast list, not to protect them in their work, but to destroy the property which the people have the right to make and the business which they have the right to carry on? I repeat that I have no interest in this measure, but I simply wanted to voice my opposition to it as being an improper exercise of the power of the Congress and a false pretense of the use of the taxing power. [Applause.]

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I favor this bill because I place humanity, even though clothed in overalls or calico, so far above the dollar that there is absolutely no comparison. [Applause.]

The people of my district know where I stand upon most questions. If they feel that my services will be of value to them in the future they will be more than welcome to them. But I want my colleagues here, as well as my constituents, to know that I never have, and do not now, seek any office for the mere sake of holding it. Unless I can be of service in my present position I do not want to hold it.

The pending bill taxes white phosphorus matches so high that they will no longer be manufactured. That is right. It has been shown to this House that they are poisonous. They are dangerous to laborers who work in the factory. It has been shown that they produce "phossy jaw," which is a very loathsome disease, being a rotting of the bones of the face. Congress certainly should protect those who, either through ignorance or poverty, accept employment from greedy manufacturers who use white phosphorus in the making of matches simply because it is cheaper than a safe compound.

I am against dishonest greed in whatever form it manifests itself. That is my platform on all matters of legislation.

When I first came to Congress I could not conceive how a patriotic body like this could continue to delay in the passage of a law giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix rates based upon physical valuations. But I have learned a few things that ought to be humiliating to every American citizen. Big business, so called, is swaggering around this Capitol and throughout the country, attempting to control politics and legislation. It attempts, first, to cajole Members of this body, and failing in that it seeks to intimidate them and make them fear the results of its power in the next succeeding election.

I might be alarmed myself if I was so distrustful of the intelligence and courage of my constituents as to believe that they could be stampeded with a weapon made up of a corncob with a lightning bug on the end of it. The artillery of the interest-serving newspapers fighting me is just about of that caliber.

In this House I have stood for exactly what I promised in my campaign for election. If I am advocating wrong governmental policies, the people of my district are responsible, and I think they are willing to accept that responsibility. I have introduced LA FOLLETTE'S appraisement bill here, and have made speeches for it. I exposed the Oregon & California Railroad land-grant steal, asking this body to wake up the slumbering litigation pending at Portland in reference to it, and to see to it that no further delays are tolerated.

I have not flinched, and I do not propose to flinch. If I give up the fight, the bugle will have to sound the retreat from the rear.

The people of this country are paying dividends upon billions of dollars of overcapitalization. No one denies it. Yet no remedy is forthcoming. Why? Big business in politics.

Oregon has taken the initiative in leading the country out of this big business bondage. Oregon gave us the direct primary, statement 1, the initiative and referendum and recall, and last but not least the presidential preference law.

Last year in Oregon the old guard made its last stand when it held an assembly. In that fight I was elected to this body. It is my hope and ambition to make good and prove the wisdom of the Oregon system. The same crowd that held that assembly are now backing my principal opponent. They belittle my fight for the people, and promise for their candidate "action, not words." If they can explain to me how they can get action in this body without words, I will subscribe to their slogan.

A public-service commission in each State and a national public-service commission are needed to control monopolies. These commissions should be given power by law to fix rates and prices of monopolies based upon physical valuations. When this is done every man who works for a living, either at his trade or profession, will be able to buy with the money he takes in a good living for himself and family. He will be able to take a vacation of at least 30 days each year. He will be able to educate his children. He will be able to lay by a little for his old age. This legislation should be followed by an eight-hour law for men and women in every State in the Union.

In conclusion, permit me to say that ROBERT MARION LA FOLLETTE represents my ideals of fair and honest government. [Applause.] A few weeks ago it was reported that LA FOLLETTE was no longer available as a candidate this year because he was broken in health after his 20 years' fight for the people. I then said to myself that ROBERT LA FOLLETTE would get one vote if I get to the polls in Portland on primary election day, April 19. [Applause.]

To-day I received a copy of the Daily News of Portland, which is the brightest and cleanest daily in that city, containing an editorial upon LA FOLLETTE entitled "Alone with the people," which is so expressive of the movement that I think it is going to place the millions of good citizens of this country in charge of their own Government that I quote the same here:

ALONE WITH THE PEOPLE.

The battle of the politicians, the songs of the hero worshipers, the plaudits of the job holders, the mumble of the money changers, was hushed. They paused to hear the voice of the plain people expressed for the first time in the first presidential primary.

"North Dakota," called Uncle Sam on the roll call. Will she answer "Taft" or "Teddy"? asked the country.

"North Dakota," repeated Uncle Sam. Then came a roar out of the heart of the prairie, out of the free land at the foot of the Rockies, out of the untainted air of the great West.

"ROBERT MARION LA FOLLETTE."

[Applause.]

What LA FOLLETTE? BOB LA FOLLETTE, the man who stood alone when the "progressive" leaders of State after State turned and fled, and deserted him in the hour of his weakness and misfortune. What LA FOLLETTE? The man who refused to surrender to the argument of his dearest friends or the threats of ancient enemies, the man who lifted himself from a bed of sickness to lead a charge in the name of the common people. What LA FOLLETTE? The man who knows what he believes and why he believes it, who fights for his convictions regardless of consequences, who won't retract, equivocate, or deceive, the one man Big Business is really afraid of because it can not buy him, scare him, nor answer him. LA FOLLETTE, deserted but not dismayed, fighting single handed and alone, sustained only by the cheers and mountainous majorities of the plain people.

They said he was "alone."

The worshipers of success, the men who sold the moment above the principle, said he was "alone."

Aye—alone with the people.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to tax white phosphorus matches. I can not agree with the gentleman from Georgia, either, that there is any lack of constitutional authority on the part of Congress to enact this law, or that any question of party consistency is involved in its support. But it is more imporant to be finally right, than to be consistent in error.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not say there was any lack of power.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will discuss the question of power in a moment. One feature, I may say purpose, of this law, is highly humanitarian, and I observe that there is no gentleman on the floor who will take issue with the friends of the measure on that ground, or challenge the statement that its passage will bring hope and relief to thousands of match workers, male and female, who are subject at all times to the dangers of phosphorus necrosis, a most insidious and loathsome disease. The opposition takes refuge behind the doctrine of State rights, and charges that in some way this measure will come in conflict, or collision, with the police power of the States. There is no such conflict, Mr. Chairman. There will be no such collision. There is no interference or infringement sought, or intended, on the part of this body, with the exercise of any portion of the police power by the several States of this Union. The taxing power is in no sense the police power. We set in motion the one, the States the other. Within the sphere of our own paramount authority, we are dealing in our own way, with a present problem, and a present evil. The first question that presents itself for our consideration, and initial determination, is whether this body shall decline to act on a great humanitarian measure like this, when the States either will not act, or fail to act, or their action, unless it is universal and uniform, will not meet the evil.

Shall the inaction of others, justify our own? Shall this body disregard the call of suffering humanity, when the exercise of our constitutional power, will eliminate from industrial use a poisonous, and unnecessary element? [Applause.]

This is the proposition that presents itself to us to-day. I wish to say to those gentlemen who have suggested that we can not pass this bill in good faith, or frankly avow its humanitarian purpose, that they are mistaken in that opinion. We might write across the face of the pending measure that one of its purposes was to inhibit the use of white phosphorus in the preparation of safety matches, and yet that declaration would not cause the Supreme Court to interfere with this act, or declare the same to be unconstitutional.

The celebrated oleomargarine case sustained an enactment similar to this, on several grounds. Speaking broadly, the court declared that when Congress exercises a lawful authority, the judicial power will not undertake to correct an abuse of that authority, even when subjects not within the powers delegated to Congress, are indirectly affected. The courts will not pry into the motives of Congress when laying a constitutional excise tax. But the court went further. In the concluding paragraph of its opinion, (White, judge. McCray v. United States, 195, V. S. p. 64), the court declared that while it would interfere with an act of Congress, if it was plain to the judicial mind that the power to tax had been called into play, not to raise revenue, but solely to destroy rights which could not be rightfully destroyed, consistently with the principles of freedom and justice upon which the Constitution rests, yet this reserved power would not be exercised in the oleomargarine case, for the reason that the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine could be prohibited by a free government, without a violation of the fundamental rights upon which such a government should rest. [Applause.]

If the statement that the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine involves no fundamental natural right, is true as to oleomargarine, how much the more positively may a like statement be made of the use of white phosphorus, a material which can not be used, however guardedly, without endangering health and life. The desire to use this element in the manufacture of matches, finds its origin in human greed, which is ever reckless of human life, and human happiness. It is cheaper to make matches with white phosphorus than with other materials. Hence its use. But to forbid this use is not a violation of fundamental rights by a free government. McCray v. United States, and the antecedent cases, amply sustain the contention that a prohibitory tax on white phosphorus will be sustained by the courts. It is further true, upon the authority of the McCray case, that with reference to this particular material of white phosphorus, and its industrial use, a frank avowal in terms, of our purpose to prohibit such use, would not affect this statute with unconstitutionality. So that if we have the will to act, we undoubtedly possess the power. Nor is it needful to gloss over, or conceal our motive. Fully, freely, and frankly I for one announce that the human appeal in this situation impels me to support this measure. I glory in the fact that we can use our constitutional authority in aid of suffering humanity.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question? I understood the gentleman to say that Congress would have the right to prohibit the manufacture of these white phosphorus matches.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I said in substance that if we wrote across the face of this statute that it was intended in part to prohibit the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of safety matches, the Supreme Court under its decision in the McCray case, would not interfere with its operation, or declare it to be invalid. The general principle is stated in the oleomargarine case as follows:

> Since, as pointed out in all the decisions referred to, the taxing power conferred by the Constitution knows no limits except those expressly stated in that instrument, it must follow that if a tax be within the lawful power, the exertion of that power may not be judicially restrained because of the results to follow from its exercise. (McCray v. United States, 195 U. S., p. 27.)

Mr. BARTLETT. I so understood the gentleman, but I did not ask the question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I undertook to answer the gentleman's question as I understood it and my answer is in conformity with the McCray case.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but——

Mr. SAUNDERS. It does not interrupt me at all. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman just stated, when I rose, that it was our duty to prohibit the manufacture of matches like these, which injured the health of the people, and so forth.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I say that it is our moral duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. What power has Congress to prohibit that sort of business?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I did not say that the Federal Government could directly prohibit it. I did not make that statement, nor is that the statement of the Supreme Court. I stated that in the oleomargarine case the court announced in substance, that even if it was aware that the intention of the lawmaking body was to prohibit the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine, it would not interfere, because the manufacture of colored oleomargarine was something that a free government, to use its own language, could prohibit without a violation of fundamental rights, without an invasion of that freedom and justice upon which a free government reposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Supreme Court plainly announced that when it is clear to the judicial mind that the taxing power has been called into exercise, not for revenue, but solely for the purpose of destroying rights which could not rightfully be destroyed, consistent with the principles of freedom and justice upon which the Constitution rests, then in such a case the court would interfere, but it added that this principle would not apply in the oleomargarine case, for the reason that the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine could be prohibited by a free government without any violation of fundamental rights. Hence I conclude that the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches may be prohibited by a free government without interference with fundamental rights. From this it follows, that should we write into this bill a declaration of our composite purpose in enacting it, the Supreme Court, pursuant to the principle supra, could not interfere with the law, or declare it to be unconstitutional. So that Mr. Chairman, with respect to this situation, we are not hampered by any decision of the Supreme Court. We are not hampered by any limitation, or provision of the Constitution, with respect to the use of the taxing power. The power to tax carries with it inherently, the power to embarrass, and destroy. It is unlimited in its nature. Austin v. The Alderman, 7 Wallace-699. Hence we possess all needful power to deal comprehensively, and effectively with a situation which presents so much of pathetic and appealing interest.

So far as the Democratic attitude is concerned, I will say to my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] that I believe that with respect to tariff taxes he has correctly stated the party attitude, but I do not recall that the principle announced has been extended to excise taxes. Still I will admit that the same principle would measurably apply to the imposition of these taxes.

But there is this difference between a case like the one before us, and the laying of an ordinary protective duty, designed to build up a special business at the expense of the general body of consumers. There are very obvious and sufficient reasons why the taxing power should not be used to destroy one form of legitimate business, for the benefit of an equally legitimate competitor. But that principle has no present application. We are not seeking to benefit the manufacturer, but the workingman, by this legislation. On the other hand our action will discourage no form of legitimate industry. Looking to its humanitarian side, this legislation merely serves to exclude a poisonous ingredient from use in the match factories of this country. Incidentally, the profits of the match trust will be slightly, very slightly reduced. The market price of matches will not be increased, and the health of the employees will be immensely benefited. Surely these are sufficient reasons to justify our support of this measure.

My friend from Georgia says in substance: "Wait on the exercise of the police power by the States." Should we wait until the States, one by one, shall prohibit the use of white phosphorus, in all likelihood this generation, and still another, will pass away. The independent action of one State, however well designed, would merely serve to drive the industry from that State into another. "Uniformity by State action is not practicable within a reasonable time." While we split hairs over constitutional refinements, and selfish interest turns a deaf ear to the pathetic appeal of suffering humanity, phosphorus necrosis, with its sequel of suffering and death, claims new victims. [Applause.]

I deny that any Democratic principle requires a Democrat to higgle, and quibble over a proposition like this, when men and women are suffering and dying, for want of the immediate relief that this body alone can afford, by a legitimate exercise of an express constitutional authority. [Applause.]

We have acted heretofore in cases in which the demand for legislation was not one-tenth so exigent, as in the present case. I think, Mr. Chairman, that as Democrats and patriots, we would fail in our duty, should we decline to enact this measure on the avowed ground, that we preferred to allow other jurisdictions to extend by piecemeal, a relief that we can afford at one stroke. The States are free to exercise their constitutional functions. We are not interfering with that exercise, or disturbing those functions. We are operating within our own sphere, and within that sphere, we are supreme. In the exercise of our paramount authority, we are able to put the ax to the root of this evil. [Applause.]

The deleterious effect of white phosphorus seems to be inseparable from its use. It is a noxious poison. "As used in match composition it jeopardizes human health and life to a marked degree. Being readily volatile in the ordinary temperature of the air, it emits a bluish-white flame which affects the health of those who labor in match factories in three different ways. First, by causing anaemia. Second, by causing the bones of the body to become brittle, and unable to withstand slight external violence without breaking. Third, by causing phosphorus necrosis of the upper and lower jawbones. Anæmia and brittleness of the bones are frequent effects of chronic phosphorus poisoning. The daily breathing of air laden with phosphorus fumes, and continual contact with the particles of phosphorus are apt to result in a gradual lowering of vitality, which in turn invites other forms of disease."

"Phosphorus necrosis is caused by the absorption of the fumes of particles of white phosphorus through carious teeth and gums. The gums become swollen and purple, and the teeth loosen and drop out." But this is not all. "The organic, or animal matter of the jawbones slowly rots away, and passes off in the form of nauseating pus, which breaks through the neck in the form of abscesses, or if not almost continually washed out, oozes into the mouth, when it mixes with the saliva, and is swallowed, tending to induce chronic toxaemia. The stench from the suppurating bones, is dreadful, and is so nauseating that physicians and dentists alike avoid patients afflicted with advanced cases of necrosis. The disease is attended with awful suffering, and ends in frightful disfigurement, and occasionally in death." Phosphorus necrosis, is commonly called phossy jaw. For this there is no relief save by a surgical operation. The diseased bone must be removed. Sometimes the one jaw, sometimes both have to be excised. The consequent disfigurement is dreadful, and the pain attendant on the disease is excruciating. It seems to be true, that women are in greater danger of phosphorus poisoning than men. According to the statistics it appears that 95 per cent of the female employees, and 83 per cent of the children under 16 years of age are exposed to the "danger of the diseases resulting from phosphorus poisoning."

The Standard Accident Insurance Co., of Detroit, declines to write match factories on the ground that it has been unable to discover anything that would prevent poisonous infection when white phosphorus is used by the match companies.

These facts constitute a grave indictment against the use of white phosphorus, and the question may well be asked, Why has this use been permitted? The answer in part is, that for a time there were no non-poisonous substitutes, and in other part, that since these substitutes have been discovered, the cost of their use exceeds the cost of using white phosphorus. To the credit of many of the American manufacturers it may be said that they are willing to abandon the use of this material, but to do this, so long as their competitors continue its use, would be equivalent to retiring from business. They would be unable to meet the competition of the white-phosphorus match makers. The danger of phosphorus poisoning is greater in the United States than in the other countries where matches are made. This is due to the so-called "double-dip" match, invented a few years ago by an American manufacturer, and now rapidly supplanting all other forms.

The added tip of these matches, is about 20 per cent pure white phosphorus, and their varied color renders them more likely to attract the attention of children. A number of small children have died from sucking these matches. Confronted during the last 40 years with the dangers of phosphorus poisoning to the employees of the match factories, one country after another has tried the experiment of safeguarding these employees through stringent regulations. These regulations reduced, but did not eliminate the mischief. It is difficult to trace all the cases of phosphorus poisoning. The more horribly disfigured victims are not disposed to court publicity, while other victims do not connect their sufferings with this source.

A distinguished English authority, Dr. Oliver, has noted that a person may follow his occupation in the match works for years without suffering, or he may have left the works for two years, or more, and then in the most unexpected manner develop symptoms and physical signs of phosphorus necrosis. "The poisonous match not only endangers match workers, menaces little children in the home, but affords a ready means to those intent upon suicide, or the production of abortion."

One country after another has abandoned futile regulation in favor of effective prohibition. Science has come to the aid of this movement, by the discovery of various non-poisonous compounds for use on the tip, or head of the match. "Phosphorus in some form or compound is essential as an ingredient in the production of every kind of match. By means of chemical conversion, the poisonous element may be entirely eliminated. Chemical science has produced 8 or 10 different non-poisonous forms, or compounds of phosphorus, that are adapted, more or less effectively for use as the inflammable element in match composition." The more commercially available are the red-amorphous, and allotropic forms in common use in England and, on the Continent, sesquisulphide of phosphorus, whose use in this country was long controlled by a patent owned by the Diamond Match Co.

Within the last year however, the use of this material has been opened to other manufacurers, by the surrender of its letters patent on the part of this company, and a dedication of its invention to the "public of the United States of America forever." So that there is no lack of non-poisonous material for the tip of the safety match, and no reason why the use of white phosphorus should be continued, save for motives of greedy profit, which hinder a common agreement between the manufacturers to discontinue that use. What those manufacturers are unwilling, or unable to do, this Congress should compel them to do, and thus in a measure remove from the country the stain which has already attached, of being the last of the great powers to act in this respect.

Too long has this country delayed its action. The Congress alone can furnish a remedy adequate with the evil, a remedy coextensive with the limits of the Republic. Shall we longer turn a deaf ear to the call of humanity, the pitiful cry of the toilers in this industry? One by one the great countries of the world have pointed the way. In succession, Germany, France, Sweden, Austria, Russia, and Great Britain, have reached the goal of prohibition by the weary round of ineffective regulation. Remedial legislation is often hindered and impeded by the extent of the industries affected. Big business protests that such legislation will close the doors of their plants, that the roar of their furnaces will be hushed, and the smoke of their chimneys will no more trail across the heavens, should they be required to conduct their affairs in a prescribed way, or eliminate certain elements from their processes. Legislators listen to these "tales of woe," and are impressed. Fearful of industrial panic, they refuse, or decline to act. But no results of panic, or loss of material profit, will follow the enactment of this measure. The match manufacturers recognize that prohibitory legislation is inevitable in this country. This body I trust will set the health and lives of the wage earners, against the slight loss to the manufacturers that this legislation will entail. The appeal of selfish interest should pass unheeded. "The use of the readily available substitutes for white phosphorus, will result in an increased cost to the manufacturer of from 5 to 7 per cent. As an offset to this in part there is the saving of the expense which the manufacturers of the poisonous match incur in protecting their employees, and in providing for them when incapacitated. The added cost of the nonpoisonous match would be so slight that it will be borne by the manufacturers and dealers."

But this Congress when confronted by the appalling loss of life and limb among the railway employees engaged in interstate commerce, did not hesitate to impose upon the carriers the burden of safety appliances. The fact that this added cost would be borne by the railroads, was not deemed a sufficient objection to the legislation. There are certain advantages that will accrue in this country from the use of nonpoisonous matches, as they have accrued in other countries. These advantages are less danger of fire, and greater safety for the children of the household.

It appears from the hearings that the manufacturers are agreed that in the event of the passage of this law, which has been earnestly recommended by the President, and which a Republican Congress long failed to pass, they will be able to furnish the trade with a satisfactory "strike-anywhere" match. This has been done abroad. I have too much confidence in the skill, ingenuity, and ability of the American people, to doubt that it will be even more satisfactorily done in this country.

I know something about uniform State legislation and the difficulty of securing its enactment. This relief will never be effected by State legislation, unless the States of the Union unite on one common law. So long as one State declines to concur with her sister State, the remedy by State action will be inadequate and incomplete.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have said that I know something about uniform State action.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] askes unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the exercise of the police power of the States will be ineffective to relieve this situation. One gentleman discussing this question a day or two ago, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] said that he would have but small respect for a State that, confronted with a situation of this character, would not meet it by suitable legislation. True, but what of this body in a like dilemma? The Congress of the United States confronts such a situation. What will the world think of us, should we fail to meet our responsibility with appropriate action? [Applause.]

Our responsibility is as much greater than the responsibility of a State, as our power is greater. I have pointed out that State action would not be effective, until the concurrence of every State of the Union was secured. Have in mind the time required to secure concurrent action by the States on a measure of ordinary legislation, and then compute the time required for such action with respect to a measure like this, or any other measure into which enter the elements of human avarice and greed!

I had the honor to serve in my own State for a number of years on a committee on uniform State legislation. We prepared and recommended to the several States a considerable body of legislation. I recall one measure in particular, a bill relating to negotiable instruments, a bill that was highly commended, and in the result was adopted in quite a number of the States. To the enactment of this bill, there was no valid or sufficient objection in any State, but after about 18 States had acted favorably, the movement was halted, why, I do not know. But should only 18 of our 48 States legislate against white phosphorus, such legislation would be far from meeting the evil of this situation. Hence I repeat that the reference of action on this matter, to the police power of the States, can not be seriously considered, if we are impressed with the merits of the case presented. We are not required by any principle or policy with which I am acquainted, to refrain from the exercise of our authority, and to wait on some other joint authority, even conceding that in time such joint action would prove effective. But in this instance, if experience tells us anything, the deferred hope of uniform State legislation will make the hearts of these poor toilers sick. Relief will not come from the voluntary action of the manufacturers. The wavering balance in this instance is too greatly shaken by self, to admit of right adjustment by the parties in interest.

What is our plain duty? Shall we lag behind the other nations, civilized, and uncivilized? The countries of the Old World, where human life and human happiness are not deemed to be held as dear as in this country of ours, far off Australia, and even Japan with its oriental indifference to pain and suffering, have agreed in prohibiting the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches. Some of the powers of Europe have gone so far as to make an international agreement with respect to this subject. Shall the United States, the land of the free, the goal to which suffering humanity turns the world over, be the only nation failing to respond to this imperious call? Assuredly we are all opposed to the continued use of white phosphorus, shall we then decline to crush this use with a power that is well within our constitutional rights? Shall we hesitate to do that which humanity demands shall be done, merely because of the suggestion that these petitioners should first invoke the police power of the States? It is not too much to say, that the continued use of white phosphorus in the match industry, is legalized murder. The conservation of natural resources is a great policy, but the conservation of the lives and health of our toilers is far more imperatively demanded.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said in substance, that a Democrat can not support this bill, and be consistent. I do not consider that favoring this measure, I am any the less a Democrat, than other Members of this body who call themselves Democrats, and oppose its passage. But if support of a measure of this character, a measure that in the result will eliminate "phossy jaw" from the home of humble toil, puts me outside of the pale of the Democratic Party, then I go out freely, and voluntarily. I will go out with much good company on this side of the House. [Applause.]

Gentlemen in opposition say that favorable action on this bill will establish a precedent. What of it? Precedents like these will prove the salvation of the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi to withhold his remarks to give us an opportunity to dispose of an amendment to which there is no objection. I ask for a vote on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 9, by inserting, after the word "collector," the words "of internal revenue."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not agree with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] in the conclusion he reaches with regard to the case of McCray v. The United States. On the contrary, I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] states correctly the principle of law there announced. The case clearly states that when Congress exercises a power of taxation which is within its rights the court will not, because there may be some other purpose or some other reason, go behind the purpose stated in the bill and impugn the motives of Congress.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If my friend will pardon me, I do not controvert that at all. That is absolutely true.

Mr. SISSON. But the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] says that as an original proposition the court announces that if a bill had been enacted to destroy the oleomargarine industry, that would have been within the power of Congress.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I did not say that.

Mr. SISSON. This case does not state that at all, but it says that, because it exercised a power within the Constitution, if the result should be that it destroyed an industry which Congress wanted to destroy, it would be destroying it by the exercise of a constitutional power.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the arraignment that the Democratic Party has made of the Republican Party for all these years. In other words, from the very beginning of the Government we have charged those who maintained the doctrine of protection, as one of the powers of the Government exercised under the taxing clause of the Constitution, that that was an evasion, and I can not conceive of any position that Democrats can take on this bill, if they vote for it, unless they at the selfsame time apologize to every Republican for the last hundred years for the position he has been taking. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TILSON. You are apologizing now.

Mr. SISSON. I am not apologizing, because I am not going to vote for this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. BURLESON. If it can be contended that this is a proper use of the taxing power, would it not be permissible, under the guise of raising revenue, to destroy the distilling and brewing interests of this country by levying a tax of $25 a gallon on whisky and $100 a barrel on beer?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Absolutely.

Mr. SISSON. If the contentions of the advocates of this bill are true, you could absolutely destroy the liquor industry, and you have pointed the prohibitionists to the way, and you can not dodge the issue any more.

Mr. SAUNDERS. They have already pointed the way in the oleomargarine case.

Mr. SISSON. That is true; but a Democratic House did not do that. That was done by a Republican House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A Republican can justify his position, because his party never has had much regard for the Constitution. The power to tax is the power to take, and the power to take is the power to impoverish, and the Democratic theory is that no citizen should be deprived of one penny of that which he has justly earned unless it is for the purpose of paying the expenses of this Government; and when gentlemen bring into this House a measure, and the very report which they write here states that the purpose is not to raise revenue but to destroy the industry, you are doing under the guise of the taxing power that which it is unconstitutional to do and which the court would tell you you had no right to do, if you should enact your legislation directly and state only the truth in the title of the bill. I do not believe it is right by indirection, for those of us who feel as Democrats ought to feel, to evade the provisions of the Constitution which we have sworn to support. If our past utterances are sincere, if we believe as the party to which we belong says we shall believe in order to be Democrats, I do not understand how we can indorse this bill. I do not see how any Democrat can indorse it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to let the court hide behind the Constitution than that Democrats who stand here representing the people should hesitate to save the lives of people who are being poisoned?

Mr. SISSON. I will answer the gentleman's question. The gentleman, however, ought not to even evade the oath which he took in front of the Speaker's desk, which was taken without any equivocation or mental reservation whatsoever, that he would support and defend the Constitution of the United States; and if he believes this measure is unconstitutional, if he does not find a constitutional warrant for this legislation, then it ought to be his duty to maintain the Constitution, just as it is the duty of the court to maintain it, and he ought not to compel the court, by writing that into the bill which is untrue, to evade the Constitution. The purpose stated in the bill is not the purpose of Congressmen who vote for it, as I understand it. I speak this charitably. If the purpose of the bill is ulterior, if it is not that which is shown upon its face, it is an extremely bad precedent to set, because, under the guise of a humanitarian spirit, we may enact legislation that Congress never dreamed of enacting in the past; that the fathers of the Republic never dreamed they would enact; that the people of the country would not indorse, perhaps, as coming from this Central Government if they knew it. I do not believe a Member of this House has any more right to evade the provisions of the Constitution than the Supreme Court has, and as long as I am a Member of Congress I do not want to ease my conscience. On the contrary, I stand with Mr. Jefferson. I believe that it was of very doubtful propriety when the first decision was ever rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States overturning an act of Congress. I believe that of itself was an aggression of power.

I believe that every one of us has even more respect for our oaths of office; I believe we would love the Constitution more and stay closer to the Constitution if we did not understand that our action would be viséed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. Does the gentleman believe that his construction of the Constitution on this or any other question ought to bind the consciences of other Members of the House?

Mr. SISSON. I do not.

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The gentleman's argument seems to imply it.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, my argument may be ineffective, like that of the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman from Kansas knows that John the Baptist went through the wilderness crying religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, but the people did not hear him. I may keep crying out in the wilderness and not be heard. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG of Kansas. The gentleman is mistaken—John the Baptist had many converts. The gentleman is an expert at crying out only and saying nothing.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true, but the gentleman's own criticism of my position with reference to the Constitution and the consciences of other men may sit on his own shoulders, and with the same charity that he views my opinion about matters of legislation I may have the right to view the sincerity of his motives, and when the scales are brought in I am perfectly willing to have my opinions weighed in the balance with the opinions of the gentleman from Kansas. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I leave the question of the political responsibility as between the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Virginia for them to determine, but as regards the legal phase of the question, I entirely agree with the gentleman from Virginia. The doctrine of the courts has been from the foundation of the Government that if Congress had the power to impose a tax the courts would not seek to inquire as to what might be the ultimate effect of that tax. If the Government of the United States has the power to impose a quarter of a cent on a thousand matches, it has the right to impose a 2-cent tax on a hundred matches, and what the ultimate effect may be on the manufacture of matches the courts will not feel bound to consider.

Mr. Chairman, the exercise of the power by Congress whenever it passes any internal-revenue regulations will be governed, notwithstanding what gentlemen say, by what Congress believes will be to the best interests of the country in the levying of such tax. They will doubtless take into consideration the question as to whether much or little revenue will be brought in by the imposition of a tax.

But they will also take into consideration the moral and social effect of that tax upon the people of the country. They did that in the placing of the tobacco tax and the liquor tax and the oleomargarine tax, and they will doubtless do it in regard to this tax. [Applause.]

This House has the power, and it will certainly exercise that power when it may do so in the cause of humanity in its largest and best sense. This bill appeals to them because it is in behalf of a class of people who are unfortunately so circumstanced that they either can not understand what the results of the traffic they are engaged in will be upon them, or they are helpless to prevent it. And so I am glad to believe, if I can understand the temper of this House, that it will be in favor of doing that which the Constitution does not prohibit and which the people of the land and the great humanitarian sense of the world will applaud as a righteous and just act from every other possible standpoint. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That every manufacturer of matches who manufactures, sells, removes, distributes, or offers to sell or distribute white phosphorus matches without there being affixed thereto an adhesive stamp denoting the tax required by this act, effectually canceled as provided by the preceding section, shall for each offense be fined not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not more than two years. Every manufacturer of matches who, to evade the tax chargeable thereon or any part thereof, hides or conceals, or causes to be hidden or concealed, or removes or conveys away, or deposits or causes to be removed or conveyed away from or deposited in any place any white phosphorus matches, shall for each offense be fined not more than $1,000 and be imprisoned not more than two years, or both, and all such matches shall be forfeited.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I make the pro forma amendment to strike out the last word. I favor this bill, as I favored the bill introduced last year by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], of which this is the practical counterpart. I believe that the last Congress would have passed that bill had the fact not developed that the only substitute for white phosphorus was a substance known as sesquisulphide, in the manufacture of which the Diamond Match Co. had by patent exclusive control. Had we passed the bill last year at that time, the result would have been to throw a monopoly of the match business into the hands of the Diamond Match Co.

The President of the United States took a great interest in this measure, and it was at his instance that the Diamond Match Co. consented to relinquish its patent on the manufacture of sesquisulphide. The Diamond Match Co. has relinquished its patent, and the manufacture of sesquisulphide is now open to every manufacturer in this country.

There is no reason, then, why we should not pass this bill. There is no other method of reaching the evil that this bill seeks to reach. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has well said that it might be generations before the various States of this Union would pass legislation to prevent the manufacture of white phosphorus matches. We could not get at it through the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution because if we should undertake to provide that white phosphorus matches could not be transported between the States the result would simply be that factories would spring up in all the States, and they would ship white phosphorus matches to residents within the State. The only way that we can reach the evil which this bill seeks to reach, and no one denies that it is a frightful evil, is to invoke the taxing power of the National Government.

Gentlemen seem to fear that this may be used as a precedent for all sorts of legislation which would destroy industries in States. I doubt whether any gentleman here can point to a single industry for the destruction of which this bill might be regarded as a precedent.

The prime reason why this bill should pass is that those immediately concerned in the manufacture of these matches are subject to the poison. It has been proved beyond a doubt that a large portion of the workers in match factories are apt sooner or later to contract the horrible and loathsome disease of phossy jaw. There is no way to prevent it by any modern methods. The only way to prevent it is by stamping out, as this bill does, in the guise of a high tax, the manufacture of white phosphorus matches.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman states the fact that the tax of 2 cents a hundred will absolutely destroy that kind of an industry.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Beyond all question.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is the purpose of the bill—to destroy it?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is the purpose of the bill to destroy it, and that is the reason I am for the bill, because I want it stamped out.

Mr. SHARP. As far as the precedent is concerned, is it not a good thing to set such a precedent?

Mr. LONGWORTH. It would be a good thing here to set a precedent if there was any other industry in which the laborers in the factories would be subjected to the risk of contracting such a horrible disease as they do in the manufacture of these matches.

Mr. BARTLETT. Would the gentleman from Ohio vote for a bill to put a tax of $5 a gallon on whisky or beer?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is not a parallel case. I am not speaking of any disease that may result to the consumer of matches. I am speaking of the disease that results to the maker of matches. Other gentlemen may be more familiar with the effect of whisky or beer upon the ultimate consumer than I am. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill in the interests of humanity; it offers the only remedy for the existing evil, and I hope that it will become a law.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I have lived in the vicinity of the largest match factory in the United States for many years. I have seen the making of matches from the day when the boys and girls that I knew would on Saturday afternoon and at other spare times make them when they were sawed out of a small wooden card—all but at one end of the match, where it would be broken off. Boys and girls of the factories, which were in those days very crude, dipped these cards in the sulphur and phosphorus compound, which made them ignite when they were scratched. The system of manufacturing matches has been changing and perfecting until to-day we have machinery for doing nearly everything that is done in connection with a match, and the process as it progressed, in every particular, was the subject of invention and care and attention by the manufacturer for the purpose of avoiding as near as possible the direful results of contact of laborers in these factories with white phosphorus. I have talked with manufacturers many times, and with those who know, but I have yet to discover a single instance where these remedial purposes ever accomplished complete prevention, for the reason that when the white phosphorus is in the tank and the matches are dipped, either by hand or machinery, the fumes rise and the whole room is filled with them, and it is practically impossible for the employee to escape contact with the death-dealing qualities of this drug. They have gone to the greatest expense in ventilating purposes and for all other measures that will remove danger of these fumes from the presence of the workers. They have never succeeded in doing it.

Many times manufacturers have gotten together in association meetings and have talked this matter over and discussed at length how they could emancipate their workmen from the ravages of this fatal disease. They have never been able to do anything. At last here comes from France a drug, first manufactured in that country, I believe, by the French Republic itself, which, I understand, monopolizes the manufacture of matches—a drug which does away with the use of white phosphorus, and with which matches are manufactured by the sesquisulphide process. The details of the process are not material. The Diamond Match Co. has its home in my district. Mr. O. C. Barbour, head of the Diamond Match Co., and whose circulars on the subject of Government ownership of railroads have been received by Members, and who was the father of the Diamond Match Co., secured the United States patent for the sesquisulphide. The Diamond Match Co. owned the patent. Naturally they considered it a business proposition to get control of that patent if they could. It was a very good business proposition if they could make matches without the use of white phosphorus, because it would make a better match, as they thought, and also they could secure better conditions for labor. There was some trepidation among the other manufacturers as to the purpose of this move. The Diamond Match Co. had the patent. Naturally they tried to control it, but eventually, at the suggestion of Government officials, at the suggestion of humanitarian members of their company, they, with a philanthropic spirit, gave up this valuable patent, relinquished it to the Government of the United States, and it was canceled. I have talked with Mr. Barbour, who was for many years the president and principal owner of the Diamond Match Co., and I have tried to find out if back of this giving up and cancellation of this patent there was any reason which actuated the Diamond Match Co. wherein it expected to profit thereby, and I will say to my colleagues in this House that I know that gentleman and I know that he is philanthropically inclined in this matter, and it is unjust in the extreme to suggest ulterior motives.

I know that his purpose in this matter is purely philanthropic, and when he relinquished this patent to the Government I am thoroughly satisfied he did it for the purpose of accomplishing the results which we are attempting to accomplish this afternoon. I have little sympathy with those who are so ready to ascribe to the Diamond Match Co. a hidden, cunning purpose.

I can not understand why it is that any gentleman should oppose this bill. There may be a constitutional question involved, but I think you have overlooked one matter in that connection, and that is this: The tax proposed in this bill is not a tax on white phosphorus. It is not technically a tax upon a match, but it is a tax upon a process. There has been much reference to a tax upon beer as an alleged analogy. It is not a comparative case. I will say to you that if people were to manufacture beer containing strychnine or liquor containing sulphuric acid or cyanide of potassium I would vote to tax the process, and that is all that you are asked to do this afternoon. We are not taxing the matches out of business; we are not taxing white phosphorus out of business, for it can be used for many other purposes, and as good matches can be made in other ways. We are simply taxing a process that is injurious and detrimental to the workingmen of this country [applause], and no manufacturer will suffer and no one will be wronged, but the workmen in the factories will receive long-delayed relief.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That every person who affixes a stamp on any package of white phosphorus matches denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law shall for each offense be fined not more than $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than two years, or both.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, we have been seeking for two years to pass legislation that would make it safe for men, women, and children employed in match factories to carry on the business in which they are engaged. Congress has been engaged in the conservation of natural resources, and there is a line for its activities even greater than this, and that is the conservation of human life. [Applause.] Congress has already enacted legislation seeking to promote the safety of employees and the traveling public—has already enacted laws seeking to promote the safety of miners in our mines and to promote the safety of our mail clerks and all those employed in Government work. We seek by this bill to promote the safety of employees in match factories. We have waited for 40 years for the States to do this. They have failed, so that we are now seeing the lamentable situation that not a single State in this Union has as progressive laws with reference to the match industry as has Japan and many of the other nations of the world. Every nation in Europe forbids the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches. An international treaty, entered into at Berne, Switzerland, in 1906, forbade the use of white phosphorus in the making of matches. England joined in that treaty in 1909, and all other nations of Europe practically are now within that treaty. The United States can not sign the treaty unless and until it enacts a law like this. Even Russia taxes poisonous matches to a prohibitive degree, so that only 1 match in 50 in Russia is now made with the use of white or yellow phosphorus.

And yet the United States can not take a place beside Russia in this humanitarian legislation. Australia forbids the importation of matches made from this poisonous article. This being the situation, Congress having the power under the taxing clause, as I contend, the opportunity affords now to pass this bill. The Supreme Court in the McCray case—the oleomargarine case—held as follows:

> The court can not hold a tax void because it is deemed too high. Although the effect of the tax in question may be to repress the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine, it is not on that account a violation of fundamental rights. An act of Congress exerting the taxing power can not be avoided on the ground that it is an abuse of power.

And in the case of Veazie Bank against Fenno, the court held that the tax—

> May very well be classed under the head of duties.

And declaring:

> The power to tax may be exercised oppressively upon persons, but the responsibility of the legislature is not to the court, but to the people by whom its members are elected.

[Applause.]

I trust that the Members of this House will be willing to assume that responsibility. The President in his message of December 10, 1910, referring to this very legislation, declared:

> The diseases incident to this are frightful, and as matches can be made from other materials entirely innocuous, I believe that the injurious manufactures should be discouraged and ought to be discouraged by the imposition of a heavy Federal tax. I recommend the adoption of this method of stamping out a very serious abuse.

[Applause.]

And so again I urge, following the recommendations of the President, following the decisions of the courts and the best spirit of the humanitarian nations of the world, that we adopt this bill. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 6. That every person who removes, defaces, or causes or permits or suffers the removal or defacement of any such stamp, or who uses any stamp or any package to which any stamp is affixed to cover any other white phosphorus matches than those originally contained in such package with such stamp when first used, to evade the tax imposed by this act, shall for every such package in respect to which any such offense is committed be fined $50, and all such matches shall also be forfeited.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, as we are about to exercise the taxing power it is well to know just what that power is, and I read to the committee section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

The meaning of those words would seem to be reasonably clear, but I would like to quote to the House the construction put upon them by two very eminent men in our history, representing the extremes in our two great political schools. Thomas Jefferson said:

> To lay taxes to provide for the general welfare of the United States is to lay taxes for the purpose of the general welfare, for the laying of taxes is the power and the general welfare the purpose for which the power is to be exercised. Congress are not to lay taxes ad libitum for any purpose they please, but only to pay debts or provide for the welfare of the Union. In like manner they are not to do anything they please to provide for the general welfare, but only to lay taxes for that purpose.

Here the opinion of Mr. Jefferson is explicit. According to him we have the power to lay taxes not merely to collect revenue, but to provide for the general welfare of the United States.

Alexander Hamilton, the other great statesman of that time, and representing the opposite political school, said:

> No objection ought to arise to this construction from the supposition that it could employ a power to do whatever else would appear to the Congress conducive to the general welfare. The power to appropriate money with this latitude, which is granted in express terms, would not carry power to do any other thing not authorized in this Constitution, either expressly or by fair implication.

I think it is not necessary to argue to this committee that it is for the general welfare of the Nation to put an end to one of the most loathsome diseases of civilization. I admit that even the taxing power, with the broad purpose for which it is expressly granted, should be used with caution for any other purpose than simply to raise money, but the power of Congress is clear. And if it has been used to prohibit the circulation of State banks or to check the use of oleomargarine or to protect American industries, I think it may well be exercised for so laudable a purpose as is here presented. I therefore propose to vote for the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 10. That on and after January 1, 1913, white phosphorus matches, manufactured wholly or in part in any foreign country, shall not be entitled to entry at any of the ports of the United States, and the importation thereof is hereby prohibited. All matches imported into the United States shall be accompanied by such certificate of official inspection by the Government of the country in which such matches were manufactured as shall satisfy the Secretary of the Treasury that they are not white phosphorus matches. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this section.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, the construction given by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts to the language of the Constitution which he has just quoted, and to the language of Mr. Jefferson and of Mr. Hamilton, is not the construction which I understand to be the proper one. I have been trained in the belief that the taxing power delegated to the Federal entity was given for one purpose, and for one purpose only—that is, that the Government might live; and I am not prepared, even on this bill, Mr. Chairman, to desert that training and the belief of a lifetime. I believe the proper construction of the language quoted by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts—that is, the power given to lay taxes to promote the general welfare and to pay the duties—means that the taxes were to be laid and revenue raised thereby, which revenue so raised was to be expended in the payment of the debts and the promotion of the general welfare. I do not believe that it is a sound contention that the taxing power was given to the Federal Government to enable it to destroy. It was given to create and maintain life, not to bring about death. Mr. Chairman, one other word. It is suggested that because of the fact that the courts will not look to the debates, because of the fact that the courts will not examine the speeches made here showing that the avowed purpose of a bill is not to do what upon its face and in its title it purports to do, raise revenue, but is to destroy—it is insisted because they will not look back they therefore will not hold it in violation of the Constitution, and that we therefore must follow it; but, Mr. Chairman, we have a responsibility of our own to the Constitution.

I did not take an oath to support the construction that might be given to the Constitution by the courts. I took an oath to support the Constitution. That Constitution I must support according to my own construction and in the light of my own reason.

I believe that this bill is a violation of the teachings of our own party, and, independent of the party idea, I believe it is a violation of that purpose for which the taxing power was delegated by the States to the Federal entity. The States did not delegate police powers. They retained them. If it be necessary for the Federal Government to exercise police powers, it must go back to the States and receive from them a further delegation of authority.

I do not concur with the idea that the evil aimed at in this bill may not be reached through the interstate-commerce laws. I think that perchance it could be reached there in some measure similar to the pure-food legislation. But whether that is true or not, I do believe, Mr. Chairman, that we ought not to enact into law a proposition declaring for one thing when at the same time we avow that it is for another thing. We ought not to say that it is to raise revenue when its purpose is to destroy. I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that we have the right to pass this bill. So believing, without criticizing other gentlemen, I shall be compelled to vote against it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of stating my position on this bill.

The manner in which the debate is now proceeding is a little bit out of the ordinary, and I suppose I might as well say what I have to say at this time, and as quickly as possible, so as not to take up unduly the time of the committee.

I have been called a good many things in my time, and the legislation for which I have stood has been variously characterized, but I do not know that I and any legislation that I have been associated with and that has been presented in this House have ever before been classified as "ignes fatui" until this afternoon. [Laughter.] But I am willing to accept that characterization.

I will not attempt to follow the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Mississippi in their metaphysical disquisitions, and can not do so, probably because I have not had the necessary mental training. I never had the patience to follow the treatises and the arguments of the old scholars who argued how many angels could stand at one time on the point of a needle. [Laughter and applause.] But I do know this: I know that human beings are suffering in this country to-day, and I say that the strongest indictment that ever was written against the Democratic Party is the indictment written against it by the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Mississippi when they say that it is against the principles of the Democratic Party to reach down and pick up suffering humanity and stop disease and distress. [Applause.]

When they can convince me that the Democratic Party stands for that proposition, as they put it, when they thus rule me out of the party I will leave the Democratic Party willingly, and I will take everything with me in the Democratic Party that is worthy of taking. [Applause.]

Mr. BARTLETT. You will leave some people who are much more worthy than you are.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. That may be in the gentleman's opinion. I will not dispute it with him now.

I know this about this proposition: It may be said that it is not wise to use this power that we have. I do not quarrel with any man who takes that position. It may be said that some other way could be devised, that some other method would be better, and I take issue with no gentleman who takes that position. But when gentlemen have the temerity to say practically that a man violates his oath of office and leaves his democracy behind him because he has a heart in him that beats in sympathy with the common people of his country, and because he can no longer stand the loathsome and intolerable conditions that exist in this community, I am forced and compelled to take issue with them. [Applause.]

Now, this is the situation, gentlemen: I am willing to take the opinions of the great constitutional lawyers of this country who have subscribed to the proposition that this legislation is constitutional; that it is a proper exercise of the taxing power of this Government. The opponents of this legislation in the early days did not rely entirely upon that argument. First we heard that there was no such disease as phossy jaw, because it was possible for unscrupulous manufacturers to hide away the victims. The argument was boldly made that there was no such disease and that there were no such victims. But it happened that from my own district, from the city of Passaic, there came the living evidence of the fact that there is such a disease—perhaps the most loathsome and horrible disease that the medical fraternity of this or any other country is called upon to deal with. And I will say to you, gentlemen of this committee, that in that district of mine there is a match manufacturer, an active and energetic rival of the great Match Trust, and he came to me when this bill was being considered before the Committee on Ways and Means and said:

I am in the match business. I know, Mr. HUGHES, you believe me to be a humane man. I am a humane man. I feel as though I would rather leave the match business and enter upon some other line of activity if I am compelled to carry it on as I am carrying it on now. If I stay in the match business I will have to continue the conditions which are established by my competitors. I am now putting out as a part of my product a certain amount of nonpoisonous matches. Other manufacturers who do not make that special match have made a particular drive against it.

Mr. RAINEY. Was it Mr. Hutchinson who made that statement?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. No, sir; it was not. The manufacturer's name is San. Mr. Hutchinson appeared with him, and I believe he is interested in the concern.

Mr. RAINEY. The same factory?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I think so.

Mr. BATHRICK. So long as this Government is able to prevent the putting of poison into food under the pure-food act, why is not not as thoroughly proper and constitutional to prevent the putting of poison into a match?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I will say to my colleague and to the members of the committee that I was at the hearings, and I have discussed this matter on and off the floor and in the committee rooms, and in practically every other place, for a great many weeks past, and I have never heard anybody seriously urge the unconstitutionality of this legislation. As I understand it, the argument that is made is that while we have the power constitutionally, there is some doubt as to whether that power should be exercised. As I say, I have no sympathy with that argument. I know that in this match industry now people are being diseased and condemned to death. I know that children yet unborn will, unless we pass this legislation, come into the world handicapped and will die because we have failed to act. I want this country to take its place, as the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] says—the gentleman from Wisconsin first fathered this legislation—beside the other humanitarian nations of the world and to give the people engaged in this industry the relief that every civilized country in the world has said its people were entitled to. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That after January 1, 1913, it shall be unlawful to export from the United States any white phosphorus matches. Any person guilty of violation of this section shall be fined not less than $1,000 and not more than $5,000, and any white phosphorus matches exported or attempted to be exported shall be confiscated to the United States and destroyed in such manner as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall have power to issue such regulations to customs officers as are necessary to the enforcement of this section.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, in line 17, page 6, to strike out the word "thirteen" and insert the word "fourteen."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 6, line 17, by striking out the word "thirteen" and inserting the word "fourteen."

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] will permit, I have been in communication with the match manufacturers throughout the United States, and have agreed on some changes to be made in this bill, with reference to the dates when the various provisions shall take effect.

Mr. RAINEY. Has the gentleman an agreement with reference to this provision?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. No change was made in that provision, and none was asked. A change was made in the last section, where the word "thirteen" was substituted for the word "twelve" and the word "fifteen" substituted for the word "fourteen." I am very anxious not to have the gentleman insert an amendment which will perhaps be out of harmony with the other dates in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that if he offers an amendment in section 17 to insert the word "thirteen" in place of "twelve," it will provide that the act shall not take effect until July 1, 1913, while the section under consideration provides that it shall be unlawful to export matches after January 1, 1913, six months before the act will take effect. So it seems to me that the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. RAINEY] is quite necessary.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I am frank to say that I am not aware of the effect of the amendment. I have not had a chance to examine it.

Mr. RAINEY. It just pushes it forward one year.

Mr. MANN. This has nothing to do with the manufacture.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Very well, then.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has no objection to the amendment, then?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. No; I have no objection to it.

Mr. RAINEY. I want to say a few words about the bill. This is an attempt to crush an industry by the use of the taxing power. If it was ever proper to resort to the taxing power for the purpose of crushing an industry, this industry perhaps ought to be the one to be destroyed. If this necrosis of the jaw—this phossy jaw—is as bad as it has been represented to be, the business of manufacturing white or yellow phosphorus matches ought to be stopped just as soon as possible, even if we are compelled to strain the Constitution to do it. But I can not sit here in my seat and hear the statement made on the floor that sooner or later every man, woman, and child who works in a white phosphorus match factory will be afflicted with phossy jaw. The matter has been grossly exaggerated throughout the country, and, I believe, exaggerated for a purpose, which I will endeavor to explain soon if the House will listen to me and will indulge me long enough, and I will not take a very long time either.

The only reliable evidence in the hearings as to the destructive character of this disease and as to its ravages is the statement furnished by the general superintendent of the Diamond Match Co., Mr. Fairburn, and the Diamond Match Co. is favoring this legislation. Mr. Fairburn states in the hearings here that for 12 years they have examined, in their factories where they employ 1,700 men, this dreadful occupational disease. He states that in that time, among those 1,700 employees, in this the largest match industry in this country and perhaps in the world, they have had 25 mild and 16 serious cases of phosphorus necrosis.

Mr. BATHRICK. Does the gentleman know that this phosphorus necrosis has its start from a defective tooth and that the Diamond Match Co. have been particularly watchful; that they employ a dentist in every factory and employ a physician in every factory; and that precautions which are said to be unusual in some factories are employed to prevent this disease?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes; I so understand it.

Mr. BATHRICK. That might account for it.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Fairburn says:

We have had 25 mild and 16 serious cases of phosphorus necrosis—41 cases all told—5 of which ended fatally. In giving these statistics every case of necrosis has been classified as phosphorus necrosis. In addition to the before-mentioned actual cases, 256 employees have been given precautionary special treatment, and these all yielded to treatment without decease or disfigurement ensuing.

We have employed on an average about 1,700 people during the before-stated period of 12 years, exposed to phosphorus fumes, so our total number of cases, mild and serious, is equivalent to one-fifth of 1 per cent of our exposed employees per annum, and the number of fatal cases is equivalent to one-fortieth of 1 per cent per annum. If we consider the total number of our factory employees, the before-mentioned percentage figures will be reduced to about one-eighth of 1 per cent and one sixty-fifth of 1 per cent, respectively.

Now, as has just been stated on the floor, you can prevent phossy jaw by taking care of the teeth, and because certain factories in the States do not exercise this kind of supervision, because certain States do not require this inspection of the teeth of employees in the white phosphorus match factories, we are therefore asked to invoke the taxing power and reach out into the States and crush every one of these industries. That is clearly what this bill proposes to do, and in the report filed by the Ways and Means Committee they admit it.

Mr. JAMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. With pleasure.

Mr. JAMES. In the statement the gentleman has just read as to those who die of phossy jaw the gentleman does not give to the House the other class of people that also die. I have no doubt that the gentleman has had as many letters as other Members have from mothers who have told of the children that have died by eating the heads off the matches. The gentleman's statement does not include that.

Mr. RAINEY. Oh, that is true wherever poisons are exposed. These lamentable facts are always liable to occur.

[The time of Mr. RAINEY having expired, by unanimous consent he was given five minutes more.]

Mr. RAINEY. But perhaps more children kill themselves by using sharp tools of different kinds, by severing veins and arteries; but is that any reason why we should suppress the manufacture of everything by which children can injure themselves? Proper care in the home will prevent these accidents; proper care in the factory of employees—and proper care in the factories can be compelled by the State—will reduce the cases of phossy jaw to an absolute minimum.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Does not the evidence show that every country that has made the experiment of regulating this manufacture has found that while it may reduce it, it could not get rid of the trouble growing out of phosphorus poisoning, and the only way was by absolute prohibition?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not remember any such evidence.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is stated in the report.

Mr. RAINEY. Let me call the attention of the House to one other thing. This legislation is going to go through, and you are going to vote for it. You are going to vote for it because the membership of the House has been intimidated into voting for it. You are going to vote for it because you have received letters from college professors, women's clubs, from uplift organizations of various kinds throughout the country—most of them know little or nothing about the subject—because the Ways and Means Committee have been attacked editorially in the columns of the newspapers, because they have been charged with submitting the whole subject to a secret subcommittee, because of articles in the magazines, and because of the fact that press agencies are at work promoting this legislation to an extent unheard of before in this country.

Now, let me call attention to something that the evidence shows, and soon I will read the evidence to show what I mean. The Diamond Match Co. has given up generously, apparently, to this country their secret formula purchased by them from France for the manufacture of sesquisulphide, a harmless compound.

Now, I distrust the Greeks when they come bearing gifts, and I distrust the Diamond Match Co., because they are the Match Trust in this country if there is one. It is impossible for a successful trust to be formed unless they control the greater portion of the output in goods. There is little evidence of any Match Trust in the country at the present time, because any man with a few thousand dollars can start a match factory and make white sulphur matches. They are the most satisfactory matches and they are the matches people buy. They strike the easiest. The sesquisulphide matches do not do this. It costs a little more money to make a sesquisulphide match. But there is a company, the East Jersey Match Co., the company whose official came to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and related to him the pathetic story which the gentleman has just told, that makes a satisfactory sesquisulphide match in this country. This company controls the Salvation Match Co. of New Jersey. They make a sesquisulphide match that is just as good as the white sulphur match, and they have put it on the market. They have, however, put it on the market in somewhat limited quantities; but it as good as any match, although it costs a little more to make. The Diamond Match Co. makes as good a match as they make, but the other companies can not make a sesquisulphide match that is at all satisfactory.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BATHRICK. I would like to ask the gentleman how he knows that the other companies can not make a satisfactory sesquisulphide match. It is my understanding, and I have a good deal of knowledge of the business, that they can. Furthermore, he has not exposed any truth that will reflect upon the Diamond Match Co. in any way, shape, or manner. I have stated they did it for a philanthropic purpose, and that is the truth.

Mr. RAINEY. I hope they did; but I do not believe it.

Mr. BATHRICK. The gentleman has no evidence to sustain that statement.

Mr. RAINEY. They make a sesquisulphide match that is as good as the white phosphorus match. They do not put it on the market to any considerable extent. The East Jersey company make a match out of sesquisulphide that is as good as the white phosphorus match. They are not pressing that. These matches are made from secret formulas, because there are secret formulas for sesquisulphide, just as there are for white phosphorus and other compounds. Let me read from the hearings:

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Hutchinson, of the Salvation Match Co. and the East Jersey Match Co., testified before the Committee on Ways and Means, and said this with reference to the sesquisulphide match:

We sell them in competition with other matches at no higher price. The profit is satisfactory to us.

Mr. HUGHES. You have a compound all your own?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. Yes; but I understand that every match maker has a compound. There have been a lot of them offered to us by different inventors of compounds and sesquisulphide. The Diamond Match Co. took pains to send their formula to every match manufacturer in this country, and everyone is at liberty to make it.

Mr. RAINEY. You have your own formula?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. We have our own formula. We use sesquisulphide, however.

Mr. RAINEY. Are you willing to give your formula to the trade?

Mr. HUTCHINSON. No; neither would we give them our phosphorus compound. As every match maker will tell you, there are various tricks of the trade that they do not care to give away. * * *

I call your attention to a match here made by the Diamond Match Co. [exhibiting match]. They are not pressing it, and it is perhaps presumptuous on my part to offer it. They are not pressing it; but it is an excellent match and is made of an entirely different formula from ours.

Those are the two matches. What will the result be? When this bill goes into effect there will be just two factories in this country, the little East Jersey factory and the Diamond Match Co., that can make a sesquisulphide match that is as much desired on the market as the white phosphorus match. What is to keep the Diamond Match Co. and the East Jersey Match Co. from combining? What is to keep the Diamond Match Co. from buying out the East Jersey Match Co.? When that happens, they fix the price of matches to suit themselves; the only competition they will have will be the competition presented by the safety matches made in Sweden and other places, and against that competition they are protected by the tariff. I am going to vote for this bill, because this is the most distressing of all the occupational diseases. I am going to vote for it because I believe it will eventually stop this method of causing the phossy jaw. I am making these remarks now to call attention to the dangerous character of the legislation, and to the fact that as soon as we pass it we will have increased the cost of matches in this country to the consumer. We will also have set up one of the most powerful trusts this country ever had, and it will be a most excellent object lesson to the people of the country as to the danger of this kind of legislation. I hope it will never be repeated. I hope it will at no time in the future be considered a precedent for other similar legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—ayes 47, noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may be proceeded with now without interruption, and that the debate close in 10 minutes thereafter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer some amendments on the next section.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will suggest to the gentleman from New Jersey that we have already yielded to him in the matter of general debate.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That every manufacturer shall mark, brand, affix, stamp, or print, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, on every package of matches manufactured, sold, or removed by him, the factory number required under section 4 of this act. Every manufacturer who omits to mark, brand, affix, stamp, or print such factory number on such package shall be fined not more than $50 for each package in respect of which such offense is committed. Every manufacturer of white phosphorus matches shall securely affix by pasting on each original package containing stamped packages of white phosphorus matches manufactured by him a label, on which shall be printed, besides the number of the manufactory and the district in which it is situated, these words: "Notice.—The manufacturer of the white phosphorus matches herein contained has complied with all the requirements of law. Every person is cautioned not to use again the stamps on the packages herein contained under the penalty provided by law in such cases." Every manufacturer of white phosphorus matches who neglects to affix such label to any original package containing stamped packages of white phosphorus matches made by him or sold or removed by or for him, and every person who removes any such label so affixed from any such original package, shall be fined not more than $50 for each package in respect of which such offense is committed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 6, amend by inserting before the word "matches" the words "white phosphorus."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 3, amend by inserting after the word "manufacturer" the words "of matches."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 7, line 7, after the word "every," insert the word "such."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 7, line 7, after the word "section," by striking out the word "four" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not intend to take up the time of the committee on this question, because I had not doubted the passage of the bill; but since my distinguished friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has questioned my loyalty to the official obligations I have taken here, because I may differ with him on the construction of the Constitution, I deem it essential to say a word. If it has not already been found out here, I will admit that I make no pretense of understanding the law. While I have read some law, yet I must, when it comes to the question of the Constitution, be my own judge as to what is the meaning of this instrument, and I do not believe that our forefathers wrote a Constitution that will prevent this Congress from protecting working men and women from a horrible death. I may differ with lawyers on the construction of the Constitution, but I also find that the greatest lawyers of the country differ among themselves as to what is its meaning.

Now, my distinguished friend and colleague from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] says we are being coerced into supporting this measure by the women's organizations throughout the country. I want to say that no man who knows me will accuse me of being coerced into doing anything that is not right, but if such public-spirited and patriotic women as Miss Jane Addams and Mrs. Raymond Robbins, of the city of Chicago, and other noble women in this country, who are giving their whole lives to the study of the conditions in the industrial world, that they may do something to save the workers from the ravages of a disease that results in a miserable death for the sake of profit to the manufacturers of matches in this country, if I can be charged with being coerced by such citizens as these noble women, I will not deny the charge, but will plead guilty. I am willing to concede that they know something about these people who are taking the chances of contracting this disease, and when they tell me that this is the condition in this industry, I am satisfied to take their word in regard to the matter and exercise my influence to secure the passage of this bill that it may become a law and protect these working people. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That all fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by this act may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this bill should pass because, as has been said here this afternoon, this is a bill in the interest of humanity. It has been demonstrated that matches can be made of a material that is safe for workmen to manufacture, and to my mind there is no reason why a great Government like ours ought not to keep pace with the other nations of the civilized world. Not only in this industry do these workmen have necrosis of the jaw, but also we find that there are other diseases which attack these individuals on account of their coming in contact with the substance phosphorus. We find that many of them are troubled with enemia, others have Bright's disease or albuminuria, as a result of the poison, so that when men speak upon the floor of this House and say that there are very few cases of this disease that occur among workmen in match factories, we ought to take into consideration the many other diseases with which these unfortunate individuals are afflicted.

I have observed that the legislative committee of the American Association of Labor publishes these facts in their report, and I find, also, that many of these women who work in match factories stated here that they received the pitiful sum of $6 a week—not sufficient to properly look after their health and guard against these diseases. It is true also that these people when they become afflicted become timid. They get in such a condition of mind that they do not want to speak of their affliction, because it is one of the most loathsome diseases with which one comes in contact. So I believe that to-day by passing this legislation we can do something for humanity. If this old Constitution of ours, which we cherish and respect so highly and which we have existed under for more than 100 years, is such a constitution that it does not permit us to do something necessary for humanity, I appeal to you and to the American people that this Constitution of ours should be so changed that we might take proper care of humanity. Many things, my friends, are done for the sake of business. Many times legislation in Congress and in State legislatures is brought about for the sake of helping business, yet we should not forget that human life and the health of the individual is greater than the business of a country [applause], and I for one want to place myself upon the side of humanity and for legislation that will protect human beings and save them from sickness and death. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Is it not true, as shown by the evidence, that with respect to the effect of the phosphorus fumes upon the individual, it produces a low condition of vitality, which makes the individual much more liable to other diseases?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly. There is no question about that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So that if it does not take the form of phossy jaw, it produces deleterious effects in other directions?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; and in that way it permits other diseases to invade the human body.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make all needful regulations for the carrying into effect of this act.

[Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I did not hear all that was said by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] against this bill, but he made a rather curious argument, in view of the facts which have appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means for the last three years in reference to this business.

In the first place he minimized the effect of the making of phosphorus matches on the people engaged in the business, although every page of the evidence before the committee was full of the horrors of the disease known as phossy jaw, which attacks these people whenever for an instant they need the services of a dentist. Whenever a cavity appears in their teeth and they do not know it, or neglect it for a short time, this terrible disease comes on them. He says it can be prevented by proper measures of ventilation in the factory, and that this was testified to by everyone who appeared before the committee. There was one man, Mr. Huener, who testified to that. He lives on Long Island, and my friend [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has discovered that he is a Democrat. He testified that this disease did not appear in his factory, that he had never had a case, and that it was because his factory was properly ventilated.

But, Mr. Chairman, not only did witnesses appear who testified to phossy jaw among the men who worked for him, but they produced the affidavit of a witness whose face was almost eaten out by this horrible disease, who said that he contracted it in the factory of Mr. Huener, this well-ventilated factory that Mr. Huener said had never had a case. [Applause.] So it was evident that Mr. Huener had been mistaken.

Mr. Huener does sell a thousand matches in a box for 5 cents, and compels the people to whom he sells them to retail them at 5 cents, while the Diamond Match Co. asks 5 cents for 500 matches. But, Mr. Chairman, the evidence before the committee was that these matches could be made of this harmless material at the same cost that they can be made of phosphorus, and that a thousand matches can be made just as cheaply in Mr. Huener's factory from this material, which does not bring on this disease, as can a thousand of phosphorus matches. The cost is the same, and there is nothing in this bill to prevent Mr. Huener from selling a double quantity of matches for the same price, if he desires so to do.

It is true that when the bill appeared two years and a half ago we discovered a joker in it that would have given to the Diamond Match Co. a greater monopoly than they now enjoy, and we refused to report the bill for that reason, and it was not until the Diamond Match Co. had thrown up their patent and filed a paper in the Patent Office, at the solicitation, or at least at the initiation, of the President of the United States, that it became possible to pass his bill without creating a great monopoly in matches. But that objection has been removed. Every objection has been removed, except to those gentlemen who fear they are going to smash the Constitution of the United States into smithereens if they pass this bill.

The gentleman asks, Where are we going to stop? We will stop to-night with the passage of this bill. [Applause.] We will not take up the pig-iron business just now, but whenever the facts present themselves we will exercise our judgment upon them. But here is an evil which should be stopped, which should be crushed out. Now is the opportunity to do it, and notwithstanding the arguments made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the leader of that side of the House, I believe that this House will pass this bill and eradicate this terrible disease. [Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I am really surprised at the position taken by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and yet I ought not to be surprised, because I recall that, in his opinion, he wrote in 1909 the best tariff bill that was ever put upon the statute books, and he has been trying to change his opinion of that tariff bill ever since. He is now in favor of reducing—after the report of the Tariff Board—every schedule in that bill, and in the minority report on the wool schedule he is bragging about his change.

Mr. PAYNE. I have got as far as wool so far.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman has experienced a miraculous change on the Esch or Hughes phosphorus bill. Why, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who now holds up to us the picture of this terrible phossy jaw, this horrible disease that is destroying thousands and thousands of the laboring people day by day and year by year, as a reason for the passage of this bill, was its strongest opponent until two weeks ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. I voted in the committee to report the bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand the gentleman a few weeks ago voted to report out the bill after we Democrats had control; but I remind the House and the country that when he and his party were in control of the House, though the Esch phosphorus bill was before his committee, of which he was chairman for a year, and after two elaborate hearings on it, he and his committee refused to relieve and protect the employees in the match factories against the disease which he now paints as so terrible, horrible, and deadly, and refused even to give the House the privilege of voting on the bill. When did he change? He changed, and the Republicans on the committee changed, only when they thought that the Democratic majority on the committee and in this House for humanity's sake was willing to report out and pass the bill. Now, the gentleman is talking about playing politics, and this after he and his party had refused to report out the bill, though before his committee for a year or more and after two elaborate hearings. Now, when the people of this country have given the Democratic Party the control of the House and its legislation, and you Republicans saw a majority of the Democrats on the committee and in the House in favor of the passage of this bill, then you tumbled over yourselves in the committee and in the House to give your sanction and indorsement to a bill that you had willfully repudiated and rejected when you were in power. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I take the same position in regard to this bill as does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], the chairman of the committee. I do not believe in using the taxing power of the Federal Government to destroy any legitimate, established business, especially when the purpose for which such power is invoked can be accomplished by legislative action of the respective States.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I can not now. Now, my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH], who introduced the bill in the last as well as in this Congress, has match factories in his great reform, progressive State, but the Legislature of Wisconsin has refused to prohibit the manufacture of these so-called poisonous matches in the State.

Mr. ESCH. It is no more backward than all the other States in the Union.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is no excuse for a great progressive State like Wisconsin. [Laughter.] You are progressive; you are reformers. Now, in this great reform State, when the proposition was before its legislature, the good common sense of its members—Republicans, progressive followers of LA FOLLETTE—refused to pass a law prohibiting the manufacture of matches within the State, evidencing, my friends, that some of our good people are unduly alarmed over the exaggerated picture of this disease, that is less frequent and less dangerous than many other occupational diseases in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee which has reported this bill to prevent the use of white phosphorus in the manufacture of matches, I wish to call to the attention of the Members of this body the overwhelming demand throughout the country which has led to the proposed enactment of this legislation, legislation which is based on broad principles of humanity and which merits to be viewed from a liberal standpoint.

This bill aims to save those who are employed in the manufacture of matches from the ravages of the loathsome disease commonly known as "phossy jaw" and also to protect the general public from dangers which accompany the use of matches made with the use of white phosphorus, a deadly poison. This bill has not been hastily conceived. It is the result of a careful investigation of the conditions which it seeks to remedy. Investigation has been made not only by the committee through its witnesses, but by the Department of Commerce and Labor as well.

To tax an industry out of existence should only be done under circumstances of dire necessity. We believe that that necessity exists. There are some here, however, who seek to minimize the dangers of "phossy jaw." The subject of taxing phosphorus matches was before last Congress, and two hearings were given, one in December, 1910, and one in January, 1911.

A further hearing was held in January, 1912. At these hearings strong evidence was brought forward to show the existence of this dread disease. Moreover, the Department of Commerce and Labor in its investigation of 15 match factories found that 65 per cent of the employees of match factories were in constant danger of match poisoning, and that 95 per cent of the women employees and 83 per cent of the children under 16 years of age were exposed to these dangers.

At the hearing before the Ways and Means Committee on January 10, 1912, Dr. John B. Andrews, secretary of the American Association for Labor Legislation, said:

> I have personally investigated about 150 cases in this country; that is, I have secured the records of these cases, have gone to the people and talked with them. I have talked to match manufacturers, I have gone to hospitals and talked to the medical men and dentists. I should say that I personally have seen 50 cases. I have also seen many people who are employees of match factories suffering as a result of the poisoning.

In the hearing of January 20, 1911, Dr. Thomas Oliver, the great English authority on occupational diseases, was quoted as follows:

> A person may follow his occupation in a match works for years without suffering, or he may have left the works for two years or more, and unexpectedly symptoms and physical signs of phosphorus necrosis show themselves. However, it does not always require an exposure of many years to the fumes of phosphorus for a fatal result to follow.

Foreign countries have already recognized this danger and the necessity for controlling it. Germany, Denmark, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Switzerland, France, Great Britain and Ireland, Italy, and Spain have all signed the international phosphorus prohibition treaty.

This action on the part of other countries emphasizes the necessity for immediate action by the Federal Government. It has been found impossible to get the States to pass uniform laws to prohibit the manufacture of the white phosphorus match; the situation can only be met by Congress. Nor need we, in view of the statement made on January 11, 1911, by the manufacturers of 95 per cent of all the matches made in America to wholesalers and dealers, feel any compulsion against taking immediate action. It reads:

In the event of the prohibition of white phosphorus matches we have no doubt of our ability to manufacture a strike-anywhere match which will be satisfactory to you and to your trade.

Why should there be further delay in the passing of this bill? A sense of right and of the broad principles of humanity toward those who toil demands that we afford them this protection from further exposure to this loathsome and fatal disease.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 17. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1912, except as previously provided in this act; and except as to its application to the sale or removal of white phosphorus matches by the manufacturers, as to which it shall take effect on January 1, 1914.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the House at this late hour, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. FOSTER, Mr. BATHRICK, and Mr. PETERS, by unanimous consent, were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend page 9, line 12, by striking out the word "twelve" and inserting the word "thirteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 12, strike out the word "twelve" and insert the word "thirteen" in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

[By unanimous consent, Mr. BUCHANAN and Mr. RAINEY were given leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.]

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the word "fourteen," page 9, line 16, and inserting the word "fifteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee determined to rise, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 20842) placing a tax upon the manufacture of white phosphorus matches, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to its final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a vote on a separate amendment.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read a third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Shall the amended bill pass?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 162, nays 31, answered "present" 8, not voting 190, as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, March 29, 1912.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, March 28, 1912.)

The Senate met, after the expiration of the recess, at 1 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 18849. An act for the relief of the Winnebago Indians of Nebraska and Wisconsin;

H. R. 19212. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913; and

H. R. 20842. An act to provide for a tax upon white phosphorus matches and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 3686. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Coal Co. and the Eastern Coal & Mining Co. to exchange certain lands embraced within their existing coal leases in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for other lands within said nations;

H. J. Res. 232. Joint resolution extending the operations of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River and for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 263. Joint resolution to authorize allotments to Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., of lands valuable for coal.

SERVICE PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will announce the pending business, House bill No. 1.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) granting service pensions to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cullom	Lodge	Richardson
Borah	Cummins	Lorimer	Root
Bourne	Curtis	McCumber	Shively
Brandegee	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Briggs	du Pont	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Fletcher	Nixon	Smith, S. C.
Brown	Gamble	O'Gorman	Smoot
Bryan	Gardner	Oliver	Stephenson
Burnham	Gronna	Overman	Sutherland
Burton	Heyburn	Page	Thornton
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Townsend
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Percy	Warren
Clapp	Jones	Perkins	Watson
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Poindexter	Wetmore
Crane	Kern	Pomerene	Williams
Crawford	Lea	Rayner	Works

Mr. BURNHAM. The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably absent.

Mr. LEA. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] is detained from the Chamber by serious illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, there have been various positions assumed in the Senate on the question of general pension legislation. One is that there should be no further supplement to the general pension laws. Another is in favor of a measure that confessedly temporizes with the situation and leaves the question open to further agitation and subsequent action. Another is that in favor of a measure that meets the reasonable expectations of the surviving veterans, removes in great part the pressure for special legislation, and places the subject of general expenditure for pensions on account of the Civil War in process of final settlement. The second position is illustrated by the Smoot substitute for the Sherwood bill, and the last named is exhibited by the Sherwood bill, as it passed the House and is supported by a minority of the Committee on Pensions of the Senate.

At the outset of this debate we are confronted with comparative statistics of the cost of pensions as between European countries and our own. These do not impress me. The theory of our Government and the spirit of our institutions attach different consequences to war in the matter of pensions than do those of the Old World. Whatever progress has been made, the theory still lingers in the average European Government that the people were made for the government rather than the government being made for the people. The rank and file of soldiers in the majority of European countries are still regarded as the raw material of kingly glory and dynastic power. Recognition still goes to heriditary rank or other favorites of power rather than to individual merit. The present Lord Nelson, of England, now over 90 years of age, draws an annual pension of $25,000 on account of services rendered by his grandmother's brother at the battle of Copenhagen, and enjoys, besides, an estate granted to his ancestor under George III, which was at that time valued at $450,000.

The men who baptized this Republic into the family of nations withdrew sovereignty from kings and nobles and reposed it in the people. The old relations of men to government were here changed. The individual citizen became the unit of political and civil power. With the rights of citizenship came the duties and obligations of citizenship. These duties and obligations extend equally to all on the theory that all are equal under the law and have equal stake in government. When, in response to these obligations, the citizen in time of stress and storm bares his breast to danger under the standard of the law, the obligations of his fellow citizens are not canceled by his sacrifices. Here either none or all are kings and nobles, and no true principle of patriotism requires the soldier to be content with merely harvesting the hardships of war, however long he may postpone his rightful claim on the gratitude of his country.

Moreover, even in Europe the entire story of pensions is not disclosed by the European pension lists. The Lord Nelson pension is a charge on the civil list. In Germany, where the Government owns and operates the railroads, will be found veteran soldiers in numerous positions the duties of which are merely nominal; widows of deceased soldiers will be seen along the line near their little gardens, and incidentally rendering some service. The names of these soldiers and soldiers' widows are borne on the civil roll of the Government, and the allowances to them do not appear in the expenditures for pensions. In many other European countries more or less substantial allowances are made in recognition of military service, the accounts of which are submerged in the records of disbursements in the civil service.

Those who dwell on the magnitude of present and proposed pension expenditure on account of the Civil War should not forget that it was an enormous war and entailed correspondingly enormous consequences. The length of time it lasted, the area of territory over which it extended, the number of troops engaged, and the loss of life and treasure attending it are familiar history which there is here no occasion to repeat. But there were certain features of that struggle so exceptional in character and which so well illustrate the mettle and spirit of the American soldier from whatever section of the country he comes that, however familiar, I venture to recall. In the long series of great battles contested, the casualties attending certain regiments engaged, and the incomparable valor exhibited on both sides, that war has no parallel in history since the invention of gunpowder. Neither side had the easy and inglorious task of confronting weaklings or cowards.

Alfred Tennyson emblazoned in his well-known heroic verse and sent around the world the story of the glory of the Light Brigade in its charge at Balaklava, in which it lost in killed and wounded 36.7 per cent of the officers and men engaged in the charge. At Gettysburg the First Minnesota Regiment lost 82 per cent, and at Antietam the First Texas lost 82.3 per cent. At Gettysburg the One hundred and forty-first Pennsylvania lost 75.7 per cent, and at Manassas the Twenty-first Georgia lost 76 per cent. Here were two Federal and two Confederate regiments, each of which in a single battle lost more than twice as large a percentage of those engaged as did the memorable Six Hundred at Balaklava. The Nineteenth Indiana, at Manassas, lost 61.2 per cent, the Fifteenth Indiana at Missionary Ridge lost 59.5 per cent, and the Fourteenth Indiana at Antietam 56.2 per cent. Each of 63 Federal and 70 Confederate regiments lost in single-battle over 40 per cent, and each of over 180 regiments of both armies sustained in single battle a larger percentage of loss than did the Light Brigade. A larger number of American soldiers of the Civil War, blue and gray, lie buried in the soil of the State of Virginia than England has lost Englishmen in all her wars in the last 100 years. When all other memories of that great struggle shall fade into oblivion, the story of the iron courage, the steadfast heroism, the intrepid daring, the deathless fortitude, the unfaltering capacity to do or die of the American soldier will remain the common heritage of a free people and a cherished pledge to the security of a united country.

Now, Mr. President, the Sherwood bill embodies the principle of a pension on the ground of meritorious military service in time of actual war. There is nothing new or startling in the policy that recognizes military service in actual war on the ground of that service by grants from the public funds or from other forms of public property. George Washington received 2,666⅔ acres of land on military warrant No. 135 and 1,000 acres on military warrant No. 137 in consideration of his service of three years as lieutenant of the Virginia Line. These grants were from lands reserved and set apart by the Commonwealth of Virginia on the Ohio River for the officers and private soldiers of the Virginia continental line. Congress granted to Gen. Lafayette 11,520 acres of land in consideration of his military service, then granted him 36 square miles more and authorized him to make his own locations, and then voted him $200,000 in gold. In 1839 Janette Taylor, as devisee of John Paul Jones, received military warrant No. 8725 for 600 acres of land in consideration of the latter's service as captain in the Continental Navy. Of course, Washington had declined all compensation as Commander in Chief of the Continental Armies, and no one pretends that the grants subsequently made were equivalents for his military service. The country will remain both his pecuniary and moral debtor during all the years to come. Lafayette had made financial advances and other sacrifices, in addition to his personal military assistance, and the value of the heroic service of John Paul Jones was hardly possible of computation. Nor will anyone pretend that the value of the service of even the humblest private in the wars of the Republic is to be measured by the monthly stipend he received.

Winfield Scott, in 1852, applied for and received 160 acres of land on warrant No. 16120 in consideration of his military service in the War of 1812. Abraham Lincoln, in 1852, applied for 40 acres of land and received the same on bounty-land warrant No. 52076, and in 1855 applied the second time and received 120 acres additional on warrant No. 68645, both grants being in consideration of his service as a captain of Illinois Militia in the Black Hawk War, the length of actual service in which war he fixed in his applications at about 40 days. In 1850 Ulysses S. Grant applied for land and received warrant No. 3514 for 160 acres on account of his service as second lieutenant and quartermaster in the Fourth United States Infantry in the War with Mexico. In 1854 Robert E. Lee applied for land and received warrant No. 26049 for 160 acres on account of his service as captain in the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, in the War with Mexico. Philip H. Sheridan, Admiral Farragut, Winfield Scott Hancock, Stonewall Jackson, William Tecumseh Sherman, and thousands of other officers and tens of thousands of private soldiers became applicants for and beneficiaries of grants from the public lands on account of military service in the wars prior to 1860. A total of 68,791,550 acres of land was granted under the general law alone in recognition of honorable military service rendered prior to the Civil War, to say nothing of the grants by special acts of Congress for like service.

These grants, Mr. President, were not made on account of wounds received in battle, nor because of disease contracted in the service, nor because of the exigencies of hard fortune in subsequent civil life or the helplessness of old age. The great majority of these grantees were then in the prime and strength and vigor of young manhood. The grants to them were made on the naked fact of honorable military service in time of war. However great or small, these grants were testimonials from a grateful people to men who faced danger in the service of their country. This demonstration of gratitude came soon after the service was rendered and in that ungrudging way that made the patent to the land a badge of honor to the soldier who received it.

We are now 50 years away from the early years of the Civil War. Fifty years away from the enlistment, the separation from the opportunities of civil life, the farewell to family, home, and friends, the weary march, the fever-stricken camp, the dismal prison, the sullen roar and black smoke of the ensanguined battle field. It may be easy at this distance to think and speak lightly of the hardships of those times. But the long span of intervening years means that the youngest survivors of that army of the Union are old men now. At the close of the struggle the survivors of it returned to their homes to pick up the broken threads of civil life and retrieve their lost places in the occupations of peace. As a rule, they were men of modest or no private fortune. The country was under a heavy burden of debt and taxation. The southern portion was under the desolations of a long war, which was followed by the deadly blight of merciless carpetbag misgovernment, even more paralyzing and disheartening than war itself. The records of the Government for those succeeding years show that the surviving veterans realized the situation and were not swift in the days of their youth and vigor to make drafts on the gratitude and justice of their country.

Whatever bounty-land warrants were issued to the survivors of other wars, no such warrants were issued to them. In December, 1861, while many of these men were in the field, Congress defeated the bill presented by Holman, of Indiana, to extend the provisions of the bounty-land act then applying to the soldiers of former wars to the Union soldiers of the Civil War and their orphan children. The pretense given for the defeat of the bill was that monopoly of the land would result from speculators gathering up the warrants. Yet Congress immediately proceeded to transfer without price the choicest parts of the public domain over to private corporations. Within 10 years from the defeat of that bill Congress turned over to the States for railroad corporations 17,775,624 acres and to railroad corporations direct 163,643,944 acres, or a total area of land more than seven times the size of the State of Indiana and more than four times as large as all the New England States combined. At the end of that period Congress again defeated the Holman bill on the ground that not sufficient suitable public lands were left to supply the surviving veterans. These veterans of the Civil War and their orphan children were denied grants from the public lands at first lest they should fool them away and denied them at last because the lands left were too dry to farm or too steep to climb!

There is some contention as to the cost of the proposed legislation. The Bureau of Pensions submits one estimate; the author of the Sherwood bill submits another. Neither purports to be based on conclusive data. Whether the Sherwood bill or the Smoot amendment be finally adopted, precise information as to the exact length of service of each soldier under all enlistments will be necessary to the administration of the law. This information is all at the command and within the possession of the Bureau of Pensions and the Department of War, and only requires assembling to be available. It should be in form for use here now. While question may be made as to the method by which the author of the Sherwood bill arrives at the amount of the average pension allowable under its provisions, he reenforces his contention that the estimate by the Bureau of Pensions of the general cost of the proposed legislation is excessive by a vast array of statistical information drawn from the records of the War Department and the authentic archives of many States sending troops into the field. But whether the bureau's estimate be too high or the Sherwood estimate too low, the difference in cost can not be conclusive as to whether reasonable recognition of meritorious service and relief to the veteran in the low evening of his life shall be granted.

It is neither generous nor just to answer the meritorious veteran by confronting him with the specter of bonds. The expenditures of this Government have risen to over $1,000,000,000 per year. No great part of this increase is ascribable to pensions. For years there has been a decrease in the annual appropriations for this purpose. Despite the large accessions to the pension roll because of the War with Spain, the annual appropriation for pensions under existing law as prepared for this year carries over $5,000,000 less than that of last year and nearly $10,000,000 less than for the year 1909, and there are fewer pensioners on the roll now than at any time since 1892.

Congress has within the past few years created hundreds of thousands of additions to the civil pay rolls of the Government. New departments, new bureaus, new commissions have been established. The Government promptly issued canal bonds. It guaranteed millions of dollars' worth of irrigation bonds. It became virtual guarantor of the reconstruction or refunding bonds of Santo Domingo, and projects are pending to extend the same policy to other countries south of us. There has been no parsimony with the public credit as to these things. It is rather late now to conjure anew with the patriotism of the old soldier by threats of insolvent Federal revenue.

Besides, the veteran has the right to look through and beyond mere names and forms to the substance of things. From bounties out of the public domain to private corporations in which they were interested, the Stanfords, the Crockers, the Huntingtons, and other like beneficiaries of Government favor, gathered splendid private fortunes. Assisted by a pension to his industry out of the taxing power of the Federal Government, another citizen walked off with a fortune of $400,000,000, and boasts that within the same time over 40 of his associates became more than millionaires. These are but types among thousands where the special favor of Government contributed to produce private fortunes and incomes on them so stupendous as to bewilder the imagination that would comprehend their magnitude.

These grants from public property and Federal power were not for wounds received in battle, nor for disease contracted in line of military duty, nor for service rendered in time of danger. None the less, the fortunes derived from them, in common with all others, are locked away in the mortmain of vested rights. They are secure in that scheme of laws, usages, duties, and responsibilities which constitute social order, and to which the blood of the soldier is the last unfailing pledge. Under our system of indirect Federal taxation the burdens of government are cast on consumption rather than on property. They fall in heavy proportion on want and in slender proportion on wealth. The principle relatively relieves the citizen from the burdens of his Federal Government in proportion as his stake in government increases, and exempts him from the relative weight of taxation in the ratio of his ability to pay. From our experience in recent years, I would certainly not make pensions to deserving veterans dependent on the vicissitudes of income-tax legislation. But in view of the ungrudged service he offered and rendered to his Government, the old soldier has the right to be exempt from criticisms on his patriotism and self-respect from those classes of society whose princely affluence is due in large part to the affirmative and negative partiality of that Government. The vivid contrast leaves no excuse in these quarters for hysterical fear lest pension legislation should involve drafts on the Federal revenue or public credit.

But those especially favored citizens who are prone to underestimate the value of the institutions under which opportunity came to them should possess their souls in patience. In the last fiscal year death took nearly 53,000 pensioners of all kinds from the rolls. The surviving veterans of the Civil War are all near the sunset of life. The infirmities of age and, in many cases, the hardships of destitution are upon them. Between the year 1901 and the end of the last fiscal year 205,905, or nearly 206 regiments, of the veterans of the Civil War bade good-by to this world. In the last fiscal year 32,731 joined their comrades on the other side. Since the Sherwood bill passed the House and came to the Senate nearly 10,000 have answered the roll call on the eternal camping ground. At the recent death rate, while the clock in this Chamber ticks off the next 24 hours, 100 more of that rapidly thinning line will have gathered "under the trees yonder."

As between the Sherwood bill and the Smoot substitute reported for it I support the Sherwood bill, both on principle and policy. There are [illegible]00 private pension bills pending in the Committees on [illegible]as of the House. There are thousands more pending in the Senate. The Sherwood bill will provide for the vast proportion of meritorious cases among these bills and arrest the tide of special legislation. The Smoot substitute does not meet the reasonable expectations of the soldier. It settles no question. It forecloses no issue. It will have but little influence on the tide of special legislation. It leaves general legislation in an unsettled condition. It postpones the whole question to future agitation. The Sherwood bill avoids these contingencies, meets the reasonable demands of the situation, and merits the support of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I quite agree with the distinguished and universally respected Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] in his statement that much that is advocated in behalf of the old soldier is political in its nature and is done for political effect. I can, with equal assurance, state that much other legislation is advocated now and then for the same purpose. The old soldier has been the ball with which politicians have played the game of football for many years, and he knows it quite as well as anybody else.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that the Federal Government has not dealt liberally with its soldiers. I do wish to go on record, however, as saying that I do not believe they have been treated too liberally. I am forced to the conviction that the pension appropriation bill is one of the wisest and most important, gauged by any governmental standard, that Congress passes. In the very nature of things no general pension law can be enacted which will deal absolutely justly with all soldiers who may become beneficiaries under it; but it becomes necessary for the Congress in passing general laws to make them as nearly satisfactory to all as possible.

I have said that some Congressmen have played the game of politics too much with the old soldier; and the time is now here, as it seems to me, when we must do something. This is the day and the occasion. It is very doubtful if any one Senator is going to have his way exactly in the matter of pension legislation. Whatever law is enacted will be different from the one he would pass if he had unlimited power. But there is now before the Senate a measure which has been passed by the House of Representatives. Some charges have been made to the effect that it was never intended that this bill should become a law, and that the Senate would change it when it came here, and report some other kind of a measure. Whether that be so or not, I do not know or care. The fact is, the Sherwood bill has passed the House, and it is now before the Senate for its consideration; and if the Senate should pass it, there would be no question as to its becoming a law.

That bill I favor, because it carries larger benefits to the soldier than any other of the bills before the Congress, and I am anxious for immediate benefits. I like the principle of the so-called Smoot bill or the Burnham bill better than I do the principle of the bill that has passed the House. If the individual pensions granted in these other bills were as great in proportion as are those carried in the Sherwood bill, I should gladly support them, because they recognize the double standard of service and disability, and I use the term "disability" as synonymous with age in this respect.

I do not sympathize, however, with any Senator who says that if he can not have the Sherwood bill he does not want any bill. Nor do I believe the soldiers generally throughout the country are favorable to that proposition. Even the measure which carries the smallest amount, the Smoot amendment, enlarges the benefits of the soldiers included under it by $24,000,000 annually. That means that the soldiers who receive the benefit of the bill will on the average have an increase under it of something over 20 per cent of what they are now receiving. The Burnham bill enlarges the benefits by $30,000,000, or about one-fourth more than the same class of men are now receiving. Therefore, I say it seems to me that gentlemen are speaking without the record when they say that the soldiers of this country would prefer no legislation at all at this time if they can not have the Sherwood bill.

As I understand it, the parliamentary situation is such that we can not vote on the Sherwood bill until all the amendments have been disposed of. Supposing it shall so happen that we who are in favor of legislation at this session shall vote down the amendments, and then the question arises on the original Sherwood bill and that bill is voted down; in that case we will have absolutely no legislation at this session of Congress.

I think I am not revealing improperly any secrets when I say that a careful canvass of the Senate shows that we have not enough votes to pass the Sherwood bill. I wish it were possible to get a vote on that bill first. But inasmuch as it is not, if I have the opportunity, I am going to vote for the Burnham bill, as that carries $30,000,000 more than the soldiers are now receiving. Then, if that fails, I shall vote for the Smoot amendment, because I am certain that any other course, if I were to follow it, would result in my voting for no legislation in the interest of the old soldier at this session of Congress. I do not wish to be a party, knowingly or unknowingly, to a longer delay of relief to the survivors of the Union Army in the Civil War.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I was called out and came in just as the Senator was making his statement as to the Sherwood bill. Is it the statement of the Senator that a poll of the Senate shows that there are not enough votes to pass the Sherwood bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I have been informed by a Senator who is in favor of the bill, and who has made a canvass of the Senate.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator has not made that canvass himself?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have not.

It has been stated on this floor, Mr. President, that the old soldiers whom we seek to benefit under this bill are dying at the rate of 100 a day. Thousands of them have passed away since this measure came before the Congress. I have been obliged several times to announce the death of old soldiers for whom I have introduced special bills and which bills had been reported favorably by the Pension Committee. Action, however, could not be secured upon these bills before the soldiers died. I repeat that what we do we ought to do now, because if we pass one of these measures to-day it probably will be a week or 10 days before it can be enacted into law, and in the meanwhile a thousand more will have gone to their great reward.

Another thing I wish to speak about is this: I have in mind the thought that the House has passed the Sherwood bill, and whatever bill we pass here will be the minimum which the conference committee can consider; and the presumption is that the measure ultimately enacted will be somewhere between this minimum and that maximum. Therefore, a much larger benefit than that now enjoyed is to be extended to the old soldier by the passage of any bill.

I believe I am as much in favor of strict economy in the conduct of the Government's business as any Senator here. I have been very much interested in the suggestions which Senators have made as to what we can do to secure the money to meet the extra demands which any pension legislation may impose upon the Government. I have been on record for some time as being in favor of a careful revision of the system we have of granting appropriations for public buildings.

I have said time and again, in the House and elsewhere, that I believe it is bad economy for the Government to engage in the general business of building post offices all over the country in places where there is no actual demand for them. It is a notorious fact, in the first place, that almost every building we put up costs the Government much more than it would cost an individual to do the same work. I have had the experience in my own district, when I was a Member of the lower House, of finding that some post-office building was too small and inadequate for the needs of the office, and new quarters were required; and whenever it was discovered that such a condition existed, and the wants of the Government were shown, private capital in the place put up a building that answered the needs of the Government.

So far as post offices are concerned, the Government can well afford to make its plans and specifications and offer them to the community, with the proposition that if it can get the quarters it needs it will rent the building for a term of years. The rent paid by the Government would scarcely exceed the interest on the Government investment if it had erected the building. The Government would save millions of dollars under this rental system. It might possibly interfere with the Member's influence in the community. But I submit, Mr. President, that these Government post-office buildings are about the worst assets any Congressman can have. If he gets a building in one place, it creates jealousy in another place. Different communities demand the building; and even when you have had an appropriation made for the building, you have to have a quarrel over the site; and the Representative or the Senator frequently comes out second best in such a contest.

In places where we have need for something besides the post-office accommodations, in our large cities where we have other Federal offices, and especially in the city of Washington, of course it is most desirable that the Government should own its buildings. But post-office buildings where not needed should not be built, and the money so saved would meet the most, if not all, of the cost of the pensions carried by any bill that is now before the Congress. It is gratifying to an American to see the flag floating over a Government building in his home city, but that same flag would float over as good a building built by private enterprise, and the money saved would furnish sufficient means to care for those men who made it possible for that flag to float over any building.

There is another economy that we might practice, and that is the one suggested by the President of the United States through his Economy Commission. It would be rather unpopular, because that of itself tends to subtract from Senators and Representatives some of the patronage which they might otherwise have; but we can economize if we wish, and that without injuring any department or service of the Government. Not through cheeseparing methods affecting little things, but in a large way we can recoup the drain upon the Treasury which any pension legislation at this time may cause.

There is another thing that has attracted my attention that looks to me as furnishing a very promising means of economy, and that is the printing bill, which has been presented to the Senate by the Committee on Printing. I am not saying that I indorse its every provision, because I am not familiar with it in detail; but there are many provisions in it which appeal to me very strongly, and through their adoption we can save much money, and then we can spend it in this broad, patriotic way. I approve the pension bill, not alone because of its effect upon the old soldiers who need the appropriation, but I look upon it as a wise Government policy, understanding as I do that it is an incentive to patriotism. If we should have a war in the future, we can depend, as we have depended in the past, upon the volunteer soldier; and every boy and every girl should be brought up in this country with a sure knowledge that this country is grateful to its defenders.

I do not say that men enlist or always would enlist for what they could get out of such service. I know that is not true. I do know that many men enlisted and will hereafter enlist because they felt and will feel that it was and is their duty to do so. I want to encourage that spirit.

We should have an opportunity to vote for the Sherwood bill in order that the Senate may express its views on that particular measure without thereby absolutely shutting out all pension legislation at this session of Congress. That being impossible, as I am told it is, then I want if possible to vote for the Burnham bill, which carries $30,000,000. We can vote on that, and if it fails then I am going to vote for the next best bill.

Believing as I do that the soldiers of Michigan and of the United States are in favor of pension legislation at this time, and that the smallest proposition increases their benefits by more than 20 per cent of what they are receiving now, I think it would be very unwise and very unpatriotic if with our eyes open we proceed to destroy all possibility of any legislation at the present session of Congress.

The McCumber bill is right in principle, and if we can amend it so as to enlarge the benefits it will be satisfactory to old soldiers. I feel sure we are going to do this, and let us do now, and not postpone a duty which has been delayed already too long.

Mr. HEYBURN obtained the floor.

Mr. BURNHAM. I should like to say a word at this time.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BURNHAM. I desire to say that the amendment I have offered I desire to submit after the bill goes into the Senate and not at this time, in Committee of the Whole. Whatever action may be taken I desire to have taken on the amendment in the Senate, and when that stage is reached I intend to explain the nature of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). There is, however, an amendment pending, the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New Hampshire may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the amendment offered by the senior Senator from New Hampshire.

The SECRETARY. Strike out section 3 of the committee substitute and insert as section 3:

That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions, or securing any pension under this act, except in applications for original pensions by persons who have not heretofore received a pension.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in order that we may act wisely in dealing with pensions we should have a correct knowledge of the function that a pension is intended to perform. We are not paying back wages or compensation to soldiers when we grant pensions. Not only the presumption but the fact is that the Government discharged its liability to the enlisted soldier, and we are not now dealing with any deficit arising against the Government. Much discussion has proceeded here and elsewhere apparently to me upon the assumption that we were going to compensate the old soldier for some service that he rendered for which he has not been compensated. That would not be a pension. That would be the payment of something that was due by virtue of the contract of enlistment.

Mr. President, neither this bill nor, in fact, any of these bills make any provision for men who enlisted for 30 days. The first great shock of war was met by those men. They are the men whose patriotism was most prompt and not lacking in efficiency. A full proportion of those men rested in their graves at the end of their service as compared with those who served for any other term. Their patriotism was as pronounced and their service as great as that of those who enlisted for a longer term or served for a longer term. The man who lost his life during the first three months, who responded to the call of the President for soldiers to serve three months, under a misapprehension as to the gravity of the situation, rests in as honored a grave and has to his record as honorable a service as the man who served four years with the same result.

I do not know why they should be left out, except on the basis that we are paying men for their services at so much a day and paying them over again. The man who risked his life in that first shock of the controversy risked it as much under an enlistment of three months as the man whose enlistment was for a longer term; and if you are going to deal with this as a matter of principle rather than as a matter of settling back accounts, I think it was a mistake to omit these men. I knew some of them who rest in their graves, in which they have laid during that first three months' service. I have clear in my recollection, as have other men whose memory runs back to that period, men who went out for three months and gave their lives or gave their prospects in life for their country in quick response.

Mr. President, the three months' soldier who received his wounds or whose health was broken in that three months differs only from the soldier of longer service in that he has been suffering longer. He has been carrying his wound longer. His family has suffered whatever resulted from his service or his wounds that much longer. Why should they be omitted from this bill? We were prouder of those men when they went out, if it were possible, than we were of the men who went when the story was older and when the glories of war had crystallized into a more definite shape.

When we remember the enthusiasm and the pride that accompanied those first troops to the front, untrained by experience or precept or example in the art of the soldier, but who said to the country, "Take me, awkward as I am, unused as I am to the performance of such duties; take my life or whatever part of it may result from the taking of me," is it right to omit them from the list of those who shall be cared for in their old age because they were patriots? I would not care to be called upon to decide between the claim of patriotism on the part of the man who made the first quick sacrifice and the man who made it in later years.

So I object to that feature of all of these measures, because I look upon this question from a standpoint entirely different from the principle which seems to underlie the measures. If we were going simply to pay additional compensation to the men who served in the Army, then of course we would take them up according to the quantity of service, perhaps the quality of service, perhaps distinguished between the men who while enlisted in the Army served in the commissary department or on detached duty. But such is not the spirit of this legislation. I think it ought not to be the spirit of any legislation, because those men were subject to the call to active service, and it is the intent with which a man said "Take my life, my country," that we are recognizing to-day.

We are here to deal with service pensions. That should not mean length of service, it should not mean kind of service, but it should mean the service offered by the individual.

Why should we deal with it at all? Because the man who did this for his country is no longer able to support himself in even moderate comfort, because the man who did this offered not only his life but the opportunities of life. He sacrificed the opportunity that comes to every young man to engage in productive enterprise or industry, and by so doing to provide a competence for himself in his old age.

Men were wounded in more ways than one. There was the physical wound that shattered the arm or tore the breast. There was the wound to the health that sapped the life of the man in after years. There was the wound to the character, some resisting, others unable to resist. The young men who went out from the university classes, the young men who went out from all walks of life, subjected to the temptations and the unusual conditions surrounding the soldier's life, yielded some, resisted some. The one who yielded brought home his invisible wounds to character, which left him unable to cope in the field in which men strive in business; it left him helpless in the great field of opportunity. Who can tell what would have been the social or business position to-day of the old, crippled inmate of a soldiers' home who hobbles along the street in poverty had he remained home during those four years in a position to take advantage of the opportunities of life, the very period during which men lay the foundation for whatever is to constitute their life? Who can tell? He might have been high up among the men of achievement, and it is as fair to presume that he would.

Realize for a moment that these were not men tried out in the struggle of life with characters firm and set. The average age of the soldier of the Union Army was less than 20 years. The armies of the world have been formed by boys, history tells you. There is no period in the life of a man so valuable to him and to the country as the period between 18 and 22. I know many men who left their classes in school, who left the workshops in which they were learning a trade, who left the field of opportunity, to go into that great Army. I say I know them, and I have had occasion to observe them, and we all know them. Many of them never came back, and left unprovided for and uneducated children of their early and earliest experience of life; left young wives and young children to meet the struggle of life; substituted in those lives poverty for comfort, accomplishment for defeat. Then, those that came back came back scarred with the wounds of a soldier's life; scarred with wounds to the character, wounds to the body, but the greatest wound of all for them, the one that reached away beyond the physical being of the soldier, was the wound to opportunity.

The most valuable thing that any man possesses in the world is opportunity. They had lost the benefit of four years of education, whether it be in the classes, in the classics, on the farm, in the workshop, or in the arts or trades. They had lost it forever. Time is one of those great jewels that, once lost, can never be regained. We had better lose anything than opportunity. It is for that we are pensioning these men on the proven records, upon the judgment of the world surrounding them. We are pensioning them because in the great court of experience and opportunity a judgment has been rendered that these men actually suffered a loss. It is not problematical; it does not need the affidavit of a neighbor that they were not successful; but the result is there. They are helpless old men, to whom no calculating moneygrubber would give employment for a day. Why, he would laugh at them and say, "You can not do a day's work." He would wound their feelings by telling them that they were useless among men.

Those are the men that I appeal for, and I say that we should strike out the distinction which excludes those soldiers who enlisted to meet the first rush of battle, those who enlisted at the first call of the President of the United States, even though it were for three months. Vast numbers of them were killed in three months; vast numbers of them were crippled in three months in all the ways that they were afterwards crippled. Why exclude them? I know a man who went out in the three months' service—I have one in my mind now—and he has been a cripple ever since, and lives to-day a crippled, decrepit old man. He was in a hurry to go to the defense of his country, but he came back wounded and broken. His suffering has been longer than that of those who went out later. Is he not entitled to any consideration? He could not enlist again, because he was crippled and broken. You say, "Why did he not continue his service and come under these classes?" I tell you of my own knowledge that he never was in a position where his services would have been accepted at all. The answer would have been a little like that in "Scott and the Veteran." So I say, put the three months' men here; put in every man who said to the country for one day, "Here is my life, all I have, and my hopes, and those of all who depend upon me; take them; send me to battle."

> Place me upon the ramparts,
> With the flagstaff in my hand;
> No odds how hot the cannon shoot,
> Or how the shells may fly,
> I will hold the starry flag aloft,
> And hold it 'till I die.

It does not take long to accomplish that. A man can die within the flash of an eye. His fate and that of his family can be settled quicker than you can state it. Some language has fallen here that would seem to indicate that the consummation of this great service to the country was something that could only be accomplished in three or four years. It could be accomplished in the time of the man who went out from his home at Gettysburg with his rifle on his shoulder, and it was over at the end of the day. So much for the three months' men.

The limit is drawn too close, and I shall propose an amendment in which there shall be no three months' clause. I shall propose at the proper time to strike out, in line 13, on page 3, the words "90 days or more," and to insert the words "enlisted and"; so that it will read:

> That any person who enlisted and served in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War.

That is because of the principle that I conceive to be behind this legislation, a principle not of payment but a principle of patriotic recognition of an act performed by a patriot, because of the result which flowed from the performance of that act to the State. I am going to propose further, that any man who would be entitled to a pension under this bill may leave the same in the Treasury of the United States, and suggest that it be done by a sworn declaration of his enlistment and that he would be entitled to a pension, that he relinquished it to remain in the Treasury to the credit of a fund that shall help to take care of others.

The soldiers' homes of this country could be maintained out of such a fund. We know that to-day there are a vast number of men in the United States who neither need nor draw their pensions. Those men should have the lawful right, by express provision of law, to declare that they contribute that money to this fund that should be used for the purpose of maintaining equally pressing need and patriotic purpose. That I want to propose.

I have necessarily been absent from the Senate much of late and have not had the time that I would otherwise have occupied in which to perfect and have ready for prompt presentation the views which I entertain upon this question. I shall at the proper time propose to amend section 1 by making it definite that this is a service pension by inserting, in line 20, page 3, before the word "pension," the word "service"; and, then, I shall propose as a further amendment that after the word "pension," in line 20, the words "of $1 per day, as hereinafter provided," shall be inserted. The words "hereinafter provided" merely refer to the manner in which it is to be done, but it fixes the amount at $1 per day. These men are all over the age of 62, and there is no occasion for inserting that limit in the bill.

Then, I will propose to strike out all of section 1, after the words "hereinafter provided," as they will appear in the section as I propose that it shall be amended. That will eliminate the elaborate classification. I propose to strike that out, because it will all have been expressed in the words they shall—be placed upon the pension rolls and be entitled to receive a service pension of $1 per day, as hereinafter provided.

The "hereinafter provided" merely relates to the manner in which the money shall be paid. I propose further to leave in the provision with reference to the War with Mexico, because that is existing and established law. There is no occasion for the words "62 years of age or over and who are" in lines 7 and 8, on page 5.

I would strike out the reference to attorneys' fees. I would make no provision, except that there should be no attorneys' fees paid out of the amount of the pension, directly or indirectly. The men who need these pensions ought not to be the victims of agents or attorneys. There is no community in the United States where an old soldier need pay one cent to have any paper connected with his pension drawn or sworn to. If there is such a community, it ought to be blotted off the map. I have had an opportunity to watch the pension business since the first pension bill was drawn, and I have kept pretty close to it to see that these old men were not made the victims of anyone's greed for gain.

Mr. President, I do not know that I will meet with any success in attempting to place these patriots on the same footing. The offer was as much on the part of the poor soldier as on the part of the rich, the scholar, or the man who was not a scholar, because he offered the termination of his life. There is nothing to be added to that. There are across the river rows of monuments and headstones over those who made the sacrifice, and there are throughout this country from end to end hundreds of thousands of living monuments of those who were willing to make that sacrifice. I would make no difference in point of honor between the officer and the man in the ranks. The officers alone could not have won in that strife.

Mr. President, it has been suggested to me by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] that the adjutant general in each State should make provision for the preparation of the pension papers in all cases, and that there is no occasion for having any provision in this bill in regard to it. I agree with him, and go further, repeating that I know of no place where there are not one or more men who have the sympathy and the ability to furnish all the assistance necesssary to a soldier to get his pension. I need not be personal about it further than to say that in a long life of practice I have never charged one of these old soldiers a dollar for any kind of professional service I have rendered him, and I am only one of hundreds of thousands. It is enough for me to know that they stand as the representatives of all that was necessary to meet that great crisis.

I do not like dividing these men up into classes for the purpose of recognizing an act single and common to every one of them, an act which was as great in one as another. I see no occasion for such a classification unless we are undertaking to frame this bill on the basis of the payment of arrears to soldiers, and we are not. If we are, then we should be ashamed of ourselves and the Government of which we are a part.

This is not a partisan question. Men, be they Senators or not, in any part of this Chamber or without it, recognize acts of patriotism and bravery as being worthy of recognition by the responsible Government, which stands for the principles that were behind the actions of those men.

It is not for the bravery of men that we pension them; it is because of the fact that they offered all they had. If we were only to pension them according to the measure of their bravery, we would have to go into an investigation of all the scandals of the war for the purpose of determining which individuals were entitled to pensions. There is not a man that would come within the provisions of this bill as I propose to offer an amendment to it that can to-day earn a livelihood. There are hundreds of thousands of men in the United States entitled to pensions who will never claim them. They should not. The pension, while being a recognition of the act, is a matter in regard to which the pensioner himself must act the responsible part of claiming it or not.

Mr. President, I would amend the bill as it came from the House, if it were before the Senate, to conform to the same principles that I have undertaken to express in the amendments that I have suggested to the bill now before the Senate in the nature of a substitute. I would amend every bill that is proposed so as to conform to those lines, because they are just.

Why, we are treating these men as though we were their masters. We are dealing with these old soldiers as though we were their masters and they were suppliants at our hands for a pittance to preserve them from discomfort or death. There was a time when those men were our masters; when, had they ceased in the performance of their duty, we would have had no opportunity to stand here like pouter pigeons dealing out something to them as though it were alms, swelling ourselves up with claims of patriotism and pride and saying, "I am willing to give the soldiers who served two years so much, and those who served one year so much, and those who served nine months so much. I am willing to allow it to them."

I have heard that expression right here in debate, "I am willing," forsooth, "to allow so much to the men who saved not only my poor hopes and destiny, but saved the hopes and the destiny of all the people of their own generation and of the generations to follow."

There was never in the history of the world the performance of men that accomplished such great good as was accomplished by those men. Other soldiers have kept the thrones for kings. Other soldiers have been able to turn the tide of one monarchy against another. Other soldiers have been able to seize new countries and subjugate them.

But this was a soldiery that stood for the preservation of a country that stood then, and stands now, on a higher plane of civilization than any other country in the world. It may be worth while to save a monarchy and yield your life for it. It may be worth while to keep some petty king upon the throne, and even sacrifice your life or your welfare for him. But it is countless times greater to offer your life and make the sacrifice to maintain the Republic of the United States—the only republic that was known in that day, or has been known since, that is worthy of the name.

Eighteen hundred and sixty and eighteen hundred and sixty-one. Have you reviewed the conditions represented by the American Government and the American people at that period and compared them with those of to-day? Have you given thought as to the inevitable consequence of the destruction and disruption of this Government in that great struggle? And with that as a basis have you undertaken to estimate the value of the services of these men, the meed of honor that is due them, and has stood as their meed from that day to this? Have you undertaken to estimate what is due to the old man who, in that day of his boyhood or young manhood, paid this price, and not only paid it but got the goods for it? Have you undertaken to estimate that and then say, "Oh, I am willing he shall have, yes, say, eleven or twelve dollars a month;" and then say, "This is a matter to be agreed upon in conference. We may agree to give him thirteen"?

Great God! He gave you a country and you would give him $13 a month after he had passed beyond the age or condition in which he could gain the bread for his daily subsistence. Men compare the cost of this and that pension bill with the cost of other departments of the Government. Do you realize that there would have been no other costs and no Government except for these men in the aggregate? And yet there have been times when a handful of them represented the millions that constituted the aggregate in preserving the destiny of the Nation.

Do you remember when Gen. Pleasonton held the whole Southern Army in check, in order that our Armies might form and make a successful defense, with the loss of practically every man with whom he went into the fight? Do you remember when that little company from New Jersey, enlisted in the stores and the banks and the schools of New Jersey, went out 100 strong, and how, when they came out of the Battle of Chancellorsville, there was 1? And I saw him with his arm shot off. That was all that was left when that sacrifice was paid. Yet you would stand here and talk about what they did, this man and that.

I distinguish this from the class of pensions for disabilities. I have sought, by the amendment I propose, to limit it by express terms so that it will not include pensions for disabilities. This is a different class of recognition, in this ripe hour for recognition of men and men's deeds that are the foundation to-day of the Nation, united forever.

Those men are responsible for it, the dead and the living. The dead did not win the battles. They only died for their country. It was the living men who won the battles, who carried the lines of their enemies, who brought home to glory the flag. It was the living men who did these things, and we are dealing with them to-day. We are not dealing with monuments to the dead.

Day after day I have seen the distinguished Senator who is chairman of this committee rise when pension bills were under consideration, and I have heard him enumerate sometimes a dozen soldiers, and say, "I move that their names be stricken off. They have died since this bill was reported."

Mr. President, I do not feel like prolonging the discussion of this question, because I seem to have a consciousness that the lines are laid, and that we are going to do something for the soldiers. Great God! Think of the sarcasm of that, "We are going to do something for them!" It is a piteous statement.

Why to do anything for them? If you are going to measure it by gills, why do anything for them? They will soon die and go to their reward, the greatest reward—they will live in the hearts of their countrymen.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in expressing my opposition to this measure I shall be as brief and as conservative as possible, and as I do not desire to enter into any controversy upon this question, I hope I may be permitted by my colleagues to proceed without interruption.

The first pension act, that of June, 1862, granted a pension for disability. It was a pension granted to make good to the soldier any incapacity for the performance of manual labor directly traceable to a wound, injury, or disease incurred in the line of duty.

In 1890 a change was made in the law, and a pension was granted to all soldiers who were incapacitated for manual labor, without regard to the origin of the incapacity.

Again, in 1907, another change was made in the law, and the age of 62 years and over was declared of itself a specific disability, and pensions were allowed to all who had served 90 days, and had been honorably discharged, the rating being dependent on age. At 62 years the pension was $12 a month; at 70 years, $15; at 75 years, $20.

The widow, the children, and dependent parents and brothers and sisters of the soldier were also allowed pensions by these several acts—first, where the cause of death of the soldier originated in the line of duty. Later, the widow and the minor children of the soldier were allowed pensions where she was or they were dependent, without any regard to whether the soldier's death was caused in the line of duty or not. Later pensions were allowed to the widow and the surviving children of soldiers of the Civil War, who had served 90 days and had been honorably discharged, without regard to whether they were dependent or not dependent.

As broad and liberal as this general legislation is, there have arisen cases of peculiar hardship that have led to particular relief. There have been passed 35,987 special acts, chiefly to increase the pensions of particular individuals, and many of them have been for the benefit of widows. The tendency seems to be to enlarge the use of special legislation. The Fifty-sixth Congress passed 1,391 special pension acts; the Fifty-seventh Congress, 2,171; the Fifty-eighth Congress, 3,355; the Fifty-ninth Congress, 6,030; the Sixtieth Congress, 6,600; the Sixty-first Congress, 9,631; and it is stated that there are now pending before the House committee about 10,000 bills for special pensions. Of the 6,030 beneficiaries under the acts of the first session of the Sixty-first Congress, only 563 were new names; 5,500 were already on the roll, the object of these bills being simply to increase the pensions.

Under this legislation every soldier of the Civil War who served 90 days and was honorably discharged is entitled to be on the roll, and probably, practically all of them are on the roll. The widows and minor children of such soldiers as have died are also provided for.

Up to June, 1910, there had been pensioned 1,153,626 soldiers, of whom there were then alive 562,615. In June, 1911, there were 529,884 soldiers on the roll, and 295,707 widows of soldiers. The payments to these widows and to the children of soldiers amounted to about $45,000,000. The payments to the soldiers amounted to about $105,000,000. The payments to the soldiers of the Regular Establishment, of the War with Spain, and the Mexican and Indian Wars, make up the residue of the disbursements.

Mr. President, the acts of 1907 and 1908, it was thought by many, filled the measure of our patriotic duty to the soldiers and their widows.

It is now proposed to unsettle what was then settled. It is not proposed to admit others to the rolls, for the rolls have, for four or five years, been open to all. It is proposed to increase the pensions of those already on the lists, whether the soldier needs the increase or does not need it, whether the soldier is rich or poor.

The bill the House has sent us, the so-called Sherwood bill, provides that any soldier who served 90 days in the Civil War, and less than 6 months, shall receive $15; anyone who served 6 and less than 9 months, $20; anyone who served 9 months and less than 1 year, $25; anyone who served 1 year or more, $30 a month.

Under that bill 44,510 men would be rated at $15, 35,552 at $20, 72,114 at $25, and 376,218 at $30.

Necessarily the result would be a large increase in the amount. On page 13 of a compilation made for the use of the Senate, the Secretary of the Interior shows that the increase would aggregate $75,651,000.

The increase for the 3 months' men foots up only $787,000; that for the 6 months' men, $2,435,000; that for the 9 months' men, $7,619,000; for the 1 year men, $64,809,000.

On page 14 of that document, the Secretary of the Interior estimates the pensions of 357,474 one-year men, under the act, at $128,690,640; and as their increased pay would be $64,000,000, it follows that the proposed bill would just double the pensions of these one-year men, or just about double the pensions of more than one-half of all the men who are now on the pension roll. The average value of each pension under the act of 1890 is stated at $143; under the act of 1907 is stated at $173; under the proposed act it would be $336, or just about double the value of pensions under the act of 1907.

The expansion of the pension system in 1907 and 1908 was regarded, as I have said, by many, at least, as filling the measure of our patriotic duty to the soldier and his widow and minor children.

Admitting, as I freely do, the country's patriotic duty to its war veterans, it should not be overlooked, it seems to me, that there are other interests besides that of the soldier to be considered. The interest of the taxpayer should not be disregarded.

We can not give, Mr. President, to one class without taking from another.

In our human experience there is no manna falling from heaven. What the Government gathers up comes from the pockets of the people. It is drawn from the community. Every family bears its part of the burden.

If, in the first instance, it is paid into the Treasury by merchants, the farmer, and business men, by manufacturers and men engaged in large transactions, they cast it as a burden on business, and it is distributed among the public generally.

It becomes an incubus on industry.

It rests in part on the shoulders of the workmen.

It falls in part on the clerks and salaried men.

Business men charge it back, without any diminution of their profits, on the masses who must eventually pay it.

Do the just demands of patriotism and the financial condition of our country and our people justify us in adding $75,000,000 a year to the burden of the people, a part of it going to swell the pensions of the well to do as well as the poor? That they do not, Mr. President, has been recognized by the Senate Committee on Pensions in the substitute measure it has reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, for the first 10 years after the War between the States, when we had many wounded and disabled soldiers to care for, the annual pension roll did not reach $30,000,000. No one will question but that patriotic generation did its full duty by the suffering heroes who were victims in the great struggle.

For the next decade the annual expenditure was less than $60,000,000, but by 1890 pensions had reached the $100,000,000 mark.

Since 1890 we have distributed in pensions nearly $3,000,000,000.

In the history of the world there has never been any display of liberality that approximates this great expenditure. The combined pensions of the four greatest powers of Europe are stated at only $129,000,000, and I risk nothing in saying that our pension list is larger than that of all the balance of the world.

Comparing our expenditure for pensions with that made by our patriotic forefathers because of the Revolution, we find that we are now expending in six months as much as they allowed in 50 years for the men who won our independence.

To the patriots who dared to rebel against the most powerful Government of the world and break the ties of friendship and of kinship; who served seven long and weary years; who suffered at Valley Forge; who starved in winter on the Hudson; who underwent the horrible deprivations and sufferings under Greene at the South; who experienced the horrors of the prison ships, our forefathers allowed all told only $70,000,000; we pay to-day to men and women, but few of whom ever received a wound in battle, more than $150,000,000 a year. Such liberality has no parallel in history.

My opposition, Mr. President, to this bill is founded on considerations which ought to influence a Senator legislating in behalf of the whole country and not in behalf of any section of the country. And yet, Mr. President, the people of the Southern States necessarily occupy, in respect to its effects upon them, a peculiar position toward this question.

It is not necessary for me to make any particular protestations or representations with respect to the patriotism of the people of North Carolina or of the Southern States. Their general action during the last 50 years attests their patriotism. Their action in the war which has just passed attests their patriotism. We have heretofore acquiesced in such action as the northern people have desired for the benefit of the old soldiers. But there are two circumstances that differentiate the two sections with respect to the effect of these pensions: First, of the vast sum of $4,000,000,000 that has been paid in pensions, only a small fraction has been disbursed in the South. The disbursement has inured largely to the advantage of the richer and wealthier sections of the North and the East and the West. Second, the South has, in addition to the burden of paying its proportionate part of the national pensions, a duty to perform toward the old soldiers of the Southern States.

I know the generous hearts of the northern people applaud our efforts to care for the old and decrepit Confederate veterans who fought so bravely in the time of the great war. I know they sympathize with our sentiments of veneration and filial piety toward those men whose courage and endurance reflect credit on American citizenship. Without reference to the cause in which they displayed their splendid manhood, their devoted self-sacrifice, their magnificent spirit of patriotic ardor, all men applaud their constancy, their endurance, their personal bravery and heroism. We have a duty toward them which we seek to perform according to our pecuniary ability. In this no one else has a share. It is a filial as well as patriotic duty that rests alone on the South.

Thus there are two circumstances that differentiate the people of the Southern States from those of the Northern States in the matter of pensions, namely, the unequal distribution of the expenditure and the additional duty resting on the Southern States.

Mr. President, I am not unmindful of these two circumstances, but I want to repeat with all the emphasis that I can command that my opposition to this bill is based upon such considerations, and only such considerations, as ought to influence a Senator acting for the whole country.

Mr. President, during the 11 years I have been a Member of this body I have never opposed any special or general pension legislation. I have introduced many special bills in behalf of my own constituents, and I have sought with as much zeal to secure their adoption, when I thought they were entitled under the laws of the country to what they asked, as I would seek to secure a pension for an old Confederate soldier under the scant provision that my people have been able to make in their behalf. I do not recall that at any time Senators who come from the same section of the country that I come from have heretofore opposed legislation either of a special or general character providing pensions for the old Union soldiers. We have, up to this time, acquiesced in this legislation.

Mr. President, it is sought to justify this doubling of the pensions of the old soldiers upon the ground that they are needy. And yet there is no provision in the bill to limit the increase to those who are indigent.

It is proposed to increase the allowance of those who are prosperous and independent in the same degree as those who are poor and needy.

I do not know what per cent of the Union soldiers are of the one class and what are of the other class, but I do know that the Union soldiers who survived the war, as a rule, were not weakened in the struggle for life as a result of that contest. On the contrary, they were rather strengthened through the experience and training they acquired in that service. I know that many of them went back to the walks of life and at once became potential factors in the industrial enterprises that have wrought the great prosperity that has in recent years come to our common country. They became active participants in the business life of their community, becoming leaders in every line of endeavor. Many of them are to-day among the most prosperous and independent citizens of the community in which they live, many of them have amassed fortunes. If this bill confined its benefactions to those who are really needy there would be some slight justification for the increase proposed, but it does not; on the contrary, it increases the allowance to the rich and prosperous as well as to the indigent and needy.

Mr. President, I have a great admiration for the bravery and the patriotism of the Union soldier. I think the men who followed Grant and Sherman and Sheridan during those four long, bloody years were the bravest and most patriotic men who ever went to battle, save only those who followed Lee and Jackson, who were equally as brave and patriotic.

I would not oppose a measure that in my judgment measured only the patriotic duty toward the old Union soldier; but in the face of the liberal legislation that has marked the years that have gone, constantly liberalizing and broadening our policy toward the old Union soldiers until every man who shouldered a musket and went to the war in defense of the Union is now on the roll or may be put on the roll, when it is proposed in this bill to double the pensions of more than one-half the men on the roll, I can not find it in my conscience to give my support to that measure.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to make a speech upon this bill. I realize that the lines are drawn and every Senator probably has decided how he will vote. But there are scattered through the country thousands of these old men who, in addition to the small amount the bill provided for, may feel that their services are remembered, and may feel some comfort and cheer in the thought that their cause is championed upon this floor.

The Senator deals with the question of the amount required by this bill. He says that manna does not come down from above. Mr. President, I was a small boy when the war broke out. I remember how the northland was thrilled when there stood forth that matchless champion, Stephen A. Douglas—Lincoln was then but little known and was untried—and when there fell from the lips of Douglas the words, "This Union must and shall be preserved," it sent a ray of sunlight and hope to every northern home, and it did seem as though it was manna from heaven.

The months rolled on and a great army of young men sprang into existence, and we began to realize that, notwithstanding all the sophistry of the preceding two generations, there was a sentiment in this country that the Union should be preserved, and that the Union would be preserved by the youth of the country; and it seemed again as though manna was descending from heaven.

Mr. President, I can not undertake to pay fitting tribute to the memory of the soldiers. The grave that marks the last resting place, the empty sleeve, aye, even the bowed form, the silvered crown of those who in the long, long ago risked their all that this Union might be what it is to-day, speak more eloquently than any human tongue. The thought of computing the cost of a just recognition to these men is, to my mind, beyond the pale of consideration at this time. It is not a question of how much this will cost, but it is a question of how near this will be toward being a just recognition of that debt of gratitude and patriotism which we owe these men.

I shall vote for the Sherwood bill. I shall vote for the amendments intended to be proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], and if we can not get the Sherwood bill with those amendments, then I shall vote to get the best which we can get. For 11 years I have waited until the hour might come when we could do this tardy justice, and I will not longer delay this vote, which I so long have looked forward to, by trespassing further upon the time of the Senate.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, in accordance with instructions from my party in Indiana, and in accordance with the will of the people of that Commonwealth, I shall vote for the most liberal proposition that shall be made here on behalf of the surviving soldiers of the Union.

I have listened with deep interest to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. In listening to him I realized most fully and keenly the wide divergence there naturally is in the angles of vision from which we view this great question. On one side there are men from the South here who were not born when the war ended. I appreciate how difficult it is for them to understand the magnitude of the struggle and understand the wonderful work accomplished by the million or more men who, from 1861 to 1865, walked on the outermost ridge of battle into the jaws of death, into the very mouth of hell; who underwent the rigors of campaign life, the perils of battle, and the horrors of prison life, to the end that this Union might live; to the end that we might enjoy the great material prosperity which is now enjoyed by all our people. That is the situation on one side—a lack of sentiment on the one side—while on the other side is raised the cry of economy. The proposition is baldly made here that this great, splendid Republic, the greatest and richest Nation on the face of the earth, can not afford to do that which all men concede is justice to the men who saved the Union. Between the two rocks the old soldiers of the country suffer.

My friend from North Carolina awhile ago undertook to compare the cost of pensioning the Revolutionary soldiers during the first 50 years of the Republic with the cost of pensioning the great army of soldiers of the Union who now survive. Was that a fair comparison? Why, there were more men killed and wounded in one battle of the Civil War than Washington ever had under his command at any one time.

Did the Senator from North Carolina ever stop, when making the calculation as to the amount of money paid to the Revolutionary soldiers 25 years after the Revolutionary War ended, to compare the proportion that the amount paid for pensions bore to the total expenses of running the Government in those days? Did he stop to compare the total amount paid out for pensions with the wealth of the Nation in those days? The pension list was larger at the time referred to by the Senator in proportion to the expenses of the Government and in proportion to the wealth of the Nation than it now is.

The Senator has stated that 20 years after the Civil War was over our pension list only aggregated about $30,000,000. That is a fine compliment to the survivors of the Union Army—a splendid compliment. Twenty years after the war was over the average age of those soldiers was perhaps from 42 to 45 years. Those soldiers, able to work, strong in their pride, disdained to ask justice even at the hands of the Government they had saved. Another decade passed by, as he said, and the pension list had only then grown to $60,000,000. Those men were still able to earn their bread by the sweat of their faces, and the great mass of them asked nothing of the Government. But now, after the war has been over 47 years, these men are old, decrepit, broken; and in their extremity they come to the Government and ask for recognition for the splendid service rendered by them in the days gone by.

When other great propositions have come before the Senate calling for the expenditure of hundreds of millions of dollars, have voices been raised here pleading the poverty of the Nation? When the proposition was made to build the Panama Canal and expend some hundreds of millions of dollars in that project, was any voice raised here asking the question where the money was coming from? Were there any spasms because of the prospect of a bond issue then? Not at all; for the reason that this Nation was so great, so rich, and so strong that it would have seemed contemptible for anyone to have stood here and urged the poverty of the Nation as against such a great, splendid enterprise as that.

I will not go into that question now, for I went into it the other day; I did not rise for that purpose; but since I addressed the Senate a week ago I have received many hundreds of letters from old soldiers all over the country, from New York and Pennsylvania, Nebraska and Kansas, California and Oregon. I think it would be well if I should read to the Senate a few extracts from some of those letters as giving the sentiment of the soldiers throughout the country. I have a letter here from Lancaster, Pa., from a man who says that he is—

> The only survivor of four brothers, three of whom gave up their lives in battle. The eldest was shot six times and scalped by Price's Indians at Pea Ridge, Ark.; the next was shot through the head at Rolla, Mo.; and the third was killed at Stone River.

The writer states that he was wounded at Petersburg. He says:

> Thank God, my wound, although shot through the hip, never so far incapacitated me from all labor, and for 28 years I have worked night and day, and by privation and self-denial I can live independent of a pension, and, so far as I am concerned, this great Government can keep my pension; but there are a few that I know that are so situated that the dollar per diem would be a godsend to them and to many of the brave men who saved the Nation.

I have here a letter from Cincinnati, Ohio, from a soldier who served in a Massachusetts infantry regiment for 3 years and 10 months, who urges the adoption of the Sherwood pension bill or one similar to it. From Naval Post 516, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York City, comes a letter from the chairman of the committee warmly supporting the Sherwood pension bill. I have a communication from a number of soldiers in the National Military Home at Dayton, Ohio, urging the passage of the bill and concluding the letter in these words:

> All eyes of the veterans here are now resting on the Senate, as the House has done its duty in voting 229 for the Sulloway bill and 262 for the Sherwood service pension bill. We hope it may pass.

From Goshen, Ohio, comes another letter from an old soldier warmly indorsing the Sherwood bill; one from North Beach, Md.; another letter of the same kind from Philadelphia; another from Westboro, Mass.; a strong letter from a soldier who belonged to the Thirty-fourth Regiment of Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, who says that the Sherwood bill is what is demanded by every soldier with whom he is acquainted.

From Boston comes a letter from a man who enlisted in 1861 at $11 a month, and in 1863 reenlisted and served nearly five years, urging the enactment of this law.

I have another letter from the town of Young, Ohio, which contains a similar demand; one from a soldier of the One hundred and thirty-third Pennsylvania at Harrisburg, in that State, who declares that the soldiers of Pennsylvania are a unit for the passage of the Sherwood bill; another from New York City, which, in very strong language, urges the Senate to do justice to the soldier. I have also a letter from a member of the One hundred and fiftieth Pennsylvania Volunteers—the Bucktails. He says:

> The soldiers saved the Union from destruction. The old soldier is not played out yet—not by a gunshot—even in the politics of the country, as some people may discover in the near future. He is still on the picket line watching, ready with his gun for "Who comes there?"

From Rochester, N. Y., an old veterans writes:

> I do not belong to the same political party that you do. * * * I joined the Union Army in 1862; was wounded at Gettysburg, and taken prisoner on field at Battle of Wilderness, May 5, 1864; spent five months at Andersonville and five months in Florence, S. C.

He urges the passage of the Sherwood pension bill.

I have another letter from Newark, N. J., from a member of a New Jersey regiment, who says:

> I am a veteran of the Civil War, nearly 69 years old, and for two years have been unable to work. Wife and I, by prudence and economy, have succeeded in maintaining our little fireside up to this time. Our meager savings of the past are now exhausted, and, with the exorbitant cost of commodities, it is a struggle to obtain the required necessaries to maintain our existence.

He simply asks that justice be done to him as a soldier and to his comrades. From Covington, Ky., comes a letter from a soldier—a very long and very forceful appeal for simple justice.

These old soldiers are putting their claims not upon the ground of mendicancy, not upon the ground of poverty, although most of them are poor, but because they feel, and rightly feel, that this Government owes them a debt which can not be paid.

I have a letter here from Keene, N. H., from a lady who says she is only an ignorant old woman. She is a soldier's widow, and says:

> Perhaps it is glory enough to have them get the band out on Decoration Day and drop a wreath on the grave of the dead; but ought they not to give those old men and their near ones not only the bare necessary things, but some of the care and comfort their old age craves?

From Springfield, Mass., comes a similar letter. From Gen. Robert P. Kennedy, of Bellefontaine, Ohio, a man who was breveted brigadier general at the close of the war, one of the prominent Republicans of Ohio, comes a letter urging the passage of the Sherwood bill.

> The old soldiers of the Army—> owe to the Senators who stand for the bill a debt of gratitude for their fearless, outspoken defense of their cause, and as an old soldier and a Republican, I desire to tender to you, a Democrat, my thanks and congratulations for your action.

He says—

And so I might go on here for an hour, Mr. President, reading extracts from such letters, the sentiments of many of which are touching indeed. All of these letters indicate that the soldiers, the men who are interested in this legislation, are almost to a man opposed to the McCumber or Smoot substitute and are in favor of a measure that will give them the relief they need and will make their pathway down to the grave a little more pleasant.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read two amendments to the pending substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks to have read two amendments, which at the proper time he proposes to offer. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 5. That no pension shall hereafter be paid to a nonresident of the United States except for injury or disease of service origin, nor shall the nonresident widow of a soldier hereafter draw a pension except where the death of the soldier was of service origin.

Also the following:

SEC. 6. That no person with an annual income of $1,200 or more, whether the same is derived from a salary or from property, or from both combined, shall receive any pay as a pensioner under this act or any existing law except where such person is suffering from an injury or disease of service origin, but the name of such person who has so served in the military or naval service of the United States and who has been honorably discharged therefrom may remain upon the pension rolls as an honorary member thereof.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, no one responds more fully than I do to the beautiful tributes which have been paid to the heroes who wore the blue and who wore the gray. It is a delightful realization of the perfect union that exists in all parts of our country that, without regard to party or to section, such speeches can be made here and find a response in every heart. It is indeed difficult listening to such just tributes to preserve our legislative reason and to legislate with full comprehension of all our responsibilities, rather than to yield to our hearts and turn the entire Treasury over, if necessary, in response to our patriotic sentiments.

But I wish to call attention to a few facts which, it seems to me, have not yet been mentioned, but which ought to be a part of the record before our vote is taken.

The Secretary of the Treasury has advised that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, we may expect a revenue from ordinary receipts of $667,000,000. The chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives estimates that if payment is made to the sinking fund as required by law and the other ordinary appropriations are made for the next year, there will be a deficit according to present conditions of about $27,000,000.

Be that as it may, I shall not stop to discuss it. The proposition which we now confront comes to us in the shape of a bill and a proposed substitute. The original bill would increase our pension appropriations for Mexican soldiers and soldiers of the Civil War from $150,000,000 a year to $225,000,000 a year, thus adding 50 per cent to the present annual sum. The substitute proposes to increase our pension payments $30,000,000 a year.

One would almost think, to listen to the eloquence of some Senators, that our Government has been niggardly in the matter of pensions. Let us stop and calmly, as business men, candidates for no office and contemplating nothing of the kind, look at the balance sheet and see how the Government has acted. Next year we hope to have $667,000,000 from ordinary receipts. Nobody questions that we are to give to pensioners of the Civil War $150,000,000—nearly one-fourth of our entire revenue to pensioners of the Civil War. Now, there are other things that we must do for the welfare of the public which we can not abandon.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. Is not the Senator mistaken as to the $150,000,000? Does not the pending pension appropriation bill, prepared to meet the demands under existing law carry a total of only $152,000,000, which, of course, includes all pensions to the soldiers of the Spanish War?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. I will answer the Senator by calling his attention to the fact that on June 30, last year, according to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, we paid $148,000,000 to pensioners of the Civil War, and the special pensions which have been added at this session will probably carry the amount up to $150,000,000 to the pensioners of the Civil War alone. The pensions paid to soldiers of all wars was about $157,000,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. I think, if the Senator will take the pension appropriation bill as it came from the House, he will find on the first or second page that the appropriation on account of all pensions is fixed, I think, at $152,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not know what the bill as it came from the House provides, but I know what we paid last year, and I know that the report of the Commissioner of Pensions shows that $157,322,160 was paid for pensions last year.

Mr. SHIVELY. If the Senator please, that is true; but the appropriation proposed in the pending pension appropriation bill is upward of $5,000,000 less than for last year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator if he would amend the Sherwood bill so as to provide that the total amount of pensions should not exceed $152,000,000, and that if it shall be found that the Sherwood bill requires an amount in excess of that sum, then that the excess amount should not be paid, but that the pensions should be reduced?

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask the Senator whether he believes that such an arbitrary principle is consistent with scientific legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think it could be worked out scientifically. Beyond any question, with an appropriation limited to $152,000,000, the Pension Office could take the number of pensioners and pro rate the amount. It seems to me that a misapprehension has existed as to the amount we have paid and are paying for pensions. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, we paid over $157,000,000 for pensions. Nearly one hundred and forty-eight millions of that sum was to the pensioners of the Civil War alone. With the special pensions passed at this session, it is reasonable to estimate that, according to the law as it stands, the amount paid to the pensioners of the Civil War will be practically one hundred and fifty millions.

That is nearly 25 per cent of our next year's revenue. The proposition is to pass the Sherwood bill and add seventy-five millions more. That would be two hundred and twenty-five millions. That would be about one-third of the entire income of the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The statement of the Senator from Georgia is, of course, very interesting. Right at that point I should like to suggest to him that our generosity to the soldiers of the Civil War will hardly be called such if the Senator will examine the generosity of this Government to the soldiers in the American wars preceding the Civil War. It may be interesting to the Senator from Georgia to know——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should be glad to have the Senator ask me a question.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am about to do so, in just a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. All right.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It may be interesting to the Senator to know that there were given to the participants in the American wars prior to the Civil War 68,791,000 acres of land; and that the men who shared in the generosity of the Government were none other than Gen. Lee and Gen. Hancock and other men whose services for the Union prior to the Civil War were very distinguished.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have listened for the question of the Senator, and he does not propound it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will leave that to the Senator to determine. I presume I did not. I intended to interrogate the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But even if he did not propound a question, I am glad to have yielded to him.

Undoubtedly large quantities of land were given to the soldiers of the Revolutionary War. At the moment the Senator interrupted me I was not referring to the soldiers of the Revolutionary War, however. I was referring to the soldiers of the Civil War. Later on I may make a comparison between what has been done for the two. All that I was seeking at this time to show was that if we added $75,000,000 annually to our present appropriations, according to the terms of the Sherwood bill, we would be giving about one-third of our entire income for next year to pensioners of the Civil War. I was not even commenting upon the fact that this was more than we gave soldiers of the Revolution.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I just want to say to the Senator from Georgia that I was not referring entirely to the Revolutionary War, either. I was referring to the Mexican War and to the part that was taken in that war by distinguished men from the South, who were not above asking the Government to reward them for their military service and who accepted with a great deal of satisfaction rewards that were exceedingly liberal, as the Senator from Georgia will see if he will look into the matter, and were probably deserved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am criticizing no one for receiving liberal contributions from the Government. I am making no criticism. I am only stating facts. I am only calling the Senate's attention to the naked fact that seventy-five millions more would make the appropriations to the pensioners of the Civil War take one-third of the entire revenues of the Government for the next fiscal year. However much may have been given in the past to other soldiers of other wars, however much we may wish to give now, it is well for us to know what we may be about to do. We are urged to appropriate to pensioners of the Civil War one-third of the entire revenue of the Government for the next fiscal year.

We are urged to do that, Mr. President, when the present appropriations, according to the estimate of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, will exceed the revenue by $27,000,000.

If we make this increase to pensions we must take up our other appropriation bills and cut them all to pieces. I sympathized very cordially with the expressions of the Senator from Iowa when he called for a careful revision of public-building appropriations. I expect to vote with him on some motions to reconsider bills that I did not understand when they were passed. Being a new Member, I am not so thoroughly initiated as to understand the propriety of passing appropriations here and relying upon the House to kill them. I will join the Senator from Iowa and vote for no appropriations here that I do not wish paid. I do not think the Senate can commend itself to the country by voting for appropriations that the Senate does not approve, relying on the House to kill them. But I will remind the Senator from Iowa that it would take a thousand public buildings to cover the seventy-five millions of increase that would be made under the Sherwood bill. The bill for the post office at Sundance only provided for an expenditure of $75,000. It would take a thousand buildings of that kind stopped by the Senator to get the seventy-five millions that he would add to the pensions.

I am not antagonistic to the views of the Senator on his other criticisms, which applied to savings through economies in the direction of barber shops and duck suits. But it would take more than a million of those saved to make his $75,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Does not the Senator think that in the next 30 or 40 years there may be that many duck suits, that would amount to that sum?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think they will amount to $75,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There would not be that many men to wear them.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I commend and sympathize with the desire of the Senator from Iowa to look over the list of expenditures, wherever they are made where he thinks they ought not to be made, and make a saving. But if we cut off every single expenditure in the Senate, if the whole expense of the Senate were stopped, I think we would save only about a million dollars.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I do not wish to interrupt, but as the Senator has referred to some things I have said, I should like to ask this question: Does the Senator believe the statement of a distinguished Republican Senator, now retired from this body, that the Government could be conducted for $300,000,000 a year less than it now is?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think if that were done we would have to save part of it by reducing the $150,000,000 for pensions.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator think that is what he had in mind?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that must have been part of it. I do not believe the general administration of the Government could be conducted with a saving of $300,000,000 a year and leave $150,000,000 for pensions. I do not believe it would be possible to run the balance of the Government for a little over $150,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad if the Senator agrees with my proposition as to the barber shop and the bath rooms. He is the first Senator I have known that did. But the Senator refers to the passage of bills by the Senate to be defeated in the House. Is not the Senator now engaged in trying to defeat here a bill that was passed in the House and sent over here?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am. I would vote for no bill that I did not approve, hoping the House would not pass it; and I would vote for no bill that the House passed if I thought it ought not to be passed.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator believes, I assume, that the House passed this bill in good faith?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to being interrogated as to the purposes of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BACON. That would be a violation of the rules.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think I have any psychological capacity to judge of the motives of the House. I presume, of course, they were all good.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. A moment ago the Senator had the kindness to yield to me to suggest that his statement as to the amount of pensions appropriated on account of the Civil War was an exaggeration. I now call his attention to House bill 18985, which has already passed the House and is before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. On the first page of this bill the Senator will find these words:

> For Army and Navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, Army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $152,000,000.

That covers all pensions now granted under existing law. I would invite the Senator's attention to the fact that for the year 1911 the entire amount of pensions granted to actual survivors of the Civil War—that is, to men who had served in the Union Army—was $103,337,804.95. There is considerable allowance to be made on account of the pensioners of other wars.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have the figures before me, Mr. President.

Mr. SHIVELY. The figures I have given the Senator are from the bill itself and in a communication from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have the figures showing exactly what was paid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. Here they are. This is what we had to pay—not what we estimated that we would pay. I have them in the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I will read them. The total amount was $157,325,160.35. The Senator will find it on page 35.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator has before him, also, the total amount for the year before. Will he state that?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SHIVELY. On page 10 the Senator will find the record of the entire disbursement for a long period of years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And on page 10 I find $157,325,160.35—just the figures I read as the disbursement for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; I was asking the Senator to name the figures of the year before, as disclosed by the same document, on the same page.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For 1910, $159,974,056.08.

Mr. SHIVELY. And the year before that it was $161,973,703.77.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And the year before that $153,093,086.27.

Mr. SHIVELY. Oh, no.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; $153,093,086.27.

Mr. SHIVELY. Yes; but since that year there has been a decline. The point, however, that I wished to make was that I think the Senator's estimate was unduly large as to the amount of pensions appropriated exclusively to the surviving veterans of the Civil War, when he said $150,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I may be perhaps a couple of millions too high, but it is in that immediate neighborhood.

Mr. SHIVELY. Why, here is the communication, if the Senator pleases, from the Commissioner of Pensions himself, stating that the disbursements for 1911 to the soldiers on account of the Civil War were $103,337,304.95. That was for the fiscal year 1911.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And that entirely omits the widows.

Mr. SHIVELY. It omits the widows. It includes the nurses.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia Yes; and here is the statement that the total amount was $158,000,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is the total amount of pensions for all purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all; it is the total amount of pensions for the pensioners of the Civil War.

Mr. SHIVELY. Oh, the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator said $158,000,000. He meant $148,000,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator is utterly mistaken.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Did I say $158,000,000?

Mr. SHIVELY. The Senator did.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I meant $148,000,000. It is $157,325,160.35 for all; $148,231,665.51 for the Civil War. I may be $2,000,000 too high; it may not be exactly $150,000,000, but it is very nearly that, and it will be very nearly that for the coming year. It was $148,300,000 for the last year to the pensioners of the Civil War alone.

Mr. SHIVELY. Has the Senator the figures of the year before?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The figures of the year before were $2,000,000 more; the year before that, $2,000,000 more; and the year before that, $10,000,000 less.

So, Mr. President, the best basis I have on which to estimate the pay roll for this year is last year's pay roll. Last year's pay roll was $148,300,000 to the pensioners of the Civil War, which was about 25 per cent of the entire income of the Government from ordinary sources. When you add $75,000,000 more you take one-third of the entire income of the Government. I have not criticized their taking one-third of it. I am only insisting that that is what the advocates of the Sherwood bill are seeking to do; and if they do take one-third of it, then we must go to work and cut everything else everywhere.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the junior Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. KERN. I understand the Senator from Georgia to think that this Government can not afford to pay this vast amount of money to the soldiers. I want to ask him this question: If it be true, as I assert it is, that throughout the North there are scores of thousands of old soldiers 70, 75, and 80 years old who can not live on the pensions they receive, what are we to do with those soldiers of the Nation? What is to become of them? Are we to stand by and see them put in the almshouse?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I will present a view responsive to the Senator from Indiana. One of the amendments to the bill which I sent up provided that no payments should be made to men whose incomes were $1,200 a year or more. If there are old soldiers who need more and must have it, then, the basis of giving it to them being that they need it, why not apply the same principle and stop paying to those who do not need it? I am pressing upon the Senate the fact that the Sherwood pension advocates are endeavoring to have passed a bill that would take one-third of the entire revenue of the Government for the next fiscal year, and that if they succeed we must cut to pieces all our other lines of work.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Georgia has made several times during the course of his address the statement that we have just heard. I am interested to know whether he believes that if we add to our appropriations for pensions $75,000,000, or $30,000,000, or whatever we may add, the Government has no other course to pursue except to reduce by that amount the appropriations for other necessary functions of the Government?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can not say that I do not believe that there are other means of raising revenue. If I am correct in my view of certain legal principles, there is a way to raise revenue which I think the Senator from Iowa, as well as myself, would cordially approve. At present we have not succeeded in enforcing it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Georgia will agree with me that one way of increasing the revenue has been already established and approved by the Supreme Court of the United States; and I am sure the Senator from Georgia does not doubt our power to increase our revenue along the general lines that have been already approved as constitutional by the Supreme Court. Therefore ought we not, in determining how much we should give the old soldiers, to consider their needs, their demands, the just demands upon us—in other words, the merits of the proposition—rather than the necessity of reducing the other appropriations of the Government by the amount we may increase the pension roll?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we should consider both. I think we should plan the way to raise our revenue, and then we should consider all of our responsibilities, in determining the just distribution of our revenue.

Mr. CUMMINS. One other question——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield further to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether it is proper to refer to the other branch of Congress in the way I was about to refer to it, but if it be improper, I assure the Senator it is unintentional. As I understand, the House of Representatives has passed a bill which is now before us, known as the Sherwood bill, which very considerably increases the payments of the Government. After that, in order to provide the Government with means or money with which to meet the increased appropriations, it has adopted a plan of taxation, and it has already sent to us legislation which will meet the increased amount which we may provide in the pension roll. If the bill passed by the House is insufficient, I am sure the Senator from Georgia will agree that a very slight addition to the percentage of taxation will bring into the Treasury of the United States an ample amount with which to discharge our obligations.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I feel sure the judgment of the Senator from Iowa as to the propriety of referring to what has been done in the House can be relied upon by myself, and that as he has referred to it I can also refer to it. I do not understand that the House has provided a special measure to meet this increased tax upon the Treasury.

I understood that the special bill applicable to an income tax had reference to a loss of revenue that was to be produced by placing certain things upon the free list, the two measures having passed at the same time. Of course there are various ways to raise revenue, and the Government may raise it. I am treating of the revenues as they are now indicated, and I am treating of the expenses as they are now indicated; and I am pressing upon the Senate the fact that according to the present light before the Treasury Department, and according to the present light before the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, it appears that this $75,000,000 of additional pensions will tax our revenue to the amount of about one-third.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I suggest to the Senator that while the House passed one bill which I think would add to our revenues—or, at least, it was so estimated—some $45,000,000, in another bill they cut down the revenues $52,000,000 from another source?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have just referred to that fact. The Senator probably did not hear me. I stated in reply to the Senator from Iowa that I understood that the bill increasing the revenue was to meet another bill passed at the same time taking the duty off certain things and putting them upon the free list.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I should like to say to the Senator from Georgia that I did not attempt to analyze the motives of the House bill. I have assumed that the House—and I think the Senator from Georgia ought to have as much confidence in the House as I have—will provide, or has provided, the revenue necessary to meet the expenditures which it has authorized, or will authorize. The House has exclusive jurisdiction in the origination of revenue measures, and I think it must be assumed that it has taken up and passed those measures which will keep the Government of the United States solvent.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was using in my argument the figures furnished in a speech by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the House, in which he warned the House not to pass this $75,000,000 bill, because it would produce a deficit, because there was no provision to meet it. If it is proper to refer to what happened in the House, I may repeat that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, in speaking against the Sherwood bill, emphasized the fact that already there was no provision made to meet the necessary demands upon the Treasury; and this would be $75,000,000 more that the Treasury would be unable to meet.

I had intended, Mr. President, to occupy only a few minutes. The interruptions really have caused me to occupy much more time than I had expected. Already there have been paid to pensioners of the Civil War $4,100,000,000. Those figures are so large that the public mind does not know what they mean. Four thousand one hundred millions have been paid to pensioners of the Civil War—four thousand one hundred millions.

I wish to make a comparison of those figures to something practical to try to comprehend what they mean.

According to the last report of the Census Bureau the entire property value of the farm lands, farm property, buildings, implements, machinery, and live stock of the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut was $867,000,000.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator allow me? I would suggest to the Senator from Georgia that, comparing the figures here given as to the amount paid in pensions with the figures representing the five years' cost of the war, there was $3,330,000,000 expended in the five years.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, what I desire to do is to show how much has been spent on pensions and what it means, and that I shall proceed to do. Five times as much has been paid for pensions of the Civil War as the entire value, according to the last census, of the farm lands, the improvements thereon, the agricultural implements, and live stock in the New England States.

Again, the census shows that in 1870 the States of Texas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia had agricultural lands, buildings, implements, live stock, and so forth, to the total value of $1,042,000,000. So we have spent on pensions of the Civil War four times as much as the entire value of the agricultural lands, farm buildings, implements, and live stock of the 11 Southern States, according to the census of 1870.

I only wish to emphasize the fact that the Government has not been close in this matter of pensions to the Civil War veterans. Eloquent speakers upon the floor have approached the subject as if the Government had been illiberal to the Civil War soldiers. The Government has given to the pensioners of the Civil War five times as much as the present value of New England lands, improvement, and live stock, and four times as much as that of the entire Southern States in 1870.

According to our system the payment of taxes is distributed according to population. The South had one-fourth of the population of the Union during these past 40 years. Then the South has paid one-fourth of this $4,000,000,000. These 11 States have paid toward the pension to soldiers of the Civil War over $1,000,000,000. They have paid toward the pensions as much as all their agricultural lands, farms, improvements, implements, and live stock were worth in 1870.

I am not here to enter any complaint or to murmur about it. I only wished to illustrate what has been done and to urge that to add $75,000,000 more annually was indefensible.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The argument has been made all through this discussion that this enormous increase in the amount of pensions is justified by the needs of the old soldiers, those who are 65, 70, and 75 years of age. I believe there is nothing in the bill that limits the pensions to those who are in a needy condition. The Senator has just said he was going to offer an amendment for that purpose.

Has the Senator any information as to the number of those who were on the roll and who will be benefited by this increase who are in needy and indigent circumstances as compared with those who will get this increase who are well-to-do and independent?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I have not. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. I wish to say, however, that the first amendment I propose, which will remove from the pension roll nonresidents of the United States other than those who are suffering from injuries of service origin or wounds, or the widows of soldiers who died as the result of service injuries or wounds, ought to save at least $500,000. I should think we could expect to save $20,000,000 a year if the amendment is adopted providing that we shall cease paying pensions to men who have incomes of over $1,200 a year, always, of course, provided that they were not suffering from wounds or injuries of service origin. I am sorry that I have not any figures on that subject. No statistics have been prepared on it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator think that of the old soldiers who are now drawing pensions and who are going to receive increased pensions under this bill, unless some limit as to income is imposed, such as is proposed in the Senator's amendment, a considerable percentage in nearly every community are prosperous and independent people?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We certainly ought to be able to estimate that at least 25 per cent of them are prosperous; and if that were true, the saving by ceasing to pay pensions to men with incomes of $1,200 or more, would make a very substantial impression upon the pension roll.

I also intended to suggest that we ought to strike out the provision increasing the pensions of soldiers of the Mexican War. They are getting $12 a month. I see no reason why they should all be put at $30 a month. I have heard of no great complaint or demand from them. It is true they are old, but old age comes to everyone.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we have all overlooked one thing in connection with old age and lack of money. Seventy-five per cent of the people of our country will grow old in poverty, but they have their children, and as they cared for their children during the days of the youth of the children, what a joy and what a privilege it should be to the children to care for the parents in their advancing years. I think it can safely be said that 75 per cent of our people all over the land rely in old age upon their splendid boys and girls for support and the privilege of contribution to parents of advanced years should be to children the highest privilege.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I served four years in the Confederate Army. I was wounded four times. I am very glad I was not killed. It is good for me and for my country that I survived. I am glad that I survived to support and aid the Government that my forefathers helped to establish.

I did not enter the Confederate Army for pay or pension. If I had I would have made a grievous mistake, because I have received no pension and I received very little pay. My pay as a captain of infantry during the last years of the war, a month's pay, would not have purchased me a pair of pants, and I needed them sometimes sorely in order to appear in respectable society.

Mr. President, I have the kindest feeling for the gallant men who met us on the field of battle. I would vote to give every one of them a pension not only to meet the necessities of life, but to provide the comforts of life in old age.

But, Mr. President, that is not what we are asked in this bill to do. We are asked to grant indiscriminately a service pension. Whilst I have that kindly feeling for the men who met us on the battle field, and I feel drawn toward them every time I meet them, and they have nothing but kindly feelings for the old Confederate soldiers, it is reserved for the men who never saw an armed Confederate and never heard the rebel yell on the battle field when it meant death to many on both sides to harbor resentment against the soldiers of the South.

Mr. President, the South has contributed without a murmur to paying pensions in all these years until they have paid over $4,000,000,000, and we are willing to go on, but when it comes to a proposal to increase that by $75,000,000 a year I think we have the right to stand up and say that it is getting a little irksome.

In the South there are thousands of men who fought for four years in the Confederate Army who are not getting a dollar of pension. In my State there are thousands of them who are getting less than $50 a year. They were as patriotic as the men of the North. They fought for what they believed to be right and they offered up their lives in testimony of their faith.

No man who entered that army had been paid a bounty. We volunteered, and the pay of the Confederate soldier at the close of the war, when resolved into gold, was less than $1 a month. We saw all the privations of our friends on the other side. We saw all the hunger and starvation. I remember, Mr. President, that I went the last two years of the war hungry all the time. The main opportunities which we had to gratify our appetite were by capturing something from our opponents, the enemy, and but for that we would have suffered grievously.

I believe that the Government ought to be fair and liberal to the men of the North who fought the battles of the country. I am willing to vote to pension every gallant man who met us on the battle field and stood facing death, a pension that will not only provide for the necessities of life, but for the comforts of life in his old age. Not one can make an appeal here that will not have a responsive throb in my heart. But for this indiscriminate service pension I am not disposed to vote, and I shall vote for the McCumber bill as a substitute for the Sherwood bill because I think it infinitely more just and reasonable than the former.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, at this late hour of the evening I do not rise to make a speech, but I simply want to state my position.

For 10 years I have been in the Senate of the United States and I have voted for more than a billion and a half dollars of pensions. I have never lifted my voice against any pension bill. Neither has any Member on this side of the Chamber, the southern Senators preferring to let the northern Senators settle this among themselves. But I am opposed to this, I think, very, very extraordinary and extravagant pension bill.

Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation? I think I know what it is, but I will inquire of the Chair whether or not I am right. As I understand it, the question now pending before the Senate is the substitute known as the McCumber bill, reported from the committee, as a substitute for the Sherwood bill or the House bill. If the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota called the McCumber bill should be adopted, it will then become an amendment to the Sherwood bill, and the question would then recur upon the passage of the House bill as amended by the McCumber bill. Am I right in that?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator correctly states the parliamentary situation. The pending question, however, is an amendment to the substitute reported by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. OVERMAN. I mean when it is amended or is perfected. While I am opposed to the McCumber bill, I know that some pension legislation is going to be passed here this evening, either the McCumber bill or the Sherwood bill, and while opposed to the McCumber bill, I shall vote for it as an amendment unless it is amended, hoping thereby that I may, with my vote, help to defeat what is known as the Sherwood bill. Then, if the McCumber amendment or the McCumber bill should be adopted as an amendment to the Sherwood bill, I propose to vote against the bill as amended, because I am opposed to this legislation.

Now, Mr. President, just one word more. In the very eloquent speech made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] a few days ago he uttered this sentence or paragraph:

If you say that you have patiently—

He was speaking to the southern Senators and the southern people.

If you say that you have patiently and uncomplainingly borne the burdens entailed by the war for nearly half a century, I agree with you, but remind you that we have carried our full share of the same burden and at the same time have contributed something to the development of the new South.

Have the people of Indiana carried the same burdens as the people of the State of North Carolina, or that which the people of any Southern State have carried? While Indiana has paid in pensions $4,000,000 under the pension appropriations of 1911, she received back $10,000,000, or $6,000,000 more than she paid out, while North Carolina paid $3,800,000 and received $600,000, or $3,000,000 more than she received. The population of the last census was 91,900,000, speaking in round numbers. There was paid in pensions in 1911 $159,000,000, or $1.73 per capita. I speak in round numbers.

Alabama's part was $3,698,000. She received $596,000 and paid in excess of receipts $3,100,000.

In Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, and Louisiana, and all the 11 seceding States the same effect is shown.

Georgia, for example, paid out $4,500,000 and received $500,000, or paid in excess of receipts $3,970,000.

Indiana paid $4,600,000 and received $10,281,000, or received $5,609,000 more than she paid.

Ohio——

Mr. SHIVELY rose.

Mr. OVERMAN. Listen; I will give you more startling figures than that.

Mr. SHIVELY. I ask the Senator on what he bases his figures.

Mr. OVERMAN. I base it on the population. This table shows that in 1910 there were 91,000,000 people in this country. I divided that by the pension appropriation of 1911 and it showed that each person's share, or per capita, was $1.73. Then I took your population, multiplied it by $1.73, and it shows you have paid $4,000,000 and received $10,000,000.

Mr. SHIVELY. That is on the basis of a per capita tax?

Mr. OVERMAN. On the basis of a per capita tax.

Ohio paid $8,000,000 and received back the enormous sum of $15,000,000, or received in excess of payment $7,339,000.

Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio, all three, received in excess of receipts $14,000,000.

I only give these facts to show in reply to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] that the South has borne her share and borne more than her share in comparison with Indiana. Indiana does not share, but she received more revenue than she paid out—the enormous sum of $10,000,000.

I submit at this point the table from which I have quoted the figures.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say the South has more than borne its burden. It is willing to share in liberal appropriations for pensions, but we protest against these enormous, extravagant appropriations.

Why, Mr. President, the South has paid more in the way of pensions since the Civil War than France paid as a penalty to Germany for the Franco-Prussian War, and still we are not grumbling and have not grumbled in the past. I have been on the Pension Committee, and I have never opposed a pension, as the chairman of the committee well knows. I never lifted my voice against pensions, and it is only now, when this unprecedented, inexcusable, and extravagant bill comes, that I in duty bound feel that I must protest and lift my voice against it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] speaks of the burdens that have been borne by the South as a result of the war, and reads with some pride the burdens especially borne by the people of North Carolina. I simply rise to remind the Senator from North Carolina that this entire pension burden, as he calls it, could have been avoided by the South had they been loyal to the Union. I have not the slightest disposition to criticize them unkindly. I served in Congress a good many years by the side of men who fought in the Confederate Army, and this is the first time I have ever heard a southern statesman or southern soldier, in my presence, complain of the burdens of the pension roll or our treatment of our defenders.

Mr. OVERMAN. Did the Senator hear what I said. I said, in reply to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] when he spoke of it as a burden, that the South has done its part.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I understood the Senator correctly. I would not attribute to him any remarks that he did not make.

I have the highest respect for my honored friend, the Senator from North Carolina, but I shall not remain silent and hear Senators from the South complain of the burdens that our Government has been called upon to bear on account of the war and because of your own unwillingness to live with us under the same flag in a united country. It was not our soldiers who fired upon Fort Sumter and made these burdens necessary.

Burdens, indeed! The highest service pension that any soldier of the Civil War receives, whatever his rank, from private to major general, if he is less than 75 years of age, at this time, 50 years after the war is over, is a little less than 50 cents a day. Is the soldier of the Civil War now living who was wounded and is sick and old and dying not worth this recognition at the hands of the Government he saved?

I said a few moments ago that distinguished southern men who served in wars prior to the Civil War had not only received it with evident satisfaction, but had asked the Government to reward them for their military services. That list includes no less conspicuous men than Gens. Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson, and many others, who were not above asking this Government to reward them for sacrifices and gallantry in the War with Mexico. Over 68,000,000 acres of land was asked for and received by soldiers who fought in the wars prior to the War of the Rebellion. This Government in the past has been generous to its defenders and the heroes of the Civil War are worthy of our greatest solicitude.

The Senator from North Carolina refers to the pension budget growing out of the Franco-Prussian War. France may not pay her soldiers as she should; it is not for me to criticize her; but this matchless Government of ours remembered one of the soldiers of France and gave to Gen. Lafayette for his services in the Revolutionary War 11,000 acres of valuable land, and then Congress allowed him to select in addition 36 square miles of land on the public domain and gave him $200,000 in gold and sent him away to his foreign home. He was a noble soldier and patriot in the cause of liberty, but no more heroic than hundreds of thousands of brave boys who defended the Union on a hundred battle fields. Were they ever thus remembered? I would not dim the luster of the alien patriot; but no more gallant, no more heroic, no more honorable service was ever rendered by any soldier than that of hundreds of thousands of brave men who fought in the trenches of the South that we might have a united country, and this bill must do them justice.

This is not the time to recall again the sufferings of our soldiers, this is not the hour to rekindle the flames of passion now happily extinguished, but I shall never sit silent in this Chamber when the burdens of government laid on us by the rebellion, for which we were not responsible, are held up as a reason why we should now scrutinize carefully and withhold the rewards that are honestly due our soldiers living.

For several years I occupied a seat in the House of Representatives next to gallant Joe Wheeler, of Alabama. I never heard his vote cast against a worthy pension bill. I know of the record of the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON]; I honor him for his service and his loyalty and his patriotism to the cause in which he mistakenly believed. Sirs, you have taken care of your own soldiers of the Confederacy; you have shown the most commendable zeal in caring for your sick and your wounded and your suffering and your poor veterans of the South; but it seems to me that the record of Senators so honorable in war on either side would be more luminous and brilliant and creditable if they could treat their foes with magnanimous generosity and kindness.

Mr. President, I had intended to go more thoroughly into this matter, but I am admonished that possibly a better service can be rendered to those in need if we are permitted to vote now; to pass some measure of helpfulness to these old veterans. My course is simple, plain, and straightforward. I shall not vote against any just pension bill. The parliamentary situation of this present controversy has been stated by the Chair in answer to the inquiry of a distinguished Senator on this side of the Chamber. The first vote to be taken is upon the McCumber substitute recommended by the Committee on Pensions. I do not like the substitute as well as I do the House bill. If I had an opportunity to do so I would vote to substitute the House bill for the Senate bill. That, however, is not possible because of the parliamentary situation. Senators on the other side of the Chamber will vote——

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In just a moment. Senators on the other side of the Chamber opposed to the Sherwood bill may help pass the McCumber bill; Senators on this side of the same mind may refuse to pass the Sherwood bill. Cooperating together, the attempt to relieve the soldiers may fail, and I shall not be a party to the failure. I propose to vote when my name is called in favor of every just bill that is calculated to improve the status of the Union soldier. Now I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does not the Senator from Michigan understand the situation to be that the Sherwood bill was reported back to the Senate with the Smoot amendment offered as a substitute for it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think the Senator from Indiana is correct.

Mr. SHIVELY. So that a vote for the Smoot amendment is a vote to displace the Sherwood bill?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, Mr. President; I take issue with the Senator from Indiana. There are Senators on the other side of the Chamber, I think I may say with perfect propriety, who do not favor the Sherwood bill and who willingly seek relief from that bill by voting to substitute the McCumber bill. There are Senators on this side of the Chamber who do not favor the Sherwood bill and who will therefore vote to substitute the McCumber bill. If I vote "nay" on the McCumber bill, and those who are opposed to the other bill withdraw from its support on final passage, it will leave us who favor either bill without votes enough to carry the bill through this Chamber. I am not willing to be put in that position and shall vote "yes" on each proposition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is my purpose to vote for the McCumber bill, which, I understand, will carry with it an appropriation of about $30,000,000 for the fiscal year, as against $50,000,000 or $75,000,000 by the House bill. I should be glad to add to that bill——

Mr. SHIVELY. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me just at that point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SHIVELY. It is only fair to say that the author of the Sherwood bill, who has spent much time and given great labor in the preparation of statistics on the question, utterly denies that his bill will carry any such sum as $75,000,000, insisting that that is an exaggeration; and that much, I think, ought to be stated. It can not merely be taken for granted that everybody admits that it will carry the immense sum indicated.

Mr. NEWLANDS. My understanding was that the bill would probably carry the first year not more than $50,000,000, but that it would gradually increase.

Mr CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand, it is the estimate of the department, even if you take their figures, that the Sherwood bill for the first year will only require the expenditure of $32,000,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator state how much it will cost in subsequent years?

Mr. CURTIS. The estimate of the department, with which I do not agree, is that it will be $84,000,000 the second year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Eighty-seven million dollars the second year, if I am correct.

Mr. CURTIS. That is, under the estimate of the department it will be $87,000,000 the second year, and after the second year the amount will decrease each year.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It will be safe, then, to say that, according to the estimate of the Pension Bureau, the appropriations for the next five years would average about $75,000,000, would it not?

Mr. SHIVELY. No.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I can give the Senator from Nevada the correct statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield, and to whom?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, under the Sherwood bill for the first year the expenditure would be something over $32,000,000, and the second year it would be about $87,000,000, in addition to the present expenditure. The average would be something over $56,000,000 for the next five years above the present appropriation. Under the substitute the first year, depending on when the bill will pass, the expenditure would range from eleven to fourteen million dollars; the second year, about $33,000,000, with an average of about $20,000,000 for the five years. That will give the Senator from Nevada an idea of the status of the two bills.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was about to remark, Mr. President, that I would be glad to provide for an additional fund of, say, $5,000,000 annually, which would be expended under the regulation and direction of an examining board upon cases of disability and incapacity to earn a living; or I would be glad to support an amendment that would provide that for the next five years the lapsed pensions, those pensions lapsing through the death of the pensioners, should go into a fund for the relief of those who actually required relief.

We are told, Mr. President, that in view of the increased demands upon the Treasury for pensions it is necessary for us to diminish the great constructive work of the Nation, and figures have been gone into elaborately to prove that this must be the case. I contend that a great, wealthy, and powerful Nation like this should never allow its constructive work to be varied, to be diminished by exigencies of this kind. Outside of the revenues from the Post Office Department, we have a gross revenue of about $750,000,000, of which about $30,000,000 comes from the corporation tax and the balance in about equal proportions from internal-revenue and customs duties. Of that $750,000,000, we to-day spend only about $100,000,000 upon real constructive work—the constructive work on our waterways, on our public buildings, in the enlargement of our Navy, in the construction of fortifications, and in the acquisition of forests. The amount which we now spend annually for constructive work ought to be increased to at least $150,000,000.

Instead of $25,000,000 we should spend at least $50,000,000 annually for the next 10 years in cooperation with the States in developing our waterways for navigation and every other useful purpose. We ought also to appropriate at least $25,000,000 to be used in cooperation with the States in developing the roads of the country.

I would not diminish the constructive work of the Nation. I would provide for it by increased taxation. It is, of course, impossible, and, if possible, it would be absolutely unjust, to exact more revenue from the consumption of the country in the shape of internal-revenue taxes and customs duties, a form of taxation which amounts practically to an equal capitation tax imposed alike on rich and poor, regardless of fortune or wealth. The wealth of the country thus far is practically untaxed. There is no reason why we should not raise from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000 more annually by a tax imposed upon inheritances, by an excise tax such as has been framed by the House of Representatives, and by a tax upon incomes. A tax of 1 per cent would cover the additions to our constructive work; a tax of 2 per cent would greatly enlarge them, and even then the wealth of the country would not bear its fair proportion of Federal burdens.

Mr. President, by this bill it is proposed to increase the expenditures of the Government $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 in the case of the substitute bill and $50,000,000 under the original bill. Whatever may be the action of Congress, whether it adopt the lesser or the greater bill, I believe it to be the duty of Congress at this session to see to it that taxes are imposed upon wealth sufficient to take care of this expenditure without diminishing the constructive work of the country.

We are told that we must stay naval construction if this bill is passed; we are told that we must postpone our public buildings bill. Mr. President, I believe that thus far we have paid too much attention to the building of fighting ships and have not thus far sufficiently developed the auxiliary Navy necessary to support them in case of war. I would therefore diminish the expenditure on fighting ships and increase the expenditure upon the auxiliary ships; but I think that we ought to expend at least $25,000,000 annually in the extension of our Navy.

I do not think that we should halt the expenditure of $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 annually upon our fortifications. As to public buildings, whilst I believe that our method of administering that department of the Government should be radically changed; that it should be taken entirely out of the spoils system and placed under the direction of a bureau of architecture and arts, with a commission of architects and constructors—the best in the country—to aid that bureau in its plans and in its work, I do not believe that $30,000,000 annually is too large a sum to expend for our public buildings.

I do not believe simply because we have the emergency of a presidential election before us, an emergency that comes every four years, that we should make a record of sham economy by postponing the great constructive work of the country. It deceives no one, and it halts the regular and steady progress of governmental work.

Mr. President, it is said that our revenue is to be reduced because of the reduction of the tax on sugar, and perhaps in other ways through tariff legislation. I do not think there is any necessity for providing for such reduction at this session, for we all know that whilst both Houses of Congress and the President of the United States are in favor of a reduction of customs duties, we are unable in a businesslike way by business negotiations between the two Houses and the Executive to agree upon a reduction of taxation that will be a substantial advantage to the public, and yet at the same time conflict with no theory of tariff taxation entertained by either.

I should be glad if, when representative government is under attack throughout the entire country, Congress and the Executive Department could give to the country an exhibition of wise, temperate, and businesslike action that would result in the reduction of customs duties demanded by public opinion and the making up of the deficiency by a tax on wealth.

If we could act upon this tariff in such a way by the wise compromise of all the parties that have power with reference to it, including the Executive, we could then make for any deficit of revenue by an increase of taxation upon wealth, and all patriots, regardless of party, could join in this movement. It would be an encouraging spectacle to the people of the United States if, when we are just upon the verge of the most confused political campaign that we have had for years, the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States should give an exhibition to the country of the poise, equilibrium, and stability of representative government, and could, whilst facing a change in policies, advance steadily with the administrative and constructive work of the Government.

So, Mr. President, we are demonstrating every day the necessity for a budget committee, a committee that can survey the entire field of revenues and expenditures and make their recommendations to this body, to be acted upon by it with reference to the apportioning of the revenues or the increase of the revenues.

I saw a gratifying movement in that direction when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] the other day introduced a resolution for the revival of the Committee on Public Expenditures, which was organized two years ago for the worthy purposes of determining the budget, and which accomplished nothing simply because its chairman, after the first meeting or two, never again called it together. I had hoped that the Senator from Ohio would press that resolution. There is time for deliberation and action now. I am assured by the Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Republican Committee on Committees, that he is inclined in the direction of supporting such a measure. I trust that the Senator from Ohio will push it; that we will revive that committee, and that we will take a broad and comprehensive view of the entire situation, both as to revenues and expenditures and taxation so that we may demonstrate to the people of the United States the capacity of this body and the House of Representatives to face serious changes in policies without disturbing the orderly conduct of business, public or private.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a moment. One of the chief regrets that I have in the fact that I am no longer young is that I can not hope to live to see the day when the occasion for patriotic utterances may not necessarily have to find its inspiration in the events of a fratricidal war. I only wish to add that that regret is lessened by the fact that happily it has been very rarely within the last 15 or 20 years that in this connection anything has been said in this Chamber which would be calculated to wound any of those of us who are Members of this body. Possibly not more than two or three times within my recollection have such words been uttered in this Chamber; and that fact is very greatly appreciated by those of us whom such words are calculated to offend or wound.

I did not, however, rise for the purpose of saying that, or for the purpose of pursuing any thought of that kind. I only allude to the subject because of some words which have unhappily been uttered in this debate. My purpose in now arising is to say a word which will prevent any misconstruction of the vote which I shall cast upon this occasion or of the motive which actuates it.

Of course, it is perfectly natural that a vote against pensions to Union soldiers cast by one who comes from my section, especially by one who himself dates back to the period of the Civil War, should be construed into an indisposition to the granting of proper and liberal pensions to the soldiers of the Union in that war. I simply wish to say in evidence to the contrary that during my service in the Senate I have acquiesced in, and by that acquiescence supported, the payment of more than two thousand millions of dollars to the Union soldiers of the Civil War. During the more than 17 years of my service here that amount, and more than that amount, has been carried by the pension bills which have been passed without a single negative vote being cast by any Senator from the South. I want to say that that is not an estimate of the amount; but that I myself to-day have gone over the figures, and that not only two thousand millions of dollars, but more than that, have been appropriated for the payment of these pensions during my term of service in the Senate. More than the stupendous amount of two thousand three hundred millions of dollars have been thus appropriated in that time without a word of dissent from myself or any other Senator from my section of the country, but on the contrary with their entire acquiescence and support. That fact must forever refute the suggestion that Southern Senators have been, or are, unwilling to vote liberal pensions to the Union soldiers.

In that time, Mr. President, there has never been a debate in the Senate, so far as I can recall, upon the granting of pensions to the Union soldiers. So far as I recall—and I think I am correct in my recollection—there has never been a single negative vote cast during that time by a Senator from the Southern States on the appropriation of that large amount of money for the Union soldiers.

That fact is the more significant, Mr. President, from the additional fact that when I came into this Chamber there was scarcely a Senator from the South who had not been a Confederate soldier. There are left of us now only four, and possibly with two or three exceptions I do not recall a single Senator who then sat on this side of the Chember from the South who had not been a Confederate soldier.

What was the significance of that attitude? The significance of that attitude on the part of southern Senators was this: That we recognized the propriety of leaving entirely to the Senators from the North the question of pensions to be granted to the Union soldiers. What they determined in this regard we acquiesced in. That was practically what we did. It was not the action of one year or of a few years, but of all the years.

I think I may say with confidence that if the bill which is now before the Senate were the usual bill to appropriate one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty millions of dollars for the year, in addition to the more than two thousand three hundred millions of dollars which have been previously appropriated since I have been here, no single southern Senator would raise his voice against it, and no single southern Senator would cast his vote against it. For myself, I desire to say that I would not vote against the bill appropriating the one hundred and fifty odd millions as heretofore. I have never done so in the past, and I would not now. I should prefer, even in this instance, Mr. President, with this proposed legislation, that the matter should be left entirely to the Senators from the North. I should prefer to let them fix the amount, and let them have the responsibility. If that were now the attitude which was recognized by the Senate as the proper attitude, I should be more than glad to join in it. I am perfectly willing that the Senators from the North shall say what shall be the amount of these pensions, and that they shall have the responsibility of it. When I say "the Senators from the North," I do not mean the Senators of any particular party. I mean the Senators from the Northern States, which States were on the Union side in our Civil War, or the war between the States, as it may be called.

I simply state this in order that my vote against this bill may not be construed as an indisposition to vote what I consider to be liberal and proper pensions, as they have heretofore been recognized, for the Union soldiers. I would be willing to go further and not vote at all; but as the situation is such that we have to vote, I think it is proper, with this explanation, that I should say that I shall vote against each of the propositions—both the minor and the greater proposition—because I prefer that the pension law shall remain as it is now, with $155,000,000 or $160,000,000 paid each year for the pensions of the soldiers. Then if, as proposed by my colleague, this large amount shall be so distributed as to best meet the wants of those who are to be its beneficiaries, so much the better. I have said this much because I do not wish that my vote shall be cast without calling attention to the facts which I have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I have sent to the desk certain amendments, which, if now in order, I should like to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is proper to have them read; but it is not now in order to offer them unless they be offered as amendments to the so-called Gallinger amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I offer them as amendments to the Gallinger amendment first. Then I may offer them again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment is the part in italics in the bill. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has offered an amendment to that amendment which relates simply to section 3.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Chair is doubtless right. I merely rose for the purpose of inquiring whether or not there were on the Secretary's desk any amendments that would preclude the propriety of offering my amendments now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary advises the Chair that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho is to section 1. The pending amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is to section 3. When that is disposed of, the amendment suggested by the Senator from Idaho will be in order.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well; when section 1 is before the Senate I will offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to strike out all of section 3 and in lieu thereof to insert:

That no pension attorney, claim agent, or other person shall be entitled to receive any compensation for services rendered in presenting any claim to the Bureau of Pensions or securing any pension under this act, except in applications for original pensions by persons who have not heretofore received a pension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now offer the amendments I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask that the amendments be stated separately in the order in which I send them up.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, in the amendment reported by the committee, in section 1, after the word "who," in line 13, it is proposed to insert the words "enlisted and," so as to read:

That any person who enlisted and served.

And, in the same line, after the word "served," it is proposed to strike out "90 days or more," so as to read:

That any person who enlisted and served in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War, who has been honorably discharged therefrom—

And so forth.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire that that amendment shall be separately considered, and for the benefit of those who were not in the Chamber at the time of my remarks, I will say that it is designed to let in all soldiers who enlisted and served in the war, without regard for their length of service, on the grounds which I stated at the time of suggesting the amendment. They all offered the same thing and gave the same thing, and the three months' men met the first challenge of war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again state the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator From Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. I know what his views are upon the general features of this bill, but I do not know how the Senator would vote upon this particular amendment, as it was not called to his attention before he left and I had no instructions from him. Therefore, all I can do is to announce the fact of the pair and to withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. That Senator is absent from the Senate and from the city, but has released me from the pair on this bill, so that I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], from which I am released on this vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has not responded. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LEA (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I understand from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. CRANE] that it is agreeable for me to transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], with whom the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has a pair. This will leave the Senator from Michigan and myself at liberty to vote, and the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will stand paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. I vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. PAYNTER's name was called). I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. LEA (when Mr. TAYLOR's name was called). The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] is detained from the Chamber by serious illness. He is so ill that I have been unable to communicate with him to find out how he would vote upon any of the questions to-day. I make this announcement for the day. As has been stated, he is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. If present the Senator from Texas would vote "nay."

Mr. BRADLEY. I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], and therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—22.

Borah	Cummins	Kern	Shively
Bourne	Curtis	La Follette	Smith, Mich.
Brown	du Pont	Lorimer	Townsend
Chilton	Gronna	Martine, N. J.	Works
Clapp	Jones	Nixon
Clark, Wyo.	Kenyon	Poindexter

NAYS—44.

Brandegee	Foster	O'Gorman	Root
Briggs	Gardner	Oliver	Simmons
Bristow	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Smoot
Chamberlain	Lea	Penrose	Stephenson
Crane	Lodge	Percy	Sutherland
Crawford	McCumber	Perkins	Swanson
Culberson	McLean	Pomerene	Thornton
Dillingham	Myers	Rayner	Wetmore
Fletcher	Newlands	Richardson	Williams

NOT VOTING—25.

Bacon	Davis	Lippitt	Taylor
Bailey	Dixon	Martin, Va.	Tillman
Bankhead	Gallinger	Nelson	Warren
Bradley	Gamble	Paynter	Watson
Burnham	Gore	Reed
Clarke, Ark.	Guggenheim	Smith, Md.
Cullom	Heyburn	Stone

So Mr. HEYBURN's amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the next amendment which I sent up may be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, in the amendment of the committee, on lines 16 and 17, it is proposed to strike out the following words:

And who has reached the age of 62 years or over.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdrew that amendment. I did not intend that to be read. They would all be over 62 years of age.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withdraws the amendment just stated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; upon figuring it up I found that they would all be over 62 years of age. So that amendment was not necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 20, on page 3, before the word "pension," it is proposed to insert the word "service."

Mr. HEYBURN. That is only a part of the other amendment.

The SECRETARY. And after the word "pension" it is proposed to insert the following words:

Of $1 per day, as hereinafter provided.

So that, if amended, it will read:

Be placed upon the pension roll and be entitled to receive a service pension of $1 per day, as hereinafter provided.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to be taken in connection with the amendment just voted upon, which limited the class of service. This provides that they shall receive $1 a day. If it is adopted, it will provide that any person who has served 90 days or more in the military service, and so forth, shall receive a service pension of $1 per day, as hereinafter provided. The "hereinafter provided" merely refers to the manner of the payment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. There is no use in doing that after the others have been rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho does not offer another amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. Not now.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. BROWN. It is to be inserted at line 23 on page 4.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 23, after the words "$30 per month," it is proposed to insert the following:

That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor, through causes not due to his own vicious habits, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month, without regard to his length of service or age.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this amendment is section 2 of the bill which passed the House, and the purpose of it is not to penalize those soldiers whose terms of service was cut short by reason of wounds received in the service or diseases contracted on account of that service. I do not care to discuss it. I should like to have a vote upon it, by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again make the same announcement I made upon the former vote. I do not know how the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] would vote upon this amendment, and therefore I announce the pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when the name of Mr. BANKHEAD was called). My colleague is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I make the same announcement that I made on the preceding vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I make the same announcement. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], from which I have not been released, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I again announce my colleague's general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I again make the same announcement, that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. For that reason I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I desire to state that I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Mr. LEA (when his name was called). I make the same announcement I made on the previous vote in regard to the transfer of my pair to the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). As previously stated, my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the previous vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as on the previous vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], if present and not paired, would vote "nay." He is paired with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Borah	Curtis	La Follette	Perkins
Bourne	du Pont	Lea	Poindexter
Bristow	Gardner	Lorimer	Richardson
Brown	Gronna	McLean	Shively

Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Paynter	Watson

So Mr. BROWN's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk as a substitute for section 1 of the Senate committee substitute.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of section 1 as proposed by the committee insert:

SECTION 1. That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the late Civil War or the War with Mexico, and who has been honorably discharged therefrom, and all members of State organizations that are now pensionable under existing law, shall, upon making proof of such facts according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide, be placed on the pension roll and be entitled to receive a pension as follows: For a service of 90 days or more in the Civil War, or 60 days or more in the War with Mexico, and less than 6 months, $15 per month; for a service of 6 months or more and less than 9 months, $20 per month; for a service of 9 months or more and less than 1 year, $25 per month; for a service of 1 year or more, $30 per month: Provided, That any such person who served in the War with Mexico shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, $30 per month.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I think in justice to the Senate I should state that this is section 1 of the Sherwood bill, House bill No. 1, that passed the House.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question? With the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] and the adoption of this amendment of the Senator from Kansas it would practically be the Sherwood bill.

Mr. CURTIS. It would.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CURTIS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). Again repeating the statement I made as to the attitude of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], I simply announce the pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BAILEY's name was called). The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. If the Senator from Texas were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I am paired on this vote with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. LORIMER (when Mr. CULLOM's name was called). My colleague [Mr. CULLOM] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. He is paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). On this question I am released from my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and I will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP (when Mr. DIXON's name was called). The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent. He is paired, as I have heretofore stated, with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I repeat my statement that I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. For that reason I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. His colleague has stated that if the senior Senator from Alabama were present he would vote "nay." So the pair will have to stand.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). As previously stated, my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as on the previous vote—that I am paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. In view of the statement made that the amendment just voted upon is the same as the section in the Sherwood bill, I think I should make an additional statement in regard to the attitude of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The vote has taken a different direction from what he anticipated when he left, and therefore I can only state what his instructions to me were.

The Senator from Minnesota instructed me that he would vote for the McCumber amendment as against the Sherwood bill, and that if the McCumber amendment were defeated, he would then vote for the Sherwood bill. I think, in view of that statement, probably the Senator from Minnesota, if present, would vote against this amendment, although I am not authorized definitely so to state. I wish to add that if he were here and if I were free to vote I myself would vote against it.

Mr. BRADLEY. I desire to again state my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], who is unavoidably absent by reason of severe illness.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bourne	Cummins	Kenyon	Shively
Bristow	Curtis	Kern	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Gardner	La Follette	Townsend
Chamberlain	Gronna	Lorimer	Works
Chilton	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman
Crawford	Jones	Poindexter

NAYS—41.

Borah	Foster	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Smoot
Briggs	Lea	Penrose	Stephenson
Bryan	Lodge	Percy	Sutherland
Burton	McCumber	Perkins	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	McLean	Pomerene	Thornton
Crane	Myers	Rayner	Wetmore
Culberson	Newlands	Richardson	Williams

Bradley	Gamble	Paynter	Watson
Burnham	Gore	Reed
Clarke, Ark.	Guggenheim	Smith, Md.
Cullom	Heyburn	Stone

So Mr. CURTIS's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. I offer the following, to be known as section 2.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In place of the present section 2?

Mr. JONES. As a new section, the sections to be renumbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That every widow who is now receiving or may hereafter be entitled to receive a pension of less than $24 per month by reason of the Civil War, shall, upon due proof that she was the wife of a soldier at any time during the war, be entitled to a pension of $24 per month, the same to begin from the date of filing her application under the provisions of this act.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, we have heard a great deal of praise for the men who offered their lives in defense of their country on the battle field. In that I heartily join. This amendment recognizes the greater courage and the more intense suffering and the noble sacrifices of the women while their husbands were at the front in defense of their country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the sentiment which has just been uttered by the Senator from Washington I am heartily in accord. In carrying out that sentiment would the Senator be willing to so modify his amendment as to say that the widow must have been, during the war, during the soldier's service, his wife?

Mr. JONES. I intend to say that in the amendment. If it does not express that it can be worked out in conference. That is the intention of the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not want to have any newly caught widows included.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that the truest friend of the veteran of the Civil War and the truest friend of the widow of a veteran would pause long before he would attach to this bill provisions that might jeopardize it. I believe that we can pass this bill in the shape practically it came from the committee with the amendment that has been made. I do not believe that it is a safe proposition to begin to attach other matters that may run into the millions, as to the exact amount of which we have no information. The Senator from Washington can not give us any estimate as to the cost of the amendment or as to what it means. We have been dealing pretty fairly well with the widows. We raised their pensions from $8 to $12 a very short time ago. I have myself since introduced bills for the purpose of including all the widows of the Civil War. We raised the amount some twelve million dollars in 1908 as a separate proposition.

I believe if we want to do something for the widows of the Civil War it is better to take it up as a single proposition and pass it upon its merits rather than jeopardize this bill in any way, shape, or manner by attaching to it something of which we can make no estimate at the present time. If there are votes enough here to carry it through as an amendment then there ought to be votes enough to carry it through as a separate proposition when we are informed of all the conditions and know just exactly what it means. We can then pass it if it appeals to us, and if it appeals to the House they can pass it also, as a proposition simple and clear of itself. If we believe that the widows are entitled to more there is no question but that the Senate will always give it consideration, as it always has given consideration to any pension bill; and there will be no danger, in taking it as a separate proposition, that it will not receive fair and honest treatment in the Senate.

Mr. President, for that reason, and sincerely desiring to pass a law here that will give the soldiers relief, that will become a law and be placed upon the statute books, I hope that no amendment will be attached to it when we can not say what the amendment means.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, just a word further. This amendment is not offered for the purpose of endangering the passage of this measure as finally amended, but it is offered as a simple proposition of justice and recognition. It seems to me that the widows of the men who were at the front, and who were bearing the burdens at home, should be given this legislation; and the votes that can adopt this amendment can also pass the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. JONES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I merely want to say, in explanation of my position, that I would favor an independent bill to accomplish this purpose, for the reasons stated by the Senator from North Dakota in charge of the bill, but I would not feel like voting for it if it would jeopardize in any way the passage of the present bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). Again repeating the statement which I have made in regard to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and announcing my pair with him, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BAILEY's name was called). The junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. I am satisfied that if the Senator from Texas were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again repeat what I stated on the last vote regarding my pair with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], as before.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). The senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE].

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], but I understand that on this vote he would vote "nay," thus relieving me from the pair. I vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). My colleague [Mr. MARTIN], as previously stated, is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as on the previous vote.

The roll call having been concluded; the result was announced—yeas 25, nays 41, as follows:

YEAS—25.

Brown	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Myers	Townsend
Chilton	Jones	O'Gorman	Williams
Clapp	Kenyon	Perkins	Works
Curtis	Kern	Poindexter
Gardner	La Follette	Pomerene
Gronna	Lorimer	Shively

NAYS—41.

Borah	Cummins	Nixon	Smith, Ga.
Bourne	du Pont	Oliver.	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Fletcher	Overman	Smoot
Briggs	Foster	Owen	Stephenson
Bristow	Heyburn	Page	Sutherland
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Swanson
Burton	Lea	Percy	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Lodge	Rayner	Wetmore
Crane	McCumber	Richardson
Crawford	McLean	Root
Culberson	Newlands	Simmons

NOT VOTING—25.

Bacon	Davis	Lippitt	Taylor
Bailey	Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Tillman
Bankhead	Dixon	Nelson	Warren
Bradley	Gallinger	Paynter	Watson
Burnham	Gamble	Reed
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Smith, Md.
Cullom,	Guggenheim	Stone

So Mr. JONES's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, after line 3, insert the following:

Any person who was held as a prisoner of war during the Civil War for a period of 90 days shall be entitled to a pension at the rate of $30 per month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BURNHAM. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "as follows," on page 3, line 20, strike out all down to and including line 23, page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"In case such person has reached the age of 62 years and served 90 days, $12 per month; 6 months, $13.50 per month; 1 year, $15 per month; 1½ years, $16.50 per month; 2 years, $18 per month; 2½ years, $19.50 per month; 3 years or over, $21 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 66 years and served 90 days, $14 per month; 6 months, $15.50 per month; 1 year, $17 per month; 1½ years, $18.50 per month; 2 years, $20 per month; 2½ years, $21.50 per month; 3 years or over, $23 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 70 years and served 90 days, $16 per month; 6 months, $17.50 per month; 1 year, $19 per month; 1½ years, $20.50 per month; 2 years, $22 per month; 2½ years, $23.50 per month; 3 years or over, $25 per month. In case such person has reached the age of 75 years and served 90 days, $20 per month; 6 months, $21.50 per month; 1 year, $23 per month; 1½ years, $24.50 per month; 2 years, $26 per month; 2½ years, $28 per month; 3 years or over, $30 per month.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM].

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, I desire to make a very brief statement by way of comparison between the proposed amendment and the substitute reported by the committee, sometimes known as the McCumber amendment. I want to state this in figures and to ask the attention of the Senate for a few moments only.

I have taken five years by the estimate of the Pension Bureau and have tried to ascertain, and have, in fact, ascertained, the average annual increases for the next five years on the two propositions—the McCumber substitute and the proposition I have just offered. I find that for each year for the next five years under the substitute offered by the committee, it will be $20,410,800; under this amendment as proposed it will be $25,455,988.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire what effect on the McCumber amendment will the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] have by way of increasing?

Mr. BURNHAM. This has no connection with the amendment just offered by me. It would of course add to the McCumber amendment; how much, I can not state.

Mr. CULBERSON. It was adopted by the Senate as an amendment to the McCumber substitute.

Mr. BURNHAM. That is one amendment and this which I have proposed is another. This does not include or reach the one about which the Senator inquires.

Mr. CULBERSON. It may not reach the particular matter, but I thought the Senator could advise me as to how much the amendment adopted by the Senate, known as the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, would add to the McCumber amendment.

Mr. BURNHAM. I have given no especial attention to the question as to the amount that would be added. I can only speak definitely with reference to propositions as to which we have obtained the estimates of the department.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will yield to me, I think I can give the Senator from Texas some information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. BURNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I shall be glad to have the Senator from North Dakota do so.

Mr. McCUMBER. It can not be given in exact figures, but if one would take the present law, in a very short time he could make the computation. The section which has been placed in the bill reads:

That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty, and is now unfit for manual labor, through causes not due to his own vicious habits, or who from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty resulting in his disability is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid the maximum pension under this act, to wit, thirty dollars per month.

The Senator will see from the reading of that clause that it will practically increase to $30 per month the pension of every soldier who incurred disability in the Civil War——

Mr. CULBERSON. How much?

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. A great many of them, of course, are receiving more than $30 now; a large number of them are receiving less than that sum. I would have to take the number and make the computation, but there are perhaps twenty-five or thirty thousand, any way, who are receiving their pensions under the general law for disabilities, and perhaps a greater number than that. Perhaps a third of those—I am merely giving a rough guess—may now be receiving $30 per month. That would leave the other two-thirds of that number receiving about the same amount, $30. The Senator will see why this is so. Everyone knows that there is no soldier now who is able to perform manual labor. All of them are now of advanced age.

Mr. CULBERSON. How near, if the Senator please, will this amendment approximate to the Sherwood bill?

Mr. McCUMBER. The amendment is one of the sections of the Sherwood bill, and it would add several millions, but just how much I can not now tell.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BURNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] I call his attention to a report made by the Secretary of the Interior on December 16, 1911, found on page 15 of the Senate Pension Committee's Document on Military and Naval Pensions of the United States, in which he discusses House bill No. 1, section 2, and states as follows:

It is a very difficult matter to give an accurate estimate as to the increased cost which would result from the second section of this bill, in view of the fact that each person to be entitled to the $30 rate thereunder must have been wounded in battle or in line of duty or must have been disabled from some disease or other cause incurred in the line of duty and be unfit for or unable to perform manual labor. It is not believed, however, that the number of beneficiaries under this section would exceed 15,000. The increase in the disbursements due to this section would probably, therefore, not exceed $2,500,000 per annum.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to excuse me. I would not have interrupted him had I known it would have taken so much time from the line of his thought.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am very glad the question was asked; it is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, one question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BURNHAM. I do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I understand that the adoption of the amendment of the junior Senator from Nebraska will only add about two millions to the McCumber amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That it will add $2,500,000 is the estimate, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from New Hampshire pardon me for just a moment right on that line?

Mr. BURNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I understand the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska will put upon this list every Federal soldier who had received a wound in battle; it matters not whether he was disabled by that wound or not; if he had a scratch, if a drop of blood was drawn, he will be on this list.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. Pardon me a moment. It is an impossibility for the Commissioner of Pensions or anyone else to estimate how many soldiers that provision might include, though he can tell how many have been disabled by wounds. A great many soldiers, perhaps a majority of soldiers who are wounded, are not disabled by wounds. We had an example here to-day of the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON], who stated that he was wounded four times in battle, but was not disabled.

Mr. McCUMBER. It does not make any difference whether the soldier was disabled or not; if he was wounded, he receives the pension.

Mr. BACON. If he was wounded, whether disabled or not, he receives it. There are no statistics by which an estimate can be made as to the number of soldiers who can be put upon this list under the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska. My judgment is that the large majority of soldiers who saw any very extended service were, during that service, wounded slightly, if not seriously.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the bill provides that the soldier must be wounded in the line of duty and also be unfit for or unable to perform manual labor?

Mr. McCUMBER. But not due to wounds.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not due to wounds.

Mr. BURNHAM. I wish to say, Mr. President, in general terms, that the proposition now offered carries $5,000,000 annually as an increase for the next five years, over and above the McCUMBER substitute. By way of comparison I will say that for the first year, under the McCUMBER substitute, the expenditure would be $11,454,000; under the pending proposition it would be $14,722,000; the second year it would be $33,000,000 under the McCUMBER substitute, and $40,373,000 under the present proposition, and so on, making, as I say, a difference of $5,000,000 in the annual increase during the next five years. The increase comes about largely from the fact that service is recognized more in the amendment I have offered than in the committee substitute, though not to any great extent. After the pensioner reaches 70 years of age there is then very little difference between the two propositions. At the hearing before the Committee on Pensions it seemed to me that the old soldiers were entitled to a larger amount than is proposed in the pending measure.

I should like to call attention to some of the statements made at the committee hearing by men who are entitled, as it appears to me, to the respect and confidence of all the Senators. The men who came here were sent for by the chairman of the committee to enlighten and instruct, so far as they could, that committee. Three of them were past commanders in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic; three of them were department commanders, the heads of departments in their several States, and another was a man who had been for years a commander of a Grand Army post. In all, there were seven men, members of this committee, and they were the only men authorized by the great organization of the Grand Army of the Republic to speak for it in regard to pensions. They came before the committee, and some of their statements I wish you to hear.

One of them, in substance, was that they were not satisfied with proposition No. 11, which is the basis of the so-called McCumber amendment. They wanted something more than that; but they were satisfied, as they expressed it, with No. 13, one of the 18 propositions that have been submitted here. No. 13 embodied substantially what I have proposed in the amendment I have submitted, which is within a million dollars of the amount involved in proposition No. 13; or, in other words, 4 per cent added to the amount called for by my amendment would, as expressed by the especially authorized men of the Grand Army of the Republic, satisfy the old soldiers.

Mr. President and Senators, if we are to pass a pension bill, let us pass one that is reasonably satisfactory and just to the old soldiers of the Union Army, and not one which will cause great dissatisfaction, such as proposition No. 11, which, as I have said, is the basis of the substitute reported by the committee, the only difference being that the substitute divides service into periods of six months instead of one year.

I have stated in substance what the position of these men was. I intended to read their testimony given at the hearing, but I will not stop to do so now. They called attention to the condition of the soldiers in a manner that appealed to me; they told us what reasons they had for asking a pension at this time; they told of their increasing years and of their increasing infirmities and of all those sacrifices which have been so eloquently spoken of here.

The members of the Grand Army, I submit, are not men clamoring for anything that is unreasonable or unjust. Their fairness and candor were manifest, and I think they spoke their honest convictions when they told us that they wanted legislation along the line of my amendment and would be entirely satisfied with it.

I believe that a bill granting something more than what is allowed in the pending substitute should be passed by the Senate at this time.

I hope it will not happen that the Senate will hunt for the smallest amount offered to the old soldiers at this time, select that, and say to them, "This is the best we can do for you." No; I do not believe we want to do that. Rather, let us do something more, something that men who know what they are talking about believe to be reasonable. Let us stand by the old soldiers, and let us do what all of us claim we want to do—that which is just and fair and right.

I appeal to Senators on the other side as well as on this side, for I remember that always in the Committee on Pensions—I do not recall an exception—when special pension bills have been under consideration, the Senators from the southern States have stood with the Senators from the northern States and have been liberal, fair, and just in every instance in their action affecting matters which came before that committee. I ask the same consideration now and appeal to you when this matter comes to be voted on to think of the record that was made there, and to make a similar record here. To Senators on this side I simply want to say that all that has been said for the old soldiers goes for nothing unless we stand by them now. It is true the amendment proposed by me carries a larger amount than that proposed by the committee substitute; but remember that these men are growing older every year, their infirmities are increasing every day, and they are dying off rapidly.

Are we able to pay the amount? That was one of the questions put to these men representing the Grand Army of the Republic, and they replied: "If this country is not able to pay us, of course we will not ask it." Not able to pay! This great, rich Nation not able to pay for the services of the men who saved the Union and the Constitution! Not able to pay! Why, from the products of the soil alone there is added to the wealth of this great Nation eight or nine billion dollars every year.

I might go on, but I will not detain the Senate. The hour is late, and I will simply say that this great, rich country can always afford to be just. Let it be just in this instance, and let the Senate vote for the amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have neglected making any statement in answer to the very numerous arguments that have been made on this floor as to what the old soldiers want. I refrained from answering any of those arguments because I felt that the hour was late and probably Senators would rather vote upon this question than hear any more discussion. I would not at this time make such a statement had not the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM], who has just spoken, made a statement as to what the old soldiers want. As chairman of the Committee on Pensions I think I have probably been in a position to receive as definite information regarding the sentiments of the Grand Army of the Republic as has any Senator here. When the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] declared yesterday that the soldiers do not want what he called the "Smoot amendment" and that they do want the Sherwood bill, I was satisfied to let the matter pass at that time; but let me now make exactly what I believe is a just statement of the attitude of the soldiers.

Every individual who will take the various propositions will figure, just as you and I would, to determine which one of the bills will give him the greatest amount for the rest of his life; and he will naturally, the same as you and I would, favor that bill which will inure to his greatest benefit. That is true of the soldier as it is true of everyone else. So, to the extent possibly that the Sherwood bill would carry a greater amount to a greater number, that greater number who would receive the greater amount might possibly be in favor of it; but the principle established in the bill is condemned universally by the Grand Army of the Republic and by the soldiers generally. The representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic stated in every utterance relating to the subject, "We do not want the single standard of service as the basis of granting pensions." I might quote a great many of these statements, but it is unnecessary for me to go over them. I simply say that of the five men who were present and who spoke for the Grand Army of the Republic, when asked whether they preferred the double standard we have adopted or whether they preferred the Sherwood standard, every one of them answered in favor of the standard adopted by the committee; and when I put the question to each one in private conversation, "If you were limited to the two propositions—the double standard or the age standard, standing singly—which would you prefer?" every one answered that he would prefer the age standard rather than the service standard.

So, therefore, Mr. President, the standard provided by the proposed amendment is not satisfactory to the greater number of soldiers, although the amount involved might meet the requirement of giving the greater number the greater amount at the present time.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KERN. I only want to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether, of the hundreds of Grand Army posts scattered through the country that have expressed themselves on this question, there has been a single one that has passed resolutions in favor of the so-called McCumber-Smoot bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there has.

Mr. McCUMBER. More of them have passed resolutions in favor of the Sulloway bill, which was an age-standard bill alone, than in favor of the Sherwood bill. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] properly expressed not only his own view but the view of the soldiers of the Civil War when, in answer to my question yesterday, he stated that if both bills carried the same amount he would prefer the double-standard bill. That is also the view of the old soldiers.

I want to answer now the statement made by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to inquire if the amendment which we are now considering does not provide for the double standard?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, certainly. I am simply answering the statement that the soldiers demand the system of granting pensions on service alone, as provided in the Sherwood bill, rather than on age, or on age and service. As a matter of fact, they prefer the double standard if you will grant the same amount. There can be no possibility of a question about that.

I want to make clear to the Senate now just what was the attitude of the representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic upon the two propositions, 11 and 13, which, as modified, become, respectively, 16 and 18. Before the members representing the Grand Army of the Republic appeared before the committee they met together and unanimously adopted a resolution which read:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this committee that the age and service standards should be combined in any pension measure enacted by the present Congress, to the end that justice and equity be done to all classes of our comrades.

That was their sentiment, expressed in their resolution, and reaffirmed at their last encampment, when they again demanded that the Sherwood bill be amended so as to more nearly conform to the Sulloway bill.

What did that mean? It meant that they would be glad to accept the amount carried by the Sherwood bill, but preferred to receive whatever amount is granted upon the basis of an age standard, and as between the two, after consideration, they determined that they preferred the double standard.

I prepared 18 different propositions to submit to that committee, embracing different combinations of the double standard. One was No. 11, which divided Army service into periods of one year, and ran up, I believe, to four years. No. 13 also divided it into one-year periods. If you divide it into six-month periods, it will greatly increase the amount of pensions. They were not satisfied with No. 11; they would rather have more than was provided for in No. 11. They desired the amount that would be carried under No. 13; but afterwards we modified No. 11 so as to bring it up nearer to the original No. 13, by making the basis of it six-month periods of service, In other words, by that act alone we added $3,000,000 to the amount provided.

Then, again, proposition No. 11, in the manner of its division, seemed to meet the approval of the greater number of the Grand Army of the Republic representatives with whom I talked—that is, arranging it so as to recognize a certain increase laterally on service and an increase perpendicularly (as we have been used to calling it) on age.

We fixed that part satisfactorily. The same arrangement does not hold in proposition No. 18. In other words, the two are not the same in the matter of arrangement. If they were exactly the same, then we could say we would add so much more to them.

The Senator says they would not be satisfied with No. 11 as modified. I want to give him the testimony of just one gentleman who had been before his own people and before his own Grand Army post.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. BURNHAM. I am sure the Senator does not wish to make a misstatement. What I said was that their opposition was directed to proposition No. 11. I do not know whether or not anything was said about No. 16.

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, they preferred more than was granted in No. 11; but when we modified No. 11 so that we brought it up more nearly to No. 13, which appealed to them in the first instance, by adding three more millions——

Mr. BURNHAM. The Senator did not quite bring it up.

Mr. McCUMBER. No; we did not quite bring it up as far as No. 13, but we brought it up three millions more.

Now I want to read the testimony of Mr. Redman, one of the members of this Grand Army committee. His reference is to proposition No. 11 before it was modified; not after it was modified. He represented the Grand Army of the Republic as one of their pension committee. I read from page 17:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am from the great State of New York. Since the 1st of January, practically speaking, I have done nothing but talk about pensions. I have visited some 12 posts in the western part of the State, installing the officers in 10 of them, and in each case I have taken from 30 to 45 minutes to talk upon the question of pensions, explaining to them the difference in the different bills and then getting their expression after the meetings.

I find that 95 per cent of the veterans in western New York to whom I have talked—I assume 5,000 or 6,000 altogether—are unanimous in favor of a double-standard bill. They will be perfectly satisfied with such a bill. In our city of Rochester we have a very large number of militia that served three months in the fall of 1864. I have taken particular pains to talk with those comrades individually. They all express their satisfaction with and support of the present bill, either proposition No. 11 or No. 13.

I had a copy of proposition No. 11 with me at nearly every meeting. Last Friday night I was in Buffalo, where I addressed the largest post in the world, with something over 700 members. Over 400 of them were present. I had there a copy of the McCumber Senate bill. I read it and talked upon the bill for 30 minutes. I failed to find one comrade in that gathering that was not absolutely satisfied with a bill of that character. Of course I think you will all concede, gentlemen, that No. 13 is a little better holdout than No. 11. Of course I should favor that myself. It was unanimous with the committee of which I have the honor to be a member.

Mr. President, there is a little difference, some $8,000,000 in the second year, but I would prefer to put this through this year. I would prefer to keep within our income this year. I believe the same spirit of fairness and generosity that actuates the Congress to-day will be in existence a year from to-day, when we can conform our income to meet the added expenses. As I have stated, I stand ready to add to them, and believe that we should add to them very materially.

Mr. BURNHAM. Mr. President, just a word. With reference to the double standard, I am free to say that that is one of the features of this amendment that is copied from the substitute of the chairman of our committee. I want to say, further, that this double standard, which seemed to appeal, as he has stated, to all of these visiting soldiers, was a proposition which originated with the chairman himself, and certainly is most commendable. It was that proposition that these gentlemen were talking about quite a good deal, and to which the Senator has referred.

I want to say to the Senator that the expression from all of those men was that they preferred No. 13. There was not any doubt about it; they preferred No. 13. The proposition that I have offered comes within 4 per cent of No. 13; and if we are to satisfy these men I think we ought to do what I have proposed.

Just a word more. The Senator has called attention to the member of the committee of the Grand Army who was the commander of a post in the State of New York. I have called your attention to two men who testified, one of them Mr. Torrance, past commander in chief; another, Washington Gardner, another past commander in chief. Both of them expressed their dissatisfaction with this proposition No. 11.

I want to say another thing. If you will cover the period that I have in this proposition for five years, you will have, according to the Treasury estimate, an abundance of revenue to pay it. If you cover an average of two years, you will have, according to the estimate of thirty or thirty-three millions of surplus, an abundance to pay it. I submit that it does not lie with us here, with our vast appropriation bills, to invoke against this proposition for the first time the matter of indebtedness or possible indebtedness, or the necessity for issuing bonds on the part of the United States.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, referring to the subject discussed by the Senator from North Dakota, and particularly to the statements made to the Pension Committee by the representatives of the Grand Army of the Republic, I desire to call attention to a letter handed me to-day by a very reputable soldier of the District, past post commander of Lincoln Post, No. 3. He says:

There is not a G. A. R. post from Maine to California which has seen fit to indorse the Pension Committee for any expression favorable to the McCumber bill; on the other hand, G. A. R. posts by the score, veterans of the Spanish War, and nearly every legislature of the Northern States, where the bulk of our Civil War veterans reside, have petitioned both Houses of Congress praying for the so-called dollar-a-day pension bill.

As it refers exclusively to the matter discussed by the Senator from North Dakota, I will ask to have this letter, which is not long, incorporated into the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

206 SIXTH STREET SE.,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1912.

Hon. JOHN W. KERN,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to respectfully call your attention to the within clipping of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 16, 1912, in reference to House bill No. 1, known as the Sherwood dollar-a-day service pension bill, which you so ably defended on the floor of the Senate several days ago.

This clipping I send you is not the sentiment of the Grand Army of the Republic. In the speech following your masterly advocacy of the Sherwood bill, Senator McCUMBER, I believe, championed the McCumber-Smoot proposition on the same day. You will find on page 3609 of the RECORD of March 16, 1912, statements of the several prominent Grand Army of the Republic men who represent the committee on pension legislation appointed at Atlantic City during the encampment held at that place in August, 1910.

Inasmuch as the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic saw fit to select those honorable gentlemen to represent the veterans' interest, that duty has been one of painstaking and a trying one; but when they undertake to voice the sentiment of the entire veterans of the Civil War, when they say the Grand Army of the Republic favors the McCumber-Smoot bill or proposition, or any other bill than H. R. No. 1, they assume too much responsibility of their own views in that respect.

There is not a Grand Army of the Republic post from Maine to California which has seen fit to indorse any single one of the pension committee for any expression favorable to the McCumber bill; on the other hand, Grand Army of the Republic posts by the score, veterans of the Spanish War, and nearly every legislature of the Northern States, where the bulk of our Civil War veterans reside, have petitioned both Houses of Congress praying for the so-called dollar-a-day pension bill.

I hope the honorable Senator will pardon me for assuming the privilege in writing this letter, but I simply could not refrain from writing and letting you know that the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic does not represent nor voice the sentiment of a single post of the Grand Army of the Republic favoring any bill other than the dollar-a-day bill which passed the House and known as H. R. No. 1, and I trust you will be in the Senate ready to make some reply to those statements offered in support of the McCumber bill this afternoon.

I desire to say that 95 per cent of the Civil War veterans who have loyally and gallantly defended the old flag and the Union in those days of trial and danger are to-day praying for the passage of the so-called dollar-a-day pension bill, H. R. No. 1, as it passed the House of Representatives.

I do hope you will successfully win out for those deserving and almost destitute veterans and bring to them the necessary relief in their declining years.

Sincerely, yours, DANIEL WILLIAMS,
Late Company K, Twenty-third Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, Past Post Commander Lincoln Post, No. 3, Department of the Potomac.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate——

Mr. KENYON. I rise to a point of order. We can not hear what is being said on account of the confusion, and we should like to hear it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I do not desire at this late hour to unnecessarily take up the time of the Senate, and speak only in behalf of the soldiers. If I remember correctly, however, the soldiers never complained about the taking up of their time by the country in its hour of need.

No bill can be passed here that will please everybody. For that reason I was deeply interested in hearing the members of the Grand Army of the Republic before our committee. Representing, as they do, the only organization of Union soldiers in this country, I was very anxious to hear their opinion. They opposed the Sherwood bill because it was founded alone upon service. They were in favor of the standard proposed in the Burnham bill. They did not ask for the bill that carried the most money, because it was estimated that the Sherwood bill would carry $75,000,000. They only asked for proposition 13, which is embraced in the bill introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire. They said that with that bill they would be satisfied. They asked for this only as a matter of justice, and I quite agree with the Senator from New Hampshire, that they are entitled to justice.

We hear much said now about living within our income. We did not talk in that way when we asked these men to carry the flag. There was nothing then said about not being able to pay them, but all sorts of fair promises were made in order to induce them to volunteer to save the Union. I do not think we should talk that way now. These men are entitled to pensions as a matter of right and not as a matter of charity. We owe them a debt that we can never pay, because they saved the country; and but for them we would have no Union or Constitution; but for them we would not enjoy the liberty nor have the wealth and power that we enjoy to-day.

Mr. President, I think that when these old soldiers come and tell us what they want and put themselves within the limit of reason it would be little less than an outrage for us to refuse to give them what they ask.

It has been a long while since the war, and some here do not know anything about it, some who have heard but little about it. I saw something of it. I saw something of the blood and the tears and the sorrow of that period. I heard the cries of weeping widows and orphan children. I saw the brave boys as they marched to the battle field, under the flag, to the music of the drum and fife, in all their young manhood and strength. I saw them dead upon the battle field. I saw them brought home, not with their shields, but upon them. I heard the clods that fell upon their coffins. I saw the dark cloud of woe and anguish that overhung this country. Ah, we must not forget these things. These men are old now. They have not the step that they had then. Their ranks have been decimated, and they have become old and feeble. Comparatively few of them are left. The large majority have passed over the river and are now resting under the shade of the trees.

Mr. President, shall we fail to do them justice? Shall we refuse to give them what they are willing to take, not as a charity, but as right under the duty that we owe them for the grand service that they performed?

I voted in the committee against reporting the Sherwood measure because I did not believe it would pass the Senate, and the Grand Army opposed it because they wanted an age and service bill combined. I voted in favor of reporting the Burnham bill, now being considered. I am in favor of it to-day. I beg and plead with the Senate to give these men some measure of justice. To my friends across the way, some of whom were gallant soldiers on the other side, I make a special plea. If there is any man who should love the soldier, it is the soldier who met him upon the battle field and struggled with him for supremacy. I appeal to the old ex-Confederates in the Senate to do what is right toward these old men who were foemen worthy of their steel.

A short time ago in Kentucky a bill was introduced in the legislature to pension the Confederate soldiers, and every Republican voted in its favor. I ask you now to be as generous to the Union soldiers as our people were to yours in Kentucky.

Mr. President, we are told that there have been many billions of dollars paid in pensions during the long period of 50 years. Yes; there have been; and there have been many billions of drops of blood shed upon the field of battle; there have been many graves dug, that rise to-day like billows upon the sea, underneath which repose the gallant men who lost their lives in the service of our country and its flag.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BRADLEY. Do not talk to me about what pensions have cost. The question now is how shall these men be paid what is justly due them and what they have the right to ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRADLEY. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator stated that every Republican member of the Kentucky Legislature voted for a bill to pension ex-Confederate soldiers in Kentucky. Would the Senator from Kentucky kindly state what the amount of the pension was per month or per year?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I really do not know, but I can say it was all that was asked.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah, Mr. President, then it comes down to a comparison of what men ask. Can not the Senator from Kentucky approximate the amount that was paid to the ex-Confederate soldiers by the Legislature of Kentucky?

Mr. BRADLEY. I can not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was it $6 a month?

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not remember.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Was it $3 a month or over?

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not remember. I think that the bill was introduced by some Democrat as a measure of justice, and I suppose that no Democrat in Kentucky would value the services of a Confederate soldier at so small a sum as $3 a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Kentucky will pardon the interruption, there was sitting to my left a Kentucky Republican Member of the House and he has told me that the amount was $10 a month. Does the Senator remember if that is correct?

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not; but, as I have said——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it were $10 a month, that is less than any pension in this bill.

Mr. BRADLEY. Well, Mr. President, all I have to say in response to that is, in the first place, if they conceived that $10 is all they were entitled to, that was their business and not mine. In the next place, I want to say that the difference in value was very great between their services and those for whom we are now legislating. In their case the pension was given to men who fought to destroy the Government, and in this we are asking for a pension to men who fought to preserve it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky another question. Of course I appreciate the point he has just made. That does not, however, affect the Legislature of Kentucky very much I imagine. Did the pension bill extended to ex-Confederates in Kentucky include anybody except those who were not in the enjoyment of an income sufficient to live without a pension?

Mr. BRADLEY. I do not know; I was not there. I simply know that such a bill was passed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to add a word, if the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, and then I will not bother him any more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield further to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRADLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the State of Kentucky did give any pension to the Confederate soldiers upon any other basis than absolute need and necessity now, the State of Kentucky did something which no other Southern State, as far as I know, has done.

Mr. BRADLEY. That may be true, Mr. President; Kentucky is in the habit of doing things that no other Southern State ever did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM].

Mr. BURNHAM. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BAILEY's name was called). I announce that the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. If the Senator from Texas were present, I am satisfied he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] and withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I make the same announcement with reference to my pair as before.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my pair, already announced, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I make the same announcement in reference to my colleague as before.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). On account of the pair which I have heretofore announced, I withhold my vote. If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote "nay." I should vote "yea." So the pair will stand.

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). I have stated the pair of my colleague [Mr. MARTIN]. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 36, as follows:

YEAS—29.

Borah	Cummins	La Follette	Poindexter
Bourne	Curtis	Lorimer	Shively
Bristow	Gardner	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Hitchcock	Martine, N. J.	Townsend

Bradley	Gallinger	Nelson	Warren
Burnham	Gamble	Paynter	Watson
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Reed
Cullom	Guggenheim	Smith, Md.

So Mr. BURNHAM's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENYON. I offer the amendments which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, page 4, strike out the word "sixty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "sixty-four."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The SECRETARY. Also, in line 10, page 4, strike out "seventy" and insert "sixty-eight."

The amendment was rejected.

The SECRETARY. Also, in line 17, strike out "seventy-five" and insert "seventy."

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before you proceed to that, Mr. President, there is an amendment which I offered some days ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. —. That no person shall receive a pension under this act who is or shall be in receipt of an income of $1,200 per year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want to make a speech. It is too late for it; everybody is tired; we want to get through and go home. I hardly hope that the amendment can pass. I have offered it because it seemed to me just and right that it should be offered.

This morning at some time the question arose as to where the Government would get the money from to pension old soldiers who were needy and necessitous. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] said, and said very touchingly, that there were a great many of them who could not live upon the pensions which they were now receiving, and who had no other sources of income except their pensions. I felt then like answering the question propounded by saying you should find out what is the average income of an American family. I do not know what the figures are under the census of 1910, but under the census of 1900 it was $460 a year. If you would fix $140 more than that and say that nobody should receive a pension who was in the enjoyment of an income of $600 a year—$50 a month—you would save enough money from the pension roll by that to keep out of destitution every ex-Federal soldier in the United States. You would save by it, unless my calculation is wrong, some fifteen or twenty million dollars, taken from those who do not need it and given to those who do need it.

Mr. President, I have never had much sympathy for that sort of patriotic sentiment that sounds in dollars and cents. I have a very high degree of sympathy for that sort of sentiment which does not permit an old man who has served his country in times of war to suffer in his old age. I expect, if the truth were known, that I would go as far as any of you to take care of that class of pensioners. I do not know that the suspicion is absolutely correct, but I am persuaded that it is; I suspect that I would go as far as any of you in that direction.

But I have not wanted to push the amendment to that point. I have not offered an amendment that no one in receipt of $600 a year clear income should receive any benefit from this pension act. I have offered an amendment that nobody in the enjoyment of an income of $1,200 a year or over should receive any benefit from this pension act.

That is $100 a month, twice as much as the average head of a family in the United States enjoys, and it must be remembered that one-third of the population of the United States is in a section of the country that pays pensions but receives no pensions. I am not complaining of that. It is the war tribute which the defeated must pay. We grin and bear it, and we ought to grin and bear it; but we do it that neither we nor the deserving people of the balance of the United States, carpenters, blacksmiths, preachers, ought to be taxed in the name of patriotism to pay largesses to men who are already in such a good condition financially that they are twice as well off as the average head of a family in the United States. I have, therefore, offered this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and, not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BAILEY's name was called). The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON]. If the Senator from Texas were present, I am satisfied he would note "yea."

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] would vote the same way.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I desire to make the same announcement as to my pair that I made on the former vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Because of my pair already announced, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to make the same statement in regard to my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] as I did before.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I am paired, as I have already announced, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS (when Mr. GUGGENHEIM's name was called). The Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). Because of the pair which I have already announced, I will withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRADLEY. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas, 30, nays 35, as follows:

YEAS—30.

Borah	Gardner	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Bourne	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Owen	Swanson

So the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That the Commissioner of Pensions shall cause to be published in at least one newspaper at the capital of each State a complete list of the persons drawing pensions in that State, with their post-office addresses and the amount of said pension, and whether the pensioner is a soldier, soldier's widow, or child of a soldier; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $50,000 per annum to pay for such publication.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I shall take the Senate's time for hardly two minutes. The Senate has just voted down an amendment not to allow men with a clear income of $1,200 a year to draw a pension under this proposed act. The Senate must have done it, if they did it upon any sensible theory at all, upon the theory that they want to make of the pension roll a roll of honor. At any rate, frequently that reason has been given in opposition to motions of that kind. If that be your reason, you do want to make it a roll of honor, do you not? If you will publish in each State the name of the pensioner and his post-office address you will call the attention of his neighborhood to him, and if he is a fraud and has no right to be drawing a pension, or if he is dead and if somebody else is drawing a pension for him, that fact will soon make itself known, and you may be able to save a great deal of money, which none of you want paid out.

I take it for granted that none of you want a man to receive a pension masquerading under the name of another man, that nobody wants a pension for a dead man received by somebody who is living, and that nobody wants a roll of honor to become tainted with dishonor by particular exceptions to its general character. If that be the case, there can be no harm in the utmost publicity with regard to pensioners and the amounts they are receiving.

In this connection I will state that I have the high authority of the present Republican President of the United States and a Republican ex-President of the United States—recently ex—to the effect that publicity is a sort of sunlight cure for all sorts of evils. I hope this amendment, at any rate, will be voted for unanimously.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho desire to offer an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to call attention, in response to what the Senator from Mississippi has said, to an amendment that I prepared and sent to the desk, and only withdrew because of the vote on the first amendment, which read thus:

Any and all sums of money that may be due to any person within the class named herein may, upon the sworn declaration of such person expressing his desire that any money that may be due or become due to him shall be transferred to a special fund for the purpose of the payment of any pensions authorized by law to be paid to any class of Union soldiers or sailors.

My purpose in that was to compel the persons receiving pensions, or to whom pensions were due, to make an affirmative declaration declining to receive the pension, and for it to be transferred to the general pension fund, so that then we would know who were quietly acquiescing in the receipt of a pension, despite the fact that they were in no need of it, and those who, feeling that they ought not in good conscience to receive a pension, would transfer it. That would have put them by the record under a provision, which I think is in this bill, requiring the publication of the names of pensioners. I only withdrew the amendment because the amendment to which I thought it was germane had not been agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, before the Senate votes upon this question it is probably proper to call to their attention the fact that the committee has already reported a section that seems to me to cover everything that is essential, except the matter of the publication, and the report which the committee asked for will cost nothing. Section 4 reads:

SEC. 4. That the Commissioner of Pensions shall make, at the time of submitting his next annual report, a separate report for each county of each State, Territory, or District, containing a statement or table which shall contain the names, lenghts of service, monthly rates of payment, and residences of all pensioners of the United States; and shall thereafter, as said annual reports are submitted, make separate reports similar in all respects, except that such subsequent reports shall contain only those added to the pension roll during the fiscal year for which each annual report is made.

Now each county can receive separately, and in a statement that pertains to that county only, the names of every soldier in that county drawing a pension, with his length of service, and so forth, and publish it, if it is so desired; but it does not seem to be necessary, Mr. President, to appropriate money now for publishing something which perhaps the country does not desire to know, and which, if anybody does want the information, is in a public record and he can get it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from North Dakota will not misunderstand the purport of my amendment. If I understand what the Senator from North Dakota has just read, which appears on page 6, section 4, it does everything I want done except just what I want done; it fails to provide for publication. It is the blessed sunlight of publicity that I am seeking.

The Senator says that it will cost some money to do what, perhaps, the country does not want done. I take for granted that the country does want the sunlight of publicity upon the pension roll, so that the good, honest people in every county and in every bailiwick may read and see who amongst them is enjoying a pension and may determine whether or not the man enjoying a pension deserves it, whether he is living or whether he is dead, and whether somebody else is drawing it in his name. Any one of those three things may occur.

Mr. President, I have said nearly all of this with a view to getting the attention of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Every word of which I heard.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I saw that the deus ex machina upon the other side of the Chamber had his attention during the greater part of my remarks.

To recall the Senator from North Dakota to the point, I do not think that the Senator from North Dakota will contend for one moment that the people of the United States do not desire public knowledge concerning this, as concerning all other governmental and administrative affairs; but I tried to reenforce my own weak voice by reference to the present Republican President and a Republican ex-President of the United States. We have learned lately from those who are insurging upon the other side that the greatest thing that any people can have in connection with anything, the management of corporations and everything else, is publicity. It its spelled with a great big "P," and it is pronounced with the accent upon the first syllable; and all I want is publicity concerning the pension list, so that the good, honest people—and as a rule most of the people, a majority of the people, are honest—shall have knowledge of who in their bailiwick is drawing a pension; and, take my word for it, that if there are any dishonorable names upon the pension list, that are tainting this roll of honor by their presence, the people, having the honor of the Nation at stake and dear to their hearts, will soon make some sort of communications to the proper authorities which will stop the dishonor and may incidentally also stop a part of the expense.

I hope that the chairman of the committee in charge of this bill will not object to the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the assumption that calls for this amendment is that there is fraud and dishonor in pension legislation and in the pension roll. I do not believe there is any fraud that has not been ferreted out. I do not believe that the public believes there is any considerable fraud in the matter of granting or receiving pensions. I do not believe that the public cares a continental about reading the names of the soldiers who are drawing pensions. The public knows that we vote so much money for pensions; that there are so many thousand soldiers yet living, and that they are dying at a certain rate. I think that is all the public cares about knowing, and I am not in favor of publishing this matter, but if anyone wants to get the list for his own particular county he can do so under section 4 of the pending substitute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I know the Senator from North Dakota so well that I know he did not intend to misrepresent me as saying that the pension roll was a roll of fraud or that pension legislation was fraudulent. I said, and said so distinctly that I think no human being could have misunderstood me, that we wanted to prevent a roll of honor from being tainted by individual cases of dishonor.

Now, the Senator says that there is no considerable fraud. I know of no more indefinite word in the English language than the adjective "considerable"; but if there be any individual cases of fraud, whether considerable or inconsiderable, if they exist I have sufficient confidence in the sense of honor of the American people to believe that they want to know it; they want to detect it; they want it removed; and they want it removed in the name of the honor of the men upon the pension roll who have a right to be there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has asked for the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and withhold my vote.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I withhold my vote because of my pair already announced.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I make the same statement as before with reference to my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] and his pair.

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). On account of a pair already announced, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HEYBURN. Because of the pair already announced, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Bourne	Gore	Owen	Swanson
Bryan	Johnston, Ala.	Percy	Thornton
Chilton	Lea	Rayner	Watson
Culberson	Lodge	Root	Wetmore
du Pont	Myers	Simmons	Williams

NOT VOTING—28.

Bacon	Cullom	Guggenheim	Reed
Bailey	Davis	Heyburn	Shively
Bankhead	Dillingham	Lippitt	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Dixon	McLean	Stone
Burnham	Gallinger	Martin, Va.	Taylor
Clarke, Ark.	Gamble	Nelson	Tillman
Crawford	Gardner	Paynter	Warren

So the amendment of Mr. WILLIAMS was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I desire to offer as a new section the amendment I proposed a moment ago, limited, however, so as to include only those widows who have remained such since the death of the men whose wives they were during the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add the following as a new section at the end of the bill:

SEC. 5. That every widow who is now receiving or may hereafter be entitled to receive a pension of less than $24 per month by reason of the Civil War shall, upon due proof that she was the wife of a soldier at any time during the war, and that she has not been married since the death of such soldier, be entitled to a pension of $24 per month, the same to begin from the date of filing her application under the provisions of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

By the sound the "noes" have it.

Mr. JONES. I ask for a division.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 23, noes 31.

Mr. LEA. I offer an amendment to come in as the last clause of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add the following:

And that no person shall receive a pension under this act who is or shall be in receipt of an income of $2,400 per year.

Mr. LEA. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair, and refrain from voting.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I make the same statement with reference to my pair as before, and withhold my vote.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I withhold my vote for the reason already announced.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I make the same statement as before with reference to my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). For the reason already announced, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Borah	Foster	Myers	Simmons
Bourne	Gardner	Newlands	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Hitchcock	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Overman	Swanson
Chilton	Jones	Owen	Thornton
Crawford	Kern	Percy	Watson
Culberson	La Follette	Perkins	Williams
du Pont	Lea	Pomerene
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Rayner

NAYS—32.

Brandegee	Cummins	McLean	Shively
Briggs	Curtis	Nixon	Smith, Mich.
Bristow	Gronna	Oliver	Smoot
Brown	Johnson, Me.	Page	Stephenson
Burton	Kenyon	Penrose	Sutherland
Clapp	Lodge	Poindexter	Townsend

NOT VOTING—25.

Bacon	Davis	Heyburn	Stone
Bailey	Dillingham	Lippitt	Taylor
Bankhead	Dixon	Martin, Va.	Tillman
Bradley	Gallinger	Nelson	Warren
Burnham	Gamble	Paynter
Clarke, Ark.	Gore	Reed
Cullom	Guggenheim	Smith, Md.

So Mr. LEA's amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the committee as amended.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I simply desire to state, in order that my vote may not be misapprehended, that I am opposed to both the McCumber bill and the Sherwood bill. I will vote "nay" on this roll call, not because I favor the Sherwood bill, but because I am opposed to both.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I have a general pair, as announced, with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], who asks that I make this statement:

On the final vote I wish you would say for me this:
"The Senator from Missouri requests me to say that, taken as a whole and as reported, he does not favor either the House bill or the bill reported by the Senate committee."

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I desire to announce that I will vote against both the bills for the same reasons that have just been given.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I desire to announce that I shall vote against the McCumber bill for the reason that I want to vote for the Sherwood bill, and I shall vote for it if the opportunity is presented.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, it is only fair that I should say that having stated I would vote for the McCumber amendment to the Sherwood bill, since it has been amended by the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] and is so vague and will require so much additional appropriation that we do not understand, I shall vote "nay" against that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute of the committee as amended.

Mr. CURTIS. Have not the yeas and nays been ordered on it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not understand that the yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment, but that they were ordered upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a pair on this bill with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and by his instructions I announce that, if present, he would vote "yea." If he were present and I were at liberty to vote I would vote "nay."

Mr. BRADLEY (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR], and will refrain from voting.

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). I make the same announcement that I have made heretofore, that I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I am informed by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] that he is in favor of this amendment to the bill, and therefore I feel authorized to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP (when Mr. DIXON's name was called). The senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] is paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. If the senior Senator from Montana were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). My colleague, the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], is necessarily absent. He is paired, as I have stated, with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). As I have stated, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], and therefore withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I am not advised as to how the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] would vote if he were present. I am paired with that Senator, and will therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. LORIMER (when his name was called). I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CULLOM] with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. If my colleague were present and permitted to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], and vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I wish to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 44, nays 21, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Borah	Burton	Dillingham	Lodge
Bourne	Chamberlain	du Pont	Lorimer
Brandegee	Clapp	Fletcher	McCumber
Briggs	Crane	Gronna	McLean

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to reserve that section which was offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BROWN] and adopted, for the purpose of changing the phraseology in one respect, and I think the Senator from Nebraska will agree with me. I can only state the lines as they appear in the original bill, and the clerks can find it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota asks for a separate vote on the so-called Brown amendment. Is a separate vote asked on any other amendments? If not, the question is on concurring in the amendments other than the Brown amendment.

The amendments were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is upon concurring in the Brown amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask to amend that by striking out the words where they appear in line 14 of the original bill "through causes not due to his own vicious habits" and inserting in lieu thereof "by reason thereof," so that the section will then read:

That any person who served in the military or naval service of the United States during the Civil War and received an honorable discharge, and who was wounded in battle or in line of duty and is now unfit for manual labor by reason thereof, or who from disease, etc.

That makes the two portions of the sections the same. I think it was certainly an error that it passed the House in that shape, because if there was as much as a scratch it would be a wound, and although no disability would flow from it, the soldier would be entitled, because of ever so slight a wound, to receive $30 a month. It might have nothing to do with the matter of his inability to perform manual labor. I hope there will be no objection to this amendment to the amendment, because the next portion reads:

Or who, from disease or other causes incurred in line of duty, resulting in his disability—

You see in that case it must result in his disability—is now unable to perform manual labor, shall be paid, etc.

We want both sections to mean that if the wound or the disease resulted in his inability to perform manual labor, then he should receive the higher amount.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I do not think the change suggested by the Senator is in fact very material, but at the same time I do not feel like accepting the suggestion for the sole reason that if the change is made it throws the section into conference. The section as passed and adopted by the Senate is the section as passed and adopted by the House, and it will not be subject to the vicissitudes of a conference committee if left in the shape it is in now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair might suggest to the Senator that, the entire House bill having been stricken out, the whole matter would be in conference, if it goes to conference.

Mr. LODGE. The whole matter would be in conference. It does not protect it in the least.

Mr. BROWN. I may be wrong about it, but I have an impression that there is some advantage in having adopted as a separate section a provision which the House adopted and which is entirely independent of the other provisions of the bill. I really am of opinion that the change suggested does not in fact change the substance or meaning of the provision, and if it does not have the effect to injure it in conference I will not resist it. Senators wiser than I as to the effect and who have had more extensive experiences in conferences may be correct about it, and if it is their judgment that it will all be in conference anyhow, the Senate can pass it, but personally I do not care to take the responsibility of accepting the suggestion.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not like to differ from so distinguished an authority as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], especially under the suggestion of the Chair, but if there is a rule which I think is ironclad it is that where the two Houses agree in any one thing, without any change or difference whatever, it can not be interfered with by a conference committee; and the fact that for convenience a general course has been taken to run a line through and rewrite the bill, so as to make it more convenient than to offer separate amendments for each part, does not change in any particular that fact. If that were the case, Mr. President, all we would have to do whenever a bill came from another House to which there would be one amendment to be offered would be to rewrite the whole bill, except as to that one amendment, and make the change as to that one amendment and then say the whole bill will be agreed to by the second House in every particular except that one amendment; and the claim that, although thus agreed to, the entire bill was open to the action of the conferees, I do not think can possibly be sustained.

Mr. BROWN. Not only that, Mr. President, but if the position be correct that it is all in conference, there is no need of having this change made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is, Will the Senate concur in the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. LODGE. Then it is open to amendment, subsequently?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, the Senator from North Dakota offers in the Senate an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "manual labor" in the amendment strike out the words "through causes not due to his own vicious habits," and in lieu insert the words "by reason thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from North Dakota if he does not intend to go further and reach the point in the amendment which strikes out all limitation as to time, or whether the Senator desires to have that Brown amendment, as we call it, adopted in the particular that no limitation of time is placed upon the length of service.

Mr. LODGE. The whole Brown amendment is now certainly open, since there has been a change in it.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly; but the Senator from North Dakota in charge of the bill has pointed out to the Senate one amendment that he thought ought to be made to the Brown amendment. I want to know from the Senator from North Dakota whether he acquiesces in a further change which would strike out altogether the limitation of time in designating the length of service.

Mr. McCUMBER. Under the present law it makes no difference how long a man served if he were wounded so as to obtain a pensionable status. I did not draft this provision. I did not put it in on my own vote. It has been placed in here, and it makes no limitation. I am not seeking to do anything further than to make it conform to what I think was intended.

Mr. BACON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that as I understand the Brown amendment it not only reaches the cases of soldiers who were wounded, but it goes further, extending to the cases of soldiers who were disabled by reason of any disease contracted; and it removes all limitation of time in both cases, both in the case of disease as well as in the case of wounds. I wish to know whether the Senator from North Dakota intends to give his acquiescence to the removal of the limitation of time which is found in the McCumber amendment, as we called it?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is but perfectly fair to say that I oppose personally the whole proposition and each and every section of it, and I necessarily oppose that which will be without regard to the length of service; but as the Senate passed it with that in, I simply acquiesced in that which the Senate wanted to do. I thought by calling to the attention of the Senate what was really an error, and not what the Senate intended, I could get them to agree with me about it. But the Senate fully understood what the other meant without any possible question, and they voted to put it in.

Mr. BACON. I do not think there is any doubt about the fact that the Senate understood the whole thing, but the point that struck my attention was this: The Senator from North Dakota undoubtedly voted against the Brown amendment. Now, when it comes to the Senate he points out a certain change which he desires made, and he does not say anything about the change of that feature of the Brown amendment which strikes out the limitation in time. I desire to know whether the Senator from North Dakota acquiesces in that case, or whether he desires to have the Senate again restore the limitation of time.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply acquiesce in it because the Senate, after full consideration on a yea-and-nay vote, declared by a majority of 2, I think, that they wanted it in. Therefore I was compelled to acquiesce, and I assumed that the Senate would vote the same way again.

Mr. BACON. The Senate did the same thing as to the feature in the Brown amendment which has been changed at the instance of the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. But I do not think they fully understood what the other feature was. I do think that the Senate fully understood what the last feature was, because it was very clear.

Mr. BACON. There has been nothing in the way of discussion which indicated that the Senate was at all in doubt as to the particular feature which the Senator from North Dakota has since succeeded in having amended. There was certainly no expression on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that any Senator can now move to strike out those words.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments the question is on the engrossment of the amendment as amended.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the passage of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know that I caught it all, but I understand that the amendment to the Brown amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota has been passed. Has the Brown amendment as amended been submitted to the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Brown amendment was concurred in. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). As I previously announced, I have a pair on this particular bill, as well as a general pair, with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. By his authority, I now state that if he were present he would vote "yea." If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when his name was called). On this question I announce that I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. LORIMER (when Mr. CULLOM's name was called). I wish to again announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CULLOM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and to state that if my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and that I feel authorized under a telegram from him to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CLAPP (when Mr. DIXON's name was called). I desire to announce the pair of the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY]. If the senior Senator from Montana were present and authorized to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I make the same statement I did before with reference to the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] and his pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "yea."

Mr. GAMBLE (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] and withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. HEYBURN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. If he were present I am advised that he would vote "nay," and was I at liberty to vote I would vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Virginia was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN] is detained from the Senate and is paired with the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. GUGGENHEIM] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER].

Mr. BRADLEY. I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 16, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well; I withhold the motion.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the bill be printed as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. McCUMBER. I now move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to say that I think the calendar ought to be taken up to-morrow.

Mr. PENROSE. It can be taken up next week.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have had a hard day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MOTOR AND OTHER VEHICLES IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE (S. DOC. NO. 477).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th instant, certain information relative to the number of carriages, vehicles, etc., now owned by the Government, or maintained at Government expense and used by that department, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. 14) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to furnish a copy of the daily and bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the concurrent resolution and amendment be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New York, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Office of the Secretary of State.

Pursuant to the direction therein contained, I have the honor to transmit herewith the following concurrent resolution of the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York, adopted March 4, 1912:

STATE OF NEW YORK (IN SENATE),
Albany, March 4, 1912.

Whereas there have been introduced in Congress three bills (Nos. H. R. 36, H. R. 4428, S. 2367) to afford Federal protection to migratory game birds; and

Whereas there is a very general sentiment in this State in favor of such protection, and an urgent request for the enactment of such a law has been made, as appears by numerous petitions received: Now therefore

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That Congress be, and hereby is, requested to enact a law giving ample protection to migratory game birds;

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States, now in session or when next convened, be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to join in this request by the adoption of this or any equivalent resolution;

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several Members of said body representing this State therein; also to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

By order of the senate.

IN ASSEMBLY,
March 4, 1912.

Concurred in without amendment.
By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

STATE OF NEW YORK (IN SENATE),
March 4, 1912.

The foregoing resolution was duly passed, a majority of all senators elected voting in favor thereof.
By order of the senate.

T. F. CONWAY, President.

STATE OF NEW YORK (IN ASSEMBLY),
March 4, 1912.

The foregoing resolution was duly passed, a majority of all the members elected to the assembly voting in favor thereof.
By order of the assembly.

E. A. MERRITT, Jr., Speaker.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of office of the secretary of state, at the city of Albany, this 25th day of March, 1912.

[SEAL.] EDWARD LAZANSKY, Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by Denver Brown Camp, No. 20, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Indiana, of Richmond, Ind., expressing their thanks to all who gave assistance in the raising of the battleship Maine, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Portsmouth, N. H., remonstrating against the employment of enlisted men on Government vessels lying in Portsmouth Harbor, N. H., in the performance of work which heretofore devolved upon civilian employees, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist and Baptist Churches of Piedmont, Ala.; the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Mohrsville, Pa.; and the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches of Big Sandy; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Union City, Oreg., Athens, La., Orofine, Idaho, Tennessee City, Tenn., Winnebago, Minn., and Big Sandy, Tenn.; and of sundry citizens of Union City, Oreg., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the legal representatives of the Pokagon Tribe of Pottawattamie Indians, of Michigan and Indiana, praying that protection be granted them as guaranteed in the Greenville peace treaty of August 3, 1795, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SIMMONS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Gibsonville, N. C., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of members of the Ministerial Union of Winston Salem, N. C., and a petition of sundry citizens of Rutherford, N. C., praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a petition of Local Union No. 51, International Union of Steam Engineers, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the construction of one of the proposed new battleships in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Harry O. Perkins Camp, No. 25, Department of Indiana, United Spanish War Veterans, of South Bend, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to pension the widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Gering and Bayard, in the State of Nebraska, remonstrating against any reduction of the duty on sugar, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Amherst, Potter, and Beatrice, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the oleomargarine law, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Spokane, and of sundry citizens of Spokane and Olympia, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of an interstate liquor law to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws by outside dealers, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of La Crosse, Wash., remonstrating against the extension of the parcel-post system beyond its present limitations, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Tacoma, Wash., praying for the passage of the so-called eight-hour bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New York relative to the enactment of legislation giving ample protection to migratory game birds, which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD AND PARLIAMENTARY HANSARD.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing, I report a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing the Librarian of Congress to furnish a copy of the daily and bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada, in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Librarian of Congress is hereby authorized to furnish a copy of the daily and bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard, and that the Public Printer is hereby directed to honor the requisition of the Librarian of Congress for such copy. The Parliamentary Hansard so received shall be the property of the Department of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO RIVER AND HARBOR BILL (H. R. 21477).

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment providing for a survey of the Withlacoochee River, Fla., between Stokes Ferry and Panasoffkee, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted an amendment relative to the improvement of Jamaica Bay and entrance thereto, New York, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment relative to the amount of material excavated by the city of New York in dredging the main interior channel in Jamaica Bay, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CRAWFORD submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for survey and listing of lands within forest reserves chiefly valuable for agriculture, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill (H. R. 18960), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN (for Mr. DIXON) submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 for a survey of land on the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OWEN submitted an amendment proposing that the fund of $390,257.92 placed to the credit of the Choctaw Indians by act of March 1, 1907, shall draw interest at 5 per cent, to be placed to their credit, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that the restrictions on the right of alienation or encumbrance of allotments in the Cherokee Nation be removed, save and except only the restricted homesteads of the allottees now occupied by them, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $35,000 for the construction of a sanitary sewer system in Platt National Park, Okla., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill (H. R. 20728), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SENATORS FROM ARIZONA.

Mr. SHIVELY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 270), which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the Senate now proceed to ascertain the classes to which the Senators from the State of Arizona shall be assigned in conformity with the resolution of the 14th of May, 1789, and as the Constitution requires.

Ordered, That the Secretary put into the ballot box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered 1 and the other shall be a blank. Each of the Senators from the State of Arizona shall draw out one paper, and the Senator who shall draw the paper numbered 1 shall be assigned to the class of Senators whose term of service will expire the 3d day of March, 1917.

That the Secretary then put into the ballot box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered 2 and the other shall be numbered 3. The other Senator shall draw out one paper. If the paper drawn be numbered 2, the Senator shall be assigned to the class of Senators whose term of service will expire the 3d day of March, 1913, and if the paper drawn be numbered 3 the Senator shall be assigned to the class of Senators whose term of service will expire the 3d day of March, 1915.

GENERAL ARBITRATION TREATIES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the treaties of general arbitration between the United States and Great Britain and France, as ratified by the Senate, be printed as a Senate document (S. Doc. No. 476).

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor is entered.

REPORTS OF BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY (H. DOC. NO. 686).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the requirements of section 11 of the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stat., 31), providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, I transmit herewith copies of the reports of the operations of said bureau for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1910, and June 30, 1911.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 29, 1912.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 18849. An act for the relief of the Winnebago Indians of Nebraska and Wisconsin was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 19212. An act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

H. R. 20842. An act to provide for a tax upon white-phosphorus matches, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 9 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m., Friday, March 29, 1912) the Senate adjourned until Monday, April 1, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 29, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. George Robinson, Chaplain United States Army, retired, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth, who hast set Thy glory above the heavens. When I consider Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and stars, which Thou hast ordained, what is man that Thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that Thou visitest him? For Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels and hast crowned him with glory and honor. Thou hast made him to have dominion over the work of Thy hand; Thou hast put all things under his feet. We rejoice in the fact, O God, in the high place Thou hast given to us in the order of creation and, although we have marred Thy image and defaced Thy likeness, we rejoice that Thou hast set to work spiritual redemptive forces to bring us back again to that high place. Enable us, O God, in thought, in word, and in deed to cooperate with those spiritual forces in our own souls, for our own sake and for humanity's sake and for the glory of our God. We ask for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

VIEWS OF MINORITY ON ABOLISHING COMMERCE COURT.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce be permitted to present their views on the bill H. R. 19078, and that they be printed with the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the minority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have permission to file their views and have them printed along with the report of the majority (H. Rept. 472, pt. 2). Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MARY CHRISTMILLER.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 446 (H. Rept. 473).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund, to Mary Christmiller, widow of Conrad Christmiller, late a folder of the House, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such employee and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, for the funeral expenses of said Conrad Christmiller.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MABEL E. PERRY.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 447 (H. Rept. 474).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund, to Mary Perry, widow of A. M. Perry, late a cloakroom man of the House, a sum equal to six months of his salary as such employee and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, for the funeral expenses of said A. M. Perry.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to amend the name of the beneficiary and change it from "Mary" to "Mabel E."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, line 2, by striking out the word "Mary" and inserting the word and initial "Mabel E."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute on the subject of good roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to address the House for half a minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, a great number of bills on the subject of good roads have at one time or another been introduced into Congress. An inspection of these bills disclosed such an infinite variety of proposed plans that any legislation seemed hopeless. With a view to bringing order out of this chaos authors of various bills on the subject held a conference, and after much consideration prepared as their joint product the following bill:

A bill providing that the United States shall in certain cases make compensation for the use of highways for carrying free rural delivery mail.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purposes of this act certain highways of the several States, the civil subdivisions thereof, and companies incorporated under the laws of the several States are classified as follows:

Class A shall embrace well-graded roads outside of incorporated cities, towns, and villages, of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which the steepest incline shall not exceed 5 per cent wherever practicable, not less than 25 feet wide between the ditches, well drained, with a wagon way or road track not less than 14 feet wide, composed of bituminous macadam, brick, or of macadam not less than 6 inches thick, rolled, bonded, and maintained with a smooth, firm surface, both shoulders and roadway properly constructed and continuously cared for.

Class B shall embrace well-graded roads outside of incorporated cities, towns, and villages, of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which the steepest incline shall not exceed 5 per cent wherever practicable, 25 feet wide between the side ditches, well drained, with a wagon way or road track 16 feet wide, composed of burnt clay, shells, sand-clay, or gravel, not less than 8 inches thick, continuously kept well compacted and with a firm, smooth surface, with roadway well and properly crowned so as to quickly shed water into the side ditches.

Class C shall embrace roads outside of incorporated cities, towns, and villages, of not less than 1 mile in length, upon which the steepest incline shall not exceed 5 per cent wherever practicable, which shall be kept well graded, crowned, and drained to a width of not less than 18 feet, with split log drag or other similar means, so as to be reasonably passable for wheeled vehicles at all times.

SEC. 2. That whenever the United States shall continuously use any highway of any State, or civil subdivision thereof, or of any company incorporated under the laws of any State which fall within classes A, B, or C for the purpose of transporting free rural delivery mail, compensation for such use shall be made at the rates of $30 per annum per mile for highways of class A, $20 per annum per mile for highways of class B, and $10 per annum per mile for highways of class C. The United States shall not pay any other compensation or toll for such use of such highways than that provided for in this section, and shall pay no compensation whatever for the use of any highway not falling within classes A, B, or C.

SEC. 3. That the Director of Roads in the Department of Agriculture shall determine the class, if any, into which any road shall fall, and his determination upon that subject shall be final.

SEC. 4. That the compensation herein provided for shall be paid at the end of each fiscal year by the Treasurer of the United States upon warrants drawn upon him by the Postmaster General to the officers or persons entitled to the custody of the funds of the respective highways entitled to compensation under this act.

SEC. 5. That this act shall go into effect on the 1st day of July, 1913.

Mr. Speaker, those participating in the conference signed the following document:

To the Committee on Agriculture:

The undersigned Members, who have introduced bills on the subject of good roads, desiring to secure, as far as possible, harmony and unity of action among the friends of such legislation, have conferred with a view to agreeing upon a bill. After careful consideration we have prepared and agreed upon the subjoined bill, and requested Mr. SHACKLEFORD to introduce it on behalf of us all. We have further requested Mr. SHACKLEFORD to appear before you and respectfully bespeak for the bill early and favorable consideration.

Very respectfully,

EZEKIEL S. CANDLER, of Mississippi; J. THOMAS HEFLIN, of Alabama; THOS. L. RUBEY, of Missouri; JOHN J. WHITACRE, of Ohio; JOSEPH TAGGART, of Kansas; JOSEPH HOWELL, of Utah; JAMES F. BYRNES, of South Carolina; KENNETH D. MCKELLAR, of Tennessee; E. W. SAUNDERS, of Virginia; WM. B. FRANCIS, of Ohio; RICHARD W. AUSTIN, of Tennessee; SCOTT FERRIS, of Oklahoma; D. R. ANTHONY, Jr., of Kansas; GEO. WHITE, of Ohio; WALTER L. HENSLEY, of Missouri; JAMES M. COX, of Ohio; GEO. A. NEELEY, of Kansas; J. J. RUSSELL, of Missouri; J. H. GOEKE, of Ohio; H. D. FLOOD, of Virginia; BURTON L. FRENCH, of Idaho; T. T. ANSBERRY, of Ohio; C. C. ANDERSON, of Ohio; P. P. CAMPBELL, of Kansas; S. F. PROUTY, of Iowa; W. C. ADAMSON, of Georgia; BIRD MCGUIRE, of Oklahoma; D. W. SHACKLEFORD, of Missouri.

In obedience to this request I have to-day introduced the bill and will at its first meeting appear before the Committee on Agriculture and respectfully ask its consideration.

Those who have participated in the preparation of this bill would not contend that they have presented a perfect measure. They only claim for it that its enactment would be to pass from the realm of discussion to the field of action.

The good-roads movement is in its formative stage. Nobody can foretell what will finally be adopted as standard construction. It is doubtful whether there will ever be any method of road building which will be universal. It is probable that the character of our roads will differ according to the varying conditions of climate and the diversified classes of road material which are available.

One phase of road building which must never be lost sight of is the cost of construction. With unlimited funds it were an easy matter to build a few miles of model road. It is quite another thing to supply the whole country with a system of good roads at a cost which shall not be ruinous to taxpayers. No matter how, or where, or by whom roads shall be constructed, in the end the taxpayers will have to foot the bills. They will be fortunate indeed if the enthusiasm for good roads which now pervades the country shall not lead to much extravagant and improvident expenditure of money. A system of expensive road building might become so oppressive that it would have to be abandoned, and then retrogression rather than progress would be the result.

If the United States should pay for the use of roads coming up to the standards required by this bill it would not be long until all of the States and counties would bring their roads to such a stage of perfection as would entitle them to participate in the distribution of the compensation provided by the measure we propose.

Since the taxpayers generally would have to pay the cost of road construction, the roads should be distributed as widely as possible among the people who pay for them. We have given much thought to the working out of a plan which would furnish an equitable apportionment of the roads among the people. While any plan must be somewhat arbitrary, we have thought that as fair and general a system as could be devised would be to take free rural-delivery routes as a basis. This would give a share of road improvement to every State and every county in the country.

It may be urged that since the Government is to pay for the use of the roads it ought to have control of them. The bill which we submit for consideration gives ample protection to the Government by providing that no compensation shall be paid for the use of any road which does not come up to the established standard, and that an officer of the Government shall have sole power to determine that question.

The Democratic principle of local self-government ought to apply to road building and maintenance as to other matters of local concern. We therefore concluded that the States and municipalities thereof should have control of the location, construction, and maintenance of the roads, and let the United States pay for using them just as it now pays the railroads for carrying the mails.

If the roads were to be laid out and constructed by United States engineers sent out from Washington it would cost many times more than if done by local authorities.

Then, too, if United States engineers, instead of State and county authorities, were to have control of our roads we might find ourselves with a few cross-continent highways of great perfection to be used by tourists, while the great majority of the people who pay the expenses would be without ways of travel. It would be pleasant if there was a well-paved avenue from New York to the Golden Gate, over which automobile enthusiasts might glide in pleasant pastime, but it would be more profitable if we had a general system of good roads over which the farmers could get their mail and transport their products to market. We would not be understood as inveighing against the use of automobiles. We realize that these vehicles are here and here to stay. They are rapidly becoming necessities to modern civilization, and we look with pleasure upon their growing use. They should be kept in mind in the construction of our highways. A general system of good roads, however, would afford far greater facilities for even automobile travel than could be had by expending all available funds on a few fancy highways, leaving the rest of the country neglected.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22195—a bill to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool—and, pending that motion, I will first ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who address the House on this bill and other Members of the House may have five legislative days after the vote on the bill to extend their remarks or print in the RECORD on the subject matter of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22195—the wool bill—and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen have five legislative days in which to print remarks on the subject matter of the bill after the bill passes the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion, I desire to know whether I can reach an agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in regard to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to agree to let general debate extend until 4 o'clock on Monday and then close, but I do not care whether we have any debate under the five-minute rule or a chance to offer amendments or not in committee, because I realize it is futile to go through the exercise of that function.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from New York has a substitute to offer for the bill, which I presume he desires to offer in the House and have a record vote on it.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, yes; I will offer it with a motion to recommit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing for the gentleman to have an opportunity to offer it as a substitute if he desires to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. We can agree on that later; I do not care so much about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill shall continue to-day and Saturday and on Monday up to 4 o'clock; at that time the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House, the previous question shall be ordered, and that the gentleman from New York shall have the privilege, if he desires to do so, to offer in the House, as a substitute for the bill, the bill that he has indicated he desires to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that next Monday is unanimous-consent day and suspension of the rules.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will include with the request for unanimous consent that business in order on Monday shall be in order on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent——

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Alabama if this is the same bill which passed the extra session of Congress?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The one proposed by the majority of the committee is the same.

Mr. BROUSSARD. The same bill in every detail?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The same bill in every detail except the dates. There is no change in the bill except as to date, and the fact that it was considered under the five-minute rule in the committee at the time is the reason I ask unanimous consent to close debate at the conclusion of general debate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield——

Mr. BROUSSARD. Where is the necessity for this waste of time until Monday if the bill has already been considered by this House and passed?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will state to the gentleman from Louisiana that the President vetoed this bill, or a bill similar to the one that is being brought before the House now, stating that he did so because the so-called Tariff Board had not made a report. If the Tariff Board had not made a report up to this time I would not have brought the bill before the House again; but the Tariff Board having made a report I think it is proper that the House and the Senate should have an opportunity again to consider this bill, with the findings of the Tariff Board before them, and the purpose of the debate is to give the House an opportunity to discuss the bill from the standpoint of the report of the Tariff Board.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Do I understand that the Tariff Board has also brought in a report on the cotton schedule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has, in the last day or two.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What is in contemplation in regard to that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman very candidly that I can only speak for myself. The Tariff Board report has been ordered printed. It will probably be a week or 10 days or two weeks before the report is printed and comes back to the Committee on Ways and Means. When it comes back to the committee I think undoubtedly the committee will carefully consider the report.

Now, as to whether the committee will report a bill on the subject or not it will largely depend on the action of the United States Senate, as to whether or not it gives consideration to the bills that we have already sent over there, and to the wool bill. If their action indicates that we can pass legislation, I am inclined to think that the Committee on Ways and Means—speaking for myself only and not having consulted the other members of the committee—will report a cotton schedule to the House. If the Senate does not act upon any of the bills pending before them now it would be futile for us to take up any further time of the House in the consideration of such bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill begin immediately after the House shall have resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and continue until 4 o'clock Monday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does that request contemplate that all the time between 12 o'clock and next Monday at 4 o'clock shall be occupied in general debate, with no other business intervening?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No other business shall intervene, and that the time shall be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Of course it ought to be understood that there is excepted out of that these little resolutions of pressing importance that take no considerable time to pass.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the reason I asked the question, Mr. Speaker, because it might be that some little resolutions from the Committee on Accounts, for instance—might be brought up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not recognize anybody for anything that will take up very much time on Monday, or to-morrow, either.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is perfectly satisfactory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the general debate on this wool bill begin immediately after the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and continue until 4 o'clock Monday, when the committee shall rise and report back to the House; that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] shall have, if he so elects, the privilege of offering a substitute bill in the House, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments, if any, to the final passage; that the business which is in order on Monday under the Calendars for Unanimous Consent, Suspension of the Rules, and Discharge of Committees shall be transferred to Tuesday, and that the time shall be equally divided between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, that proposition would eliminate all amendments under the five-minute rule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, the only reason that I propose to do so is that this bill has once been considered in the House under the five-minute rule, and the minority desire to offer a full substitute.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman that while I do not know that I will offer any amendments, I know that there are several other Members who have been talking about offering amendments that would come in under the five-minute rule, and I do not believe we ought to take away the right of any Member to offer under the five-minute rule any amendment that might be germane or proper, and I would not want to consent to anything that would take away that privilege.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, how much time does the gentleman think ought to be allowed under the five-minute rule in which to offer amendments?

Mr. NORRIS. Well, there has never been a limit set heretofore, so far as offering amendments is concerned. I am not making any suggestion in regard to general debate. I will not ask anything as to that, but I do not want to eliminate the five-minute-rule debate and the right to offer amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska that I thought that probably the House would prefer to have Monday for general debate instead of taking the bill up as we expected to do. If we can not come to this arrangement on Monday under the five-minute rule—of course I have no preference myself—if gentlemen on that side of the House desire to consider the bill on Monday under the five-minute rule, of course I will not only yield, but will be glad to yield to their desire in the matter. But the bill having once been considered under the five-minute rule and the minority having a full substitute, I thought the arrangement that I proposed would probably accommodate the House better.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the gentleman that, so far as I know, I shall not want to offer a large number of amendments, perhaps none; but I do not know whether those cooperating with me will desire to offer many. It is possible that this discussion might develop a situation that would induce Members to offer amendments under the five-minute rule. I do not think any unnecessary time will be taken up on anything, but I do not want to see Members deprived of the opportunity to offer any amendments if it should be deemed desirable to offer them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will ask the gentleman if it might not be possible to agree that amendments be offered and considered as pending, and then voted on at the same time the bill is voted on in the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would not want to agree that we should have a lot of amendments pending that would go into the House. I would be perfectly willing to agree that general debate close at 3.30 instead of 4, and that the last half hour shall be open to amendments to be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NORRIS. My own idea is that that would be plenty of time, but I would not want to limit it to half an hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman's request for unanimous consent contemplate the passage of the bill finally without its being read at all?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I proposed that. I am perfectly willing to close debate Saturday night and consider the bill under the five-minute rule in the usual way, if gentlemen desire it. I made the suggestion I did because it seemed to meet with the approval of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. MANN. Of course the bill would have to be read in Committee of the Whole, unless its reading was waived by unanimous consent.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; but this unanimous consent would waive that.

Mr. MANN. That would only apply to the second reading, not to the first reading.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] preferred to have the time for general debate rather than under the five-minute rule, and I was endeavoring to comply with this request. I ask the Chair to put the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Before the Chair puts the motion of the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be shut off in that way. I have said several times during this controversy here that I would not consent to any agreement that would take away the right to offer amendments under the five-minute rule.

Mr. JAMES. But the gentleman did not object. He said he would never consent, but he did not object.

Mr. NORRIS. I did not expect the Speaker, and I do not think the Speaker intended, to take advantage of me. He probably did not hear me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks really the gentleman slept on his rights, but nevertheless and notwithstanding the Chair will recognize the objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is there objection?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska object?

Mr. NORRIS. I do object.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask for a division of the time for general debate. That will give a great many more Members an opportunity to take part in the debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I will ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill may run to-day and to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. I do not mean to limit the time, but to divide the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want a limitation of the time, if it can be had.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman consider a request to close general debate at half past 3 o'clock on Monday, and then proceed to read the bill under the five-minute rule for not to exceed one hour?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I indicated that to the gentleman——

Mr. NORRIS. I would not want to limit that time. I do not think it will take that much time, but I know what might happen under that kind of an arrangement. There will be no trouble about it.

Mr. MANN. I suggest that the general debate run until 3 o'clock Monday. Then, I think the temper of the House will be such——

Mr. NORRIS. There will be no attempt to prolong the general debate under the five-minute rule, as far as I know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing that we should limit the debate until 3 o'clock Monday, and consider the bill under the five-minute rule for one hour after that, to give opportunity for amendment.

Mr. NORRIS. The time might then be all taken up under the first section.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, I ask the Chair to put my motion, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. Before putting the motion the Chair will submit to the House a personal request.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMALL, for two days, on account of illness in his family.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House bill 22195.

The question being taken, the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, with Mr. GRAHAM in the chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the bill, H. R. 22195, which the Committee on Ways and Means now presents to the House for its consideration, is in all respects identical with the bill passed by the House last summer, except the change in date of effectiveness. Hence I do not propose to occupy the time of the House now in discussing a bill which was so fully discussed a few months ago. The House has had full opportunity to understand the terms of this measure.

As the committee is resubmitting this bill to the House without change of basis or rates, no change in its revenue estimate is called for. It is believed by the committee that no loss in revenue will result from the enactment of H. R. 22195, but that the bill will produce approximately as much as in 1910, when the revenue from Schedule K was $41,904,850.

The reason for again bringing this bill before the House is the fact that the President of the United States vetoed the wool bill at the extra session of Congress last summer and based his veto on the ground that the so-called Tariff Board had not made a report to him, and not until their data was before him could he determine whether the bill then rejected was a proper revision of Schedule K. In his veto message of August 17, 1911, the President said:

> If there ever was a schedule that needed consideration and investigation and elaborate explanation by experts before its amendment, it is Schedule K. There is a widespread belief that many rates in the present schedule are too high and are in excess of any needed protection for the wool grower or manufacturer. I share this belief and have so stated in several public addresses. But I have no sufficient data upon which I can judge how Schedule K ought to be amended or how its rates ought to be reduced in order that the new bill shall furnish the proper measure of protection and no more. Nor have I sources of information which satisfy me that the bill presented to me for signature will accomplish this result. * * * When I have the accurate information which justifies such action I shall recommend to Congress as great a reduction in Schedule K as the measure of protection already stated will permit. The failure of the present bill should not be regarded, therefore, as taking away the only chance for reduction by this Congress.

In its report on H. R. 11019 (H. Rept. No. 45, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) the committee said:

> It would be trifling with the people to give further consideration to Republican counsels of more delay in this matter, whether with regard to statistical data concerning cost of production promised at a future date, or for any further reasons.

Notwithstanding this conviction, the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives, impatient to respond to the demands of the people for a speedy revision of a schedule of indefensible rates, was forced to delay further effort in answer to the protests of the American people.

In his message of December 20, 1911, the President said:

> I now herewith submit a report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K. The board is unanimous in its findings. On the basis of these findings I now recommend that the Congress proceed to a consideration of this schedule with a view to its revision and a general reduction of its rates.

Because of this condition, the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee again recommend a wool bill and give the Congress opportunity once more to send to the President a bill revising Schedule K for his consideration and action. The only event that has occurred since the bill of last session (H. R. 11019) was sent to the President has been the transmission of the report of the Tariff Board with reference to Schedule K.

QUESTION OF RATES.

Unless some data can be found in this report that will suffice to show the necessity of changing the bill originally reported by the Ways and Means Committee there can be no ground for altering the deliberate expression of opinion arrived at last summer after careful investigation and embodied in H. R. 11019. If, moreover, it be found that the Tariff Board has not submitted any facts supporting changes in last session's bill, it may fairly be asked whether a board of this character is after all more trustworthy and reliable than a committee of Congress vested with the power to obtain direct information under oath, to employ such assistance as it may need, and to submit its findings to the judgment of disinterested and expert men. For this reason, while entirely rejecting the view that the theory of comparative costs of production furnishes a guide to the rates of duty to be prescribed in a tariff bill, the Committee on Ways and Means have made a careful analysis of the Tariff Board report submitted to Congress by the President (with his special message of December 20, 1911) in order to interpret the findings and to discover in what, if any, particulars the committee's report of last year was defective, and to adjust the duties in an equitable and proper manner. The committee's analysis of the report has failed to reveal anything that requires a single change in the rates as fixed in the former bill (H. R. 11019), and hence the committee is constrained to present again the results of its investigations of last summer as embodied in the bill presented to the House at that time. The majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means are giving to the House the results of painstaking and thorough analysis of the report of the Tariff Board by embodying them in its report on this bill, and I shall append it to my remarks. The conclusions reached from the Tariff Board report, and the manner in which they have been deduced, are fully and clearly set forth in the committee's report, so that he who follows the logic of facts must needs be convinced that the committee's analysis of the Tariff Board's report is fair, just, and invincible.

Of course, it is only proper to state that the Tariff Board represents the views of the President of the United States, who has said that he favors such a revision of the tariff as will equal the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to the American manufacturer. Democrats do not approach tariff revision from the viewpoint of the President and his Tariff Board. We on this side of the House do not believe a tariff should be levied for the purpose of protection. We do not believe it is right that the manufacturer be guaranteed a "reasonable profit" by tariff legislation. We would levy tariff duties at such rates as would supply the Government with its required revenue—no more and for no other purpose. It is not impossible that the same facts might serve as a basis for the conclusions of those who would protect manufacturers in a reasonable profit as well as for the conclusions of those who would write the tariff law for revenue purposes only and without regard to the idea of protection.

BOARD EXPENSIVE AND RESULTS UNSATISFACTORY.

The question naturally arises in this connection whether under the circumstances this so-called Tariff Board should be continued and looked to to provide a basis on which to write revenue bills, and whether the bill H. R. 22262, which the gentleman from New York will offer as a substitute for the one proposed by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, is in accord with the findings of the Tariff Board.

The Congress has appropriated within the last three years $550,000 for the work of this so-called Tariff Board. Large salaries, heavy payments to experts, costly visits to Europe, and maximum per diem allowances have taken at last one-half of the money. The pay roll of the board on October 15, 1911, including the five board members, contained the names of 142 persons. The rates of remuneration at that time, if continued for a year, would total $292,360, an average rate of over $2,000 a year for every one of the employees down to the charwomen and messengers.

A few instances will be sufficient to indicate the extravagant practices of the board with regard to salaries. The chief statistician was getting $2,500 before the board employed him at $5,000. The official reporter, $2,000 before the board took him at $3,000. One of the persons designated as file clerk was getting $1,400 before the board employed him at $2,250. At least three special agents were employed at $500 per month, several at $400 per month, and numerous others at equally extravagant figures.

The apparent results of that appropriation have been a report relative to wood pulp and paper, submitted in Senate Document 849 in the Sixty-first Congress, a report on the wool schedule, found in House Document No. 342, Sixty-second Congress, and a report on the cotton schedule that was submitted within the last week and is now in the hands of the printer. The report on wood pulp and paper was not satisfactory to either the House or the Senate and apparently not satisfactory to the Tariff Board itself, as it subsequently amended its findings on the matter. It was not satisfactory to the President, since he completely disregarded its ultimate findings by recommending complete free trade in pulp and paper on the reciprocity basis.

AUTHORITY AND CAPACITY OF BOARD.

The first test of the reports which naturally suggests itself is that of authority and capacity of the board. President Taft originally requested the appointment of a board of tariff experts whose function was to scientifically indicate the changes needed in existing tariff schedules. Later he changed his expressions on this subject and spoke chiefly of the necessity of having careful investigators and capable economists, who should study the tariff schedules from a common-sense standpoint. The President has said that his board is not composed of general tariff experts—indeed, that there are no such experts—but that they are trained students and capable investigators whose opinions may be trusted.

The chairman of the board, Prof. Henry C. Emery, was educated chiefly in Bowdoin College and Columbia University and in the University of Berlin. He was instructor at Bowdoin College from 1894 to 1897, professor of economics at the same institution from 1897 to 1900, and has since been professor at Yale University. Teaching economics is not an occupation that necessarily gives technical familiarity with tariff questions or other specialized phases of the subject. As an author Prof. Emery is best known by his work entitled "Speculation on the Stock and Produce Exchanges of the United States."

The second economist on the board, Prof. Thomas Walker Page, was educated partly in this country and partly abroad at the University of Leipzig, and has taught in various institutions, including the University of California and the University of Virginia, where he was professor at the time of his appointment. It is true that he, like Prof. Emery, had not been known as a writer or student on tariff questions. His reputation rested chiefly upon monographs relating to conditions in early England and not upon studies of recent or modern industrial problems. "The End of Villeinage in England" is the best known work by Prof. Page.

Another member, Mr. James B. Reynolds, after a general newspaper experience, occupied various appointments in connection with the Republican organization in Massachusetts, then was Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for several years, and was finally transferred to the Tariff Board. As an administrator in charge of customs his work consisted largely of supervision and official action on matters prepared by subordinates. He was sent as a member of a commercial commission to France, and about the same time served as member of an administrative commission which investigated the Limoges china schedule at Limoges, France.

Mr. A. H. Sanders, for many years a business man of good standing in Chicago and editor of the Breeder's Gazette, had not, so far as can be learned, either contributed to or made any very serious study of tariff problems prior to his nomination.

Mr. W. M. Howard had for several years been a Member of Congress, serving upon a number of committees, none of which were concerned with tariff legislation.

These gentlemen are no doubt men of character and standing but, so far as the facts before me disclose, they are not men who, previous to entering this work had any expert knowledge of tariff matters or any experience that could aid them in reaching correct conclusions on the tariff questions which come before the Ways and Means Committee of the House or the Finance Committee of the Senate.

METHODS OF WORK.

To ascertain the facts with regard to the cost of production abroad, I find that in the summer of 1911 the board sent four special agents to England, France, Germany, and other countries. I am informed that but one of these agents had knowledge of other languages than English and only one agent any knowledge of mill accounting or of cost accounting of any character. Much of the material brought back by these special agents was in printed form, and could have been obtained equally as well, or better, by mail.

The cost-of-production theory is the basis on which the board has projected its investigations and constructed its report. The greater portion of the report consists of a study of what is called "comparative cost of production" of wools and manufactures in various countries, the chief stress being naturally laid upon the conditions in the United States. But I find from the public utterances of the board and of the President that they themselves discount the reliability of this plan of ascertaining correct figures to measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad, and to furnish a foundation for the rates of a tariff bill. In the outset of its work the board evidently came to the conclusion everybody else has reached that it is impossible even to approximate the difference in costs at home and abroad. This is evidenced by the expression of Chairman Emery in an address at a meeting in Chicago, December 3, 1910, when he spoke as follows:

> It is unfortunate that so much emphasis has been laid on the question of getting relative costs, since many people have assumed that to be both an easy and a complete solution of these questions. Any practical man knows that both these assumptions are faulty. One of the most difficult problems which a manufacturer has to solve in his own business is to determine the cost of any individual article which he produces. In fact, it would not be unreasonable for a manufacturer to respond to a request from such a body as ours for his costs of production, "I would give them to you if I could get them; I am willing to pay you a good sum if you will find them out for me."

The theory had already been discredited by the President of the United States in a letter written August 20, 1910, to the Hon. WILLIAM B. MCKINLEY, of Illinois, chairman of the Republican congressional committee, which reads in part as follows:

> Difficulty in fixing the proper tariff rates in accord with the principle stated in the Republican platform is in securing reliable evidence as to the difference between the cost of production at home and the cost of production abroad. The bias of the manufacturer seeking protection and the importer opposing it weakens the weight of their testimony. Moreover, when we understand that the cost of production differs in one country abroad from that in another and that it changes from year to year and from month to month, we must realize that the precise difference in cost of production sought for is not capable of definite ascertainment, and all that even the most scientific person can do in his investigation is, after the consideration of many facts which he learns, to exercise his best judgment in reaching a conclusion.

The conclusions of the President and of Chairman Emery with regard to the impracticability of the cost of production theory is confirmed by the following epitomized reasons:

1. In practice the ascertainment of costs is impossible. No board or commission has the power to demand cost statements from manufacturer or producer; and if it had, it could not secure truthful statements. Moreover, there is no way of obtaining statements of any kind from foreigners.

2. Even if all manufacturers, both here and abroad, were willing to throw open their books in an absolutely honest and impartial way to an all-powerful commission it would be of little service. This is because cost accounting is not always practiced by producers, and because, where it is practiced, there is no general agreement as to the treatment of different elements of cost.

3. If there were a perfect system of cost accounting installed upon a uniform basis in every plant manufacturing a given article throughout the world, knowledge of comparative costs in certain countries would still be of little service, since costs in every competing country would have to be known before any conclusions could be arrived at as to what tariff rate was needed to protect a given country against the competition of others.

4. If all these facts were known for every country the difficulty would be about as great as it was previously if the data were to be used for the establishment of tariff rates. This is because costs of production vary as widely within a given country as they do between different countries. Unless it were known whether a duty were to be imposed for the purpose of equalizing costs as between the best, the poorest, or the average (or normal) establishments in the several countries, the information about the costs would be useless as a basis of tariff duties.

5. Even with the knowledge on all of the points already enumerated, and with a clear-cut intention on the point indicated in (4) above, the cost analysis would still be inadequate, because of the fact that many commodities are produced in groups or as by-products, so that to utilize the general-cost analysis as a basis for tariff rates it would be necessary to know the manufacturer's intention with reference to the fixing of prices. It would further be necessary to know that the manufacturer had no disposition to establish "export prices" at rates lower than those that would be dictated by his costs of production.

6. If all of the foregoing factors were known, including positive data regarding the intention of the manufacturer in regard to the establishment of prices, there would still remain the question whether this information about costs, which is necessarily stated in terms of money, would have any real significance of a permanent economic character. Money costs do not correspond in all cases to real costs as measured by sacrifice of labor and capital. It may be true that a given country can produce much more cheaply than another, yet it does not follow that it will so produce, since its cost advantage in some other line may be so much greater that it devotes its attention almost exclusively to that line.

From all these reasons the conclusion must be reached that cost of production is both practically impossible and theoretically unsound as a basis for the establishment of tariff duties.

Notwithstanding the fact that both the President of the United States and the chairman of the Tariff Board had prior to their investigation of the woolen schedule fully discounted the cost of production theory, the board has spent a large amount of money in making investigations and in preparing this report on this admittedly deficient and impracticable theory.

REPORT CONTAINS BUT LITTLE NEW DATA.

There is really no valuable information in the report of the Tariff Board that was not well known long before there was a Tariff Board. The report points out some of the outrageous rates in the present law. All of us on both sides of the House knew these facts years ago. [Applause on the Democratic side.] These iniquitous duties were uncovered during the discussion of the Payne-Aldrich law, and they were again condemned by both Democrats and Republicans at the special session of the Sixty-second Congress. People knew long ago that many of the rates of duty were prohibitory. We did not need a Tariff Board to further emphasize this well-known fact. When the report gets away from previously established facts—facts which the board did not discover—there is a whipping back and forth that seems to have been resorted to for the purpose of confusing the reader.

Mr. Chairman, cost accounting as a science is in its infancy, and probably no one would set himself up as an authority except in the application of broad, general principles. Exactness in its details has never been reached in many industries. Wool manufacturing is one of those where the system has been least satisfactory. The Tariff Board points out the difficulties it encountered by its own admissions, practically discrediting its own work. On page 627 the board says:

> It is, however, impossible to say anything about the cost of cloth per yard without specifically and carefully defining the exact nature of the cloth. There are no absolute standards in the cloth trade, and each mill turns out a great variety of different fabrics; and to divide the total cost of the year by the total number of yards would, of course, give no result of any value.

In speaking of tops, on page 627 they say:

> The trouble, however, is that tops vary greatly in quality and that costs vary according to the quality. In no establishment is a single quality of tops produced. The result is that a statement of cost based on total output might be misleading, since it would not represent any actual grade produced. The quality of the tops depends upon the quality of the wool of which it is made. The speed of the machinery has to be adjusted to the quality of the wool fiber, and the variations in combing costs per pound depend largely upon the speed of the comb and the consequent output. Experience has shown, roughly at least, the relative output for different grades of wool and the manufacturer can determine in some degree what proportion of his cost is properly to be apportioned to each grade of tops produced.
> The same is also true of worsted yarns. It is true no mill produces a single kind of yarn and consequently an average cost based upon total output in pounds and total expenses would be of less value than an exact cost for yarn of a single count.

On page 628 they say:

> The only method available was to start with certain specific cloths and get the most accurate estimates possible from a number of different mills on the cost of making goods of this quality. The difficulty here lay in the well-known fact that estimates on the same sample by different manufacturers may vary very widely.

These difficulties are real and the figures presented in other portions of the report not only clearly confirm but emphasize these difficulties. In taking up the question of cost, the board says:

> Raw material was eliminated altogether since this is such a fluctuating element.

They assume an elaborate price for different cloths and yarn, this elaborate price being "the actual price so far as it could be accurately determined for a given date."

Certainly no reputable cost accountant would adopt this uncertain process of computing cost. Such a method would lead to a theoretical cost far from the actual. The correct process would be to go into a mill and from the books determine what had been the actual cost of producing the output of the mill for a given period. The first element of cost in the production of any article is that of the raw material. The Tariff Board says that this element was entirely ignored. As there are a variety of products, as in the wool-manufacturing industry, there is the difficulty of apportioning certain items which confronts the cost accountant even in using the inaccurate method adopted by the board.

They say they did compute yarn cost to some extent in this intricate way. It would have been possible to compute cloth cost in the same way if the board had had capable accountants. The foreign "costs" are evidently not costs at all, but mere estimates. On page 630 they describe the method adopted in securing foreign costs:

> Samples of identical fabrics cut from the same piece were taken to England and to the Continent. These were shown to a number of manufacturers and their estimates on the cost of production secured, but not in the same detail as in American mills, because foreign manufacturers do not keep their cost in any such detail. In England the costings on these samples are given with the authority of a cloth expert, himself a manufacturer, who took the English estimates secured and corrected or verified them from his own experience or the cost in his own mill. * * * The English costs correspond closely with French costs on the same samples. * * * German costs were secured on similar cloths. In no case did a German manufacturer figure on the cost of producing an American fabric. What they did was to select cloths made by themselves, which, from the loom analysis submitted, came very near the sample fabric, and their costs were secured in such detail as their methods of bookkeeping permitted. * * * In the case of German goods, sample cloths were secured from the mill making them; and costs were taken from their books, including the weaver's rate on the identical bolt from which the sample was cut.

Here is a confession that the so-called costs secured in foreign countries are purely estimates, and in the case of England they apparently are by one single manufacturer, because the board states that estimates from foreign sources were submitted to one individual for revision and verification. Assuming that the estimates were carefully and honestly made by capable manufacturers, there is no one who will pretend that they are so near actual costs as to warrant serious consideration. This is the method adopted: To establish figures upon which Congress is calmly told it should adjust duties that shall equalize the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. If Congress were to attempt such a farcical performance, it is too great a strain on the imagination to hope that it would be so insane as to undertake it on the strength of a few cases of alleged mill costs simply because they had the approval of the five men constituting the Tariff Board.

The comparisons of domestic and foreign costs are based upon data so unlike as to make them valueless, even if these data were approximately correct. Furthermore, the organization of the industry in Europe is so different from that in this country that a comparison of costs is meaningless. On page 642, volume 3, the Tariff Board says:

> The combing industry in England and on the Continent is much more highly organized than in the United States.

Notwithstanding this the board gives some figures of comparison which they claim were taken from actual records of two similar plants in England and one in the United States, showing the cost for making tops, and apparently uses these figures with the explanation that they will be accepted as reliable. Notwithstanding the impossibility of securing accurate cost figures in this country and only estimates abroad, and these estimates in all probability very erroneous, the report is packed with a mass of figures that may mean whatever suits the user, but which mean nothing at all. An examination of some of these figures, while not enlightening, are certainly interesting, and if not presented for so serious a purpose they would be amusing.

The first thing that strikes the reader of the portion of the report dealing with top costs is the fact that there is such a variation in the figures as to convince him of their utter uselessness. A table on page 642 shows the variation in costs as taken from the records of an American mill, covering a period of 25 months. These 25 months are divided into four periods, three of 6 months each and one of 7 months, and the cost per pound of output for these various periods are given. These costs vary from about 3 cents per pound to approximately 11 cents per pound. The table in which this appears, like most others in the report, is remarkable for the darkness that surrounds it. No information is given as to the character of the equipment of the mill nor as to the relative proportions of the various qualities of wool used and the various qualities of tops produced. The following facts are necessary to an intelligent analysis of the data:

(1) The equipment of the mill.

(2) A statement as to how much overtime the mill was running during the period of highest production.

(3) How much less than full time was the mill running at the period of lowest production.

(4) Which part of the four most nearly represent full time.
(5) What percentage of the product was each of the grades of wool used.
(6) Was the percentage of each grade of wool the same for all products? The answers to these questions might have, and undoubtedly would have had, an important bearing on the relation of the figures in one part to those in another. If the board have this information they can not escape criticisms for holding it. If they did not have it, they can not justify their use of these figures.

There is in this table an entire absence of details of costs. On the same page figures showing labor costs per pound of tops are given, but they are for an entirely different mill and may not be representative of the mill whose 25 months' product is shown. There is nothing to indicate whether the labor costs shown are typical or not. It would be interesting to know why labor costs are not shown for the table for variation in cost and why items of cost, other than labor, are omitted in the statement.

On page 643 is still another table which "is presented as fairly representative of the cost of making a very high quality of tops by mills using the French system of combing." On page 644 still another table is given which is said to have been "compiled from the actual records of the leading combing establishments on the Continent."

In the table on page 643 four grades of tops are shown and the labor cost is reported to be exactly the same for each of these grades. This evidently can not be true. The figures are so arranged that the total conversion cost of the four different grades of tops are practically the same for each. In the table on page 644 the costs are for tops produced from fine wools. This table shows a variation as great as six-tenths cent per pound from month to month in the same mill running presumably upon the same class of tops. This variation is explained "by fluctuations in the output." The labor cost for producing tops in the United States as shown in the table on page 643, exclusive of sorting, is about 7¼ cents per pound, whereas the labor costs given on the Continent are approximately 4 cents per pound. When it is taken into account that the figures for the United States are unquestionably erroneous, as is indicated by the uniform labor costs for the various grades of tops, and that at least a portion of the figures for the Continent are pure estimates, and furthermore, that there is no evidence as to identity or quality either in the raw material or the products in the United States and Europe, a comparison of these figures would certainly be misleading.

The wide difference in labor costs in the same mill at various periods is attributed almost entirely to a difference in output. No one familiar with cost accounting can reconcile these differences upon any such theory. It is true that a difference in output gives rise to a difference in converting cost, but it does not seem possible that in a woolen mill the cost for one six-month period should be almost four times as high at another six-month period and due entirely to a difference in output. In the absence of details with respect to the figures shown on page 642 the reasonable and careful cost accountant can not otherwise conclude than that the figures for one or the other produced are absolutely incorrect. It is not improbable that they are wholly incorrect for all produced.

CHARACTER OF FIGURES.

Again, if the cost of production theory is acceptable in the abstract, or may conceivably be made so, the question remains whether the report is worked out from the statistical standpoint thoroughly and carefully so as to present trustworthy results. Finally, independent of the conclusions reached on cost of production in the abstract, and whether or not the report is satisfactory in its technique, the question will remain as to what actual significance regarding tariff duties is to be given it, granting, for the sake of argument, that its conclusions are accepted.

The board probably made a more comprehensive study of the cost of production of raw wool than of any other item in the bill. They sent men abroad to ascertain the cost of production in South America and Australia. These agents are said to have found that the cost of production in South America is 4 or 5 cents a pound, and, without stating definitely what it is in Australia, seem to assume that their findings in South America are to be taken as the correct figures in Australia. They do not give us the figures on which they base their results. They do not give us ascertained facts on which we may come to a conclusion, but they reach their own inferences as to foreign wool, and then report these conclusions to us. We do not know from whom these experts ascertained the facts. We do not know the reliability or the number of the persons they consulted, or how the data were compiled.

As to the ascertainment of the cost of producing wool in the United States, the board based their results on the net cost of raising sheep, giving credit for the mutton value, and then fixing the difference in cost, if any, on what the wool must sell for to equalize the difference in cost at home and abroad. In so doing they estimate the cost of grain and of hay. They say themselves that they can not take the market price, because it varies; but they work out what they believe to be the cost to the sheep raiser of the grain and hay which he feeds. It is apparent that on a basis of that kind no satisfactory conclusion can be obtained. In one neighborhood the cost of grass or hay may be zero; in another neighborhood it may amount to a considerable sum. There is no basis on which an accurate conclusion as to this can be reached. But assuming that the board's findings are correct, they finally come to the conclusion that third-class wool, as designated in the Payne tariff bill, is not competitive, and their data point to the belief that no duty is needed as a protection to the American producer of this class of wool; that the cost of producing second-class wool is fully cared for by the value of mutton, so that there is no difference between the cost of production of this wool at home and abroad. Hence, the real competitive wool is that of class 1, as defined in the present tariff act. The board gives numerous figures to show the cost of producing this fine merino wool. They state that there are about 5,000,000 sheep which produce this wool, meaning practically Ohio wool, and that the cost of producing it is 19 cents a pound in the grease. But they also find in the same territory 10,000,000 crossbred sheep which, according to their findings on mutton value, need no protection whatever. Therefore, if we maintain a protection for the eastern woolgrower, the present law is not sufficient, as it gives only 11 cents protection, while the board has ascertained that this class of wool costs 19 cents, and therefore needs protection equal to this amount less the foreign cost, which is not over 5 cents; but if the owners of the merino sheep should exchange for the crossbred mutton sheep, according to the board's report no protection at all would be required.

DEMAND FOR EXCESSIVE RATES.

To come to the western wools, the board sets out in detail the net charge against the wool in the Western States. This table sheds light on this subject:

[1] Report, pp. 330, 350.

[2] Based on Report, pp. 387-390 and pp. 390, 391.

The majority members of the Ways and Means Committee did not levy the tariff rates of H. R. 22195 for the purpose of protection. The rates have been fixed for the purpose of revenue only, but the tax on all classes of raw wool is a uniform one of 20 per cent, which on imported wool valued at 25 cents a pound would equal 5 cents a pound as a specific rate of duty. If you want to maintain protection on wool and not levy this tax for revenue, as we do, and if you want to carry out your protection theory and levy it for the sake of protection alone, according to your own Tariff Board report you are levying it solely to protect 5,000,000 sheep of the merino blood in Ohio, and not for the protection of the western flocks or the cross-bred sheep east of the Mississippi River.

As shown in this table, the cost of raising wool in the West, according to the Tariff Board, is in some States less than it is in South America or Australia. The average of the net charges against the western wool shown in these States is 10.9 cents a pound, and the difference between that and 5 cents in South America would be about 5 cents a pound.

The cost of production of wool in the Ohio region, as given by the board, is 19 cents per pound on the average. Inquiries as to shrinkage show that this wool shrinks 46.62 per cent; in other words, 19 cents is 53.38 per cent of the cost of a scoured pound.

The cost of such a scoured pound, therefore, may be taken as 35.6 cents. This must be compared with the supposed cost advantage in Australia. In the latter country, it may be inferred from the report, the cost of production may be taken as 5 cents. However, at least 2 cents must be added in this case as the freight disadvantage, because of the comparative nearness of the Ohio region to the mills. From the standpoint of Ohio, cost in Australia may be taken as 7 cents. The theoretical disadvantage in the Ohio region is thus 35.6 cents minus 7, or about 28.6 cents. Figuring this as a percentage upon the cost of the competitive Australian wool imported into the United States, which may be taken as 50.8 cents a scoured pound, on the average, it is found that 28.6 cents represents over 55 per cent ad valorem. This is very much more than the protection amounts to, accorded under the present specific basis. In the board's table of actual importations and scourings in a representative American mill (pp. 387-389) the equivalent ad valorems run from about 34 per cent to about 55 per cent. In very few instances are there equivalent ad valorems as high as 55 per cent. It would seem, then, that the Ohio wool-producing region is not protected now on the assumption that the board's cost figures are correct and that, if it is to be protected at all, the tariff on wool would have to be very much raised above its present figures, so as to give a rate of 28 or 29 cents on the scoured pound and of at least 55 per cent ad valorem.

COST OF YARN AND CLOTH.

The Tariff Board's conclusions in reference to the difference in the cost of yarn at home and abroad is slightly above the rate fixed in H. R. 22195, but the board made no allowance for the cost of transporting the foreign yarn from foreign countries to America or the cost of insurance. If you make a reduction of the charge on foreign yarn with a reasonable freight rate to the American market and a reasonable insurance rate, their findings on yarn do not justify any change in the yarn rates of H. R. 22195. Gentlemen on that side of the House desire to add protection and a reasonable profit for the home manufacturer of yarn, which, of course, Democrats do not desire to incorporate in this bill. Absolutely no data are presented by the board that are of any value with regard to cloth. They have not presented any figures showing mill costs of producing cloth here and abroad. They have taken a number of American and foreign samples of cloth, which, they say, are the same classes of cloth, and they have sent those cloth samples, so they say, to from 5 to 15 different woolen mills of this country. They do not say from how many they secured prices abroad. They asked the manufacturers the cost of producing such cloth, and from the returns received from the manufacturers they have reached the conclusion that they send to this Congress.

The board gives no information which would enable a student of this report to trace the cost of production of these cloth samples back to the raw wool from which they were made. Nowhere does anything of the kind appear in all these four volumes. If the duty required to protect the process of cloth manufacture be figured as a percentage of the foreign cost of cloth making, it presumably gives the amount of duty which, on the board's theory, would equalize the cost of getting cloth corresponding to these samples. The differences in cost upon the yarn out of which the cloth was made can be inferred from the previous statistics with reference to yarn costs furnished by the board, but even in this way only an approximation can be arrived at, for the board's analysis of the cloths shows that many of them included other materials beside wool. It must be concluded, therefore, that the data with respect to cloth making furnished by the board are not only unreliable, but that they have been obtained on a basis which forbids comparisons from being drawn and which entirely destroys confidence in any conclusions as to duties that may be arrived at on the basis of these figures.

The conclusions are not those of the Tariff Board, but of certain manufacturers unknown to us, and the Ways and Means Committee have been unable to learn anything of the manufacturers or the methods employed in the compilation of the statistics.

REFUSAL TO GIVE INFORMATION.

The correspondence will show the attitude of the board in this regard:

CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE TARIFF BOARD WITH REGARD TO ANALYSIS OF REPORT.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 10, 1912.

Hon. HENRY C. EMERY,
Chairman Tariff Board, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In the course of my examination of your report on wool and manufactures of wool, I require further information for a complete understanding of it. It may be that this information is contained in portions of the report which have escaped my attention, but I have been unable to find it. If the data desired are contained in the report, I shall be under obligations to you to point it out to me, and in the event that they are not given, I would thank you to kindly supply me with the same. I do not, of course, desire to request any data that may be considered as confidential in the way of making public names or addresses of persons who have supplied you with details. If any of the material sought by me comes within this scope, I take it that it will be possible for you to designate by numbers such returns, retaining your own memoranda which show the names of the concerns to which given numbers refer. I desire the detailed data sought only for the purpose of informing myself and this committee with regard to the general meaning of certain features of the report and not for the purpose of examining the sources which you have used.

The points which I have in mind and about which I would thank you to furnish me additional information are:

Raw wool—

(1) Will you kindly loan this committee the original tables or working sheets showing the full and detailed returns from the reports of field agents with regard to raw wool, you reserving, if desired, names and addresses of the persons whose returns to you are involved?

(2) If no such sheets were compiled for the investigation in Australia, New Zealand, and South America, please inform me more fully as to the conditions under which the inquiry was carried on there and the number of growers visited.

(3) Were general tables compiled showing the data obtained from each and every mill with regard to woolen manufactures? If so, have these been printed; and if not, could you lend these to this committee?

(4) Have you a record of the number of concerns from which costs were obtained and each sample of cloth, and can you lend the committee that record?

I would like the record in this connection both for foreign and domestic mills, with an indication in connection with each of the degree of efficiency of the foreign mills furnishing such costs compared with the efficiency of the mills in the United States furnishing similar costs. If possible, I would be pleased to have these same data for each of the groups of samples which are discussed in your report, together with a memorandum of the location of the mills involved.

(5) Can you supply the committee with a tabular view or statement showing how many ready-made cloth concerns were asked to furnish costs on specimen garments of each given kind, thereby creating the basis for the tables in which typical costs are analyzed?

These are some of the points which have occurred to me in the course of my examination of your report, and if you can put me in possession of the data outlined I shall be especially gratified, and thank you in advance for your prompt reply.

Very respectfully,

O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman.

THE TARIFF BOARD, TREASURY BUILDING,
Washington, January 18, 1912.

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. UNDERWOOD: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of January 10, which reached us on the 13th. The delay since then in replying to it is due to absence from the city.

I regret that it is impossible to meet your five requests fully. You will realize that a very large part of the information we received was given us only on condition that the material should not be made public, except in the form of summaries and conclusions to be printed in our report. It was stipulated that individual figures should not go beyond the possession of the board. We are obliged to respect these pledges of confidence.

Taking up your requests seriatim, I beg to say:

1. The original schedules on raw wool were secured on the understanding that they should be held confidential by us. These could not be submitted in a form which would not make identification possible. The same is true of the working sheets, which are arranged on the basis of counties, giving acreage, size of flock, etc., in a manner which would make it possible to identify the individual sheep owner.

2. As to the investigation in Australia, New Zealand, and South America, this was carried out by wide traveling and consultation with many growers and buyers. You will find on page 519 of Volume II a description of the course pursued by our agent in South America. He visited over 100 leading growers. Similar methods were followed by our agents in Australia and New Zealand.

3. The compilations on wool manufactures were not made by mills, except in the case of those covered by that part of the investigation of which the results are given in Volume IV. The information there is given by establishments.

4. It is not possible for us to give the exact number of mills from which figures were obtained abroad on the different samples, since the results were in some measure summarized by experts employed by us before being submitted. Furthermore, information was secured as to the cost of certain processes from a large number of mills from which complete figures as to total cost were not secured. In the case of American mills the costs given on the 55 samples cover a range of from 3 to 15 mills per sample. In all cases we aimed, both at home and abroad, to take costs on the basis of mills of good efficiency running full time. In the case of the 55 samples of cloth inefficient mills were eliminated. Where, because of unusual success on particular fabrics, one or two mills are able to make a given sample at a distinctly lower cost than other mills of the same general efficiency, that fact is noted in the report. A statement of the locality of such mills would easily identify the particular establishment. However, you will find on page 620, Volume III, a complete list of the 174 mills from which information was received.

5. I think you have misunderstood the table as to costs of "specimen garments." In the case of the ready-made clothing investigation we did not establish a definite number of sample suits, but took costs from a number of manufacturers on actual suits turned out by them. That is, in the table of costs of specimen garments (Tables 14 to 17, in Volume III, pp. 870 and following) each one represents the cost of an actual suit or garment made by one manufacturer. These are then grouped in various ways to bring out the essential facts as to prices and costs. Altogether they cover 169 suits, 45 overcoats, and 10 pants made in 40 establishments.

I appreciate your statement that you do not wish to examine the sources on which our report is based in such a way as to reveal the identity of establishments who have given us confidential information. However, the original material is of such a nature that if made public such identification would be possible.

As to your expressed desire for information regarding "the general meaning of certain features of the report," we are entirely at your service or at the service of any member of the committee. If the meaning of any part of our report is not clear, we are anxious to make it so and will welcome a call at any time from any member of the committee or of Congress and further explain any question that may arise.

Very respectfully,

HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

Constant assertions have been made by Tariff Board representatives that they could not afford any interpretation, explanation, or analysis of the data and figures contained in their report. Not only have they refused to furnish additional information when asked for it by the Ways and Means Committee, but the chairman of the Tariff Board has stated in public before a Senate committee that he did not feel warranted in expressing any opinion on the subject.

Here is a tariff board that we paid $550,000 for, ordered to ascertain facts for the information of this House, and a report is submitted to Congress, and when the chairman of the committee requested this board to give him information as to where they obtained the basis of the facts that they report to Congress it declines to give the information. Are you prepared to say that the Congress of the United States should write its legislation based on the findings of a board that proposes to lock in its inner consciousness facts that the Congress is entitled to know? Why, the method that we have pursued for 100 years is far preferable to that. Under the old method of securing facts, followed by the Ways and Means Committee three years ago, the manufacturer appeared and was subjected to cross-examination. To-day we have the report of a tariff board from manufacturers unknown and unknowable, and we are asked to take their conclusions.

REPORT INCOMPLETE.

As to the balance of this report there is practically nothing ascertained in reference to knit goods, merely a deduction from the facts that they had reported about cloth; no information given in reference to blankets, hats, or the great carpet industry. The Government has paid half a million dollars for this Tariff Board, and what have the people received in return? We have for this report some data on raw wool, some figures on the cost of producing tops and yarn at home and abroad, some samples on which unknown manufacturers estimated costs, and this is practically all we have for the $550,000—and none of the data affords a basis on which to fix tariff rates.

Briefly stated, the conclusions reached from the committee's analysis of the Tariff Board report are as follows:

1. The theory of applying tariff duties according to the difference in the cost of production in this and in foreign countries, upon which the board has projected and prepared its report, is entirely erroneous and untenable. Furthermore, if this theory could have been systematically and carefully applied, it would not have afforded trustworthy results for guidance in preparing tariff legislation.

2. The board's report is fragmentary and incomplete, and rests on an incorrect statistical basis. Hence it has no claims to confidence for the results set forth therein, even should the reliability of the theory of the cost of production be conceded.

3. Those persons who are willing to overlook the lack of theoretical soundness and of statistical accuracy, will find the data of the report too fragmentary and incomplete to admit of conclusions with reference to rates of tariff duty. Even under the most favorable interpretation of the report, conclusions as to duties can be reached for only a few paragraphs of the wool schedule, and for these paragraphs it is not possible to formulate definite conclusions, because the figures vary widely, and seriously lack uniformity and comparability. So much is this the case that justification is apparently afforded in the report for rates that are in conflict with one another. It is thus seen that the report leaves the question of the tariff duties on wool as much unsolved as before the Tariff Board was formed.

4. So far as conclusions can be drawn from the board's report, it furnishes nothing to justify any change in the rates proposed in H. R. 11019. With full recognition of the incomplete, fragmentary, and unsatisfactory nature of the data, and with full admission of the inadequate and unreliable basis afforded for computations, the following table may be regarded as setting forth, as well as it is possible to do, the conclusions as to the rates of duty justified by the report.

Comparative equivalent ad valorem rates of duty in 1910 and 1911 with those of H. R. 11019, together with the rates computed from the Tariff Board report as equalizing cost of production.

[1] No data furnished by Tariff Board.

In making the computations from which have resulted the rates shown in Table 15, as justified by the Tariff Board's data, the most expensive and difficult conditions indicated by the data as attending production have been employed with a view to being more than just in the conclusions. As will be observed from the figures shown, the necessity of protection to equalize the difference in the cost of production beyond the rates carried by H. R. 11019 exists in but few instances, and these are in all probability the result of the high costs which have been presented by the board and used in the computations.

5. In preparing H. R. 11019 no intentional provision was made for protection, the endeavor being to reduce and adjust rates with a view to producing the largest amount of revenue consistent with the proper consideration of the consumer. It is believed that the rates of H. R. 11019 approach very closely, at least, to the best revenue-producing points, and these rates should, if enacted into law, permit such quantities of imports as will effectively regulate domestic prices. Such competition would be an important service to the people, as it would encourage increased consumption and production by making more nearly normal the conditions of supply and demand. The report of the Tariff Board, so far as it admits of conclusions, shows that the rates which meet the consumer's needs also sufficiently satisfy those of the producer.

ANALYSIS OF PROPOSED PAYNE BILL.

I will devote the balance of my time to a discussion of the bill that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] proposes to offer as a substitute for the one now under consideration. I note from the public press, in the views of the minority, that this bill proposes to reduce the present rates on the woolen schedule by an average of 40 per cent. Now, that is not a fair statement to the American people. How do you reach that result? By putting third-class wool on the free list for the benefit of the American manufacturer, not for the benefit of the American people, sacrificing $4,700,000 worth of revenue, and you call that a reduction in the schedule rates. I have carefully analyzed the minority bill and will submit the analysis at this point in my speech.

Imports of 1911, duties, average unit of value, equivalent ad valorem rate of duty on imports, duties estimated by applying Payne proposed rates to 1911 imports, together with equivalent ad valorem rates on Payne bill (H. R. 22262) and of Underwood bill (H. R. 22195).

[1] Estimated as comprising one-half the imports of Aubusson, Axminister, oriental, and similar carpets and rugs. [2] Includes $3 free of duty.

This table presents a comparison of the results of this bill with those of the present law, computed on the imports of 1911, together with the rates of the bill H. R. 22195 now under consideration. I find that the reduction on raw wool has been greater than for any other item in their bill. On wool of the first class in the bill, which means wool of the first and second class in the present law, on wool on the skin, the bill makes a reduction of from 43 per cent to 28.99 per cent. For wool not on the skin it has made a reduction that is equal to 30.66 per cent.

USE OF SHRINKAGE FIGURE.

In my analysis I have not used shrinkage results on foreign wools in our domestic mills but the shrinkage on foreign wools in foreign mills. I find that most of the wool that comes into this country originates in South America and Australia. The shrinkage of this wool in the American mills is shown by this report to be 47.64 per cent on South American wool in our mills and 48.22 per cent on Australian wool in our mills.

Now, I have not taken those figures. They would show very much greater ad valorem rates in the proposed bill of the minority than those of the table. I know that gentlemen on that side of the House would say that the wool coming in now is "skirted" and that skirted wool does not show as much shrinkage as the wool that would come in under this bill. I find, as stated, that in the foreign mills, where they have free wool and do not import wool in the skirted condition, the shrinkage on South American wool is 59.90 per cent; that of Australia is 56.82 per cent, or an average of 58.36 per cent; and this is the average shrinkage employed in the computations of the analysis table.

Under the present act the duty upon all wools and hair of the first class is 11 cents per grease pound. The proposed Payne bill makes the duty 18 cents per scoured pound. At the shrinkage of 58.36 (the average shrinkage of Australian and South American wools in foreign mills shown in the Tariff Board report, p. 383), it would require 2.4 pounds of grease wool to make 1 pound of scoured wool.

Under the present act the duty on 2.4 pounds (the grease wool equivalent to 1 pound clean content) at 11 cents per pound amounts to 26.4 cents, compared with 18 cents on 1 pound clean content under the proposed Payne bill.

On wools which shrink 38 per cent and under, the rate of 18 cents per pound on the clean content is an increase in the rate of the present act, as shown by these figures:

Shrinkage (per cent):	Grease pound, equivalent specific duty.
39	10.98 cents
38	11.16 cents
35	11.70 cents
30	12.60 cents
25	13.50 cents
20	14.40 cents

The Tariff Board gives a record (pp. 387–391) of a representative American mill which used in a given length of time over 10,000,000 pounds of foreign wool for which shrinkage results are shown.

Of the 10,000,000 pounds used over 44 per cent (4,423,226 pounds) was Australian and South American crossbred wool, which shrunk 36.34 per cent. The equivalent specific rate on the grease pound is 11.46 cents on the basis of a duty of 18 cents per scoured pound.

In this connection the following excerpt from an article by Mr. Theodore Justice, a strong standpatter for the present tariff law, in the Daily Trade Record of December 25, 1911, will be found of interest:

> The maximum protection to the American woolgrower on wool of the first class is 22 cents a scoured pound and the average duty collected does not exceed 20 cents, for the reason that as the shrinkage falls below 50 per cent the duty paid scoured cost falls with it.
> Consider wools of the second class, the duty on which is 12 cents a pound and the shrinkage 27 per cent (Shropshire wool). The duty paid scoured cost is thus increased only 16 cents by reason of the 12-cent duty on the wool in the grease. Thus it is always imported in that condition.
> The President hints at an average duty of 20 cents a scoured pound on wools of the first and second class as ideal. This would, in fact, be an increase on the present duty rather than a decrease, as the average between 22 cents and 16 cents scoured is only 19 cents scoured.
> Growers would be delighted if the duty upon all wools could be fixed on the basis of 20 cents scoured, for they would then have more protection than they have at present.

EIGHTEEN-CENT RATE INDEFENSIBLE.

The 18-cent rate proposed by the minority members of the committee is indefensible from every standpoint, whether of price, cost of production, or any other that has thus far been advanced, and is an attempt to mislead the public into believing that an actual reduction is being made by the bill in the duties on wool. There are reasons for regarding it as an attempt to deceive. Among these are: (1) The minority bill reclassifies wool into two classes instead of three, as under the existing law. In class 1 are included practically all of those wools of English blood which have heretofore been grouped as in class 2. But the Tariff Board has clearly shown, as I previously stated, that the cost of production is zero in the United States for wools of English blood described in the tariff act as class 2. In order to get a comparison between the cost of production abroad and in the United States for the wools included in class 1 of the new Payne bill it will be necessary to entirely revise the board's estimate of wool cost if it is to be applicable to the proposed minority bill. By including the wool product of the 10,000,000 crossbred sheep produced at a zero cost with the wool product of the 30,000,000 sheep in the western or territory region a great reduction in the average cost of the wool comprehended in the "class 1" of the minority's bill will have been effected. The average cost of producing the wools now classified as class 1 would in this way be reduced by at least 25 per cent. This change, apparently disregarded by the minority, would, even under extreme conditions, make it impossible to sustain the 15-cent rate on the clean content of wool. This would mean that, taking the average of wool of class 1 on the basis of classification suggested by the minority bill, not more than 7 or 8 cents per scoured pound could be required to equalize costs. In the following table is presented a computation of the rates which the duties suggested by the minority indicate as being necessary to protect the wools in the "territory" region.

Production of wool given by Tariff Board, per cent of shrinkage and equivalent scoured wool, rate of duty per scoured pound in Payne proposed bill, net cost charge per scoured pound, value per scoured pound, and ad valorem rate of duty necessary on basis of minority bill to protect western wools.

[1] Tariff Board Report (p. 330). [2] Tariff Board Report (p. 12).

The minority has made a special classification of class 3 wool, now called class 2, and has given this class a duty of 7 cents per pound, which, however, is to be rebated to the manufacturer, less 1 per cent of such duties, whenever it is worked up into carpets and allied products. Thus there is opened an immense field for fraud and deceit.

Furthermore, when these carpet wools are used in the manufacturing of the cheap clothing for the poor—and such is the case to some extent—the duty would be increased by the Payne proposed bill from the rate of the present act of 4 cents per pound to 7 cents, an increase of 75 per cent. This is a serious "joker" on the poor people of the country.

I call attention also to what appears to be another "joker" in the measure proposed by the minority. Paragraph 1 of the bill provides that the rate on class 1 wools shall be 18 cents per pound, but it also specifies that when the wool is imported in a scoured condition "the duty shall be 19 cents per pound." This is apparently intended to give an excess protection of 1 cent per pound to the process of scouring. The Tariff Board has reported the labor cost of scouring in the United States as $0.0022 per pound. It reports the cost of material used in scouring as $0.0089 to $0.0085. That is to say, the labor cost of scouring is two-tenths of a cent per pound and the material cost of scouring is at most nine-tenths of a cent per pound. The total cost of scouring for the most expensive tops is only a little more than 1 cent per pound. Assuming that the board is right in its statement that the cost of making tops in England is 180 per cent of the cost here, it is plain that the difference between the cost of scouring abroad and in the United States could not be as much as five-tenths of a cent a pound. A tariff duty of less than one-half of 1 cent a pound would therefore amply protect the process of scouring, and even this would be an excessively high estimate of the difference in the cost of operation between foreign countries and the United States. It must be inferred, therefore, that the minority intends really to establish a rate of 19 cents per scoured pound on wool of the first class instead of the 18 cents which it technically provides.

The minority in their report make this remarkable statement:

We have made the greater reduction of rates on the cheaper classes of goods.

My friends, did you ever hear that coming from the Republican side of the House before? [Laughter on the Democratic side.] On the face of the returns they always take care of the poor and needy, and in their report they say—

We have made the greater reduction of rates on the cheaper classes of goods.

HIGH RATES ON TOPS AND YARNS.

Of tops, the first advancement of wool in the process of manufacture there are no imports for last year. The present act was so prohibitive that none came in. On wool or hair advanced—which is similar to tops—your rate figures into an ad valorem of 27 per cent.

The minority has provided rates on yarns which are as indefensible as those proposed on raw wool. In the following table have been computed the equivalent ad valorem rates on yarns, which are proposed in paragraph 21 of the minority bill. From this table it will be seen that the rates recommended on yarns vary from 45 per cent to more than 80 per cent.

Analysis of rates of duty for yarns of Payne proposed bill (estimated on the basis of a wool content of 100 per cent).

When you come to yarns you levy three rates—21½ cents per pound plus 10 per cent; 21½ cents per pound plus 15 per cent; and 21½ cents per pound plus 25 per cent, according to value. Now, on the cheaper class of yarn, on which you fix a rate of 21½ cents per pound on the wool, giving to the manufacturer the difference between 18 cents and 21½ cents per pound on scoured wool, and then add 10 per cent ad valorem on yarns, you say that is cheaper on the lower grade of yarn. But when you figure it out on the ad valorem basis on importations it equals 99.19 per cent on the cheaper grade. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When you come to the higher-grade yarns that go into the clothing which the rich people use you apparently put up the price and make it apparently 21½ cents on the wool and 25 per cent ad valorem. But when you figure it under the value of the yarn it makes your rate only 45.45 per cent [applause on the Democratic side], thus taxing actually, although you are pretending to do the other thing, the cheaper yarn, out of which the cloth that is worn by the poorer people is made, twice as much as you are taxing the yarn that goes into the high-priced fabric. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

CHEAP CLOTH HIGHLY TAXED.

When you come to cloth, instead of carrying 18 cents a scoured pound on the wool in the cloth into this bill that you have introduced in the interest of the American people—instead of charging 18 cents a scoured pound, you advance the scoured pound to 25 cents—that is, the weight of the wool content—and then add 30 per cent ad valorem. What is that equal to, when you work it out, on the importations for the last year? On cheap cloth valued at not more than 40 cents a pound, it equals 105.44 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Right there, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I will take only a minute. Did the gentleman make any allowance for the amount of cotton used in making these cheap goods? Our duty is simply on the wool. The cotton is included under the present law. The rate is on the weight of the goods.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To do that would increase the ad valorem.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman had better read that over before he puts it in the RECORD.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to the report, where he makes the statement that he had written the rates lower on the cheaper class of goods. On the higher-grade goods, valued above 70 cents a pound, you put a tax of 26 cents on the wool content per pound and 55 per cent ad valorem, which works out an equivalent ad valorem rate of 49.72 per cent. You continue exactly what you did in your old bill. You put a high rate on the cheaper grade of goods, making it 105 per cent. One hundred per cent would include the entire cost of production, and yet you get above the entire cost of production for the poorer class of goods and put 5 per cent ad valorem additional on it, and when you come to the high-grade goods, that only the wealthy can wear, you reduce the tax to 49.72 per cent and ask the people to take that as a relief from the burdens of the present law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The ad valorem duty established by the minority bill is placed at from 35 to 60 per cent over and above a compensatory duty intended to fully meet the difference in material costs in the United States and in foreign countries. It would appear that the bill of the minority has been framed with little or no reference to the findings of the Tariff Board. This fully confirms the following statement made in the report of the Ways and Means Committee last summer:

> When statistical data as to cost of production have been obtained * * * the Republican Party has treated them with neglect and contempt, and has gone on framing tariff acts to please private interests at the public expense without any consideration whatever of ascertained facts as to the differences in cost of production.

Now, we fix an ad valorem rate all the way through. We put 40 per cent on all classes of cloth, and of course the cheapest cloth does not pay as much tax as the higher-grade cloth, although relatively it pays the same. The following table presents in detail the actual and equivalent ad valorem rates of the Payne proposed bill, clearly bringing out the real effect of the revision in maintaining high duties.

REMARKABLE TREATMENT OF BLANKETS.

There is another especially remarkable thing about the gentleman's bill. He got no information from the Tariff Board about blankets, and only had to wander in the dark; so that the Tariff Board is not responsible for his figures on blankets, as they gave no information.

In 1910 there were 1,849 pounds of blankets imported, valued at $640. They paid a duty of $598. The unit value was 34 cents, and the average ad valorem rate was 93 per cent. Now, work it out on your bill. You put 23½ cents a pound on those blankets, which would equal $434.71. Then you put a 20 per cent ad valorem rate on those blankets which, on the $460 value imported, amounted to $128, making the total amount of your tax under your new bill $662.71, as against $598 under the present law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In other words, the old rate of duty on blankets, as shown by these importations, was 93 per cent, and you raise it to 103 per cent.

Now, as to flannels. On the cheaper grades of flannels, those that the poor have to wear to cover their nakedness from the winter storm, valued at not more than 40 cents a pound, you put 23½ cents a pound on the wool content and 20 per cent ad valorem. But work it out on the imports, and it is found that 82.21 per cent is placed on those flannels, against 30 per cent in our bill, and the Tariff Board did not tell you to do it, because they gave you no information about it.

But when you come to the higher class of flannels, such as some of my Republican friends will disport themselves in at the seashore when the summer breezes come and we are waiting for the Senate to pass this bill [laughter], on those flannels valued at over 70 cents you put 23½ cents a pound and 30 per cent ad valorem; but when you work out the ad valorem equivalent on the actual importations you have 57 per cent on those flannels as against 45 per cent that we put on them. In our bill we have put 30 per cent ad valorem on cheap flannels and 45 per cent on the higher grades. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The same thing can be shown in reference to wearing apparel and other items in the bill. There is not an item in the bill that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] asks you to vote for on which, when you work out the ad valorem rates, he has not put a higher tax on cheap wearing apparel than he has put on the higher class of goods.

DEMOCRATIC RATES ON CARPETS ACCEPTED.

On carpets the Tariff Board made no report, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] therefore, having no information, practically adopted the same rates that we had in our bill last year. He could not get information from one source, and he came to another to get it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Why do you not say that we adopted a lower rate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You have got a lower rate on one carpet. We have a lower rate on two other classes of carpets, but there is not much difference on the carpet schedule between the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and ourselves, except that you give to the manufacturer free carpet wool, while we make him pay $4,700,000 to the Federal Treasury and put the same tax on him that you do. That is about the difference. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is a remarkable fact that the minority of the committee, in preparing its own bill, has made the greatest change in those paragraphs that have not been investigated by the Tariff Board, notwithstanding that it professes to have drafted a bill intended to apply to the findings of the board. It has long been known that third-class wools were not produced in the United States, and hence that there was no reason for retaining the protection upon them provided for in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. Nevertheless, when a change of this kind was proposed at the time that the Payne-Aldrich tariff was under consideration, it was rejected by the then majority of the committee. There has been no change in the situation since that time nor has there been any new developments or facts on the subject by the Tariff Board. This is fully recognized by the minority of the committee, which in the report now filed specifically states that "the subject of the cost of converting wool into carpets was not treated in the report of the Tariff Board." Inasmuch as the Tariff Board furnishes no information on the cost of conversion in carpets and there is nothing whatever that is new as to the production and importation of carpet wools, it is a remarkable circumstance that the minority, now so desirous to bring about a reform in the carpet duties, did not do so at the time when it had full power to put its views into effect. Judging from the action with reference to the carpet wools and carpets, there is more chance of securing tariff revision without a report of the Tariff Board than there is with one, inasmuch as the changes in yarns and fabrics are very much less than those made in carpets. The Tariff Board has suggested neither the facts as to the manufacture of carpets nor as to the production and use of carpet wools, nor has it made the slightest recommendation with reference to methods of levying duties upon carpet wools or the carpets made of them.

Now, excluding carpets, on which we agree, excluding raw wool and making a computation of what you have done in this bill as shown by the imports of last year, the imports of manufactures for last year, excluding carpets and wool, amounted to $14,900,000. The duties were $14,000,000. The equivalent ad valorem rate under the present law is 94 per cent. You make it under your bill 71.83 per cent.

Instead of making a reduction to the American people on the things that they actually wear, the things they carry on their backs, of 40 per cent, you make a reduction of the difference between 94 per cent and 71 per cent, or 23 per cent. That is the truth. That is the real fact in the case.

On the other hand, our bill works out 41.88 per cent. Here is an analysis of these facts.

Wool and manufactures of..	44,475,603.15	26,567,147.79	59.73	35.79	30.15

On wool not on the skin, which constitutes about 96 per cent of the wools taxed by the proposed Payne bill, the reduction is from 45.69 per cent to 30.66 per cent, while the Democratic bill makes a reduction on this class of wool from 45.69 per cent to 20 per cent ad valorem, or a reduction of 56.23 per cent.

On manufactures of wool, your proposed bill makes a reduction from 87.65 per cent to 65.11 per cent, or 25 per cent, while the Democratic bill makes a reduction from 87.65 per cent to 42.55 per cent, or a reduction of 51.46 per cent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

APPENDIX.

[House Report No. 455, Sixty-second Congress, second session, part 1.]

TO REDUCE THE DUTIES ON WOOL AND MANUFACTURES OF WOOL.

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

H. R. 11019 REINTRODUCED.

Except for the change in date of effectiveness and the correction of minor clerical errors, this bill, H. R. 22195, is identical with H. R. 11019, introduced at the first session of the present Congress. Downward tariff revision was the chief issue in the 1910 campaign. The overwhelming manner in which the Democratic Party was given the control of the House of Representatives in the election of that year severely repudiated the Republican failures at tariff reform in the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909 and plainly instructed the Democrats to proceed at the earliest practicable moment with a downward revision of the tariff. Hence it was that upon the convening of the Sixty-second Congress in the special session of April 4, 1911, this committee at once applied itself to the work of revising Schedule K in an effort to make immediately effective the mandates of the people with regard to tariff revision.

The bill H. R. 11019 was the result of elaborate and painstaking investigations by the committee, during which was assembled and examined all the information available with regard to the production and manufacture of wool. The rates of duty worked out by the committee and embodied in H. R. 11019 were fixed without any reference whatever to protection, but with an intent to reduce the "indefensible" rates which have been so long a burden to the consumer and with the only other view to producing the necessary revenue from this schedule.

A modified form of H. R. 11019, carrying slightly increased rates of duty, was passed by the Congress, submitted to the President of the United States, and vetoed by him on August 17, 1911. The veto was defended on the ground that the Tariff Board had not completed its investigations of Schedule K. In this veto message the President quoted from his message to Congress of December 7, 1909, as follows:

"I believe that the work of this board will be of prime utility and importance whenever Congress shall deem it wise again to readjust the customs duties. If the facts secured by the Tariff Board are of such a character as to show generally that the rates of duties imposed by the present tariff law are excessive under the principles of protection as described in the platform of the successful party at the late election, I shall not hesitate to invite the attention of Congress to this fact and to the necessity for action predicated thereon."

In his veto message of August 17, 1911, the President also said:

"When I have the accurate information which justifies such action I shall recommend to Congress as great a reduction in Schedule K as the measure of protection, already stated, will permit. The failure of the present bill should not be regarded, therefore, as taking away the only chance for reduction by this Congress."

In its report on H. R. 11019 (H. Rept. No. 45, 62d Cong., 1st sess.) the committee said:

"It would be trifling with the people to give further consideration to Republican counsels of more delay in this matter, whether with regard to statistical data concerning cost of production, promised at a future date, or for any further reason."

Notwithstanding this conviction, the Democratic majority of the House of Representatives, impatient to respond to the demands of the people for a speedy revision of a schedule of indefensible rates, was forced to delay further effort in answer to the protests of the American people.

In his message of December 20, 1911, the President said:

"I now herewith submit a report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K. The board is unanimous in its findings. On the basis of these findings I now recommend that the Congress proceed to a consideration of this schedule with a view to its revision and a general reduction of its rates."

The committee has made a careful analysis of the report of the Tariff Board in order to interpret the findings and to discover in what particulars the committee's bill, H. R. 11019, was defective or failed to adjust the duties in an equitable and proper manner. This analysis has failed to reveal anything that requires a single change in the rates fixed in H. R. 11019, and the committee is constrained to present again the results of its investigation of last summer, as embodied in the bill presented to the House at that time.

Apparently the only real effect of the 12 months' delay in the revision of Schedule K, based upon the necessity, as stated by the President, of awaiting the report of the Tariff Board, has been to allow manufacturers another year of excessive rates and to compel the people to pay for their woolen clothing during the year about $50,000,000 more than they would have paid under the rates of H. R. 11019.

As shown in the analysis, the data of the report of the Tariff Board have been found to be diffuse and unsystematic, to present insignificant findings, and, as stated, to afford the committee no valid reason for any change in its recommendations of last session with regard to the rates of Schedule K.

ANALYSIS OF TARIFF BOARD'S REPORT.

SCOPE OF ANALYSIS.

The following discussion of the Tariff Board's report on Wool and Manufactures of Wool is divided into three parts: (1) The general character of the report on wool and manufactures of wool (pp. 5–8); (2) the circumstances under which it was prepared, its characteristics, and the general features which entitle it to confidence or the reverse (pp. 9–32); and (3) an interpretation of the board's report, and an attempt to apply it to the tariff situation (pp. 33–66). The three parts of the discussion are necessarily independent of each other. In considering the broad question of tariff revision, a decision must first be reached as to the acceptance of the so-called cost of production theory as a basis for such revision. Conclusions on this point are made in the first part. Again, if the cost of production theory is acceptable in the abstract, or may conceivably be made so, the question remains whether the report is worked out from the statistical standpoint thoroughly and carefully so as to present trustworthy results. Finally, independent of the conclusions reached on cost of production in the abstract, and whether or not the report is satisfactory in its technique, the question will remain as to what actual significance regarding tariff duties is to be given it granting, for the sake of argument, that its conclusions are accepted.

COST OF PRODUCTION THEORY.

The greater portion of the report consists of a study of what is called "comparative cost of production" of wools and manufactures of wool in various countries, the chief stress being naturally laid upon conditions in the United States. The report deals exclusively with this subject, if the language be so interpreted as to include matters which are ancillary to cost of production in the narrow sense of the term. While the report contains considerable descriptive and other matter such as quotations of prices and the like, these are contributory to the analysis of cost and are evidently intended merely to enable readers to make use of the cost figures more intelligently.

It is, therefore, fair to note at the outset exactly what is meant by using the cost of production theory as a basis for adjusting tariff duties, and what validity it has as a practical guide to legislation. By cost of production the board invariably understands money cost of production, or, as some economists have expressed it, "money expenses of production." These expenses of production are ascertained in various ways and for various products in the several countries studied, and comparisons are then drawn between the figures thus secured.

In passing upon the validity of this mode of procedure, it is necessary to review some familiar economic reasoning.

The view that the proper basis for tariff duties is found by comparing money costs of production rests upon the opinion that money costs represent the relative degrees of sacrifice involved in turning out commodities of a given kind in various countries. For instance, if it be assumed that a given unit of a certain commodity can be produced in England for $1, or the equivalent of that sum, while in the United States the money expenses of production are $1.25, it is necessary to have a tariff duty equal to the difference in these money expenses of production, or certainly to the difference in money expenses minus the allowance for variations in freight rates, in order to place the producers in the two countries upon an equal market footing. If this is not done, it will be possible for the producer in the country where money expenses are lowest to drive out of business the producer in the country where money expenses are highest. This assumption is based upon an erroneous view of international trade, and finds no warrant whatever in economic reasoning.

RELATION BETWEEN PRICES AND COSTS.

In certain classes of goods prices or selling values are fixed not by the cost of producing at the point of lowest cost but by the cost of producing at the point of highest cost. This is true of every commodity subject to the law of diminishing returns. In the case of such commodities, the price is fixed ultimately by the cost of producing that portion of the supply brought into existence under the least favorable conditions, provided that all portions of the supply are necessary to satisfy a given demand. Thus, if the price of wheat is 75 cents a bushel, wheat will command that figure regardless of whether it is produced at 25, 50, 75 cents, or $1 per bushel. The price is fixed by a comparison of demand and supply, and cost of production merely affords one of the limits which ultimately determines the range of prices. This is a familiar condition in connection with agricultural commodities, in which production continues on unfertile lands, though very much better soil may be in use. The better soil does not drive the poorer out of cultivation, unless there is so much of the better as to render it unnecessary to cultivate the poorer soil. Where soils of different grades are employed, the price of the product has nothing to do with cost of production, but is determined by the cost of production of the most expensive unit of the desired supply. In these cases a study of the difference in cost of production would have no relation whatever to the amount of tariff needed to protect industries in one country against the competition of those in another.

The production of numerous commodities is carried on in countries having a much smaller natural aptness for them than do others, because the latter, which might compete successfully with them, have a far greater advantage in producing some other commodity. Thus, if State No. 1 can produce both corn and wheat more cheaply than State No. 2, it does not follow that it will do so. If the former's advantage in the production of wheat is disproportionately greater than in the production of corn, it will devote attention chiefly, or wholly, to wheat—the commodity in which it has the greatest surplus of productive power. In this case a study of the difference of money expenses of production will throw no light whatever upon the amount of tariff needed in order to equalize conditions of production. There are numerous instances in which a condition of this kind exists—a country having the decided advantage in a certain commodity, but producing it only to a very limited extent, because there is so great a field for its capital in other directions. In such cases the fact that the money cost of producing a given article in the country of great advantage is lower than in the least favored country does not prove the necessity of a tariff duty upon this article in the less favored country, because the more favored will not produce it to any considerable extent in any event.

Even in those instances where two countries are extensively engaged in producing a manufactured article, whose price is determined by cost of production under the most favorable conditions, as is the case with many largely manufactured articles, such as shoes, cloth, and the like, a difference in money cost of production does not necessarily indicate anything as to comparative competitive power. That it may do so there must be an ascertainment of the relative efficiency of labor and the extent to which given money expenses are the result of already existing tariff duties. If expenses of production have been rendered higher by tariff duties, so that the cost of producing an article is enhanced by tariff duties on the raw material, the fact of higher money expenses of production does not necessarily indicate inferiority in productive power as to that particular article.

VARIATIONS IN COSTS.

Beside these considerations, in every country there is a great range of difference in cost of production. Scarcely any commodity can be said to have a uniform cost of production. There is more difference, as a rule, between different factories in the same country than there is between the best and poorest factories in one country and those of corresponding grades in another. This has been amply illustrated by the work of the Tariff Board. In its report on pulp and paper the board found little difference in money cost of production between the United States and Canada in the best mills, but it did find very great difference between the best and poorest mills in the United States. The indication would have been, therefore, that while protection was not needed by the best factories in the United States against Canada, it was needed by the poorer factories against the better factories in the United States, but not against those in Canada. Owing to this variation in cost of production within the same country, it is not possible to compare in exact terms the productive power of one country with that of another.

Only averages can be taken, and these show nothing whatever as to any given case. The cost of production theory in order to mean anything must be qualified by provisions showing whether it is intended to apply to differences between the best factories in two countries, or the difference between the poorest factories in one country and the best in another. Otherwise it will indicate nothing, even upon its own theoretical basis, since a tariff which would protect the best factory in one country will not protect the poorest factory there or, perhaps, the average factory. A duty which will equalize the average difference in cost of production between two countries protects no one, since it is more than is needed by the most efficient producer and less than is needed by the least efficient producer.

Even if it be granted that an ascertainment of differences in money cost of production—whether highest, average, or lowest—would furnish a guide to the proper amount of tariff duty needed for protective purposes, the problem would remain whether money expenses of production could be ascertained in such a way as to render the method available. Experience, as well as theoretical considerations, show that this is not the case.

COSTS NOT ASCERTAINABLE.

The following are some of the reasons why costs are not obtainable:

1. In getting at money expenses of production they must be ascertained from books designed to show manufacturing costs. No uniformity exists in methods of cost accounting, and many factories do not employ any cost-accounting system Cost figures obtained without cost books are of very little service. Such figures obtained from sets of books which are kept in a different way are equally of little service. This condition exists in the textile industries to a very great extent—a condition admitted by the Tariff Board throughout their report.

2. Even if money costs could be actually ascertained in an unquestionable manner and upon a comparative basis, they must be obtained not from one competing country but from every competing country, so that the average extent or scope of competition might be known against which the United States must exert its energies. It might very well be that one country would have a low-money cost of production, but this would be of little significance, as that country could not indefinitely increase the amount of its production.

3. Even if the facts could be accurately ascertained for all competing foreign countries, the figures would be of little service as a guide in fixing tariff duties, because it would not be known in any given case whether such costs afforded the basis for fixing prices. Wherever monopoly conditions obtain, wherever the export-price system exists, and wherever patents are an important factor in production, the mere ascertainment of the cost of production is of little importance. It is far more significant in such cases to know the range of actual selling prices over a long period.

4. Inasmuch as differences in money cost of production have no particular significance unless they correspond to relative sacrifice of labor and capital, and inasmuch as they do not thus correspond except in countries whose price levels are about the same, there is no safe conclusion to be drawn as to the extent to which a country possessing a low-money cost will be able to undersell or compete with a country subject to a high-money cost.

FUTILITY OF INQUIRY.

For these reasons the effort to obtain detailed money costs of production as a basis in fixing rates of duty must be considered futile, even if it could be successfully carried out in the inclusive way spoken of. While it is perfectly true that manufacturers are always eager to know the cost of production in the plants of their competitors, they are not desirous of giving their own, because they recognize the fact that unless they can keep costs down to an average level they are likely to be displaced. In international trade the question of competition is not raised between individuals, but between groups of individuals, in the two countries. This is, therefore, an entirely different proposition and one which has comparatively little reference to the question of money cost of production. When the statement is made by advocates of the money cost of production theory that a duty is desired which will not only equalize costs, but also allow for a margin of reasonable profit, the difficulty is intensified. At all times there are some producers who may be carrying on business at a loss. If it be intended to have the duty sufficiently large to enable the poorest producers to obtain, theoretically, a reasonable profit, an excessively high rate is indicated, and this allows the more efficient factories to get very much more than their reasonable profit.

The situation is clearly brought out in the case of railroad rates, where the effort is to fix the rates upon a reasonable basis; yet this almost invariably results in giving to the well-built and efficiently managed roads too large a margin of profit, while it does not give sufficient margin to those overcapitalized, badly constructed, or inefficiently managed. The addition of a reasonable profit over and above the difference in the cost of production very greatly complicates the problem and renders what was already impossible in theory positively absurd in application.

REPORT NOT A TARIFF DOCUMENT.

Probably the most striking feature of the report of the Tariff Board is that it contains little with reference to the tariff. It is primarily an analysis of the money expenses involved in the production and manufacture of wool. With the exception of a brief section relating to the question whether raw-wool rates should be levied on an ad valorem or specific basis, and with the further exception of the study of shrinkage in wool which is presented as ancillary to the question of ad valorem or specific rates, the report has nothing to say respecting the tariff and its effects either upon capital or labor, or upon the consumer as he is affected by prices of goods. The report as now published and before Congress consists of four volumes. The first is a so-called "glossary," in which are given explanations of the meaning of terms used in connection with tariff legislation, production, importation, consumption, and the like, for the United States and other countries. The second volume includes a study of the cost of producing raw wool, the third a study of manufacturing costs in the woolen industry, and of costs or outlays in the ready-made-clothing trade.

The fourth volume undertakes a study of wages and efficiency in the woolen and worsted business of the United States. At a later point occasion will be taken for a more complete analysis of certain portions of this report.

VALUE OF REPORT.

Volume 1, containing the message of the President, letter of submittal, summary of findings, and glossary, will undoubtedly be of use in explaining to the public the significance of the existing tariff and of the terms used in it. The volume probably contains little that was not already available to any Member of Congress who chose to avail himself of the facilities at his command. It is essentially a clerical or library compilation from printed sources, and as such affords little of service to the practical legislator other than its convenient form.

Volume 4, wages and efficiency of labor and machinery in the United States, treats a subject which has already been exhaustively discussed by the United States Immigration Commission in reports on the woolen industry, and the Tariff Board undoubtedly drew upon this source. Whatever may be the intrinsic value of this volume and however serviceable it may be to students for reference, as a contribution to tariff discussion at the present time it has no value, because it does not contain, or profess to contain, comparative material on efficiency in foreign countries. It deals only with American conditions. Taken in a general way, as showing the status of labor in the woolen and worsted industry, it is less comprehensive than the reports of the Immigration Commission. The board has carried the study of earnings in some instances to a more advanced point than the report of the Immigration Commission, yet this has not materially contributed to the usefulness of the report. This refers particularly to the question of wages per hour, per unit of product, etc., data for which are not found in the Immigration Commission's report, but which, whatever may be thought of them, can not aid now, because of the entire lack of comparable data.

Volume 3 contains a discussion of manufacturing costs, tops, yarn, and cloth, and ready-made clothing. About one-fourth of the volume is devoted to a study of ready-made clothing—a subject fully covered by the Immigration Commission in a report prepared at great expense which has been available for some time. The ready-made clothing report of the board contains an analysis of cost by sample or specimen pieces of clothing, of which a more complete discussion will appear later. But, without going into the question of the ready-made clothing inquiry at present, there seems to have been no good reason for devoting to this subject the attention given it by the board. The principal discussion has related to the duties on raw wool and manufactures of wool. The rates of duty on ready-made clothing have been of relatively little importance. Our imports of that article have not been large, amounting to only $1,776,236 during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and would not have been large in any event on account of differences in style. As the board itself points out, the industry is highly competitive, and may be regarded as a minor factor in the tariff issue.

Apparently the chief reason for this inquiry was the opinion that it would show the cost of woolen goods to be but a very small factor in the cost of ready-made clothing. Waiving this issue for the present, it may be concluded that, so far as the question of tariff rates on wool and manufactures of wool is concerned, that part of the board's report which relates to ready-made clothing is largely irrelevant.

SIGNIFICANT FEATURES OF THE REPORT.

Those portions of the report which have a bearing upon the immediate question before Congress and which should be studied in relation to the problem of the tariff are comprised in Volume II and in the first half of Volume III. Included in these volumes is much that has no immediate bearing on the subject. The "Notes on sheep ranching in the West," for example, are fragmentary and contain no direct references to comparative costs that throw light upon the tariff. In the second volume of the board's report, which deals with raw wool, the material deserving of consideration is comprised within pages 300 to 541, a total of 241 pages, while in Volume III, on manufacture, the significant portions are included in the 223 pages between pages 619 and 842. Even on the pages quoted there is much that has only a very general bearing upon the subject of industrial costs, and of this a rather large proportion has been previously published either in this country or abroad, thus being already available to those who might wish to examine it: in many instances material so published was already in the files of the Ways and Means Committee. Practically all of the material as to prices, imports, exports, and foreign conditions was readily available, as was also a large part of the information on shrinkage.

COSTS OF CAPITAL AND NATURAL AGENTS.

Throughout its investigation of costs of production, the Tariff Board apparently considers the maintenance of the existing tariff, or something approximating it, fundamental and necessary. Thereby it adds very greatly to the "cost" stated as representative of the necessities of the American wool and wool-manufacturing industry under existing conditions. This is an error which runs consistently throughout the whole report and which needs to be considered very carefully in order to realize the far-reaching character of the modifications which it involves.

Fundamentally, the mistake of the board in considering the tariff as a permanent feature is found in the attitude it adopts toward the cost of capital and of natural agencies. Starting with the raw-wool industry, the board regards the cost of land or the price paid for the use of it as an integral element in wool raising. In Volume II (p. 309), under the head "The problem of land values," the report says that in some regions "the sheep owners possess but little land, often only enough to give them control of water rights, etc., while in other parts the land owned by them represents a large investment and occasions a heavy charge against the sheep; but all the flock owners depend to a greater or less extent on land which they do not own."

In getting at the method employed in dealing with this question of land values, the board allows a charge against the sheep designed to cover the grazing value of the land. This allowance "has been determined on the basis of prices actually paid for the use of similar land leased or rented in the same region." It is apparently included in the estimates of cost under the head of "Miscellaneous expenses." Here is a mistake similar to that made by the board in its report on pulp and paper. The value of land, whether estimated as a lump sum, as a rental, or partly, as in this case, a grazing value, is determined solely by the demand for the products of the land and the consequent price that can be obtained for such product. A farm is worth $50 an acre for the sole reason that the products raised on the farm can be made to bring an income, which, all things considered, will pay interest on $50 per acre. Grazing land leased for the use of sheep owners will bring 20 cents an acre merely because of the fact that the sheep are there and there is a demand for the land, but the grazing demand is due to the fact that the industry is being carried on subject to tariff protection under conditions which enable the owners of land to exact such a charge. Reduction of the tariff would eliminate this payment so far as based upon a fictitious or artificially established value.

In the case of pulp and paper, it was found by the board that one reason for the high cost of paper in the United States was the fact that paper makers charged themselves the prevailing rate for pulp wood, and so recorded this charge on their books as an element in cost, notwithstanding that the woodlands were owned by themselves and had been bought years ago at a low figure. They increased in value merely because the scarcity of wood produced by excessive tariff protection rendered it impossible to get the wood without paying an abnormally high price, which in turn raised the value of the land. This enabled the paper manufacturers to claim that the high price which they paid themselves for the wood was really no more than was necessary in order to pay the interest on their investment in the woodlands. It was a clear case of the use of the tariff to maintain an artificial or monopoly value. A somewhat similar condition is seen in the allowance for grazing cost which is included by the board as an integral part of the cost of raising wool. No progress can be made in studying the tariff problem so long as this point of view is adhered to, for the very basis of the argument assumes the continued recognition of artificial values of capital and natural agents from the very moment they are established through the imposition of an excessive duty.

TREATMENT OF IMPROVEMENTS.

The kind of error just discussed is also seen in the treatment by the board of improvement and equipment. The board has ascertained the value of improvements apart from that of the land and then allowed a 10 per cent depreciation. It points out (p. 310) that many articles of equipment depreciate rapidly on account of their nature or carelessness in their use and there is good reason to believe that carelessness has been of much importance in raising the cost of wool production in the United States. Highly protected as the industry has been, producers have not exercised the same moderation in investment nor have they kept the industry upon the careful business basis that foreign countries have. This is borne out by the board's addenda on sheep farming in the various wool-raising sections of the country (pp. 545–616 in Vol. II). In the notes on sheep farming in the Western States (pp. 593–608), conditions are indicated which show that the industry is not upon the same businesslike basis existing in foreign countries. In many instances the business is not under the personal management of the owner, and the result is a large advance in cost of production because of the expensive methods of conducting the enterprise. The same situation, probably in an aggravated form, is found in the more eastern districts, where the raising of sheep is frequently a side issue and no serious attention is given to carrying on wool raising upon a well-organized footing.

This means that the allowances made by the board for investment, equipment, etc., do not afford a good guide to the real cost of production, inasmuch as they fail to show conclusively that such costs are the lowest that can be secured. There was the same situation in the paper industry where much of the cost of capital was due to the fact, there clearly set forth, that the machinery employed in many mills was obsolete in character and therefore cost much more to run than did that in the more recently built mills. Canada's advantage over us was found to be in part due to the fact that as the industry was more recent with her, nearly all of her mills had installed modern machinery. Likewise the tariff has guaranteed a home market for wool, and practically closed it to outside wool so long as any domestic product could be offered in competition, so stimulating and confirming wool raisers in careless and uneconomical methods of doing business, whereas under more competitive conditions they would have cut their costs at all points where reasonable savings could be made.

In this connection it is worth while to note that in Texas, New Mexico, and Colorado, where the industry is presumably upon a decidedly commercial basis, the laborers required in carrying it on can be employed, according to the board (p. 593), "at very reasonable rates," the laborers being largely Mexicans. In California, Mexicans and Basques are largely employed, and in not a few other States foreigners are engaged in the work at low wages.

The alleged higher cost of investment and equipment can not be explained by a larger amount of capital needed on account of excessive sums tied up in wage payments, but must be explained in the way already indicated. The board makes something of a point of the fact that no allowance is made for interest on capital invested. It is a fact, however, that every other possible allowance is made for capital used and, as thus indicated, is made at a high rate.

ERRONEOUS FIGURES ON MANUFACTURING.

The error of constantly regarding the tariff as a necessary factor in cost is found when the industry is studied from the manufacturing standpoint. There the tariff element is allowed to figure in connection with the cost of building and equipping a mill, which is found to be very much higher in the United States than abroad, amounting probably to double the outlay necessary there for that purpose. The report states (p. 705) that "a very important element in woolen and worsted manufacture is the erection and equipping of the mills and the comparative cost in the United States and abroad." It then furnishes detailed estimates of comparative costs, contrasting the United States and England. Differentiating between buildings, machinery, fire protection, equipment of all kinds, etc., a woolen mill with 14 sets of cards is found to cost in the United States $506,941 as against $339,854 in England, a higher cost in the United States, according to the board, of about 49 per cent.

In the case of a worsted spinning mill the increased cost rises to 67 per cent and in case of a worsted weaving mill to 43 per cent. The board admits that the machinery needed, when landed on the wharf in this country, will cost from 60 to 65 per cent more than in England and that about 87 per cent of all machinery is imported. As the machinery represented about one-third of the total cost of building and equipping the plant, this item alone accounts for much the greater part of the additional expense of a fully equipped plant. The tariff on machinery is thus allowed to figure as a fundamental proposition in the cost of carrying on the industry; nor do we find any suggestion or estimate as to how much would be saved to the business if this entirely unnecessary element of expense should be eliminated. The fact that this element of cost, due to excessive outlays for fixed capital caused by high-tariff duties, is cumulative and runs throughout the estimates of the board can be realized by an examination of the tables in the report. Although there is no explicit statement that the cost of production is figured upon a basis which recognizes this outlay as permanent, it is plainly conveyed in the statement that the higher cost in the United States for machinery and buildings is a "very important element" in the outlay called for.

LABOR COSTS.

Analyzing the problem of labor costs in the United States and elsewhere for the various products which are taken under consideration, accuracy can be secured only by investigations covering a considerable period of time. The board, however, has obtained either costs, taking them from the books of the mills, for comparatively short periods, or else estimated costs on samples. These methods of working imply that it has not been positively known whether the amount laid out for labor represents approximately a normal percentage of total cost. Very large variations in the costs of different classes of products are found by the board. These are frankly explained on the ground that in some cases the mills were running full time, while in others they were not.

Where they were not running full time, the labor cost was necessarily a different percentage of the total than when the mills were running full time. In the latter case a larger sum of money was paid in wages and a larger number of units of product were manufactured than in the former, yet practically the same sum in each instance was expended in overhead charges, rent, interest, fixed expenses, etc. Thus, the relation between overhead charges and labor cost was materially altered, and the percentage of labor cost to total output was necessarily made to appear different in the two cases. The board states that in order to meet this difficulty it adopted the plan of assuming that mills were running on full time with a normal total output.

Such an assumption is not necessarily correct, and leads to serious errors which could be avoided only by securing costs over a normal period of actual production. In England, where the costs for tops, yarns, and cloths were obtained almost entirely by the sample method, it was, of course, impossible to know anything about the relation between the cost on a basis of full-time production and that on part-time production. On the assumption that mills were running on full time the tendency is to lessen the percentage of labor cost in the product, provided the figures extend over a period long enough to show the actual relationship between labor cost, capital, and material cost. That is to say, if costs were obtained from a mill running full time, other mills working only part time being disregarded, labor cost would undoubtedly be shown as a relatively smaller allowance per unit of output. Where, however, costs are figured on the sample basis, the assumption that the mill ran more time than it actually did, necessarily implies the payment of a larger sum in wages than is actually the case, while outlays for fixed expenses remain the same in the one instance as in the other. The abstract relationship between outlays for fixed capital and outlays for labor, on a basis of full-time production, therefore, tends to increase very materially the percentage going to labor.

Thus asssume, for example, that a given sample of cloth is presented to a mill making it, and the mill is asked to furnish costs relating to the sample on the basis of a day's production. It may be assumed that the capital cost or fixed charges of the plant for a year are represented as 300, while labor costs are represented as 500, and raw material as 200, a total of 1,000 units of outlay. In this case labor outlay constitutes one-half of the cost of operating the plant over a specified period. Now, assume that these figures are obtained as result of experience, which shows that the mill is idle one-fifth of the time. If the mill ran full time there would be a corresponding increase in outlay for raw material and labor, but not for capital costs. Now, if samples were used as a basis for cost analysis on a specified date, the relative proportions of labor, raw material, and capital costs would be different from those which would exist when a period of idleness was involved. The labor cost would assume a much larger proportion of the total expense than it would under the other circumstances. Throughout the board's figures there is an effort to give labor costs in some detail and to make it appear that the differences in labor cost between, say, England and the United States are an important reason for differences in cost of production. Thus figures are frequently submitted to show the importance of labor cost and the fact that labor is much more expensive per unit of product in this country than it is in England or the Continent.

RAW-WOOL SCHEDULE.

In preparing the figures showing cost of raw wool the board has adopted the plan of ascertaining value of improvements and equipment, depreciation, losses, expense of operation, and receipts. Then the receipts are deducted from expenditures and the remaining balance is divided by the number of pounds of wool secured from the flock to which the expenditure applied, the result being a figure designated as the net charge against wool per pound. This is then taken as the basis for estimating the competitive position of the woolgrower. It is evident that anything which would alter the allowance for expenditures or the receipts would materially alter the ultimate figure used as the net charge against wool. This calls, therefore, for a careful analysis of the sources of income and expenditure with a view of ascertaining how far different elements are of importance in connection with the conclusions arrived at. Such an analysis shows that the chief items of receipts are those from wool, and "from other sources." A comparison of the figures shows that in very many cases the receipts "from other sources" are much larger than those from wool. Consequently, there is a much larger opportunity in these instances for varying the income through changes in prices affecting other classes of products than changes affecting wool.

For example, in Table 18 (p. 364), which gives the results of a study of about 30,000 pounds of wool in the Ohio region, the total receipts "from other sources" were $11,326, against receipts from wool of $6,859. This made a total of $18,185, of which more than 60 per cent came "from other sources." Thus it is clear that slight changes in the price of mutton, alterations in freight rates, and the like might fundamentally alter the net charge against wool at almost any time. In other words, the showing of net charge made by the board, however correct it may have been at the time it was computed, is not correct for any other date, and is subject to modification and alteration of an extensive character.

INVESTMENT IN FLOCKS.

Although the board gives the cost or net charge against wool without reference to the allowance for capital, or, as they express it, "interest not included," the amount of capital invested per head is given in the form of a series of estimates (pp. 315–325). These show wide variations in the amount of investment, and the rate of income on capital is figured upon the basis of the capital per head, as shown in the column which has that caption. It is clear that the conclusions to be drawn as to the percentage of remuneration now being received by the woolgrower are based upon this statement as to the amount of capital invested. This explains why the returns of the board show, in many cases, so low a relative lack of income, or even a distinct loss which is presented as a minus quantity in the column headed "Rate of income," and which seems disproportionately great because of supposedly large investment.

The question of the degree of correctness of the figures concerning the capital invested per head is, therefore, of considerable interest, if a fair conclusion as to the degree of profitableness of the industry is reached. The board states (p. 313) under the head of "Income on investment," that "the investment per head of sheep has been determined by dividing the total investment, exclusive of lands, by the size of the flock. The investment in land has been excluded because of its widely varying significance in different sections and even among flock owners of the same section." To this is added a statement that "in the western United States the prevailing rate of interest varies from 8 per cent to 10 per cent; in Australia from 4 per cent to 6 per cent, and in South America from 5 per cent to 6 per cent." This is an apparent effort to show that the cost of getting capital in the United States is higher than either in Australia or South America.

An important feature of the discussion is the fact that the valuations assigned to the capital invested are, in many cases, necessarily estimates, based upon the worth of certain elements of capital, as valued from the standpoint of earning power. The large investment of capital in the sheep industry is, therefore, more or less the result of estimate or imagination. It is dependent upon the return that could be realized by the use of the capital supposed to be employed there if it were to be turned into some other channel. Very little attention need be given, therefore, to the question of the rate of return on capital invested in the sheep industry, particularly as the figures given by the board show a variation from losses of 25 per cent to profits running as high as 35 and 40 per cent.

ANALYSIS OF EXPENSES.

The expense of raising wool is figured under different groupings already suggested, including miscellaneuos costs and costs of labor, forage, shearing, and selling. A study of the tables (pp. 315–332) indicates that expenditures for labor were in many cases a very small percentage of the total outlay, while expenditures for forage, although sometimes greater than those for labor, were also a relatively small percentage. Thus, a summarization of Table III (p. 318) showed for 807,775 sheep, yielding 5,459,088 pounds of wool, a labor cost of $494,498, a forage cost of $311,731, and a miscellaneous expense of $754,784, or a total expense of $1,561,013. This shows that about one-half of the expenditures figured in the raising of wool are not specified for the several flocks reported, but are grouped as miscellaneous. Such a condition is found generally throughout the tables of the report. That being the case, it is not possible to form an accurate idea of the methods employed in securing the results, since it is not practicable to determine how the miscellaneous expenses have been made up, or how far the items included are correctly computed in the various cases studied. The danger in the situation is seen when the board attempts to work out the net credit to or the net charge against a pound of wool.

So wide a discrepancy would be obtained by changes in the forage figures, designed to adjust the cost to forage prices on the farm, and to market prices, that the board feels constrained to present two series of estimates, one showing the net charge against wool on the basis of the market price of grain and hay, and the other the net charge against wool when the grain and hay used have been taken at the average cost of production of such grain and hay. The theory in the first case is that, since the farmer could sell his grain and hay at the market price, he should be allowed such market price when he used them in his sheep-raising enterprises—a theory which was accepted by the board in connection with the wood-pulp and paper inquiry. The other view is that the charge for grain and hay should be on the basis of average cost, inasmuch as the cost of raising sheep is a continuous process, and the grain and hay produced on the farm are merely items in that process, and might or might not have been sold at the actual market price.

The fact is that not all farmers either buy or raise the whole of the forage they need, but they buy some and raise some, so that the question of actual cost of these items in the production of sheep can not be correctly measured on either basis. Nor can it be correctly ascertained by averaging the two, since there is no basis for arriving at such an average. It must be concluded, therefore, that the figures of the board leave the inquirer uninformed as to the proper basis of charge against wool for cost of production, since they do not establish any basis for figuring the actual cost of production in such a way as to bear analysis. This alone indicates that the presentations made by the board can not be regarded with confidence. That the board has taken the net charge against wool as established on the basis of cost of production of grain and hay does not necessarily show that the cost of production has been underestimated, since it is not known how the cost of production of such grain and hay was established. So far as can be ascertained, the board throws no light upon the plan followed in computing this result. The only explanation afforded on this point is as follows:

"The value of the harvested crops fed to the sheep has been estimated in two different ways. * * * By the method commonly used by most farmers the sheep are charged with the market value of the crops as representing the price which they would have brought the owner had he sold them and which he would have had to pay had he been obliged to buy them. Probably most of these flock owners, however, grow such harvested crops as they feed to their sheep, and since the allowance of the market price may involve either a profit or a loss on their production it is deemed fairer to use the actual cost of growing the hay and grain in order to eliminate intermediate profits or losses. By this method the sheep are charged only with the cost of raising these crops in the locality concerned during the year under consideration. This was determined by an investigation by the Bureau of Statistics of the United States Department of Agriculture, and the figures so compiled are used in the subjoined tabulations."

Unfortunately it is not possible to judge of the accuracy of the statistics given by the board without knowing the method pursued in estimating the cost of production. No data are furnished in this connection.

If, however, it be true that the board has obtained the correct cost of producing hay and grain, the profits in farming must be very large (if market prices are correctly stated). Computing the expense of wool production at the market price of hay and grain, 37,734 pounds of wool given in Table 13 (p. 357) would average 58 cents per pound, while computing it at the average cost of production of grain and hay it was found to be 40 cents per pound. This would be a difference in the net charge of 45 per cent. If a shift from cost of production to market price, or vice versa, which affects expenses covering only one-fifth of the total outlay, could produce so great an alteration as this in the costs, a presumption of serious doubt is raised as to the accuracy of the figures.

FAILURE TO SEPARATE WOOL COSTS.

It has already been noted that the board has not definitely separated wool costs from the other costs involved in sheep raising. This is frankly admitted by the board in connection with the figures supplied as to the net charge against wool. It is stated (p. 313) that "we have considered wool as the chief product and the receipts from mutton are offset against costs." Again (p. 313), "The receipts from wool, minus the net charge against or plus the net credit to a pound of wool, constitute the net income of the business; and the percentage which this sum bears to the capital invested is the rate of income on the investment." It is clear from this that any cause which changes the selling price of mutton necessarily changes everything that has been stated with respect to the cost of wool, which is thus made dependent not upon actual money costs but upon the market prices realized for an entirely distinct commodity which is necessarily raised in connection with the wool, the cost of which is in question. The analysis made by the board in this connection implies two distinct features of the situation which should be considered in ascertaining the meaning of its figures. (1) The board's study shows that numerous changes are occurring in the United States in regard to the demand for mutton and the price received for it, and these indicate that sheep owners who are disposed to raise the mutton type of sheep can convert their industry into a much more profitable undertaking than those who insist upon raising merino sheep.

This is indicated by the fact that the crossbred sheep, returns for which were studied in the Middle West and Southwest, were found to pay the cost of the support and management of the flock before anything had been realized from wool, so that the income from wool was clear gain to the farmer. There is nothing to suggest that the same type of sheep raising should not be introduced in Ohio with a consequent reduction in the cost of producing wool. (2) The changes, according to the board, which are taking place in the price of mutton in foreign countries will inevitably alter the conditions examined there, determining the costs of producing wool. As the board states (p. 343), "the decline in the profits of wool production has, however, been accompanied by an increase in the demand for mutton, resulting from the fact that the production of pork and beef has not kept pace with the growth of population. And at the same time the development of refrigerating facilities has made it possible for the flock owners of countries which, like Australia and South America, are far from the centers of population, to market their mutton." Again the board states (p. 346), "In Australia the receipts from mutton constitute a much smaller proportion of the receipts from other sources. This is partly due to the fact that the great sheep runs of the interior are unfavorably situated as regards marketing, but in a larger measure to the fact that these growers place greater emphasis on the production of wool than on that of mutton and run their flocks accordingly."

Finally, the board says that—

"Should the industry cease to expand, the receipts from other sources would be very seriously reduced and the loss could be repaired only by developing the mutton side of the industry, which would involve modifications of the flock and the finding of a market."

It would appear, then, that in the United States there is a much better position for an increased income from the flock through sales of mutton than there is in Australia, and what is true of Australia is also true of South America. A western farmer in the United States is advantageously placed for sending his sheep to market; and for raising the mutton type of sheep, at least in certain portions of the wool region. The Australian producer of the interior is not only not very well situated for the purpose of getting his mutton to market, but he also has to bear the heavier expense of refrigeration. In addition, the mutton of the United States is protected by substantial tariff duties, against which the foreign grower, if he wishes to sell in the United States, must compete.

The inference is apparent that from the increase in prices paid for mutton the sheep industry of the United States will tend in the future to rely more and more on this element of income and less and less on that which comes from the sale of wool.

It is worth while to note that in the western, or "Territory" wool region, the States which show a very high cost of production or net charge against wool are those in which the mutton type of sheep has been relatively little developed. The board's figures indicating cost of production or net charge against wool (p. 331) show that the highest costs in the Territory region are those in Idaho, Wyoming, and Montana. The board's analysis of the composition of the flock (p. 348) shows that in Wyoming among the rams of the flocks 63 per cent were of the merino type and 37 per cent of the mutton type, while among the ewes 90 per cent were of the merino type and 10 per cent of the mutton type. In Montana 42 per cent of the rams were of the merino type and 58 per cent of the mutton type, while 55 per cent of ewes were of the merino type and 45 per cent of the mutton type. The lowest cost of production reported by the board in this region was that for the State of Washington, where the wool was practically clear gain. In that State 82 per cent of the rams were of the mutton type and 18 per cent of the merino, while all of the ewes were of the merino type. As stated by the board:

"The importance of the merino blood in the three great wool-producing States of Australia is indicated by the following percentages:

"In New South Wales about 85 per cent of the rams and 90 per cent of the ewes are pure merinos. Of the remaining sheep, while some are pure-bred sheep of the mutton type, by far the larger part are cross-bred with a merino foundation. In Victoria, which is the chief mutton-producing district of Australia, 84 per cent of all the sheep are either pure merinos or crossbreds with a merino foundation, and in Queensland 96 per cent of the sheep are pure merinos."

Summing up, the board finds it impossible to separate costs of wool from costs of mutton, so that no positive conclusions can be drawn with reference to the future development of costs, unless both are considered in their relation to each other. Considered in that way, the net charge against wool in the future, if figured on the same basis as employed by the board, will be largely influenced by the showing made regarding mutton, consequently it is reasonable to expect an increase in advantage for the western United States over the more distant countries, from which the exportation of fresh meat is more costly and difficult.

CRITICISM OF TOP STUDY.

The data for cost of tops were obtained by the board through the use of a form, "Schedule 2, Top making," the appropriate part of which is found on pages 631–632. On this form returns were sought regarding raw wool and other stock used, etc., price per pound, total cost of stock, and cost per pound of tops. Credit for noils and wastes is then given, and a provision is made for a net total. In the second part of the schedule space is given for data on sorting, blending, scouring, carding, combing, dyeing, and general expense. This gives the total conversion cost, and added to the cost of stock gives total manufacturing cost. Pounds of material entering into each process, productive or direct labor used, nonproductive or indirect labor used, department materials used, total cost, and cost per pound of tops are shown for the items in the second part of the schedule. In assembling the data from the various schedules the board finds the first difficulty in that the data it obtains are not comparable. It notes that the term "top maker" may be used in two ways, the one applying it to a merchant who purchases raw wool and sells tops to worsted spinners. He may have a plant of his own for combing the wool or have the combing done on commission.

The second definition regards the top maker as a manufacturer who makes tops as an intermediate process in the manufacture of yarns and woolens. The difference in the two instances is that in one there may be a profit for an independent operator, while in the other there may be a loss. Another element of difficulty in the comparison is that "in foreign countries wool combing is done very largely on commission, and there are great establishments whose sole business is the turning of the wool for their customers into tops and noils for a given fixed charge." This is done only to a limited extent in this country, the more general practice being to make the tops in the woolen mill itself (p. 640). Admitting the attending difficulties, the board says that "there are certain costs which inhere in the one method and not in the other" (p. 640), while "the commission rate for combing would under normal conditions cover not only interest on the plant, but whatever profit the comber is able to make besides" (p. 640). Moreover, the board has found difficulty due to the fact that the cost of manufacture differs materially with the character of the wool. Finer wools require more careful treatment in scouring and also a slower speed of the machinery, thereby reducing the output and increasing the cost per unit. It is, therefore, as the board admits, "difficult to tabulate figures giving an average which can be taken as representative, since the variation in the qualities of tops made is so great."

A third difficulty is found in the fact that the proportion of tops and noils secured from the process differs considerably per pound of tops. Charges for commission combing in England differentiate the charges according to these relative percentages, the charge increasing as the proportion of noils increases. Again, difficulty is found in getting at costs as a result of the difference in output. In one mill the average cost for all tops (covering a six-month period) was 4.28 cents per pound, while for another six-month period in the same mill the average cost was 9.37 cents per pound. This difference was due to the fact that during the first period the output was three and one-half times greater than in the latter period, when a part of the machinery was idle and the fixed and overhead charges continued the same. The board has therefore attempted to estimate the costs so far as possible on a basis of running full time; but this must be erroneous in many instances, particularly so when the attempt is made to institute comparisons between conditions in different countries. Although the board presents (p. 642) a series of actual returns showing the cost of producing tops in this country during successive periods at given mills, it does not apparently accept this statement as representative or final. On the contrary, it states that in taking the actual figures on a large output it is impossible to separate labor costs according to the exact quality of the tops (p. 642).

On page 643 is given a table showing the cost of making a very fine quality of tops, and on page 644 is given the cost of combing in a continental plant running on fine Australian merinos and South American crossbreds. Apparently, then, the returns in this plant should have been comparable with those in the American plant or plants represented on page 643. In the latter table the cost of converting choicest Australian wool into tops was $0.0732 per pound, while in the continental plant the highest cost of combing was set down as $0.04459. In spite of this relationship the general conclusion is reached that "the cost of making tops in the United States is about 80 per cent greater than abroad," notwithstanding that the bulk of the tops discussed by the board are of the finer quality which cost only 55 to 65 per cent less to produce in England than here, the lower grades of tops being entirely excluded under the present prohibitive tariff, so that no basis of comparison can be obtained. The general criticism upon the top study, therefore, must be (1) its lack of reduction to a comparable basis; (2) its failure to get standard costs on standard qualities in the United States, or to show the cost of converting an actual sample of Australian wool, or other wool, into tops in England and in the United States. The figures on tops are, in a very high degree, variable and conjectural, being at best little more than an approximation to the facts, and practically admitted to be such by the board.

The fact that in not a few instances a variation of as much as 100 per cent in the production costs is noted, not only for a definite article in a definite place but at two different periods of time, should make it impossible to accept any of the figures given by the board for cost of production of tops as at all definite or final. There is consequently no statement about the cost of making tops that can not be paralleled by another statement from the report in support of an entirely different cost and entirely different conditions of doing the work.

INCONSISTENCY BETWEEN COSTS AND PRICES OF TOPS.

In addition to the statistical difficulties which arise because of the top costs furnished by the board, ground is afforded for doubt regarding the cost figures by observing quotations of prices given by the board in Volume I (p. 106). The board states that "there are no regular quotations of top prices in the United States" (p. 105); and then gives English quotations (p. 106). These quotations presumably afford a basis for figuring corresponding values in the United States with due allowance for duty. The quotations given for tops of specified quality are shown in the following table.

[1] Quotations for 1911 from the Wool Record. In each case they are for "colonial tops." Thirty-twos, thirty-sixes, forties, and forty-sixes were "prepared" tops.

From this it is seen that the cost of number 32's runs as low as 25 cents per pound, the designation of the tops as "32's, 40's, etc.," indicating the count of yarn to which it would spin if worked up. While the board observes that "no hard and fast table of equivalents can be made of the English and American terminology for top (and yarn) qualities," it says that 64's to 70's may be taken as the equivalent of fine tops in the United States. In 1911 the prices for these qualities, as given above, ranged from 50.7 cents to 57.8 cents at Bradford, and with free wool it might be assumed that the cost in the United States would be the same plus the difference in cost of production between the two countries. This, however, would not appear to be the case, as shown by a study of prices of raw wool and cost of making tops, as furnished by the board.

It would seem that the prices in England are considerably higher than indicated by the board's study of wool and tops. If, for example, it be assumed that scoured wool is worth 50 cents a pound, it would appear that the cost in England must be at least 54 cents for this grade and could fall below that only through declines in the price of raw wool sufficient to make up for the difference. Inasmuch as the figures given by the board vary considerably from this price level, the duty required on tops of a given grade can not be considered at all stable or fixed, since the percentage relation is likely to be thrown out of adjustment by changes in the value of wool. Moreover, there is no exact table of equivalents between English and American top and yarn qualities. Hence the comparative cost figures given by the board for tops can in themselves be only approximate. As the board says (p. 106), "Wool varies so widely in quality, both with the locality where produced and with the breed and condition of the sheep on which grown, that any comparisons of qualities must be approximations." As a matter of fact, the quotations given in table 1 for such yarns as 32's at Bradford are so low as to be far below the average price of raw wool in the United States, independent of the cost of manufacture into tops. Yet the board furnishes data on the relative cost of production of No. 32 yarns from tops, apparently assuming that there is a competitive basis upon which comparisons may be made between the two countries.

STATISTICAL CRITICISM OF YARN MANUFACTURE.

The Tariff Board notes that the investigation into the cost of worsted yarns involves the securing of the actual book figures from mills for a given period of time showing the total quantity of yarn produced, the variety of counts, the average count, and the total expenditures for the same period. These expenditures were analyzed in order to put the different mills on a comparative basis as to overhead charges. The board also obtained the use of tables employed by worsted spinners relating to the cost of making different counts of yarn, and finally estimates were secured on the cost of making certain qualities of yarn. There seems to be no reason for doubting the responsibility of these figures under the conditions that are described. The board, however, admits that it is beyond possibility to get figures on a uniform basis. It says that "a mill running full time or overtime can produce much more cheaply than a mill running half time, * * * a mill making worsted yarns in the gray is able to work more cheaply than when yarn is made from dyed tops." In order to overcome the first of these difficulties, the board assumes that all costs are to be figured on the basis of full normal output.

This gives a basis of comparison which does not overcome the difficulty that figures vary widely for other reasons, notable among which is the fact that mills do not work on the same qualities of tops and yarn. The adoption of full normal output as a basis of comparison, therefore, does not help materially, since no allowance is made for variations in the proportions of different classes of yarn manufactured. The board admits this, stating (p. 646) that "variations are found to appear not only according to variations in actual output due to general business fluctuations, but also according as a mill is producing just those yarns for which it is especially equipped."

If the market demand of the moment requires the production of either higher or lower counts, the costs on these will be correspondingly increased. Moreover, the fact that the cost of making a given count of yarn varies with the quality of wool from which it is made, and with the weight of the roving, renders the matter of comparison difficult. All these points are fully acknowledged by the board (pp. 646, 647) as injuring the comparative basis of its computations. There is no reason to believe that the figures obtained by the board, or the figures that could be obtained by any similar organization, would show conditions on a comparable basis, either between mills in different parts of the United States or between mills here and mills abroad. They must be taken as being simply representative of costs under the particular conditions that happen to prevail at the time when the board made its investigations. Furthermore, it was not possible for the board to obtain comparable figures in England, for the reason that the interest charge was included in the English figures, but not included in the American. An allowance was subsequently made for this difference, but it does not appear to have been sufficient to cover the whole variation in the basis of the estimate.

INCOMPLETE YARN COSTS.

The inquiry was not sufficiently extensive from the statistical point of view to furnish an adequate analysis of the cost of producing different yarns. On page 648 are given figures for costs in 10 different kinds of two-ply yarns 28's, 32's, 36's, 38's, 40's, 42's, 44's, 46's 48's, and 60's. None of the coarser or of the finer yarns are given. When figures for England are given, they are not obtained on a comparable basis, but relate only to two-ply 24's, 28's, 32's, 36's, 40's, and 50's, as shown in the following table:

It should be noted that in this table the costs of conversion per pound of yarn of certain grades enumerated are in one or two instances quoted at cost rates, which are not the same as those computed in the detail table on page 648. The figures in Table 2 appear to show a cost in the United States which is almost double that in England, notwithstanding that interest was included in the English costs and not in those of the United States. There is no statement as to whether the comparison is based upon mills which are running full time in both countries, nor is there any specification as to the character of the wool used in each case. The figures given, therefore, for the cost of converting tops into yarn are largely not comparable, as admitted by the board, and are so not only from the standpoint of quality of yarn used, but apparently also from the standpoint of conditions of production, full time or part time operation, and others. In the few cases where material is given for the manufacture of yarn of one single count from different grades of wool no comparative figures are furnished to show English and other foreign costs.

Thus on page 647 is given a table intended to illustrate variations due to changes in the quality of the material and the twist per inch. In those cases where a single quality of yarn—two-ply 30's—was being produced from half-blood wool, it appears that the total expense per pound was about 0.099 cent, while in making the same ply and count from quarter-blood wool the cost was about 0.114 cent per pound. In the first case the yarn was No. 13 and in the latter case it was No. 14. Thus was indicated a difference of 0.015 cent, or about 13 per cent of the higher cost involved in making the yarn from quarter-blood wool. It is clear that a variation of 13 per cent in the cost of making yarns, according to the wool from which they were spun, is one that should be allowed for in figuring the difference in cost between the United States and England in the later tables prepared for that purpose. Nothing of the sort has been done there, however, but the assumption throughout these tables is that in each case the manufacturing operation has been carried on with the same class of wool or tops as was employed in the competing country. This failure to put the two countries upon a comparative basis would alone be sufficient to impair very seriously the basis of estimate.

There is further reason to question the validity of the figures obtained in England, because the data there secured were obtained on a basis of samples. As the board says (p. 650) "figures of cost were secured in England from various manufacturers on actual samples." After they had thus been obtained on the basis of samples (of yarns) the returns were averaged, and the figures given "represent the average of these various calculations." As seen in the United States study, average figures of this kind, even when based upon full data for the mills to which they relate, are necessarily unsatisfactory, because they do not show, and probably can not be made to show, the cost of production carried on under similar conditions. Still less could there be this degree of comparability when the figures were made up from samples, as the furnishing of cost data on such a basis would be largely conjectural, nor could it be known how far English manufacturers were reckoning upon the same fullness of operation, uniformity of processes, and general similarity of conditions, found by the board in its American study to be essential to any accurate investigation of the cost figures for comparative use.

It does not seem, therefore, that the yarn figures furnished by the board are likely to be necessarily representative of the actual manufacturing conditions in American mills for any very considerable production, or for any very considerable period of time. When it is considered that there was still less uniformity and inclusiveness of information in the English inquiry, the conclusion must be drawn that the analysis, particularly in its comparative features with reference to yarn costs, has been quite unsatisfactory.

INCONSISTENCY BETWEEN YARN COSTS AND PRICES.

In volume 1 of the board's report is given the following table in which is presented quotations in England for worsted and hair yarns:

This shows that worsted yarns, 2/32's, were, in January, 1911, quoted at from 37 to 43.6 cents per pound, or an average of about 40 cents per pound. On page 648 (Vol. III) of the board's report the cost of converting tops into 2/32's is given as 14.48 cents per pound. As the report states, on page 650, that the costs of turning tops into yarn is about twice in the United States what it is in England, the cost of making this kind of yarn in England should have been about 7.24 cents. This would make the cost of the yarn material, on a basis of 40 cents per pound, 32.76 cents per pound. This would be far below the average scoured wool price of Australian wool or fine wool of any kind. The board's data are admittedly given with reference to medium and high medium grades, employed in the making of cloths. The yarns from 2/28's to 2/60's cited on page 648 are given as "medium and high medium worsted yarns," and on page 113 it is stated that "30's to 40's are comparatively coarse yarns, while 40's to 56's are medium."

The difference in the price quotations as compared with figures for cost and the apparent discrepancies in nomenclature raise doubts as to the accuracy of the board's figures on one or both of these sets of returns. It appears, therefore, that the figures furnished by the board for yarns are not substantiated by the yarn prices cited in the first volume of the report. Thus, for example, on page 648, the cost of converting 2/60's from tops into yarn is given as about 32 cents, while the mean quotation of these yarns in England averaged about 80 cents in 1911. Deducting 16 cents, the cost of conversion in England, as indicated by the board, there would be left 64 cents as the cost of the tops actually entering into a pound of yarn. This cost would apply to considerably more than a pound of tops, because of the waste which has already been noted. Yet the quotation for tops given as "60's, super," is stated on page 106 as ranging from 49.7 to 54.2 cents, the mean being about 52 cents—12 cents less than the cost of the tops entering into a pound of yarn. If the board is right in saying the shrinkage in converting tops into yarn amounts to 4.5 per cent (credit being allowed for wastes recovered), the shrinkage on a pound of tops for conversion into No. 60 yarn would not be more than 3 cents at most, in which case the tops, plus cost of shrinkage, would be 55 cents instead of 64, the figure obtained by taking the quotations for yarns and subtracting conversion costs in order to work out the material value entering into the product. It might be assumed that, whereas the board's figure for conversion is a cost figure, the prices taken from English quotations are selling rates in the market and can not be exactly compared. This objection has little validity, because of the fact that the analysis just made is based on prices for yarns and prices for tops, and the allowance for profit must be about the same in both cases, so that the difference may be estimated on the basis of approximately the difference in cost.

In Table 4 is given a column showing the quotation furnished by the board for yarns of various counts from 32's to 60's. From this is deduced a column of differences showing the amount that was added to a pound of tops of a given description by converting it into yarn. It is seen that in case of 32's, the average price was 26.1 cents for the tops, while for the yarn it was 40.3 cents. This seems to indicate a difference of 14.2 cents as the approximate cost of converting the tops into yarn. In Table 2, which is taken from the board's report (p. 650), the cost of converting tops into yarn is given as 8.1 cents, or for commission work, 9.1 cents, as against the 14.2 cents, deduced from the actual quotations. It is interesting to observe that the cost figure for the United States on this same yarn (Table 2) was 14.48 cents per pound, or not far from the cost in England, indicated by the difference of comparative prices. It might be assumed here again that the board's cost figures are for cost and not for price, but that objection does not apply to the charge for commission work, which in this case is given as 9.1 cents per pound, while, moreover, all of the English figures are given "including interest," so that they ought to correspond with the highest market charge for yarns of that particular ply and count. On the whole, therefore, it would seem to be an inevitable conclusion that the figures furnished by the board for yarn prices do not correspond to or substantiate those which it has furnished for yarn cost.

CRITICISM OF CLOTH DATA.

The criticisms made with reference to yarns and tops become much more serious when attention is directed to the cloth-manufacturing analysis of the board. The board not only concedes the impossibility of securing data as to the comparative costs by processes of making fabrics, but also the extreme difficulty of getting comparative figures even on fabrics. This is because (p. 627) "there are no absolute standards in the cloth trade, and each mill turns out a great variety of different fabrics." Moreover, it was not possible to get mills abroad to give costs on the same basis as in the United States, because they do not keep their books upon the same plan. It is found, therefore, that the board almost wholly dismisses the cost method of analysis when it comes to fabric costs. Instead it submits samples of given fabrics to the mills and permits them to give estimates on the cost of making these fabrics, based upon experience with similar operations, but largely conjectural, because in many instances, probably in the majority, the mills had never devoted themselves to manufacturing the particular kind of cloth on which they were asked to furnish cost estimates. As special reasons for distrusting the figures supplied through this sample inquiry, therefore, may be mentioned the following:

1. The question of uniformity and amount of output is fully as important in connection with the manufacture of cloth as in yarns and tops, yet the method pursued makes no allowance whatever for such differences, and necessarily could not do so subject to the conditions under which the inquiry was conducted.

2. There is no indication as to the origin of the wool used in the various fabrics and whether it was imported into the United States or whether it was the product of domestic sheep and was worked up at prevailing prices without the payment of duty.

3. There could be no ascertainment of the extent of profits allowed to intervening factors; as, for example, the granting of profits on tops, yarns, etc., to persons who supplied these intermediate products to the mills that made the cloth, as compared with the conditions prevailing in plants which made their own tops, yarns, etc., and then used them in cloth manufacture.

4. In many cases it was found that different methods of production were followed in the United States and abroad, the goods being differently dyed in the countries compared and a different number of looms operated in some instances in foreign countries as compared with the number operated by the employee in American mills.

These factors alone would render the data obtained untrustworthy, because they would indicate that it was impossible to obtain figures upon a distinctly comparable basis. In the absence of such a comparative basis, about all that could be said for the figures as to cloth costs at the best would be that they represented probable costs of making the cloths under varying conditions in American and European mills, these varying conditions including differences in character of machinery and speed thereof; amount of work done in the mills as compared with total capacity; character of raw material used; and source from which intermediate products, such as tops, yarns, and the like, were obtained. Even if, therefore, it should be admitted that the board's figures for tops and yarns obtained by the method of aggregate returns were trustworthy, it could not be admitted that the figures for cloths were similarly trustworthy, and least of all could it be conceded that these figures were in position to be compared with those of the earlier products obtained by the other method referred to. This produces a separation between that part of the board's report which has to do with the earlier products and that part of the report which deals with cloth. There is no foundation, either actual or professed, for considering the figures given as furnishing a complete analysis from tops up to cloth, because of the entire change of method employed in the study of cloth costs.

EXTENT OF COST INQUIRY IN WOOLENS.

One of the principal questions to be considered in connection with the manufacturing investigation of the board is the extent and reliability of the inquiry. The board opens its statement with the assertion that "in the course of the wool and worsted inquiry, agents of the board visited 188 different mills," and that of these 174 furnished verified information. These mills are considered to be "representative of the industry in this country," because they include practically two-thirds of its productive capacity and employ 64 per cent of the total number of persons engaged in the business.

The assertion that an inclusive inquiry has been made should be subjected to very careful scrutiny. In spite of the large number of mills visited, the board concedes its inability to secure general returns with respect to cloth. It notes that there is no possibility of discussing the cost of cloth in general because of the great variety of different fabrics, which renders such an investigation in general terms absurd. It then takes up (p. 626) the question whether or not results could be obtained by a study of processes, but it finds that this is practicable only with a certain few.

A statement of costs obtained by this method, says the board, "would be utterly meaningless" as applied to cloth, and "the same is true of worsted yarns." Only by a process of prorating various charges can anything satisfactory be obtained in yarn. In regard to cloths, even this method was found to be impossible, and therefore the board was driven to the ascertainment of costs of cloths by submitting samples to manufacturers and obtaining from them cost statements relating to these particular samples. It is evident that this sample method is entirely different in principle from any of the methods suggested by the board for the ascertainment of costs in the more elementary processes of top and yarn making and others related thereto. What the board has to say about the cost of manufacturing wool into products of various kinds may, therefore, be discussed under two heads—the one the reliability of the sample method of analysis, the other the satisfactory or unsatisfactory character of the study made of the more elementary processes.

STUDY OF SAMPLES.

Turning attention first to the question of samples, it is found that the board divides its samples analysis into two different groups of results. The first deals with American and foreign costs on fabrics made in the United States; the second deals with foreign-made goods of the kind imported. In the first groups analysis is made of 55 different items, data as to each of which were obtained from American and English mills, while in some cases further information was had as to French and German mills. In the second group 14 samples are analyzed for costs.

It is clear that in this analysis the factors to be taken into account are (1) how many mills were consulted with reference to the cost of these samples; (2) how representative were these mills? On these points the board throws no light whatever. It states that, after a schedule had been prepared for the analysis of costs, "our agents then visited the mills with specific samples and worked out with the proper officials the cost under each separate process. In practically all cases they were given complete access to the books in order to see by what method particular charges were made and to satisfy themselves that the estimated costs entered were based on the actual costs at the mill. By this detailed analysis by processes the estimates came as near to the actual costs as the mill itself was able to make them." In getting the foreign cost "the method adopted * * * was similar to that used in this country."

The citations make it evident that the sample study was not a study of actual costs at all. It was a collection of estimates as to the cost of making cloth at various mills, many of which had never made the cloths in question. In getting foreign costs it was possible only to obtain the same conjectural material. The report states (p. 630) "samples of identical fabrics cut from the same piece were taken to England and to the Continent. These were shown to a number of manufacturers and their estimates on the cost of production secured." They were then tested by being submitted to a cloth manufacturer, who checked them from his own experience.

The only light thrown by the board on the character of the mills consulted abroad is the statement that they were "mills of high efficiency" (p. 630). So far as can be ascertained, the board does not state whether the mills consulted in the United States were or were not mills of similar high efficiency as compared with other American mills. This makes it obvious that the board did not in any case obtain figures for actual costs from a considerable number of manufacturers in its sample investigation; that it did not obtain comparative figures, even in the mills which were consulted, for cloth of kinds which they were in the habit of producing; that it did not obtain figures abroad in this part of the investigation, on fabrics made abroad, but only theoretical estimates on cloth produced in the United States; that it does not make clear in its report whether the foreign figures and American figures were produced from mills of similar relative degrees of efficiency or not. There is no reason to suppose, therefore, that anything was obtained in this investigation which might not have been obtained in a quite different form and with figures leading to a very different conclusion had mills been consulted and different fabrics and more exact modes of comparison been employed. The sample investigation can not, therefore, be regarded as throwing any general light upon costs, since obviously the system itself is based upon no general data.

AD VALOREM OR SPECIFIC DUTIES.

Much attention has been given by the Tariff Board to the method of levying duties.

The board admits the unfortunate effects of the present specific rates on raw wool, and notes that "various wools of heavy shrinkage can not be profitably imported into the United States," while it also comments (p. 381) on "the practice abroad of preparing and selecting the light-shrinkage sorts that are peculiarly suitable for the American trade." After describing the proposed ad valorem rate, the graduated specific duty on the scoured content, etc., it finally decides against the ad valorem plan and in favor of the specific rate on the scoured pound. With reference to the ad valorem mode of levying duties, it states that "the economic objection to an ad valorem duty on wool arises from the fact that the amount of duty paid, since it fluctuates with the foreign value of the commodity, would not be adjusted to the needs of the Government, of the consumer, nor of the American woolgrower. A speculative change in the market which increased the price of wool would automatically lead to an increase in the amount of duty at the very time that the manufacturer is most hampered by the existing high price, when the consumer most needs relief, and the woolgrower is most prosperous."

That the real question in the mind of the board does not, however, relate to the consumer can be seen from the latter remark that "if the basic idea of the duty on wools is to give the domestic grower permanent protection, it should remain as uniformly effective as possible under all changes of foreign conditions (shortage, overproduction, etc.). Ad valorem duties would not accomplish this * * *." It is the supposed inability of the ad valorem duties to give what the board calls "permanent protection" that condemns them in its sight. As for the remedy suggested by the board—the levying of duties on the scoured-wool content—the contention that "some method of assessing a specific rate on the clean content would remedy most of the primary faults of Schedule K" (p. 398) is answered by Edward Moir, president of the Crown Mills, Marcellus, N. Y., in a recent letter to the Daily Trade Record, as follows:

"The board states that ad valorem rates are open to grave difficulties from the administrative and revenue point of view in the case of a crude and bulky commodity like wool.

"Further, that ad valorem rates would give a high duty per pound when prices are high at a time when the consumer most needs relief and the producer more able to bear competition. With the low price of wool, the duty per pound would be low when the consumer has least need of competing wools and the producer is least able to bear competition.

"I believe the statements of the board as to the effect of ad valorem rates not being easily collectible comes from their lack of knowledge of wool in its various conditions. Other men who are very familiar with wool say that the values of wools can be readily determined and the proper duty easily collected, and I have been assured by officials high in the customs service that such is the fact; also, that it would simplify the work of the customhouse if all wools were assessed by value.

"The board says an ad valorem rate would give a high duty per pound when wool is high and a low duty when wool is low. This follows as a natural sequence of the law of supply and demand, yet the following paragraph, in which is given a plan said to be better in the opinion of the board than by ad valorem rates, for the assessing of wool duty, would have the very same objection.

"That the chief objections to the present rate on the grease pound could be met by levying some form of specific duty based on the clean or scoured content of the wool imported.

"If a specific rate on the clean pound is adopted, it will work out in this way, as shown by table appended, and for the purpose of illustration I will take 20 cents per clean pound as the flat rate of duty:

Wool costing clean—	Per cent.
20 cents per pound, duty 20-cent rate	100
30 cents per pound, duty 20-cent rate	66⅔
40 cents per pound, duty 20-cent rate	50
50 cents per pound, duty 20-cent rate	40
60 cents per pound, duty 20-cent rate	33⅓
70 cents per pound, duty 20-cent rate	28⅔

"The range in price from 20 to 70 cents per pound clean, used in the above table, is conservative. Why the board should recommend a method of assessing the duty upon wool that shows a variation of 350 per cent in the rate of duty passes my comprehension. It is true that this method is only one-half as objectionable as the present method, seeing it equalizes on the shrinkage, yet does not on the value, as the table shows. An ad valorem rate would place all on the same footing and lay a proper foundation for an equitable duty upon goods in place of the present inequitable one.

"One can not but think that this recommendation, which the board has made, must be considered as due to want of technical knowledge on the part of its members of the varying conditions and qualities of wool and the various fabrics these wools are suitable for making. It would appear to be an error creating a tariff board whose members have had no business experience in the branches of trade upon which they are expected to report and offer recommendations upon. It would have been much better for the board to have confined its work to the gathering of statistics on the different schedules than to suggest methods that, if adopted, are not only inequitable, but will work hardships to different branches of the woolen business.

"The objection by the board that an ad valorem duty has the effect of increasing the duty when wool is high and lowering it when wool is cheap abroad is not well taken, as when wool is cheap abroad the home manufacturer should get his raw material on a parity of value with the foreign manufacturer or he can not compete.

"The only way I can seen any force to this contention of the board's is that it simply had the woolgrower in mind when recommending a method of assessing the wool duty by specific rate per clean pound in the hope that such might insure to the grower a high price when wool is cheap abroad and a still higher price when it is dear. The board seems to have left out of consideration the necessity of the home manufacturer being put in a position to compete with the foreign manufacturer, who has cheaper wool, due to a falling market. Besides, the consumer certainly should have some benefit in the price of commodities due to this market condition of the raw material."

INTERPRETATION OF TARIFF BOARD'S REPORT.

A. RAW WOOL.

Raw wool in Schedule K of the tariff law is divided into three classes. Class 1 is described in paragraph 361, class 2 in paragraph 362, and class 3 in paragraph 363. The duty on wools of class 1 is fixed at 11 cents per pound, on wools of class 3 at 12 cents, and on wools of class 3 at 4 and 7 cents per pound, according to value. In the event that the wools are imported washed, the duty on the first class is twice as much as if imported unwashed. If imported scoured, the duty is three times that on unwashed wool. The duty on wools of the third class, if imported in condition for carding, is three times that on unwashed wool. In dealing with raw wool the board treats the three classes separately, recognizing the difference in source, the conditions under which produced, and the amount of production.

1. Third-class wools: The board points out that practically no wool of the third class is produced in the United States. This wool is derived from a variety of sources fully considered (pp. 413–437), but the United States is not recognized among these sources except in a very limited manner. In the words of the board, "There is very little wool of class 3 now raised in the United States" (p. 437). Reviewing the history of the industry, the board further states (p. 437): "Twenty-five years ago there were 6,000,000 or 7,000,000 pounds of wool of a carpet grade grown in some of the Western States and Territories, but it has been estimated that not more than a half million pounds of this domestic wool is now sold annually to carpet mills." Apparently this is intended to say that not more than a half million pounds of this domestic wool is annually produced in the United States at the present time. As the total annual production of wool of all grades in the United States within recent years is about 325,000,000 pounds, it is seen that the amount of carpet wool can not, under the board's statement, amount to more than about one-seventh of 1 per cent of the total wool output of this country. In view of the large demands for these wools from manufacturers of carpets and coarse woolen goods, it is evident that this class of wool does not require the protection of 4 cents per pound given it by the present tariff law. On the authority of the board it may be stated that the production of third-class wools in this country is so limited as to be a negligible quantity and that the necessity for protection may, therefore, be disregarded.

2. Second-class wools: Of the other classes of wool the board says (p. 299): "The great bulk of the wool grown in this country would, if imported, fall under class I." The wools produced in the United States are not strictly comparable with those of foreign countries, and the board concludes (p. 382) that there is no reason for maintaining a distinction between first and second class wools. In the meantime, however, such a distinction is made in the tariff law, and in effect the board recognizes it in its discussion. The board further states that about two-thirds of the wool grown west of the Missouri River is "fine" or "fine medium," while about 25 to 30 per cent of that east of the Mississippi is classed as "fine." The territory devoted to woolgrowing in this country is separated by the board into two divisions. In the first division (class A) is included all the States west of the Mississippi River except Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri. In the second division (class B) is placed the States of Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri, and all the States east of the Mississippi River. In the region designated as Class B there are two well-defined sheep-raising regions; the one comprises Ohio and portions of adjacent States, the other the remainder of the territory east of the Mississippi River. In the Ohio region there are about 5,000,000 sheep, which produce a fine grade of merino wool. In the remainder of this "class" there are found about 10,000,000 sheep, whose wool is below fine merino grade, and may be properly described as "crossbred." Throughout a territory in the West, containing about 35,000,000 sheep, the cost of producing fine wool is found to be about 11 cents per pound. The cost in the East (Ohio) is stated to be about 19 cents per pound, while in the remainder of the territory east of the Mississippi it appears that "the net charge against the wool grown on sheep of the crossbred type is negligible." This statement is borne out by the figures of Table 19 (pp. 365–368), covering returns of 135 crossbred flocks.

Of these crossbred flocks (p. 372) 121, or 90 per cent, "show receipts from other sources which equal or exceed the receipts from wool, and on an average for all these flocks the receipts from other sources constitute about two-thirds of the total receipts." This, moreover, is an exceptionally unfavorable showing, as the board states (p. 373): "Of the 10,000,000 crossbred sheep a considerable part are kept under such conditions as to yield larger profits than do the crossbred flocks considered in Table 19 of this report." However, the general conclusion is reached that "for the crossbred flocks of this region as a whole the receipts from other sources are quite sufficient to meet the total costs of maintenance, and therefore the receipts from wool remain as profit."

From this it may be fairly concluded that wools of the kind which compete with the output of these crossbred sheep do not need protection. This is clear from the fact that the wool income from these flocks is a clear profit, there being no charge whatever against it. It may, therefore, be safely concluded from the board's report that class 2 wools also do not require protection, inasmuch as the cost of production is zero. As already noted, the board says (p. 382): "Practically all of the domestic clip, if offered for entry at our ports, would fall under class 1 of the existing law. That is to say, the great bulk of the wool grown in the United States shows the use of merino blood, either immediate or remote, in its production. Imports under class 2 are relatively unimportant, and there is no longer valid reasons for the maintenance of the distinction as between English and merino wools so long in force." It is further stated (p. 384): "There is an enormous quantity of wool produced in Australasia and South America known in the trade as crossbred that has practically no equivalent in our domestic production." The comparison already made is, however, as near as can be drawn—although it is true that most of the domestic wools show the use of some merino blood in their production. In a table (p. 385) the board recognizes their comparability by a direct comparison between domestic wools grading one-half blood and under, and foreign crossbred wools.

3. First-class wool: The real question in the wool schedule of the tariff act, in the opinion of the board, is the production of the western wools of fine merino quality. On page 301, under the caption "Where competition centers," the board says that in Wyoming, Montana, Oregon, and Idaho there is a staple wool which corresponds with some of the best Australian wools, and it is there that the study of cost of production has apparently been most carefully made. It is noted that the "Delaine wools of Ohio, Pennsylvania, etc., are claimed to be the strongest wools of merino blood raised in the world, etc."; these are the wools which later in the report (p. 377) are shown to be obtained from about 5,000,000 sheep at an estimated cost of 19 cents per pound. On this small quantity of wool a special tariff protection would presumably have to be recommended by the board to safeguard it from competition. Omitting this portion of the fine-wool production, since, as noted by the board, the conditions are peculiar, the sheep being maintained for "general purposes" rather than primarily for their wool, attention will be concentrated on the western woolgrowing region, where, according to the board, "competition centers." Although the board has mentioned only the staples of Montana, Wyoming, Oregon, and Idaho as directly competing with the Australian, and although it admits that fine and fine medium wools constitute only 66 per cent of the total production of the western region, it may be assumed, for the sake of discussion, that the whole of the western region is to be regarded as devoted to the production of fine and fine medium wools, and, therefore, on a competitive basis. On page 330 of the report there is given a tabular statement showing by States the number of sheep studied in Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming. The total number of sheep so studied is 3,151,731, and these yielded 20,764,713 pounds of wool in the grease. The net charge against wool in this region is 10.9 cents per pound, while the averaging selling price is 15.9 cents per pound, a difference of 5 cents between the cost and selling prices. Considering only the States producing the very finest staple, namely, Wyoming, Montana, Oregon, and Idaho, the situation is not materially different. In Idaho an unusually high cost, 17.3 cents per pound, was reported, in Montana the cost was 13.8 cents, in Oregon 10.9 cents, and in Wyoming 12.4 cents per pound. The average returns from Montana, Wyoming, and Idaho show a net charge against wool of 14.2 cents per pound. The remaining eight States of the group show an average charge of 8.4 cents per pound. In discussing the competitive conditions of production of wool, we may speak first of the western region as a whole, where woolgrowing is carried on as an independent industry, and we may subsequently consider these States as producing a special type of wool on an independent basis.

The following table appears on page 330 of the board's report, except the addition of columns showing the per cent of shrinkage, the scoured-wool yield, the net charge, and the value or price per scoured pound.

[1] Report, p. 383.

This table now serves as a foundation for an analysis of the competitive strength of the fine-wool producing region of the United States as compared with foreign countries. A comparison based on the grease pound would be misleading, because wools are found to shrink in different proportions. The competitive capacity of a region is dependent upon its ability to produce a certain quantity of scoured wool at a specified price. The manufacturer is not primarily interested in the grease-pound charge, but in the cost of the wool ready for spinning. This point is freely admitted by the Tariff Board, of course (p. 382), though it does not directly relate its data as to shrinkage with its production cost of grease wools.

In connection with the study of shrinkage made on page 383 the board presents the following table:

The following table from page 385 of the report throws additional light on the subject of shrinkage:

In Table 6 above is set forth the per cent of shrinkage undergone by western United States wools when scoured in United States mills, and the wool thus treated is stated to be "fine wool." This shrinkage figure, stated as 67.25 per cent, is used in computing the fine scoured-wool yield of the grease wool actually studied and reported upon by the board in the western United States. The board gives the net charge per pound against wool in each of the States enumerated, and in ascertaining the cost per scoured pound this amount is multiplied by the number of pounds of grease wool necessary to produce a pound of scoured wool at the rate of shrinkage indicated. This shows, in each of these States, the investment in grease wool necessary to secure a pound of scoured wool. If the sale price of the wool in grease is applied to the number of pounds necessary to produce a scoured pound, the result is the price paid at current rates during the period of investigation for sufficient grease wool to produce a scoured pound. The average cost of the wool studied was 33.2 cents per pound, based on the shrinkage percentage of 67.25, and the average price when scoured was 48.5 cents per pound. On the basis of the board's investigations, therefore, these figures represent the competitive situation in the fine-wool district of the West, which, as the board has expressed it, is the section "where competition centers."

We may now turn to the question of the competitive strength of the Australian wools which compete with the fine wools of our western region. The interesting point is not the price at which these wools are sold in Australia, but that which is paid for them in American mills. On pages 387–390 is a table showing "A record of actual importations and scourings in a representative American mill covering more than 10,000,000 pounds of class I wool." This amount is about one-half of the amount considered in the tabulation for the Western States. If limited to the Australian merino wools less than 5,000,000 pounds have been included. Since approximately two-thirds of the total output of the western region is fine and fine medium wools, the other third consists of wools somewhat comparable to the crossbred wools of Australia—grading half blood or below—all of the Australian wool given in the board's record of actual imports and scourings at a representative American mill may, therefore, be included.

The results thus secured show that, taking all of the wool, the average price paid per scoured pound was 50.8 cents, while for the fine merino wools the price paid per scoured pound was about 50 cents. This figure should be compared with the one already obtained for the western region, which shows an actual cost per scoured pound of 33.2 cents and an actual realized price paid per scoured pound of 48.5 cents, assuming the total output to be of merino origin. The figures show that, entirely independent of the payment of tariff duties on the importations of Class I wool, the American industry was in a distinctly competitive position. Comparing the fine merino staples raised in the Northwestern States of the United States, including Idaho, Montana, Oregon, and Wyoming, with the merino wools for which figures are given, it appears that the cost of the fine staples in the United States was 13.7 cents in the grease, or 41.8 cents scoured, and the realized price paid was 16.9 cents in the grease, or 51.5 cents per scoured pound, while the price paid for the Australian merino by American mills was over 50 cents per pound. This appears to show that, with freight rates included, the western wool-raising industry is fully able to hold its own against the Australian staple.

In the preceding computation, as already noted, the shrinkage was 67.25 per cent, which is the rate quoted by the board for fine wools of the West. As elsewhere shown in the board's report, the Territory wools consist of about 66 per cent of fine wool and 34 per cent of the lower grade product. A fairer basis of computation might be found in the use of the shrinkage percentage computed as a weighted or true average, inasmuch as the various grades of wool shrink in different proportions. Such a weighted or true average has been worked out upon the basis of the board's figures for fine wools and wools of one-half blood, three-eighths blood, and one-fourth blood. This shrinkage percentage is 64.32, which may be taken as the general shrinkage of Territory wools. In the following table a computation is presented showing the same comparison except that in this instance the percentage of 64.32 is used instead of 67.25 per cent.

Protection and the price of raw wool: It is not necessary, however, to depend solely upon the figures given by the board for the cost of producing raw wool, or the "net charge against raw wool," for conclusions as to the amount of protection needed by the wool industry in the United States. The board has not only given the figures relating to costs in the region studied, but has also investigated the prices of raw wool in leading markets. It is shown that the price realized for wool in the western woolgrowing region, including the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, etc., was 15.9 cents per pound. If the shrinkage of this wool be taken at the figure, 67.25 per cent, given by the Tariff Board (p. 383), it will appear that the actual scoured wool costs approximately 48 cents per pound. This represents the cost of wool which must be purchased in the grease at the rate mentioned by the Tariff Board, as actually realized by the sellers of the wool, in order to supply the buyer with a pound of scoured wool ready for manufacture.

In volume 1 of the board's report (p. 65) is presented a table, taken from the bulletin of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, showing the total wool product of the United States for 1910. This table shows that the scoured value of all wool produced in the United States in the year 1910, aggregating 321,362,750 pounds and yielding 141,805,813 pounds of scoured wool, was 51.12 cents per pound. Practically no wool of the third class was produced in the United States in 1910, but the product of the year is composed of first and second class wools, while in the far West region the product is largely fine wools. The table shows that the value of the output in Nevada is 54 cents per scoured pound; that of California, 46 cents; that of Colorado, 47 cents; that of Arizona, 53 cents; and that of Texas, 55 cents, etc. Local and seasonal variations will always occur, but we may accept the figure already cited from the cost of production report—15.9 cents per pound, giving a scoured value of about 48 cents per pound—as corresponding substantially to the market value. Elsewhere the board has presented the quotations of American wools in Boston, giving the so-called "territory wool," of which we have been speaking, as the product of Montana, Wyoming, Utah, etc., on a scoured basis.

The prices there given for 1910 range from 50 to 74 cents per pound according to grade, while for 1911 the prices range from 40 to 62 cents. This also confirms the accuracy of the figures already mentioned. In a study of the prices charged for Australian wools in London, the board shows that wools belonging to Class I sold in London in 1910 at prices ranging from about 16 cents to about 32 cents per pound, according to grades. In October, 1911, the range was from about 17 cents to about 44 cents (p. 34, Vol. I). In another table (p. 213, Vol. I) the board gives prices per pound for certain foreign wools in England, as reported by the Bradford Chamber of Commerce. In this table are given two kinds of Australian wools, namely, "Port Phillip" and "Adelaide." The former averaged 26.4 cents per pound in 1910 and the latter 18.3 cents. These figures are identical with those given from another source in the table previously cited, and represent the price charged for two good grades (not the best) of Australian wool, which on importation into the United States would rank as Class I. If these be accepted as representative and a mean taken, we shall have 22.4 cents per pound as the price (taken as the mean) of wool competing with our western product.

The board has made an elaborate study of shrinkage in the second volume of its report. Elsewhere we have used figures showing the shrinking of Australian wools in American mills. These figures can not be used for the present purpose, because Australian wools are imported in a skirted condition and consequently shrink less than they would if imported in their natural condition. It is necessary, therefore, to ascertain the shrinkage of Australian wools in the mills to which they are sent for shrinkage in a natural condition. The board (p. 387) states that the shrinkage figure for total wool production of all countries given by Helmuth, Schwartze & Co. is universally accepted in the trade and names 48.54 per cent as that of Australasia. In its study of actual shrinkage in the United States it shows that Australian wool shrinks 48.22 per cent (p. 383). If we accept the figure 48.54 as representing the shrinkage, it will appear that the figure 22.4 cents, which we have already given as the assumed mean price of Australian wools competing with our western wools, must be divided by 51.46 (or 100 minus 48.54) in order to find the value of the wool in a scoured pound. This computation gives 43.5 cents.

Previous figures have shown that scoured wool from western fleece may be taken as worth 48 cents per pound. The difference, then, is 4.5 cents (assuming that freight rates to the mills offset one another), and this must be reckoned as an ad valorem rate on 43.5 cents, which would give a result of about 13 per cent ad valorem, the protection apparently demanded by western wool producers, assuming the figures we have given to be correct. It is clear that in the case of the more expensive Australian wools there would be no advantage whatever. This is shown by the figures of the Tariff Board representing the actual importation and scouring in a representative American mill covering more than 10,000,000 pounds of class 1 wool. Considering the figures given for Australian merinos, it is found that about 50 cents per scoured pound was paid, so that the Australian wool cost the producer actually more than the western wool; or, allowing 2 cents a pound freight on the western wool to the mill, something like the same price, probably a little less in some cases. In this case apparently actual experience with a large quantity of wool did not indicate any necessity for tariff protection. In general, with Australian grease wool at 20 cents a pound or higher, there is little necessity for tariff protection, as indicated by actual purchases in the market. At that price the western woolgrower is able to furnish his wool in successful competition on the scoured-pound basis, accepting the actual prices found in the Tariff Board's report as a basis for the comparison.

Competitive conditions.—The position of the western woolgrower compared with that of the Australian producer may be discussed without reference to prices in the market, and simply upon a basis of cost, as reported by the board. In that case it will be seen from table 5 that a cost of about 11 cents per pound was found to exist on the average in the west, while in Australia the cost was "a few cents a pound" and in South America "4 to 5 cents." Taking 4 to 5 cents a pound as the cost in South America and Australia, and selecting the higher figure—5 cents—just as we have selected the higher figure—11 cents—from the board's report, there is found to exist a disadvantage in the United States of about 6 cents per pound on grease wool. This supposedly represents the amount by which the net charge against wool in the United States exceeds the net charge against wool in South America and Australia. The comparison, however, has not taken into account cost of transportation. The subject of transportation is discussed by the board in volume 2 (pp. 351, 352), where it appears that "$2 a hundred pounds is believed to be a fair estimate for the average cost of transportation of grease wool from the West to Boston," while (p. 352) "the cost of transportation from the Australian producer to Boston ranges between $1.84¼ and $3.191."

The average cost of transportation of Australian wool is thus about $2.50 a hundred pounds, or one-half cent more per pound on the Australian wool than on the western American wool. We may, therefore, regard the western American woolgrower as suffering a disadvantage, not of 6 cents a pound, but of about 5½ cents. If it be assumed, on the basis of the board's shrinkage figures (p. 385) that the total shrinkage of western wools in the United States mills grading one-half blood and under is the average of the shrinkages given for the different grades, we shall have a shrinkage of 54.96 per cent. Our 5½ cents, therefore, will represent the cost of 45.04 per cent of the disadvantage we suffer in the production of a pound of scoured wool. The total disadvantage will then be about 12.2 cents. Accepting the prices given in the board's table for actual importations of Australian wool, and prices paid therefor (pp. 387–389), we may again take the value of a scoured pound of Australian wool at an American mill as 50.8 cents. In that case 12.2 cents reckoned as an ad valorem upon the value of the imported Australian wool would be nearly 25 per cent, or, measured in cents per pound, would simply be itself the amount of the duty called for in a specific form, namely, 12.2 cents. This apparently would be the maximum duty which could be demanded by the western wool producer on wools of the kind referred to under the most unfavorable circumstances. On the finer grades with a higher shrinkage this percentage would be larger, but in that case the price assumed must be a good deal higher. The ad valorem percentage would be much the same.

It should be observed, however, that a protection of 5.5 cents per pound of grease wool, or 12.4 cents per pound of scoured wool, would amply protect most of the States included in the western region. There would be very few of them in which the cost of production is so high as to require a protection of 5.5 cents per grease pound. This result may be exemplified as follows: Let the net charge against wool in South America and Australia be taken as 5 cents. The cost of production or net charge against wool reported in California is 7.1 cents. Allowing one-half cent for freight charge as before, the net disadvantage for California as a producer would be 7.1 minus 5.5, or 1.6 cents. This would be less than one-third of the 5.5 cents protection mentioned. In the same way the protection required in Colorado would be 8.7 minus 5.5, or 3.2 cents. In Nevada, with a cost of 4.1 cents net, protection required would be still smaller. New Mexico, with a cost of production of 8.3 cents, would be only at a slight disadvantage as compared with a foreign cost plus freight of 5.5 cents. Washington, which has no net charge on wool but a very slight credit to wool, would need no protection whatever. On the whole, probably not more than three or four States of the group would require protection of 5.5 cents.

In the following table is computed the net disadvantage under which the Western States labor in the production of a scoured pound of wool and the ad valorem duty which would be necessary in order to place the western woolgrower upon a basis of equality with the Australian and South American grower in the American market. This ad valorem rate is computed upon a basis of 50.8 cents for Australian wool and 37.4 for South American wool. These figures have been obtained by averaging the quotations given by the board for the actual experience of an American mill in the importation of 10,000,000 pounds of foreign wool. It should be noted that the ad valorem duties which are thus indicated vary enormously according as the price of wool varies and, of course, as the disadvantage per scoured pound varies. The difficulty in the argument is found in the fact that a uniform price is assumed for all foreign wools, whereas in fact these foreign wools consist of a series of different grades. None of the figures can be said, therefore, to be computed, in the strict sense, with any authority. It is observable that the average rate of protection needed to safeguard against Australian competition is about 30 per cent, as shown by this table, and that needed to protect against South American competition is about 40 per cent. This would seem to indicate that South America was a more dangerous competitor than Australia, a statement whose absurdity is self-evident. In this computation, as in others that have preceded, it will be observed that there are several of the Western States in which no tariff protection is needed, while in several others only a very small amount is called for. The high average rate thus shown is due to the reported high cost of production in two or three States where costs are stated as abnormally high.

5. The Ohio region: It will be observed that nothing has been submitted in the foregoing data on the Ohio region, which is reported as having the highest cost of production in the country, that being a net charge of 19 cents per pound against wool. This would apparently call for a much higher protection than any as yet spoken of. The board averages the 5,000,000 sheep of the Ohio region with the western sheep and the crossbred flocks, and thereby makes an average cost the country over at 12 cents per pound, a manifestly incorrect proceeding. It should be frankly admitted that on the board's estimate the Ohio region and a very few of the western States would need a protection in excess of 20 per cent. An average rate of protection sufficient to offset the difference in cost of production between the bulk of the western region and the foreign woolgrowing countries would not help them in the least. In this connection a further point should be noted. The cost of production of wool in the Ohio region, as given by the board, is 19 cents per pound on the average. Inquiries as to shrinkage show that this wool shrinks 46.62 per cent; in other words, 19 cents is 53.38 per cent of the cost of a scoured pound.

The cost of such a scoured pound, therefore, may be taken as 35.6 cents. This must be compared with the supposed cost advantage in Australia. In the latter country, as we have seen, the cost of production may be taken as 5 cents. However, at least 2 cents must be added in this case as the freight disadvantage, because of the comparative nearness of the Ohio region to the mills. From the standpoint of Ohio, cost in Australia may be taken as 7 cents. The theoretical disadvantage in the Ohio region is thus 35.6 cents minus 7, or about 28.6 cents. Figuring this as a percentage upon the cost of the competitive Australian wool imported into the United States, which may be taken as 50.8 cents a scoured pound, on the average, it is found that 28.6 cents represents over 55 per cent ad valorem. This is very much more than the protection amounts to, accorded under the present specific basis. In the board's table of actual importations and scourings in a representative American mill (pp. 387–389) the equivalent ad valorems run from about 34 per cent to about 55 per cent. In a very few instances there are equivalent ad valorems as high as 55 per cent. It would seem, then, that the Ohio wool-producing region is not protected now on the assumption that the board's cost figures are correct and that, if it is to be protected at all, the tariff on wool would have to be very much raised above its present figures, so as to give a rate of 28 or 29 cents on the scoured pound and of at least 55 per cent ad valorem.

Summing up the discussion, therefore, it may be concluded that a study of comparative prices actually realized on western wools and actually paid by importing American mills, and paid at open sale in the London market, show that the western American woolgrower can meet Australian and South American competition without any protection. A study of cost disadvantages would indicate the necessity not to exceed 25 per cent duty ad valorem upon the whole wool output of the Western States, and would show that in the majority of these States a duty of very much less than this, say, 10 to 15 per cent, would be ample, while 20 per cent would completely safeguard all, except a relatively small number of sheep in the less carefully managed flocks of the West and in the Ohio region.

It should be added that there is nothing to prevent either the western or the Ohio growers from shifting to the crossbred flocks, whose profitableness in the United States has been demonstrated to such an extent as to show no net charge against the wool. From the protective standpoint, therefore, the whole question is that of imposing a duty for the mere sake of keeping a small percentage of American sheep farmers from the necessity of shifting from sheep of the merino type to those of the crossbred type.

6. Summary of findings on raw wool: These findings on raw wool may be summarized as follows:

1. Class 3 wool needs no protection, because it is scarcely produced at all in the United States.

2. Class 2 wool needs no protection, because those of our wools which compete with it are produced at a very low cost of production.

3. Class 1 wools need no protection as indicated by actual figures of sales. As shown by estimated cost of production the needed duty would not exceed 15 to 20 per cent. A duty of 25 per cent would be considerably in excess of the requirements of production in the West that are indicated by the figures of the board; while in the Ohio region the industry is partly, at least, incidental to general farming and can not be considered on the competitive footing.

B. TOPS.

The subject of top manufacture is discussed chiefly on pages 621–645 (vol. 3). Here are given data showing the actual yield from greasy wool of scoured wool, tops, noils, and wastes of various kinds; a discussion of compensatory duties; an outline of the methods of getting costs; and tables showing the cost of converting wool into tops in a number of American mills, whose product has been combined for the purpose of showing the general results.

1. Wastes and compensatory duties: The first problem which the board has to deal with is that of shrinkage in the scoured wool used, so it seeks to ascertain what quantity of tops can be manufactured from a given amount of scoured wool. This shrinkage is then made the basis for computations of the amount of compensatory duty required. On pages 622, 623, the board says:

"The average yield of tops over a considerable period differs in typical American mills by less than 5 per cent, and the amount of this average yield is approximately 85 per cent. But a compensatory duty based on the average yield would be inadequate in the case of tops made from wool of fine quality; while, conversely, a compensatory duty high enough to take care of fine wool would be somewhat more than compensatory for tops made from the lower grades. * * *

"Whatever may be the yield of scoured wool in tops, that part of it that is unfit for tops is by no means a complete loss to the manufacturer. Noils are worth quite regularly 60 per cent of the value of the scoured wool from which they are made, and they form from 60 per cent to 90 per cent of the wastes that accrue in top making. Comb waste is worth practically as much as scoured wool; card waste, as a rule, much less; the two together, forming from 5 per cent to 30 per cent of the total waste, should normally bring 40 per cent of the price of an equal weight of scoured wool. In any case the manufacturer recovers in the value of his wastes fully half the value of the scoured wool consumed that does not appear in his tops.

"Assuming, then, that 100 pounds of fine wool gives 80 pounds of tops, the loss of 20 pounds reappears in the form of waste worth at least as much as 10 pounds of wool. The manufacturer therefore in this case is entitled to a compensatory duty on tops that exceeds the duty on wool by no more than 10 per cent of such duty. This is, of course, on the assumption that compensatory duty shall be fixed entirely on a weight basis."

2. Method of computing tariff duties: The board in this discussion continues the assumption found in the existing law—that two classes of duty are necessary, the one intended to offset the loss of weight in shrinkage, the other the differences in labor and capital between the United States and foreign countries. It is evident that in carrying out that inquiry on the basis of the board's figures several methods may be adopted.

(a) First method: The most obvious method of computation on this basis is as follows: According to the board 1 pound of scoured wool produces 80 per cent of 1 pound of tops, and this would mean that 90 pounds of wool would make 80 pounds of tops, allowing for 10 pounds of recovery in wastes. Assuming that scoured wool is worth 50 cents a pound, 80 pounds of tops would cost $45 and 1 pound of tops would cost 45/80 of a dollar, or 56.25 cents. The excess cost of material for 1 pound of tops, therefore, is 6.25 cents. The board finds as a result of its investigation (p. 645) that "the cost of making tops in the United States is about 80 per cent greater than abroad." If the American manufacturer gets domestic wool of substantially the same spinning value as English wool and at the same price, 50 cents, no allowance is needed for "compensatory duty." If comparison be made on a dutiable basis we must assume the importation of wool subject to duty. While this is not necessarily the case, we may expand our assumption so as to provide that the scoured wool used in manufacture is imported at 50 cents, duty unpaid, and that this is the same price the English manufacturer pays for his scoured wool at the factory. Then if we assume a duty of 20 per cent for the sake of argument on wool it is clear that the American manufacturer will have to pay 60 cents for his pound of wool after the tariff duty has been liquidated. Now, since 90 pounds of the wool produce only 80 pounds of tops, it is evident that at 60 cents the cost of the 90 pounds would be $54, and 1/80 of this would be 67.5 cents. Seven and one-half cents, therefore, would be the additional pound value of the material going into the tops made from duty-paid wool.

As already stated, the excess material cost per pound of tops made of nonduty-paid wool at 50 cents is 6.25 cents. Assuming that the amount of waste is the same in England and the United States, it appears that the cost of manufacture from duty-paid wool at 20 per cent implies an additional expense of 1¼ cents, which represents the specific compensatory duty that would be needed. This would have to be reckoned as a percentage of 56.25, the presumed cost of the top material in England. It would in that way amount to 2.2 per cent. The board shows that the actual cost of manufacturing tops in the United States from Australian 70–80's is 7.25 cents per pound. Adding this to the 67.5 cents gives 74.75 cents as the cost of a pound of tops in the United States on the basis of the board's figures. In the English mills the cost of conversion is shown as about 100 per cent and in the United States as 180 per cent. Taking 7¼ cents as 180 per cent, the cost in England would be 4.03 cents per pound. Deducting this from 7.25 cents, the cost in the United States, leaves 3.22 cents, which represents the excess conversion cost of producing tops in the United States. As an ad valorem percentage of 56.25, this gives 5.72 per cent, which, added to 2.2 per cent, the compensatory duty, gives 7.92 per cent over the duty on wool, or 27.92 per cent.

(b) Second method: Another method of computation may be deduced from the board's work. In the passage already cited the board says (p. 623) that the manufacturer is entitled to a compensatory duty on tops that exceeds the duty on wool by no more than 10 per cent of such duty. Taking the same case we have already assumed, with scoured wool at 50 cents and an import duty of 20 per cent ad valorem, in this case equal to 10 cents per pound, the compensatory duty on tops would be the wool duty, 20% + (10% of 20% =) 2% = 22%, or 10¢ + (10% of 10¢ =) 1¢ = 11 cents, a duty of 11 cents, or 22 per cent. We found that if the wool employed was actually imported from abroad and manufactured subject to the waste indicated by the board the material in a pound of tops would cost 67.5 cents, while in England it would be 56.25 cents. The duty on 56.25 cents at the rate of 22 per cent would be 12.38, which, added to 56.25 cents, would be 68.63 cents, or, in this case, decidedly more than enough to cover the cost in the United States as indicated by the board. The duty required to offset the difference in labor and other costs would be the same as stated in the first method, 5.72 per cent, to which would be added the compensatory duty of 2 per cent and the duty on wool of 20 per cent, or a total of 27.72 per cent on tops. It is clear that the rate of duty, by this method of computation, would change rapidly as the price of wool, duty paid, was increased.

And as the wool became more expensive, the duty required would be a smaller ad valorem percentage. In the shrinkage table given by the board (pp. 387–391), the price per scoured pound, duty paid, on the best grades of wool such as we are discussing, is very seldom as low as 50 cents, and is occasionally as high as 60 cents per pound or more. In these cases the amount of duty would fall off.

In the foregoing computation the assumption has been that the English manufacturer is able to land his tops at New York without any cost for selling charges, transportation, insurance, or commissions in the United States. That, of course, is important. The duties already sketched, therefore, are unduly high, if it be desired simply to cover cost of production. The board has shown that freight charges from Liverpool to Boston are about one-third of a cent per pound on wool.

This takes no account of shipping charges in England or from Boston inland, to say nothing of the charges for other items in the cost of marketing. It would probably be a conservative estimate if the English manufacturer were regarded as being obliged to incur an expense of 3 cents per pound for his marketing and freight charges. Such an allowance, if made, would largely offset the difference in cost of production. If, on the basis of our illustration, following the Tariff Board, it be assumed that the cost of getting out a pound of completed tops in the United States with wool at 50 cents a pound scoured, and the rate of duty at 20 per cent, was 75 cents, while in England it was 56.25 cents plus 4.03 cents, or 60.28 cents, the allowance of 3 cents a pound already referred to being then made, the landed cost (United States) of English tops would be 63.28 cents. Deducting this from 75 cents would leave 11.72 cents, which would be about 19 per cent, or less than the raw-wool duty of H. R. 11019. This would mean that a 20 per cent duty would suffice to protect the American manufacturer against the competition of English producers in tops as well as in raw wool. Of course, in this case it should be borne in mind that the 3-cent allowance would have to be made also in case of the raw-wool duty. That is to say, if 20 per cent on raw wool was protective with wool at the same price in England and the United States, a less duty than that would be necessary in practice owing to the difference in cost of transportation, etc.

or, at 50 cents per pound, he must invest $50. Each pound, then, of tops costs him for raw material 62.5 cents, while his competitor in England is getting his wool at 50 cents and his tops at presumably the same relative rate. Now, in the United States assume that a duty is imposed equal to 20 per cent. The 100 pounds of clean wool cost $60, instead of $50, and 80 pounds of tops cost the same. That is to say, each pound of scoured wool costs the American manufacturer 75 cents, while his English competitor is getting his material at 62.5 cents a pound.

The compensatory duty allowed for by the Tariff Board is 10 per cent of 20 per cent, or 2 per cent ad valorem, or 1 cent per pound. The difference in cost of labor and investment is 3.22 cents, the same as in our former illustration. This is now figured as an ad valorem of 62.5, or slightly more than 5 per cent. The specific duty under this basis of estimate, then, would be 1 cent plus 3.22 cents, or 4.22 cents, while the ad valorem duty would be 2 per cent plus 5 per cent, or 7 per cent. This is slightly less than by the former method, because of the higher valuation given to the wool going into the tops, due to the fact that no allowance has been made for the income from the wastes. On some accounts this is a fairer basis of reckoning than the other, because of the fact that the process of manufacture requires the larger amout of wool which is indicated in this second method. Of course in this case the allowance made for freight, etc., would still have to be recognized, and would work out as before in more than neutralizing the difference in cost of production of tops indicated by the board.

3. Study of top prices: The question of the duty on tops may be approached from the standpoint of prices rather than from cost of production. The board has given in the early part of its report (Vol. I, p. 106) a table showing the values abroad of specified classes of tops. It finds that 20 cents per pound is the minimum valuation for tops abroad, and that only in depressed conditions would tops of low quality sell for 20 cents or less. The lowest price given in the tables of quotations for 1910 is 24.8 cents, and the highest is 64.9 cents, the latter being a quotation for the very best grade intended for the spinning of very fine yarns. The quotation on tops intended for the spinning of so-called 64's to 70's, which correspond to what we call in this country fine or one-half blood, are the quotations which should be used for comparative purposes in the present discussion. These quotations were from 54.8 to 62.9 cents, the mean being 58.9 cents per pound. If it be true that raw wool of a given quality used for making these tops can be imported on a scoured pound basis at about the same cost from Australia into the United States as into England, it may be supposed that the price of these tops in England is less than that in the United States (no duty on raw wool) by the excess cost of production of tops in the United States. For the grade of tops considered, this excess cost of production has been found to be about 3.22 cents per pound; in other words, the cost of the same tops in the United States should be about 62.12 cents. Figuring the 3.22 cents as an ad valorem upon 62.5, gives 5.2 per cent as the necessary duty on tops, or, adding compensatory duty in the event that a raw-wool rate of 20 per cent is charged, we should have 7.2 per cent, which roughly corresponds with the showing already made for the grade discussed. If we should compute the rate on the very finest grades it would, however, fall considerably below this figure, while an allowance for freight, insurance, etc., amounting to as much as a cent a pound, would reduce the required protection to 25 per cent or probably much less (granting a raw-wool duty of 20 per cent).

In the following table are presented domestic and foreign costs of producing tops for every cost figure reported in the statement (p. 642), showing variations in the cost of converting wool into tops. The domestic costs are given by the board as a result of its investigations, and the foreign costs are computed on the supposition that the cost of making tops in the United States is about 80 per cent greater than abroad (p. 645). The difference between domestic and foreign costs would represent in each case the disadvantage in cost of production under which the United States labors and would therefore be the figure which should be computed as a percentage of the foreign costs of tops in order to ascertain the ad valorem rate necessary to protect the American producer.

4. Summary of top study: (a) If it be assumed that the English and American manufacturers start with wool of the same quality at a uniform price, say 50 cents, the tariff duty not being fully in operation because a home supply exists, it appears that no allowance need be made for compensatory duty, and that the difference in cost of production shown by the board per pound of tops is 3.22 cents, which, computed as an ad valorem upon 56.25, the cost of the material going into a pound of tops, is 5.72 per cent ad valorem.

(b) If it be assumed that the wool used is actually imported into the United States, a duty is paid at the rate of 20 per cent, with no allowance for freight, insurance, etc., the difference in cost must include a compensatory element, figured by the board at 2 per cent, or in this case a cent a pound, and a duty to offset the difference in cost of manufacture, equal to about 3.18 cents, which, figured on the cost of manufacture in England, gives about 5.09 per cent, and this added to the 2 per cent compensatory duty gives a rate of about 7.09 per cent over and above the raw-wool duty, or 27.09 per cent in all.

(c) The rate of allowance for compensatory duty will vary in ad valorem equivalents with the cost of the raw wool in England, and would probably increase or decrease as the cost of the raw wool increases or declines, notwithstanding top costs are lower for cheaper grades of wool.

(d) The foregoing figures are based upon the assumption that no allowance for cost of transportation, insurance, shipping charges, etc., is necessary. Such allowance on these accounts as is customary should be made in order to have the figures hold good in practice. It is observable that an allowance of 3 cents a pound would about offset the difference in cost, both compensatory and labor, and investment cost that has been recognized. Even if it be assumed that such costs of transportation are only 1 or 2 per cent of the value of the tops, a duty of 25 per cent (inclusive of raw-wool duty) would be ample protection.

Noils and wastes: The board has dealt with the subject of noils and wastes incidental to the manufacture of tops, explaining the way in which these wastes originate and the extent to which they are produced in the process of developing tops from scoured wool. It is shown (p. 623) that 100 pounds of fine wool gives 80 pounds of tops, the difference being waste, which is supposed to be worth as much as 10 pounds of wool. In the process of manufacturing worsted yarns the top is converted into roving, and a waste of about 2 or 3 per cent occurs, while subsequently there is an additional waste of about 2 per cent. On the whole the board concludes that the soft wastes made in drawing and spinning are 4 per cent, the hard wastes 2½ per cent, and the invisible wastes and shrinkage 2½ per cent, so that the yield of yarn from tops would be 91 per cent. This would mean that on every 100 pounds of tops there is a production of soft wastes equal to 4 pounds and of hard wastes equal to 2½ pounds. In the process of converting yarn into cloths the waste varies considerably, running from 5 per cent to 25 per cent. The board estimates this waste at about 20 per cent of the value of the yarn from which it is made. That is to say, the gross volume of waste produced in making yarn is from 5 to 25 per cent of the weight of the yarn, while the wastes thus produced are supposed to be worth about 20 per cent, on the average, of the total value of the yarn which has given rise to them in the process of working up.

RAW-WOOL DUTY FOR NOILS.

So long as a specific duty is levied upon wool and the low products of wool, the cost of production, dependent as it is upon the amount of wool needed in the manufacture of the cloth, would determine the rate of duty to be imposed. That is to say, the value of the wastes would properly be reckoned as a part of the value of the total output of the productive operation, including, as that would, tops and wastes or yarn and wastes or cloth and wastes. The duty would need, therefore, to be figured as a composite matter, the amount needed to protect it, granting that wastes in manufacture were equal in amount in different countries, being dependent upon the raw-wool duty, in a certain sense, although the actual figure would depend quite largely upon the demand the industries which used these wastes made for them, and so fixed their price. They can not be said to have any definite cost of production apart from that of the principal products in the course of making raw wool there brought into existence. The board has, therefore, reckoned these wastes and their value as constituting a deduction from the cost of producing tops from wool, yarn from tops, and cloth from yarn. Where an ad valorem system of duty is employed, the situation is different, because the necessity of computation designed to ascertain the amount and value of these wastes need not be undertaken. The wastes will be used again simply as wool.

They act as a substitute for wool in various processes of manufacture, and to that extent displace wool which would otherwise be purchased for the purpose of manufacture. This is true of noils and wool wastes generally. All that is needed, therefore, in a country which levies an ad valorem duty upon raw wool is to treat the wastes in the same way that raw wool is treated. If this were not done it would be cheaper for manufacturers to import such wastes from abroad for use in domestic manufacture. They would, to that extent, cut off the demand for domestic wastes, and the effect of this would be to lower their price in the market, to say nothing of the effect thereby produced on the manufacturing process in which these wastes were brought into existence. Inasmuch as a reduction in the value of the wastes produced in manufacture would mean an increase in the cost of carrying on the principal operation which gave rise to that, a lower duty on such wastes would amount to an infringement upon the duty by which the principal process was itself protected. In the same way, a duty on wastes that was higher than the duty on wool itself would operate to keep out foreign products of the same kind and would thereby enable the manufacturer to gain greater protection under the operation of the compensatory duty than they otherwise would have.

With ad valorem rates of duty, therefore, the indicated level of rates for the noils and wastes will be identical with the rates on raw wool. The board has nothing to say with reference to specific cost of production of noils and wastes since they are by-products as just indicated. They supply the data which could be used to work out a duty if a specific rate were desired. But their argument naturally points to the conclusion, where ad valorem rates are employed, that the duty should be collected at the same rate for wastes as for raw wool itself.

C. YARNS.

The Tariff Board has worked out the cost of making yarns in the same way as for tops, and a similar plan may be pursued in estimating the rate of duty required on yarns.

1. Tariff duty computed: Continuing the illustration of wool at 50 cents per pound scoured in England, and a duty of 10 cents per pound or 20 per cent ad valorem on the wool imported into the United States, with tops thereafter costing on the basis of the board's figures, say 75 cents per pound, as against about 60 cents in England, the computation will be as follows: A compensatory duty, according to the board, equal to 8 per cent of the compensatory duty on tops. Assuming that this duty is 22 per cent, 8 per cent of it will be 1.8 per cent ad valorem. Beyond that the difference in cost depends upon the kind of yarn made, its ply, and count. The board gives material on the cost of making yarn (pp. 645–650), and on page 648 enumerates the cost of converting tops into 2-ply yarns, for counts ranging from 28's to 60's. First taking the lowest count, it is seen from the table given that the total conversion cost in the United States is 12.62 cents per pound, while in England it is said to be about one-half, or 6.31 cents. The lost of weight in yarn making is 9 pounds per 100 (p. 624). This means that in the United States the cost of the yarn material would be $75 \times 100 \div 91 + 12.62$, or 95.04 cents, 75 cents being assumed as the cost of a pound of tops.

In England the corresponding pound of yarn would cost about $60 \times 100 \div 91 + 6.31$, or 72.24 cents. Figuring the difference in cost, 6.31, as a percentage of 72.24 cents, it is seen that the ad valorem equivalent is about 8.73 per cent, and adding 1.8 per cent for the compensatory duty would be 10.53 per cent over and above 25 per cent on tops, or in all 35.53 per cent. This may be tested by comparing the value of yarn product resulting from a pound of tops in the two countries. We have seen that in the United States this would be 95.04 cents, while in England it would be 72.24 cents. The difference is 22.80 cents, which, reckoned as an ad valorem of 72.24 per cent, is about 31½ per cent. The same computation may be carried out on the other plan, suggested in connection with tops above, i. e., allowing for the value of recovered wastes. In that case the computation would be as follows: One hundred pounds of tops yield on the average 91 pounds of yarn, but the wastes are worth as much as 4½ pounds of tops. In other words, the material cost of getting 91 pounds of yarn equals the cost of 95½ pounds of tops. Assuming that tops are worth 75 cents in the United States, 91 pounds of yarn will cost $71.625 for material, and the unit cost will be 78.7 cents. Adding 12.62 cents for conversion, the cost of 1 pound of yarn is given as 91.32 cents in the United States, and by the same method 69.31 cents in England. The compensatory duty here is 4½ per cent of 25 per cent, or 1.125 per cent, and the conversion cost 9.1 per cent, or 10.225 per cent in all—a total duty of 35.225 per cent ad valorem.

In these computations again no allowance has been made for the cost of transportation necessary to put the manufacturer on a basis of competition with the American producer. If 3 cents a pound allowance were made upon the yarn value, it would work out in a somewhat different way from that in the case of tops, however, owing to the higher value of the yarn. In that case we have to reckon the cost of the yarn straight through from the raw wool to the yarn. Assuming that the cost of the tops was, as already stated, the amount needed to produce a pound of yarn, meaning, as shown by the board (p. 623), 9 per cent greater than the amount of yarn used, it would appear that 75 cents must be regarded as 91 per cent of the amount of tops needed to produce a pound of yarn. This would mean that the tops necessary to produce a pound of yarn would cost 82.42 cents. In England it would be necessary to spend about 67 cents to get tops necessary to produce a pound of yarn. Adding the cost of manufacturing a pound of yarn in the United States at the same rate as before, 82.42 cents must be increased by 12.62 cents, giving about 95 cents. In England 67 cents must be increased by 6.31 cents, giving 73.31 cents. The total difference in cost is thus shown to be 21.69 cents. An allowance of 3 cents per pound for the marketing charges would cut this to 18.69 cents per pound, which gives an ad valorem on 73.31 of about 25.5 per cent.

2. Change in ply and count of yarn.—It should be noted that the ad valorem rate supposedly necessary to protect the producer owing to differences in cost varies materially in accordance with the changes in ply and count of yarn. It should be figured, therefore, for each ply and count of yarn. The board has furnished data for a few of the different grades of yarn, and in the following table the computation has been followed through upon the basis indicated above.

In the following table is shown the two grades of yarn (two-ply 32's and 40's) whose cost is given by the board in the United States and England with the difference in cost computed as an ad valorem on the quotation at Bradford of these particular grades of yarn:

[1] Per cent.

In studying this table, it should be borne in mind throughout that the assumption has been made that raw wool is purchased by American and English manufacturers on the scoured basis without payment of duty at New York and Liverpool, respectively; that subsequently the American manufacturer has paid his duty at 20 per cent ad valorem on raw wool, and has taken the raw material to his establishment for the purpose of manufacturing it into tops and yarns. This assumption may fairly be made, and the table may fairly be relied upon in view of the assumption that the raw-wool duty is ad valorem. If the duty be levied as at present upon the grease-pound basis, quite different results will be produced according to wool shrinkages more or less, and according to methods of scouring in this country different in their fine-wool contents from those which are pursued abroad.

3. Price study of yarns: In its first volume (p. 114) the board has furnished data for a price study of yarns. These may be used for the purpose of checking the analysis already made from the standpoint of cost production. In the section referred to, the board cites the quotations in England for worsted and hair yarns reported by the Bradford Chamber of Commerce. In 1909, it gives worsted 2-ply 40's as worth 65.9 to 75 cents per pound. In the section of the report of the Tariff Board devoted to the subject of manufacturing (Vol. III, p. 648) the cost per pound of converting tops into 2-ply 40's in the United States is given as 17.98 cents, and further (p. 650) the corresponding figure in England is given as 10.6 cents. The difference would be 7.38 cents, so that the inference may be fairly drawn that the cost of these same yarns, which sell at, say, 70 cents a pound in Bradford, England, should be about 7.38 cents higher, or 77.38 cents in the United States, assuming that the wool out of which they are made was free. In that case the duty required to equalize the cost of production on these yarns would be 7.38 cents divided by 70 cents, or 10.5 per cent. Working this out with English cost taken as one-half American the duty would be 12.8 per cent. The former basis is the fairer. This would be a duty intended to equalize the conversion cost between England and the United States.

No compensatory duty need be figured in this case for the equalization of wastes consequent upon the shrinkage of duty-paid wool, because this is a price, not a cost figure. These results should be compared with the cost of production estimates already given, as based upon the figures of the board. Here, again, no allowance is made for transportation and shipping charges, which would cut the duty from 10.5 per cent to possibly 6 or 7 per cent.

The question whether the yarns mentioned are placed upon the same comparative basis depends upon the use of substantially the same class of wool in manufacture. It can not be stated whether the wool thus used was uniform in the counts of yarn cited for quotation at Bradford with those considered by the board in the United States. If we should take the average of a number of plies and counts of yarns a nominally more general figure would be obtained, but this appearance of general applicability would be only nominal, because the thing which is of interest is the power to compete in specified grades of yarns. Absolutely correct results can be obtained, therefore, only by comparing the cost of production or price of specified counts with the corresponding figures for foreign conditions.

The board states that the average value of yarn imported into the United States was $1.05 in 1911. This was an insignificant amount, because of the restrictive character of the duties, which did not compete with domestic yarns. It can not be stated what counts they represented, but, assuming that they were those most commonly used for fabrics, it might be assumed that the conversion cost was the amount as already stated, in which case the rate of protection called for would probably be not to exceed 7 per cent.

The following table shows the ad valorem duty required to protect the American producer against English competition, figuring English cost as the difference between English quotations for tops and yarns at Bradford, while American cost is taken as computed by the board. This would include interest in the English costs, but the same has been done by the board in figuring the English costs actually given by it.

It may be fairly concluded, therefore, that the price showing of the board, taken in conjunction with the figures for conversion cost, the latter being estimated upon the basis of foreign price, would point to the necessity of an ad valorem duty of not more than 7 per cent above the rate on tops. If tops were 5 per cent, as they would be if there were no duty on raw wool, the duty on yarns would thus be 12 per cent. If a duty of 20 per cent were levied on raw wool, the duty on yarns would be from 30 to 35 per cent—say, 32 per cent.

D. CLOTH.

The board has computed the cost of production of cloth in a manner decidedly different from that which has been employed in connection with the cost of yarns and tops. For the latter products it ascertained costs by obtaining figures on standard processes, applicable to very large volumes of product, and tabulated them in such a way as to get at unit cost. It has rejected this method in the case of cloth because of the belief that such a plan is not applicable. The board says that it has been obliged to base its relative costs upon specific samples of home and foreign products. This means that it has simply taken selected pieces of cloth and obtained from a few mills cost estimates thereon. The board does not state the number of mills consulted, but a letter from Chairman Emery states that from 3 to 15 mills were asked to figure on each sample in the United States, and that the board does not know how many mills were consulted for each sample abroad. Furthermore, the samples that were estimated upon by the different mills were not in all cases samples made by those mills. The board says:

"Our agent * * * visited the mills with specific samples and worked out with the proper officials the cost under each separate process. * * * By this detailed analysis by processes the estimates came as near to the actual cost as the mill itself was able to make them."

The board submits two classes of samples—the one numbered consecutively from 1 to 53, the other from A to N. The first set of samples were compared chiefly with costs in English mills. "Samples of identical fabrics cut from the same piece were taken to England and to the Continent." These were American cloths. On the samples A to N the costs were secured on "similar cloths." In no case did a German manufacturer figure on the cost of producing an American fabric. They merely selected cloths which "came very near the sample fabric."

1. Character of figures: It should be definitely stated that no confidence whatever can be placed in these figures, for the following reasons:

(a) The cost figures secured were not obtained for identical fabrics produced in the same mills, but were secured for fabrics which were similar; many of which were not produced at all in the mills to which they were submitted, although they might have been.

(b) There is no positive knowledge as to the number or representative character of the mills that made estimates on the samples.

(c) There is no knowledge as to the methods by which the figures secured from the different mills estimating on the same sample were averaged. The board admits that not all of them kept their cost figures on the same basis or in like detail.

(d) Slight variations in fabric or slight errors in selecting mills of the same relative grades of efficiency would in the case of unit costs on single pieces of one fabric give rise to differences which do not seem great in themselves when stated as unit costs, but which in the aggregate would make very large variations in cost of operation for a period of months, weeks, or even days.

While thus absolutely rejecting the board's cost figures on cloths, we may subject the figures to an analysis for the purpose of ascertaining what they indicate with respect to the rates of duty that would be needed in order to protect the American manufacturer were we to accept the theory that a duty equal to difference in cost is required by protective principle.

In column 1 of the following table the number of the sample is given, such number corresponding to the number given in volume 3, pages 651 ff., of the board's report. Column 2 designates the kind of cloth by representative letters (with key at the bottom of the page). In columns 3 and 4 is shown cloth cost in the United States and in England, respectively. Columns 5, 6, and 7 relate to conversion cost and show American cost, English cost, and the difference between the two. This conversion cost is the outlay required for converting yarn into cloth. The board says (p. 651) that this conversion cost means "the total expense incurred in manufacturing yarn into finished cloth ready for use by the customer. It does not include the cost of the yarn, but does include the amounts expended for both direct and indirect labor, for departmental materials in the several processes of manufacture, and the charge for general expense."

Referring to the board's cost schedule, the general expense schedule is found on page 636, where general expense is analyzed into works expense and fixed charges, the latter including insurance, taxes, depreciation, and other items.

2. Mode of computing tariff: It is evident that to ascertain the tariff on the board's theory needed to protect the American manufacturer in the process of cloth making the English conversion cost must be deducted from the American, as is done in column 7, and the difference must be regarded as the amount of protection needed. In columns 8 and 9 the relation of total American conversion cost to total American cloth cost and the percentage of English conversion cost to total English cloth cost have been figured, for reasons which will later appear. In columns 10 and 11 are given the percentage of the difference in conversion cost to American cloth cost and to English cloth cost. There may be a division of opinion which of these should be used as the basis for figuring the tariff duty required. Taking the most extreme case, however, it may be assumed that an English manufacturer produces cloth at the cost indicated by the board, ships it to the United States without expense for transportation and without interest on capital, commission charges, or other outlays of the kind, and sells it in the American market. In that case, if he sold at cost, the American producer would need a tariff based on the English cost as compared with the difference in conversion cost, supposing that the duties were to be levied upon an ad valorem basis.

These figures are given in column 11 and range from 13 per cent up to 38 per cent or more. The average is 24.49 per cent. This figure may be taken, then, as the extreme rate of duty needed to protect the American manufacturer on the basis of cost of production under the theory of the board, accepting its cost figures as unquestionably correct.

It will be noted, however, that this duty amounts only to a protection on the process of making cloth. It must, therefore, be added to the duty properly to be levied under the board's figures upon the material, yarn, of which cloth is made. In order to get absolutely correct results on this subject it would be necessary to have cost figures, from the raw material up, for every kind of yarn used in the manfacture of these cloths. Those can not be obtained, because the board does not give complete figures for every ply and count of yarn. It may, however, fairly be assumed that the board is honestly representing the case in stating that the costs for yarn which it has presented, as well as its cost for tops, are representative. Supposing that to be true and accepting the average cost of production of its tops and yarns as the basis for duty upon the yarns used in producing each of these representative samples, it will be found (see tabulation elsewhere) that the cost figures on yarns and tops point to the necessity of an average duty of, say, 30 per cent on the yarn in order to equalize differences in cost of production. The same duty must then, of course, be applied to the cloth cost as a basic rate under the conditions fixed by the board.

This estimated rate has been set down in column 12 as the addition which should be made to the duties presented in column 11 for the purpose of getting at the total required duty. In column 13 is presented the combination of the two duties enumerated in columns 11 and 12, which represents the total tariff duty on these samples required under the board's figures. It will be found that this makes an average duty in the aggregate (foot of column 13) amounting to about 55 per cent.

However, for the purpose of practical legislation this can not be accepted as the basis of action. It has already been noted that no allowance was made for transportation from England to the United States, nor for the actual and necessary capital cost, independent of profit necessary for carrying the goods, insuring them in transit, paying commissions in this country, and placing them on the market. It will be regarded as a very conservative estimate to figure this outlay at 10 per cent of the cost of goods from the factory to the retailer, entirely independent of profit, and this leaves 45 per cent. Moreover, it will have been noted that in certain portions of the discussion of estimated cost of yarns, figures were given which included an element of profit, because the board presented the data in this manner. If this item included for profit were eliminated, the figures of cost would be correspondingly reduced, and the rates of duty needed for protection would be likewise lessened.

The same method of computation has been followed in Table 14 with regard to German costs. These have been averaged in a similar manner, showing the supposed need of an average tariff duty on the process of cloth making amounting to 19.28 per cent. Adding this to the yarn costs, it appears that the total average rate of duty required to protect against Germany would be 51 per cent, or, on a basis of 30 per cent yarn duty, 49 per cent. If the same deduction of 10 per cent were made, as in the case of the other collection of samples, the remaining duty would be 39 per cent.

All these cloths were included under paragraphs 5 and 7 of H. R. 11019, vetoed by President Taft, at 40 and 45 per cent ad valorem.

The average duty on German and English cloths, as figured above, if they were to be combined in a weighted or true average, would be about 46 per cent. The rates in paragraphs 5 and 7 of H. R. 11019 were 40 and 45 per cent, respectively.

3. Equalization of costs: Further analysis of the table throws much light on the situation in respect to cloth cost in the United States and abroad and the rates of duty supposed to be necessary to equalize these costs. Considering the table without any reference to the duties on yarn or the total tariff duties, and simply with regard to the data indicated as being necessary by reason of the difference in cost of production, it is seen that very wide variations of cost difference are to be noted. Thus, in column 11, showing the per cent of difference in conversion cost stated as an ad valorem percentage of the English cloth cost, it is seen that some figures run as high as 36¼ per cent in England, while other figures run as low as 16.82 per cent. It is an obvious fact that a rate of duty which would, on the board's theory, protect the American manufacturer against English competition in one case would not be satisfactory in the other. A number of the sample cloths studied by the board show less than 25 per cent, while several run higher than that. Analyzing the column further, it is found that nearly one-half of the total number are below 25 per cent.

There is no explanation of the reasons for the extreme variation in the board's report, but it would appear to be largely due to differences in the cost of the yarn stock. In columns 3 and 4 are given the cloth cost in the United States and in England, and in columns 5 and 9 the cost of conversion in American and English mills. While there are considerable differences in the conversion costs per yard, it seems evident from a study of the figures that the principal foundation for differences between the United States and England is the variation in yarn-stock cost. It will be observed in columns 3 and 4 that in the more expensive fabrics the difference in cloth cost is large, but that it does not necessarily follow that a disproportion of the great difference in conversion cost exists. For example, sample No. 46 shows a cloth cost in the United States of $1.71, while in Great Britain the cloth cost is $1.10. Yet the conversion cost in the United States was 38.6 cents and in England 18.61 cents.

Although there was a difference of 61 cents in cloth cost, this particular sample showed no greater margin of difference than did others. About 41 cents per yard was due to the difference in yarn-stock cost. In a similar way sample No. 12 shows a cloth cost in the United States of 64.9 cents, while in England the cost is 34.51 cents, a difference of approximately 30 cents. The difference in conversion cost was about 9 cents, the conversion cost in the United States being nearly 17 cents. Thus of the difference in cloth cost fully 21 cents, or nearly one-third of the cloth cost in the United States, was due to differences in yarn-stock cost. Without going into this phase of the subject at greater length, it may be said generally that the higher differences in cost of production are due to the higher cost at which the United States is compelled to get its yarn, and that this, as seen in our sections on yarn and tops, is primarily due to the unequal working of the duty on raw wool, which works unevenly upon wools of different fineness and spinning quality. If such inequalities were removed much of the variation in differences of cost between the United States and England would disappear and there would be a tendency to reduce differences in cost toward the level of the fabrics which show the lower differences.

4. Variation by countries: The figures in Table 14, contrasted with those in Table 13, show that the amount of duty needed to equalize difference in production between the United States and Germany are very much smaller than those needed to equalize differences between the United States and England. As there shown, the average percentage of difference in conversion cost, figured as an ad valorem of German cloth cost, is less than 20 per cent, and in the case of one fabric runs below 15 per cent. This presumably shows that the cost of production in Germany is higher than in England, as compared with the United States. The comparison can not be an accurate one, since the board's analysis of samples did not employ the same fabrics for competitive purposes in its study of conditions in Germany as in England, but the tendency may fairly be stated as already indicated. It is therefore worth noting that certain German fabrics show, according to the board's figures, necessity for a smaller amount of duty than for any of the fabrics included in the English list. This is doubtless due to conditions under which the raw material is obtained. For example, sample E, in Table 14 shows, a cloth cost in the United States of $1.56 and in Germany of $1.13. The conversion cost in the United States was 41.3 cents and in Germany 24.6 cents, or a difference of 16.7 cents. This was a case where cost of raw material was decidedly high as compared with the cost of most of the raw material used in the English fabrics, and where the difference in conversion cost was therefore a comparatively small percentage of the total cost. With this may be contrasted sample H, which shows an American cloth cost of $1.40 and a German cloth cost of 90 cents, while the difference of conversion cost was 18.4 cents. Here the difference between the cloth cost between the two countries was 50 cents, as against the difference of 43 cents in the case of sample E, but the lower basis of ad valorem computation in the case of sample H led to a relatively higher rate of duty—20.45 per cent. Many of these wide margins of difference, not only between different fabrics in the same country, but between different fabrics in different countries, would be eliminated. If all were placed upon the same footing with reference to access to raw material, free raw material in the United States would probably give us a distinct advantage over some foreign countries that produce woolens, this difference being probably in not a few instances sufficient to more than offset the differences in conversion cost. Under present conditions, what is sufficient protection against one country is not, according to the board's report, sufficient protection against others, while an adequate duty directed against the products of the stronger competitive countries imposes an unnecessary disadvantage upon those which are thus placed under the obligation of paying a high rate of duty more than corresponding to the difference in cost.

Keeping in mind the fact that there are many differences in cost among American mills themselves, the policy which imposes duty at a rate sufficiently high to protect against the most efficient mills abroad, levying the same rate on the goods which come from countries not so favorably situated with reference to raw material, gives large degree of protection to the products of American mills of the less efficient class, and enables them to continue in business in certain classes of fabric with costs of production that are needlessly high and that both might and would be very easily reduced, were they subject to even a moderate amount of competition from foreign mills. While, as already stated, there is no reason to regard the sample study of the board as entitled to confidence, the results, so far as they indicate anything, emphasize the necessity for either assigning rates of duty on a basis to protect the most efficient domestic mills against the most efficient mills abroad or reclassifying fabrics with a view to lowering the rates upon those that can bear such cuts better than others. If either of these inferences from the board's figures as to the cost of sample fabrics were to be accepted, the rate of duty considered necessary for protective purposes would be greatly less than that which has already been indicated.

E. READY-MADE CLOTHING.

The board has investigated the subject of ready-made clothing and has reported on this subject in Volume III (pt. 4, pp. 843–946), in which is furnished information concerning men's and women's ready-made clothing, knit goods, etc.

Discussing the cost of men's suits (p. 860), it is found in the case of cheap suits ($8 and under) the material cost is about 47.1 per cent, the trimmings 13.7, or a total of 60.8 per cent. Manufacturing cost, including direct labor and factory expense, is 22 per cent, while overhead expense is 6.9 per cent and profit is 10.1 per cent. From this it is clear that the amount of tariff duty left upon the goods going into the suit itself should be the same to the extent of 60.8 per cent of the suit, as on the raw material of which it is composed. If there were a duty of 45 per cent upon the cloth and trimmings used in the manufacture of a suit, this presumably should represent the rate of duty upon the finished product so far as that consists of the material thus made dutiable. In other classes of manufacture the method adopted by the board in estimating tariff duties has been to figure the difference between the production cost, exclusive of material, in the United States and foreign countries, and then to add this difference as an excess tariff duty over and above the duty on the raw material.

The question with reference to ready-made clothing is, therefore, whether 30 per cent of the costs of manufacturing clothing which is found to be due to labor and factory expense and overhead charges is greater in the United States than abroad. There is no definite information in the board's data regarding the cost of manufacturing clothing, inasmuch as costs do not appear to have been ascertained abroad upon the same basis. About all that can be said, therefore, is that, so far as the board's information goes, there is no reason for increasing the tariff on ready-made clothing above the rate of tariff imposed upon the cloth and material out of which such clothing is made. The rate of duty fixed in H. R. 11019 upon ready-made clothing was 45 per cent, which was the highest rate given upon any article provided for in the bill except carpets (par. 17). The board furnishes a number of indirect reasons for thinking that no excess duty is needed for the purpose of protecting the ready-made clothing industry against supposed excess cost in foreign countries. It states that the total annual manufacture of ready-made clothing in this country in 1909 was about $486,000,000 for men's and $385,000,000 for women's wear, making a total of more than $870,000,000.

The amount of importations of ready-made clothing under the tariff law in 1910 was $1,776,236, and the amount which was estimated as likely to be imported under H. R. 11019 during a 12-month period about $5,000,000. H. R. 11019 proposed to reduce the rate from 81.31 per cent (equivalent ad valorem for 1910) to 45 per cent. The fact is that ready-made clothing is an article which does not pass to any great extent into international trade, owing to the fact that there are large differences in styles between the countries, and that very large variations in cost may occur without greatly affecting the trade in such clothing. It is probable that a large proportion of the small amount of our imports of ready-made clothing at the present time represent the value of goods brought home by returning travelers, and have no relation whatever to the rates of the tariff. The board, moreover, makes it clear that probably one-third of the existing retail price of ready-made clothing represents charges for retailing, advertising, etc., all of which items are probably the subjects of competition and need not be provided for in the tariff as the subjects of special protection.

Very little attention need be given to the board's estimate of the cost of different elements entering into the manufacture of different garments. The inquiry of the board was conducted entirely by the sample method, and may, or may not, have represented the general average cost in the industry. It is an interesting fact that in analyzing typical suits, the cost of Ohio wool has been used as the basis for the computation, notwithstanding the fact that the Ohio wool does not sell in the market any higher than wool of similar quality from other sources, although its expense of production was found to be very much greater than wool grown in the States farther west. Therefore, so far as the board's incomplete data on ready-made clothing afford light upon duties, they would appear to indicate a tariff identical with that on the cloth used in making the clothing.

F. KNIT GOODS.

In connection with its discussion of ready-made clothing, cost analyses are given by the board (pp. 911–946) with reference to sample knitted garments, such as sweaters, mittens, etc. Here, as in the case of the ready-made clothing, comparative data for foreign countries are absent. The analysis is made from the establishments of the United States, and the effort of the board has been to segregate the different items of cost, so as to show the cost of stock, labor, and factory expense. The general showing made by the board is that the materials used consist of the coarser grades of yarn, while the processes of manufacture are apparently less costly than those producing cloth. Thus, for example, in the sample study made by the board it was found that, for instance, in sample 49, the stock cost of the sample was 94 cents per yard, while American conversion cost was 40 cents, making a total cloth cost of $1.34. In English mills the yarn for a yard cost 61 cents, and the manufacturing cost was 15 cents, giving a total cloth cost of 76 cents per yard. The labor in the conversion cost for the United States was found to be 21.3 cents per yard. Contrasting this with the Cardigan jacket, taken by the board as a sample in the knit-goods investigation (p. 920), it was found that the cost for stock and trimmings in a dozen garments was $11.68, while the conversion cost was $8.16. The total mill cost, therefore, was $19.84.

In the United States the labor outlay for converting yarn (No. 49) into cloth was about 16 per cent, while in the case of the knit goods the labor outlay was about 30 per cent of the total. The labor outlay on sample No. 49 was, however, about 54 per cent of the actual conversion cost from yarn to finished goods, while in the Cardigan jackets it was about 70 per cent. In their samples it appears that the labor cost of conversion is about two-thirds of the total cost of conversion, while numerous instances are given by the board in which the relationship between labor cost of conversion from yarn to finished cloth is substantially the same, or is higher. There appears to be no reason, therefore, for assuming that any larger allowance for protection should be made upon knit goods than upon ready-made clothing or fabrics. The knit goods are made from the lower and coarser qualities of yarn, and there is less difference in the cost of production, probably, of such yarns between the United States and foreign countries than there is on the finer yarns when labor and capital costs are considered. The fair inference would be, therefore, that the duty required on the knit goods would be less than the duty called for upon fabrics.

G. CARPETS.

No data whatever are furnished by the board with reference to carpets except a few general statements concerning the position of the industry in Volume I (pp. 169–188). These statements are purely descriptive of methods of manufacture, amounts of importation and exportation, etc. The tariff history with reference to carpets is given. The board points out (p. 169) that the difficulty in fixing tariff rates on carpets has been to arrange matters in such a way that the rates should prevent the introduction of third-class wool and its use as a substitute for clothing wool. This is a difficulty which grows out of the application of specific duties, with considerable variations in the amount of wastes produced in the process of manufacturing, etc. If an ad valorem duty is levied upon third-class wools, upon the same basis as on the first and second class, the difficulties arising out of variations in compensation involved in the specific-duty system are removed. Assuming that the ad valorem charge on carpet wools is the same as on other wools, two questions arise in connection with tariff duties (1) whether the relation between the raw material employed in the manufacture of the finished product bears approximately the same relationship to the value of labor in carpets as is the case of fabrics made from the finer wools, and (2) whether the industry employs about the same proportion of tax-free materials as does that which deals with fabrics.

On these points the board furnishes little or no information, and what it does furnish is incidental to its discussion of other phases of the industry. The conclusion to be drawn from the statistical matter furnished is that, owing to the use of raw materials other than wool, which are dutiable at a much lower rate, or are free of duty, there is much less reason for the levying of duties at the same rate on carpets as upon fabrics. The fact that the raw material is so much less valuable than in the case of the fabric tends to reduce the value of the stock cost as compared with the labor cost entering the product. If these two factors be considered to offset each other, in a measure, the rate of duty on carpets might be regarded as about the same as that placed on the coarser fabrics, whatever that may be. In proportion as the quantity of materials other than wool increases the amount of nontaxed material in the goods also increases, and hence the aggregate amount of duty, which has been sustained in turning out a product of a given value, is reduced. How great a reduction this should permit in the rates of duty as compared with the maximum rate to be authorized upon the best grades of carpets can not be stated on the basis of anything contained in the report of the board.

The board's report, however, shows a materially smaller difference in cost between the United States and other countries with respect to the coarser varieties of carpets, which employ less labor and capital relatively to the amount of material included in them. The lower counts of yarn have a decidedly lower cost of production, both absolutely and relatively, than do the higher counts employed in the manufacture of the better grades of fabrics. The inference to be drawn, therefore, from this part of the report is that a reduction of duty on the lower grades of carpets, not only because of the smaller proportion of taxed materials in them, but also because of the fact that so much less actual labor is employed, unit for unit, in their production. The rate of reduction in the duties on carpets below the maximum rate assigned to the best grades of carpets can not, therefore, be measured as a percentage of the amount of duty charged over and above the rate on raw wool. This would be true only if carpets were composed exclusively of wool, or at all events in the same proportion that holds good of the other fabrics. Where the use of other raw materials has entered this is not the case. This situation is recognized by the board in connection with its study of cloths, where it points out that its rates of compensatory duty apply to fabrics made wholly of wool (p. 626), but that the situation is different where cheaper materials are employed, while there is no test that will disclose the proportion of noils, shoddy, etc., to new wool in the many varieties of fabric.

There is nothing whatever in the board's report which affords any reason for modifying or changing the rates on carpets fixed in H. R. 11019 in relation to the other rates fixed in that bill. Should a change be made in the rates on raw wool, tops, and yarns as compared with those carried in H. R. 11019, reason would be afforded for changing the rates on carpets, but the former products remaining the same there is nothing whatever to support a change in the rates in the carpet paragraphs.

RECAPITULATION ON TARIFF BOARD REPORT.

1. The theory of applying tariff duties according to the difference in the cost of production in this and in foreign countries, upon which the board has projected and prepared its report, is entirely erroneous and untenable. Furthermore, if this theory could have been systematically and carefully applied, it would not have afforded trustworthy results for guidance in preparing tariff legislation.

2. The board's report is fragmentary and incomplete, and rests on an incorrect statistical basis. Hence it has no claims to confidence for the results set forth therein, even should the reliability of the theory of the cost of production be conceded.

3. Those persons who are willing to overlook the lack of theoretical soundness and of statistical accuracy will find the data of the report too fragmentary and incomplete to admit of conclusions with reference to rates of tariff duty. Even under the most favorable interpretation of the report conclusions as to duties can be reached for only a few paragraphs of the wool schedule, and for these paragraphs it is not possible to formulate definite conclusions, because the figures vary widely and seriously lack uniformity and comparability. So much is this the case that justification is apparently afforded in the report for rates that are in conflict with one another. It is thus seen that the report leaves the question of the tariff duties on wool as much unsolved as before the Tariff Board was formed.

4. So far as conclusions can be drawn from the board's report, it furnishes nothing to justify any change in the rates proposed in H. R. 11019. With full recognition of the incomplete, fragmentary, and unsatisfactory nature of the data, and with full admission of the inadequate and unreliable basis afforded for computations, the following table may be regarded as setting forth as well as it is possible to do the conclusions as to the rates of duty justified by the report.

[1] Combed wool or tops not reported. [2] No data furnished by Tariff Board.

In making the computations from which have resulted the rates shown in Table 15, as justified by the Tariff Board's data, the most expensive and difficult conditions indicated by the data as attending production have been employed with a view to being more than just in the conclusions. As will be observed from the figures shown, the necessity of protection to equalize the difference in the cost of production beyond the rates carried by H. R. 11019 exists in but few instances, and these are in all probability the result of the high costs which have been presented and used by the board in the computations.

5. In preparing H. R. 11019 of last session and H. R. 22195 of this session no intentional provision was made for protection, the endeavor being to reduce and adjust rates so as to produce the largest amount of revenue consistent with the proper consideration of the consumer. It is believed that the rates of this bill approach very closely, at least, to the best revenue-producing points, and these rates should, if enacted into law, permit such quantities of imports as will effectively regulate domestic prices. Such competition would be an important service to the people, as it would encourage increased consumption and production by making more nearly normal the conditions of supply and demand. The report of the Tariff Board, so far as it admits of conclusions, shows that the rates which meet the consumer's needs also sufficiently satisfy those of the producer.

REVENUE OF H. R. 22195.

As the committee is resubmitting to the House the bill presented at the last session of Congress, with no change of basis or rates, no change in its revenue estimate is called for. In the following table is presented with other data the results of the computation furnished in the report which accompanied H. R. 11019 (H. Rept. 45, 62d Cong., 1st sess.):

[1] Includes plushes and other pile fabrics.
[2] Includes $3 free of duty.
[3] Does not include knit fabrics not wearing apparel, which, in table estimated on the basis of net consumption are included among wearing apparel clothing, ready-made, etc.

As indicated in Table 16, the committee estimates that the duties during the first 12-month period under H. R. 22195 will amount to $40,556,016, which compares with $41,904,850 for 1910 and $28,982,553 for 1911. It is believed by the committee that no loss in revenue will result from the enactment of H. R. 22195, but that the bill will produce probably as much as in 1910, while at the same time the yearly burden resting upon the people owing to the cost of woolen clothing will be reduced by more than $50,000,000.

THE FORM AND PHRASEOLOGY OF THE BILL.

The phraseology of the bill H. R. 22195 conforms throughout to that of H. R. 11019, which is practically the same as that of the act of 1909. In framing the bill the purpose of the committee has been to make no change in the language used in enumerating and describing the articles included under its provisions, except such as is necessarily involved in the omission of the provisions for the classification of raw wools, admixture of blood, the varying rates on washed, scoured, sorted, or skirted wools, etc., and the omission of subclassifications according to value, weight, or dimension of most of the groups of manufactured articles. The exclusive use of ad valorem duties obviates the intricate and complex qualifications, differentiations, and discriminations of Schedule K of the act of 1909. Ad valorem duties automatically adjust themselves to all these distinctions.

The enacting clause of the bill conforms exactly to that of the tariff act of August 5, 1909, of which the bill is practically an amendment, in order to avoid any possible ambiguity or conflict with regard to the insular possessions of the United States. The warehouse provision (sec. 2) also conforms exactly to the corresponding provisions in the act of 1909 (sec. 29), except that the provision for levying duties based on weight at the time of the entry of the merchandise is omitted, since the bill H. R. 22195 provides for no duties based on weight. Under this warehouse provision, as in the present act, articles in warehouse when the bill H. R. 22195 takes effect, on which duties have not been paid, shall be subjected to duty when withdrawn as if they had been imported after the taking effect of the act; but articles in warehouse on which duties have been paid and a permit of delivery issued, shall be subject to the duties imposed prior to the enactment of the new bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCGILLICUDDY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 22, 1912:

H. R. 16680. An act to authorize the board of county commissioners of Baxter County and the board of county commissioners of Marion County, in the State of Arkansas, acting together for the two counties as bridge commissioners, to construct a bridge across the White River at or near the town of Cotter, Ark.; and

H. R. 17242. An act to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to cross the Government right of way along and adjacent to the canal connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington at Seattle, in the State of Washington.

On March 23, 1912:

H. R. 11824. An act to amend section 113 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911;

H. R. 17119. An act granting the courthouse reserve at Pond Creek, Okla., to the city of Pond Creek for school and municipal purposes;

H. R. 17837. An act to amend an act approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes"; and

H. R. 18155. An act authorizing the town of Grand Rapids to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in Itasca County, State of Minnesota.

On March 28, 1912:

H. R. 19342. An act to amend section 2455 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to isolated tracts of public land.

On March 29, 1912:

H. R. 17671. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I believe there was no arrangement made in regard to the division of time, and therefore it will be at the disposition of the Chair.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Chair that I have limited my own time to an hour, and if the Chair will dispose of the time I think we ought to limit the debate to an hour for each gentleman who speaks.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. HILL. I should like to have an hour and a half, if the gentleman will not object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I tried to reach a conclusion in reference to time, but could not reach any agreement.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course the time will be equally divided on the two sides. It will not prolong the debate any to allow the gentleman from Connecticut an hour and a half.

Mr. HILL. I would prefer to have an understanding in regard to the time. I throw myself on the courtesy of the gentleman from Alabama, being entitled, as I am, to one hour only.

Mr. MCCALL. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to yield half an hour of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. DALZELL. So am I.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I would have been glad to discuss the bill longer, but we could not come to an agreement, and I believe each Member should conform to the rules of the House. I tried to reach an agreement.

Mr. HILL. But I did not object.

Mr. PAYNE. I agreed to the gentleman's request and did not object. The objection came from no member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut may proceed for an hour and a half and that that be taken into consideration by the Chair in dividing the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is manifestly unfair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois requests that the gentleman from Connecticut may proceed for an hour and a half.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to object.

Mr. MANN. That is unheard of.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized as a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has been recognized.

Mr. HILL. I prefer that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be recognized temporarily.

Mr. MANN. That can not be done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am not objecting because I do not want the gentleman from Connecticut to talk, but I do insist on the rules of the House being conformed to.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman from Alabama object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielding me half an hour of his time?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is not a question of yielding time.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no desire to take more time on this side than there is time used on the other. The time shall be equally divided.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I offered the gentleman a fair agreement as to the division of time and the gentleman did not take it, and this bill will be considered under the rules of the House.

Mr. MANN. Then, the bill will be considered under the rules of the House.

Mr. DALZELL. We are not responsible for the failure to agree; it did not come from us. The objection came from a party outside of the committee.

Mr. MANN. It makes no difference who is responsible for it, no gentleman ought to object to such a request; if they want to do it, let them do it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama in opening his address stated that the Tariff Board was representative of the views of the President. I ask him if he assumes responsibility for the majority report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order. I want gentlemen to be seated, and I desire that the rules be enforced.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will cease conversation, and gentlemen in the aisles will be seated.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Alabama a somewhat unnecessary question—if he and his colleagues on the committee assume responsibility for the majority report published last night.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I certainly do.

Mr. HILL. At the opening of his remarks the gentleman stated that the Tariff Board is representative of the views of the President of the United States. On page 9 of the report you will find this statement:

> Probably the most striking feature of the report of the Tariff Board is that it contains little with reference to the tariff. It is primarily an analysis of the money expenses involved in the production and manufacture of wool.

He says, furthermore, that the report of the Tariff Board is wrong, and this whole report of the committee, from the first page to the last, is nothing but an attempt to prove that the report of the Tariff Board is worthless; but the greater part of the gentleman's time was taken up in trying to demonstrate that his own bill was in accord with the Tariff Board's report. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Again and again throughout this statement, which I hope the Members will carefully read, you will find that this Tariff Board report is worthless; but assuming that the facts are right, it proves the rightness of the Democratic position.

It seems to me, as the inevitable result of that kind of logic, that assuming false premises in the beginning and claiming to be right on that presumption absolutely demonstrates they are wrong from the start. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I propose to try and show that the Republican bill introduced and presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is in accordance with the report of the Tariff Board; whether it suits you or me or you gentlemen on the other side, that has nothing to do with it; that it is made on the basis of the Tariff Board findings; and that the Republican Party stands on that before the country to-day; and if I do not prove it I will concede that it is a false assumption, as the gentleman says.

A REPUBLICAN SCHEDULE K BASED ON THE REPORT OF THE TARIFF BOARD.

Mr. Chairman, on page 41 of the report of the committee submitting a revision of Schedule K, which was presented by Mr. UNDERWOOD, of Alabama, on June 6, 1911, this statement will be found:

> The price of the corresponding or competing American fabric is increased in price by the amount of the duty, as is known to be the case, and would be inevitable.

This is the theory upon which all of the Democratic tariff legislation of this session has been framed.

It is the theory upon which magazine writers have based sensational attacks upon Schedule K. It is the theory upon which free traders have denounced the protective system, the theory by which woolgrowers and manufacturers have far too often deluded themselves, and a theory upon which many honest and conscientious protectionists are still insistent for the continuance of some formerly protective rates of duty, which are not only indefensible now but which have long since ceased to be beneficial or effective.

It is a theory which ignores the steady growth of domestic competition, which assumes unaltered and unchanging trade conditions at home and in competing nations, and which is blind to the fact that while men may legislate and nations resolve, the higher and absolutely merciless law of supply and demand is still in operation.

TARIFF BOARD JUSTIFIED.

The report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K cost a large sum of money and a great amount of skilled investigation for more than two years. It would all have been fully justified if that report had given us nothing else but 20 lines found on page 14, volume 1, for the one plain fact therein stated demonstrates the necessity for three things—first, the continuation of such an investigating body; second, for the revision of this schedule; and third, for the maintenance of the protective policy by this country. I quote as follows:

> On the other hand, prices in this country on the fabrics just referred to are not increased by the full amount of the duty. A collection of representative samples was made in England of goods ranging from those which can not be imported at all to those which are imported continually. These were then matched with a collection of samples of American-made cloths, which were fairly comparable, and the mill prices compared for the same date. It is found that on goods entirely excluded the nominal rates of duty would reach an ad valorem rate of 150 or even over 200 per cent, but that the American fabric is actually sold in the market at from only 60 to 80 per cent higher than similar goods sold abroad.
> On 16 samples of foreign goods, for instance, none of which are imported, the figures are as follows:

Total of foreign prices	$41.84
Duties which would have been assessed had they been imported	76.90
Foreign price, plus the duty, if imported	118.74
Actual domestic price of similar fabrics	69.75

> Thus, though the nominal duties on such fabrics equal 184 per cent, the actual excess of the domestic price over the foreign price on similar fabrics of this kind is about 67 per cent. This is the result of domestic competition.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, would it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question right there?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very glad to be interrupted if the gentleman will give me additional time later.

Mr. PAYNE. But they will not give the gentleman any time.

Mr. HILL. Then I shall have to object. I have not the slightest objection to interruptions——

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman better proceed with his speech.

This is doubtless an extreme illustration. Translated, it means that the average duty on these 16 samples is 184 per cent and that the average duty necessary to equalize competition was only 67 per cent, leaving an average duty of 117 per cent as unnecessary and ineffective under the present law. But it also means beyond any dispute that the revenue rate of the Underwood bill would destroy the woolen industry here, or compel a complete reorganization of labor conditions both in woolgrowing and manufacturing and a readjustment of wages of labor to the rates obtaining in competing countries, for another striking feature of the board report is that in the textile industry we can no longer boast of the superior efficiency of American labor or machinery, but, rather, that we are the laggards in the race with England and France in both respects.

But these 16 samples are only a part of a list of 61 described on page 704 of volume 3 of the report. There the English price, the United States price, and the English price plus the present duty are given.

The average English price is 78.4 cents per yard. The average United States price on the same fabrics is $1.243 per yard.

The duty on the English fabrics required to give the American producer an equal chance in the home market is 63 per cent.

Again, the average English price is 78.4 cents per yard. The average price with present law duties added is $1.577.

The ad valorem rate of those duties is 101 per cent, or 38 per cent more than is needed to equalize competition.

On pages 651 to 690, inclusive, are statements of the cost of manufacturing 55 different kinds of cloth, as submitted by domestic and foreign manufacturers from like schedules sent with samples to domestic and foreign mills and checked against each other. That statement is tabulated in the report of the Democratic majority of the committee, and if I have time I can show that there is more misrepresentation in that tabulation than I have ever seen on one sheet of paper in my life. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I long ago had a similar tabulation made and have studied it with great care and am thoroughly satisfied that the domestic industry to-day is on a purely competitive basis, and that the real prices paid by the consumers of domestic wool products are measured by the actual difference here and abroad in the cost of the raw material and the wages of labor, and that they are not now controlled by the existing tariff rates found in Schedule K. Why, then, change them, say some people.

REASONS FOR REVISION.

An all-sufficient reason is the maintenance of competitive conditions at home and the prevention of monopoly.

Furthermore, on page 190 of the report, a statement is given of the production and imports of specified wool products, from which it appears that of the entire consumption in 1909, 95.8 per cent of the whole was made here and only 4.2 per cent was imported.

The consumers of the 4 per cent are returning tourists, the buyers of Paris gowns, the well to do here, who have a right to gratify their fads and fancies for foreign styles and patterns, and undoubtedly to some extent the purchasers of some things the like of which are not made in this country.

Such consumers probably pay the full duties under Schedule K because domestic competition does not touch these cases, and though few in number, compared with the ninety millions who use only the domestic products, they are entitled to equitable and just treatment under the law. Furthermore an unjust, unnecessary, and ineffective duty is just as harmful to the principle of true protection as is the open and avowed opposition of the free trader, and almost as much so as the insidious and disguised attack of the advocate of a tariff for revenue only.

PURPOSE OF THE REPUBLICAN BILL.

The purpose of the Republican bill is first to provide rates of duty which shall give to the growing and manufacture of wool in this country a true protection, measured by the difference in the cost of such production here and abroad, and in fixing such rates reliance has been placed on the findings of the Tariff Board. No effort has been made to discredit that report, and I venture the assertion that no Member of the House who will study it carefully will attempt to impeach its accuracy or fairness. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is a unanimous report by three Republicans and two Democrats, and gives their findings of facts concerning a world-wide industry, and it bears no evidence anywhere of favoritism or political partisanship. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It would be strange indeed if in making deductions from these facts honest differences of opinion should not be found among those upon whom the responsibility devolves of making the customs laws. But as a whole I am satisfied that the bill which the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee have presented is either strictly in accord with or fully justified by the report of the Tariff Board.

THE DUTY ON WOOL.

The basic fact of the industry is wool. For the past 14 years the duties have been unchanged.

For the 10 years of normal business conditions between the enactment of the Dingley law and the financial panic of 1907 the average import value of class 1 wool in the grease was 19 cents per pound and dutiable at 11 cents per pound, or an ad valorem rate of 57.89 per cent.

For the same period the average import value of class 2 wool in the grease was 20.74 cents per pound, and the duty was 12 cents per pound, or an ad valorem rate of 57.86 per cent.

Under the Republican bill the two classes are consolidated as class 1 and a duty of 18 cents is laid upon the clean content of the wool imported in the grease. This is equal to 7½ cents per pound of grease wool and the equivalent ad valorem rate on the foregoing basis is 36.21 per cent.

PRESENT LAW INEFFECTIVE.

Under the present law, based as it is upon an assumed shrinkage of 66⅔ per cent, every importation of wool with a less shrinkage broke down the nominal duty of 11 cents proportionately. With an average shrinkage of Australian and South American wools as now imported of only 48 per cent and of class 2 wools of only 18 to 30 per cent, the effect upon the protection given to the American grower by a nominal duty of 11 cents is at once manifest. In addition to that, under the present law, wools of classes 2 and 3 are admitted washed at the same rate as unwashed. This also tends to reduce the nominal duty, which is doubled under like conditions in class 1.

But carpet wools, or wools of class 3, were worse than either, for these duties are 4 and 7 cents per pound, either in the grease or washed, and it was found beyond question that a considerable amount was being used in mixtures with class 1 and 2 wools, and not only affecting injuriously the supposed protection of the domestic grower, but that the fabrics into which this wool entered were actually being protected on the basis of the higher rates of duty.

It is not only beyond question that these leak holes have allowed much of the present law duties to run uselessly away, but that owing to the character of them, the effect has been extremely detrimental to the carded-woolen branch of the industry and correspondingly advantageous to the worsted manufacturer, and especially has this been true during the past few years since the improvements in worsted machinery have made it possible to utilize both clothing and combing wools.

LAW DUTY AND ACTUAL PROTECTION.

On page 382 of volume 2 of the report the statement is unequivocally made that the scoured pound duty on the importations under the present law does not actually exceed 18 cents, the rate fixed in the Republican bill. This is equal to 7½ cents per pound of wool in the grease. I firmly believe that with the leak holes stopped, as I think the Republican bill does stop them, the American woolgrower will get a far more reliable and effective protection than he has received at any time since the Dingley law was enacted, and I call to witness the men who ought to know, in order to prove my case.

On the 12th day of last July, Senator DIXON, of Montana, speaking for a State which has more sheep than any other, said, on page 2931 of the RECORD:

For the past six months the difference in London and the United States on wool has not exceeded 2 cents.

This was concurred in at the time by Senator SMOOT and others.

On July 26, 1911, the Senator made a speech on "Tariff duties on wool—the truth about Schedule K." In it he said:

I shall show conclusively that the struggling sheep grower has been led to believe, and most of them have believed and the people at large have certainly believed, that he was protected by a duty of 11 cents per pound. He has in reality not had a tariff protection to exceed 5 cents, certainly not over 6 cents, per pound on the average. * * *

People generally have believed that the woolgrower has been protected by a duty of 11 cents per pound. Some of the sheepmen have believed that this was true. Many of them have known that the nominal paper duty of 11 cents per pound was in fact a delusion and a snare; and that the actual tariff duties have not given the woolgrower to exceed 5 or 6 cents per pound. I doubt even that much.

Again, Judge Lawrence gave it as his deliberate opinion, in his annual address before the Ohio Woolgrowers' Association in 1898, after the notorious skirting clause had again been inserted in the Dingley law of 1897, that "the skirting clause was a fatal defect in both the McKinley and the Dingley tariff laws." He gave it as his judgment that under the loophole of the skirting clause and the inadequate duty placed on wools of class 3, the nominal paper duty of 11 cents per pound only "added an average of about 4 cents per pound to the price of unwashed wool to the average American merino wool over the normal world's price, and no more." * * *

Senator WARREN, interrupting:

Mr. WARREN. The previous reference to Judge Lawrence reminds me that my association with him commenced in the sixties, and usually at least once a year I saw him from that time on. Now, the woolgrowers, aside from the skirting, even if that were eliminated, would not get the 11 cents, of course, because shippers abroad will always ship the lightest fleeces. If you take out the skirted wool, then you will get the light fleeces, which will go a shrinkage of perhaps 48, while ours will go 66⅔, which was originally accorded as the regular rate of shrinkage. Now, those of us who have long known the duty know that 11 cents and 12 cents has not been the real protection, but that it has been from 5 to 7½ cents per pound.

Senator WARREN again:

There has not been a time, in conversation or public speaking, when the matter has come up to me, when I have not made the statement that on first-class wool the real protection to the sheep grower has not exceeded 7½ cents a pound, and that it is sometimes less since the introduction of light-shrinkage crossbred wools.

Senator WARREN, of Wyoming, from the greatest woolgrowing State in the Union, and the man who was characterized by the late Senator Dolliver as the greatest shepherd since the days of Abraham, followed Senator DIXON, and I quote from him now:

The speech from the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] has had in it very much with which I agree, although I am not ready to admit that the general ruling wool prices in London are so near the Boston prices as now, or that first-class wool has received never above 5 cents per pound protection. * * *

This last spring curiosity to know exactly what our wools would bring in foreign markets caused a shipment of wool to be made from the United States to Bradford, England, which was disposed of with the following results:

Results of sale of United States wool in Bradford, England.

Lot No.	Grade.	Shrinkage.	Grease price, Bradford.	Scoured price, Bradford.	Which netted Philadelphia, in grease.	Current Philadelphia price was at the time—
		Per cent.	Cents per lb.	Cents per lb.	Cents per lb.	Cents per lb.
98	Half-blood Wyoming	65	15.71	44.88	14.69	18
1890	Wyoming original	71	12.67	43.70	11.71	14
32	Medium Montana	58	16.50	39.24	15.45	19 to 20
7870	No. 1 scoured			45.62	.44	48

In the above calculation freight and insurance, at the rate of seven-tenths cent per pound, are taken as the cost of delivering wool in Bradford; and in figuring the net price in Philadelphia—sold Bradford—the cost of delivering wool in Bradford and the selling commission are deducted.

In case of the scoured wool the freight may be higher than on the grease wool, and the net price in Philadelphia proportionately lower.

From this table it will be noted that—

	Cents per pound.
Half-blood Wyoming was worth:
In Philadelphia	18.00
In Bradford	15.71
A difference of	2.29
Wyoming original (unsorted) was worth:
In Philadelphia	14.00
In Bradford	12.67
A difference of	1.33
Medium Montana was worth:
In Philadelphia	19.20
In Bradford	16.50
A difference of	2.70

I have one more witness.

Last winter I was called by telephone to my office by the statement that Dr. McClure, the secretary of the Wool Growers' Association, wished to see me. He was an entire stranger to me. I at once responded, and after mutual introductions I said, "I have just been discussing the question of the actual protection which the American woolgrower is now getting under an 11-cent duty and I gave it as my opinion that it was not over 5½ cents." "Oh, no," said he, holding up two fingers as he said it; "it is not over 2 cents." Said I, "How much have you ever got since the Dingley law was passed?" His reply was, "I do not know as to that; but I have the official figures in my office to show that for the past 10 years it has not exceeded 6 cents." "Will you give me these figures?" said I. His reply was, "I will; but it will take a week or 10 days to get them here." I have not received them yet.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not a question of what rates of duty are written into a law, what I want to know is what rates of protection are written by the law into the producing industries of this country. Higher rates than that are a disappointing dream, lower ones mean destruction or industrial revolution. And it is just as true of agricultural products as it is of wool. The things which we do not or can not produce I would put on the free list. The things which compete with the things we do produce I would make dutiable by the full difference in the cost of production.

And in that I stand squarely with the Senator from Montana when he said in his closing remarks in the speech from which I have quoted:

Two years ago, as one of the provisions of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, we provided for a Tariff Commission with powers to investigate and report to us the conditions surrounding production at home and abroad. We then gave our allegiance to the principle as enunciated in the last Republican platform—that tariffs should measure the difference in the cost of production at home as compared to the cost of production in foreign countries. On that platform and by that principle I stand. No matter what may be the pressure in some quarters for tariff revision, I believe that the people of this country have, irrespective of their party politics, prepared to accept in future only those tariffs that are made upon that fundamental principle.

Does 18 cents a pound on the clean content of a pound of wool imported in the grease measure the difference in the average cost of the wool produced in the United States and competing countries? In my judgment it will, and at the same time will give to the American producer a much safer and more reliable protection than he has now.

AVERAGE COSTS OF WOOL.

The average costs of the respective countries are found on pages 10 and 11 of volume 1 of the report of the Tariff Board.

The average cost in the United Staes is given at about 9½ cents per pound.

The average cost in South America is between 4 and 5 cents. I have taken it as 4½ cents per pound.

With regard to Australia—and I want you to note this now, for I want you to see the absolute unfairness of the report of the majority, which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says he assumes the responsibility for—with regard to Australia, the board finds as follows:

In New Zealand and on the favorably situated runs of Australia it seems clear that at the present range of values for stock, sheep, and mutton the receipts from other sources than wool are carrying the total flock expense. So that, taking Australasia as a whole, it appears that a charge of a very few cents per pound lies against the great clips of that region in the aggregate. While the board can not undertake to name an exact figure in that case, it is certain that the Australasian costs at large fall materially below the average South American.

What have they done? I have said to you that the board quoted the South American cost of wool at 4 or 5 cents, and I took an average of 4½ cents, and that the board says in any event the costs of Australian wool fall materially below the average of South America, which is 4½ cents; yet in that very report they have taken the Australian wool at 5 cents in figuring the difference.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the gentleman from Alabama said so in his speech, and would not yield for a question at that time.

Mr. HILL. Yes. It shows the absolute unfairness of the majority report.

Mr. MANN. He was as accurate in that statement as in most others, was he not?

Mr. HILL. Well, I have taken the Australian cost at 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. CANNON. What proportion of the different kinds do we import?

Mr. HILL. I will show you in a moment. I have taken the language to mean that the Australian cost is one-half of the maximum of the South American, or 2½ cents per pound.

So far as shrinkages are concerned, it is apparent that the yields of clean content shown in past importations are no criterion for the future, for in the Republican bill the leak holes are stopped by the single duty on clean wool, and the wools of the world are opened to purchase on the basis of a uniform condition which, as nearly as can be determined, will show a general shrinkage from their natural condition of 60 per cent.

On this basis the cost of the clean content of wool in Australia is 6.25 cents per pound.

The cost in South America is 11.25 cents per pound.

The cost in the United States is 23.75 cents per pound.

The difference in cost between Australia and the United States is 17½ cents.

The difference in cost between South America and the United States is 12½ cents.

Now, as a matter of fact, there is not wool enough in the world to meet the world's demand, and neither of these countries does or can alone produce a sufficient surplus to meet our deficiency in the home product. There is not wool enough in the world to go around; not enough to furnish to each inhabitant more than 14 ounces a year. What would we do with only 14 ounces per capita of wool a year? And just think of the 400,000,000 population of China, which, now having thrown off the Manchu despotism, is adopting the European costume in clothing, so that there the demand for wool will be enormously increased.

	Pounds.
Last year, a year of small importations, we imported direct from Australia of clothing and combing wools	11,223,173
And from South America and South Africa, and not including reshipments from Great Britain which can not be traced	19,556,699

The weighted average cost of this wool competing with the domestic product was 3.77 cents per pound in the grease, or a difference in cost of 5.73 cents per pound, or a difference in clean content of 14.32 cents.

But drought or pestilence in either country might easily change the respective shipments, and it would seem to be only fair therefore to make the average on the basis of equal competition from both countries in the future.

On that basis the average cost of the competing grease pound, is 3½ cents and the difference in cost is 6 cents, which is equal to 15 cents per pound of clean content. The conclusion I reached therefore was, that 15 cents per pound on the clean content of imported wool was a fair duty to put upon it, but I recognize the fact that there is abundant room for an honest difference of opinion in favor of a somewhat higher rate.

First. Because of the uncertainty of the board's report as to the cost of Australian wool. If Australian like New Zealand wool has no charge against the clip, the rate should be 18½ cents per pound. I do not think the language will quite bear that construction. If, on the other hand, the difference in the interest cost in the respective countries is charged up against the clip, then 18 cents is a fair and just measure of the difference in cost between the domestic and foreign wool, and the duty should be 18 cents, as it is in the Republican bill, and I cheerfully united with my Republican colleagues on the committee in so fixing it, for I always want to resolve every doubt in favor of my own country as against the rest of the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

My conclusion, therefore, is that the report of the Tariff Board will not justify a lower duty than 15 cents or a higher one than 18 cents.

METHODS OF APPLYING DUTIES.

Theoretically an ad valorem duty on wool is, in my opinion, the best method of applying the duty, but it presupposes matching the talent, ability, and experience of the importer with an equal talent, ability, and experience, supplemented by inflexible honesty and integrity in every member of the appraising force, and that means paying salaries in the appraisers' stores equal to those paid for profit in private business. There is no hope of that, however, and hence the possibility and probability of undervaluations would be so great that the experiment would be a dangerous one.

Specific duties have been the rule here for many years, and we can not profit by the experience of other nations, for no other nation but Russia has a duty on wool, except that in Canada a specific rate of 3 cents per pound is placed on certain combing wools such as are grown in Canada. All other wools are free.

A specific duty on the clean content of wool subjects every importation to uniform treatment, so far as actual quantity is concerned, does away with the absurdity of paying duties on grease and dirt, makes certain the collection of duties as intended by the law, wipes out the discriminations and crudities of the present method, and will tend very greatly to standardize the importation of wools.

It does not, however, take note of the varying quality of the fiber. The suggestion of this method was first made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] three years ago, and discussed by the committee with the Chief of the Bureau of Standards at that time.

The necessary sampling and testing can be done at a trivial expense, and the advantage to the trade of having all clothing and combing wools bought and sold on a Government certificate of their clean content would be very great.

And I call the attention of the gentleman from the greatest woolgrowing State in the Union to this suggestion which I now make.

It would also be a great benefit to the home producers if, by the payment of a nominal fee, they could have like tests made of domestic wools and a Government certificate of condition given instead of selling, as most of them are compelled to do now, upon the guess of the buyer or after scouring tests made by or under the control of interested parties in the wool markets of the country.

CARPET WOOLS.

I commend the consideration of this part of my remarks to my Democratic brethren.

Wools of class 3 under the present law are dutiable at 4 and 7 cents per pound, according to whether they are valued at more or less than 12 cents per pound in the grease.

It is the wool of native sheep, unimproved by merino blood. With the improvement of American flocks its growth here has practically stopped. It is now a noncompetitive product and under every principle of protection should be placed upon the free list.

The danger has been, however, that it would be used for other purposes than carpets, and this has been done to such an extent as to make it competitive in its uses and tending in an increasing degree to break down the higher duties on wools of the other class. Under the Republican bill carpet wools are practically made free of duty and their use confined to the purposes for which they are peculiarly adapted. This is done by making them dutiable at the same rate as other wools and then rebating 99 per cent of the amount paid on proof of use in carpet manufacture.

In 1911, 92,000,000 pounds of carpet wool were imported, as against 67,000,000 pounds of the higher grades.

Note that about two-thirds of the importations of wool are put on the free list in the Republican bill, and our friends from North Carolina and the other States in the Union, who are just as honest free traders as I am a protectionist, voted to put a duty of 20 per cent on an article which the Republicans voted to make free. [Applause on the Republican side.]

For 10 years of normal conditions prior to 1907 the rate of duty on these wools was 42 per cent.

Under the present duty the average ad valorem on carpets, etc., is about 61 per cent.

The Republican bill makes the noncompetitive raw material free and reduces the rate on the finished product to 30 per cent.

The reduction covers not only the full amount of the duty on wool, but about 10 per cent on the conversion cost besides, and I have every reason to believe that the change is entirely satisfactory to the carpet trade generally.

The Democratic Party is vociferous in its demands that duties shall be reduced to a revenue basis, and yet they have for the second time brought in here a Democratic bill putting 20 per cent on carpet wool, and on carpets duties ranging from 25 to 50 per cent.

This Nation stands first in rank in the carpet industry among the nations of the world. Under the Republican policy of protection the carpet on the floor has long since ceased to be a luxury and has become an everyday necessity. I knew of a woman once from a foreign land whose highest idea of heaven was that it was a place where she could have a room all her own, with a carpet on the floor. This carpet duty will result in an economy which will find its way into nearly every home in this land, for there are few so humble that the floors are bare. You will find the carpet on the floor in the farmer's home, in the mechanic's cottage, and in the millionaire's mansion, and if you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle will come over and join us in passing this Republican bill, all of the women of the land will rise up and call you blessed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

DUTIES ON BY-PRODUCTS.

Under the present law the duties on paragraphs 10, 11, and 14 are 30 cents per pound, and on paragraphs 12, 13, and 15 they are 20 cents per pound. All of these are prohibitory, and as some of them are by-products of the worsted branch of the industry and raw materials for the carded woolen people the injustice of the prohibitive duties is plainly manifest.

Application was made to the Tariff Board for a review of their schedules of mill tests and conversion processes, and a determination of the percentage of relative value of each of these items to the value of a pound of scoured wool, and the duties named in the Republican bill are mathematically adjusted to a like percentage of the duty of 18 cents on the scoured pound.

SHODDY AND RAGS.

Paragraphs 16 and 17 were not so treated, but represent a policy which is to exclude the lower grades of shoddy and the worn and rotten rags from which it is made and to fix the duty on new rags, tailor's clippings, and so forth, which would be about equivalent to the rate on wool in the grease. On the former 2 cents per pound would be equal to 100 per cent ad valorem and on the latter to about 33⅓ per cent. That we do not need importations of the former is evidenced by the fact that the board report, on page 83, shows that in 10 months of 1911 we shipped to Great Britain alone 37,000,000 pounds of cheap rags. They also state that—

The rag business is really the only business protected by Schedule K that is on the export basis.

In view of the claim, which is often made, that English cloth is superior to that of our own manufacture, it is a significant fact that in 1910, when we exported 37,000,000 pounds of rags to Great Britain, the woolen manufacturers of that country not only used all of their own rags, but imported and used 126,000,000 pounds besides.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. HILL. I should like to conclude my remarks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that I do not like to interfere with my personal friend.

Mr. HILL. I will not abuse the courtesy of the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I tried to reach a division of time, but could not. This is an unfortunate way to handle a bill. I am willing, however, if it is agreeable to the gentleman from Connecticut, that the gentleman who follows him may be recognized for an hour and then yield to the gentleman a half an hour.

Mr. HILL. I do not think I want more than 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not want to cut the gentleman off, but when we have no division of time and no control of the time between us it is better to conform to the rules.

Mr. PAYNE. I wish the gentleman from Alabama would agree with me that up to to-morrow night we may divide the time equally between us.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I tried to get a division of time, but objection was made.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has repeated that several times. The objection was made, and I assume the responsibility for it, but it was not made as to the division of time. It was made because gentlemen wanted to do away with the five-minute rule. I had no objection to the division of time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We must occupy the time in this way, although I preferred the other method if the gentleman from Nebraska had not objected; but, as I said, if one of the gentleman's colleagues is recognized for an hour and yields to the gentleman from Connecticut, I will not object.

Mr. HILL. Very well. Then, I will not break the continuity of my remarks and will trust to the generosity of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to yield me time if I am not through in my own time.

MANUFACTURES OF WOOL.

I come now to the duties on the manufactured products of wool. The first item is found in paragraph 18 of the Republican bill, which reads as follows:

Paragraph 18. Combed wool or tops, made wholly or in part of wool or camel's hair, 20 cents per pound on the wool contained therein and, in addition thereto, 5 per cent ad valorem.

It will be noticed that there are two duties here—one specific and the other ad valorem. If there were no duty on the wool from which this product is made, there would be but the one ad valorem duty of 5 per cent. It follows, therefore, that the specific is or should be based on the duty on wool. The specific is a weight duty apportioned in no way to the value of the manufactured product. It simply means that the Government will collect precisely the same amount from the wool in the imported article or fabric which it would have collected upon the wool required to make it if that wool had been imported in its natural condition. Just that and nothing more. It is called a compensatory duty. It is a misnomer as applied in this bill. Here it is a "wool-duty equivalent." If there is no wool duty, there is no need for a wool-duty equivalent, as will be seen by referring to paragraph 25, relating to carpets, where none is found. Under the present law the so-called compensatory or specific duty per pound is applicable to the entire weight of the product if wool is the article of chief value and the balance is cotton, rubber, metal, or any other material, for every product containing wool as the component article of chief value is dutiable under Schedule K; and even if it is not of chief value under the present law, the specific would still apply to the entire weight of wearing apparel and articles named under the silk schedule.

For example, take rubber boots with wool lining. The duty is now 44 cents per pound and 60 per cent ad valorem, or a total ad valorem of about 280 per cent.

In the Underwood bill the duty would be 45 per cent ad valorem. In the Republican bill, under clause 1 of paragraph 23, the rate would be about 47½ per cent. Either rate is fully protective. The raw rubber and raw cotton are free. Why should the specific wool duty apply to anything but the wool?

In that case the bill of the gentleman from Alabama is 2½ per cent lower than this. Let me give him one in which the Republican bill is lower than his by operation of the same clause.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman overlooks the fact that the Democratic bill is not an amendment to the Payne bill.

Mr. HILL. I understand that it is a substitute for it. That is an amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is an independent bill.

Mr. HILL. It is a substitute for a portion of it. It provides that in the bill. Let me give him another case where, under the operation of this clause, the duty is lower in the Republican bill than in his. I am told that there is now in the New York customhouse—or I was told so two weeks ago—an unclaimed importation of felts made from cattle and goat's hair.

Whether the felt contains any wool or not is disputed, but it makes no difference, for under the similarity clause of the present law the article is dutiable as wool at 44 cents per pound and 60 per cent ad valorem. It is worth 14 cents per pound and the ad valorem is about 370 per cent. The owner declines to pay the duty and take the goods. Under the Underwood bill, paragraph 5, the duty would be 40 per cent ad valorem. In the Republican bill, under paragraph 21, clause 1, the duty would be 30 per cent ad valorem, and if it contained 2½ per cent of wool, as some claim, the duty would be 34 per cent. In other words, the clause "on the wool contained therein" does equal and exact justice in every case. The specific duty in this case is entirely eliminated by this clause. You can see the sweeping character of it. Yet our Democratic friends have not discovered it either in their report or in the references made to the Republican bill by the gentleman from Alabama. I have personally submitted this clause to the Treasury authorities here and to the appraiser's office in New York, where I spent an afternoon in investigating the methods of appraising wool and woolens, and am advised both there and here that this method of applying the duty presents no administrative difficulties which can not be easily handled.

The real problem is a different one from that, and is found in the correct ascertainment of the wastes in the different processes of manufacture.

The whole subject is fully discussed by the Tariff Board on pages 621 to 626, inclusive, and their conclusions in concrete form will be found there in a carefully worked out table of wool-duty equivalents, or so-called compensatories based on a duty on scoured wool ranging from 15 to 25 cents per scoured pound.

Every compensatory in the Republican bill is in accord with that table, except that cents or half cents are used in place of intermediate decimal fractions.

The precise effect of this clause upon paragraph 18, now under consideration, is as follows:

Under the present law tops are dutiable, if valued at not more than 20 cents per pound, at 24¾ cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem, a total of 153¾ per cent.

Under the Republican bill, if made of all wool they would be dutiable at 20 cents per pound on the "wool contained therein" and 5 per cent ad valorem, a total of 105 per cent, 100 per cent representing the duty paid on the wool required to make them, and 5 per cent representing the average difference in the foreign and domestic cost of conversion of scoured wool into tops. If these 20-cent tops were part cotton, the Republican bill would reduce the specific duty proportionately.

Under the present law tops valued above 20 cents are dutiable at 36¾ cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem, a total of 103½ per cent if figured on tops worth 50 cents per pound.

Under the Republican bill the duty would be 45 per cent if all wool, and if part cotton proportionately lower.

The Underwood duty is a straight ad valorem of 25 per cent.

The effect on the industry of top making under the three rates of duty is as follows:

First. The present law is prohibitive of importations. See page 107, volume 1, of the report.

Second. Under the Republican bill the duty would represent the difference in cost of production and thus put the industry on the basis of fair competition.

Third. The Underwood rate being less than his own duty on the raw material and the difference in cost of conversion, would compel the importation of the finished product. It would undoubtedly bring revenue, but would destroy the industry.

I know of one case, Mr. Chairman, where, since the Underwood bill was introduced, a top manufacturer in Bradford, England, said that if the Underwood bill went into effect they would close down every comb in the United States. There is no mistake about that. That is bound to be the result. The duty on the finished product is less than the duty on the wool and conversion cost.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there for a question while he is considering paragraph 19?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. What, in the manufacture of wool, is the intermediary between tops and yarns?

Mr. HILL. The rovings, the sheets of wool that come out from the carding machine, and so forth.

Mr. MURDOCK. Are they not all convertible again into what is virtually equivalent to tops?

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; not necessarily. The gentleman understands that the clause covers the processes in both the carded wool and the worsted industry? It was originally the "basket" clause.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman will remember that in one of the previous tariff bills this paragraph 19 was so manipulated in the law——

Mr. HILL. I do.

Mr. MURDOCK (continuing). That it worked against the manufacturer of yarn.

Mr. HILL. I do.

Paragraph 19 was originally a basket clause and prior to the Payne bill was the nesting place for tops.

Under the present law the rate of duty runs up as high as 44 cents per pound and 55 per cent ad valorem. It is discussed on page 109 of the report.

In this Republican bill, and I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the fact, that paragraph does not have the sweeping effect of a basket clause, but it is limited by this language, "but less advanced than yarn."

Mr. MURDOCK. The reason it is not a basket clause is because tops are excluded from it.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely; and I so state. In this Republican bill it is restricted to all processes of manufacture between scoured wool and yarn, except tops, which are otherwise provided for, and the rates of duty are, therefore, not comparable.

It hardly seems necessary to go into the ad valorem effect of the specific duty in the further processes of manufacture. In all of them except carpets it is applied in the same way, on "the wool contained therein," and on the basis laid down by the Tariff Board. It is but fair to say, however, that except on fabrics and clothing having a foreign value of more than 60 cents a pound for all-wool goods, the ad valorem equivalent of the wool duty is greater than the duty which represents the conversion cost.

In fine cloths and high-class general manufactures the constantly increasing amount of labor required to be put upon the raw material compels a gradual increase of conversion duty over the duty on the wool consumed in such articles.

Because the difference in the cost of foreign and domestic labor is 100 per cent or more and the difference in the cost of foreign and domestic wool is 36 per cent, by reason of the tariff, and as you lessen the value of wool to the total value of the product and increase the quantity and cost of labor you apply to it, you must increase your conversion duty proportionately.

YARNS.

The board report on yarns is very full and complete, beginning on page 111. The conversion cost is considered, beginning at page 645. On page 115 they say that the yarns imported amount to less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the yarns consumed in the country. That means that the duties are prohibitive. Applying the present law rates to the four clauses of paragraph 20, the average ad valorem duty is 102½ per cent, and under this Republican bill the rate would be, on all-wool yarns, 58.26 per cent. The conversion duty ranges from 10 to 25 per cent, averaging 17½ per cent.

I come now to cloths, which seem to excite the special antagonism of the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield before he goes to the question of cloths?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK. Just for a question on the preceding paragraph. The gentleman will remember in the old tariff, Schedule K, the compensatory rate was based on the assumption that it took 4 pounds of wool in the grease to make a single pound of finished cloth.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. Now, in the Republican bill submitted by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is that old basis, that old method of reasoning, entirely done away with?

Mr. HILL. I said a while ago—I guess the gentleman's attention was attracted at the moment—it does not measure up to it at all. It has no relation to it, it is entirely abandoned——

Mr. MURDOCK. Le me understand the gentleman. Is that method of forming the duty entirely eliminated from this Republican bill?

Mr. HILL. There is no guesswork about it; it is an absolute mathematical figuring on mill tests——

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman does not answer my question. Can not the gentleman answer yes or no to the question?

Mr. HILL. I have often heard the question asked if a man could not answer yes or no. I have explained that these compensatory duties are taken absolutely from the figures given in the report. There are three or four pages in the report devoted exclusively to showing how they are figured out. Now, if the gentleman will read that——

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman does not understand my question, I am sure. I want to know if the old method of basing the duty on cloth on the assumption that it takes 4 pounds of wool in the grease to make a single pound of cloth is entirely eliminated from this bill?

Mr. HILL. Why, absolutely.

Mr. MURDOCK. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired under the rule.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to inquire whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania is opposed——

Mr. DALZELL. No; the gentleman is not opposed, but——

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I believe there is a recent understanding between Mr. UNDERWOOD, chairman, and Mr. DALZELL, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, by which the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be recognized now to yield some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina ask unanimous consent? There was no such consent given, and the Chair desires to keep the record straight.

Mr. DALZELL. There is no trouble about keeping the record straight.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the Chair is mistaken and that a recent agreement was made, perhaps 30 minutes ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not mistaken. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent for that purpose, it should appear of record; and if it is desired, the Chair can put the request now.

Mr. MANN. What unanimous consent is required?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, after the gentleman from Connecticut has used an hour some one opposed to his side is now entitled to recognition.

Mr. MANN. No one else has asked for recognition at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; there is some one who desires to be recognized in order that the time may be divided.

Mr. MANN. I understood a while ago the gentleman who was to speak next would not now ask for recognition until this side had taken an additional hour.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I had deferred asking recognition at this time, because I understood there was an agreement made recently between Mr. UNDERWOOD and gentlemen on the other side that I should defer and the Chair would recognize some one on that side and the gentleman would yield some portion of his time to the gentleman from Connecticut, and at the conclusion of the gentleman's remarks the Chair would recognize some one on this side to equalize that arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desired that the arrangement should appear of record. The gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut of my time 30 minutes, and I reserve the balance of it.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman was just leaving the cloth part now.

Mr. HILL. No; I was talking about the conversion duty, and I propose now to go no further into the specific compensatory duties, but to take up the conversion duty and show how that is made.

CLOTHS.

Mr. KITCHIN. If it will not interrupt you, I would like to ask you how much reduction on cloth and dress goods your bill makes?

Mr. HILL. Paragraph 21 of the Republican bill deals with all fabrics except blankets and flannels for underwear. As a general proposition it may be held that when an article has been taken from a general clause and transferred to another, where it plainly does not fit, or is given a classification by itself, it was done to raise the particular duty without changing the general rate. No man can give a reason why felted fabrics should be classified as wearing apparel, except to raise the duty on them. (See p. 164 of the report.)

They go properly with other fabrics and even fall into the lower valuations there. As constituted in the Republican bill, paragraph 21 is a cloth-fabric paragraph exclusively, dress goods, flannels, and felts having been consolidated with it, and general manufactures taken out of it and consolidated with small wares, and so forth, as the basket clause in paragraph 24, thus bringing Schedule K in general harmony with other schedules in this respect. As the paragraph now stands in the Republican bill it plays no favorites, but all cloth is treated alike, falling by reason of value into the clause where it belongs and taking its wool duty specific, according to its wool contents. As the board shows on page 95 of the report that 59,000,000 pounds of cotton were used in the making of fabrics in 1909, or nearly 14 per cent of the whole, the importance of the qualifying clause "on the wool contained therein" will be at once seen. It is well to note also that in 1909, in all forms of wool manufactures, 384,549,349 pounds of cotton were used, and, although bought as a free raw material, received substantially the same privileges and benefits and protection that it would have received if it had been wool. It will not be so under the Republican bill. Each fiber will be treated on its own merits.

Now, I believe that the overwhelming majority of our people are sincere believers in the policy of protection, and that in any case where a high rate is shown to be necessary to meet the difference in the cost of foreign and domestic production in any schedule from A to N, they are willing to give it, and I believe that the political party which advocates that policy is bound to win not only in the next election, but for the next quarter of a century at least. But you have got to prove in these modern days that it is necessary. Do not make any mistake about it. I also believe that the rates must be written fairly and squarely in the text so that "he who runs may read," and that the "jokers" must be absolutely eliminated from our tariff laws. [Applause on the Republican side.] No one party is responsible for them. The tariff of 1894 was officially branded by the President of the United States with perfidy and dishonor [applause on the Republican side], and others bear evidences of mutilation in their tedious journeys to the statute books.

So far as I know there are no jokers in this Republican bill.

The ad valorem rates in this and the clothing paragraphs are based on the schedules of comparative costs and prices found on pages 651 to 705, inclusive.

The avowed and only purpose of the Democratic majority of the committee is to tax importations to raise revenue and to encourage importations in order to increase receipts. A single ad valorem rate, if put low enough—and it is low enough in the Underwood bill—will do this, and the importations will steadily increase as the industry gradually disappears here through inability to meet foreign competition, as is plainly shown by the board's report, and no man can show in the four volumes of that report a single fact indicating the possibility of anything like equal competition in woolens between the United States and England, France, and Germany. With the many thousands of styles and weights and varieties of woolen fabrics throughout the world, a single ad valorem rate must necessarily be unfair to the majority. The Democratic members of the committee recognized this in a slight degree in the case of flannels by making a duty of 30 per cent, if valued at less than 50 cents per pound, and of 45 per cent if of higher value.

They recognized the protective principle still more in the construction of their cotton bill by making a system of graded ad valorem on fabrics and justified it in their report by the claim that increasing rates were needed because of increasing fineness of yarns, additional cost of bleaching, dyeing, printing, and general cost of advanced manufacturing processes.

If this is true of cottons, why is it not more emphatically true of woolen fabrics? The Republican bill recognizes that principle, and we have graded the duties in paragraphs 21 and 23 so that they represent the difference in the cost of conversion from wool to cloth and clothing between this country and England, which is our strongest competitor.

In cloth the rates begin at 30 per cent ad valorem and advance by five steps to 55 per cent ad valorem. In the clothing paragraph an additional allowance of 5 per cent on each grade is made for the wastage and increased labor cost incurred in conversion from cloth to wearing apparel. If there is any error there it is not on the side of too great liberality.

As will be seen by a reference to the report—and I commend the report to the gentleman from North Carolina, and he ought to study it, and all gentlemen on that side of the House ought to study it—the cost sheets upon which these rates are based were first made up from the books of American mills and from the actual records taken during the personal visits of the experts of the board. The blank forms or schedules used will be found beginning on page 631.

The idea was given to you this morning that that was not so; that the figures were made up from estimates, and not from the books. I hold in my hand a copy of a schedule made from a mill in Connecticut, containing figures made up from books that had been closed six months, absolutely honest records. And so it was with the American mills generally. The figures were taken from the books, and not from statements made up by any interested manager. I heard the statement which was made here, and I knew that it was not correct.

Mr. PICKETT. Is it not a fact that in making these examinations the Government had two experts, one a practical manufacturer, acquainted with the processes of manufacture, and the other a practical accountant?

Mr. HILL. I so understand; and the gentleman from Iowa and I know of a case where one of the expert investigators went to the city of Dubuque and examined a mill there from the mill's own books; and before examining the books the expert made up his estimate as to the cost of a certain sample, and when they got through with the investigation his estimate, made in advance, tallied within half a cent a yard with the actual books of the concern.

Mr. KITCHIN. Who was this expert manufacturer?

Mr. HILL. I do not know who he was, in Dubuque. The man who made that estimate and examination was Mr. Culberson, an investigator of the Tariff Board.

Mr. PICKETT. The man was an expert, so far as his knowledge of the practical manufacture of cloth was concerned.

Mr. KITCHIN. Was he a manufacturer?

Mr. PICKETT. As I understand it, they sent two experts—and I get this from the Tariff Board—one an expert in the practical process of manufacturing cloth and the other an accountant.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman from North Carolina endeavors to impeach the ability of the Tariff Board, and so does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], on the ground they were not expert manufacturers, or that they were not expert business men. What are you 14 lawyers on the Ways and Means Committee? [Applause on the Republican side.] You 14 lawyers complain and compare the work of the Tariff Board with the expert knowledge of 14 men, you yourselves, without business experience, and yet you attempt to make up all the schedules for the whole United States. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. How did they get what knowledge they have about it?

Mr. HILL. I put it to the gentleman from North Carolina himself; will he attempt to put his own manufacturing experience alongside the knowledge and experience of the experts of the Tariff Board? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman said this was a manufacturer, a man of experience. I should like to know who he was.

Mr. HILL. I have given the gentleman's name.

Mr. KITCHIN. A woolen manufacturer?

Mr. HILL. I do not know who he was, if you refer to the mill proprietor in Dubuque.

Mr. KITCHIN. You said you were going to give his name.

Mr. HILL. Oh, no; I gave you the name of the expert examiner.

Mr. KITCHIN. Who was this manufacturer?

Mr. HILL. I do not know. The gentleman knows that it is absolutely necessary that this information should be confidential, and that nobody could verify these schedules except through the Tariff Board, and that they could not get the information unless they treated it as confidential. Yet you Democrats on the floor of this House condemn these people because they will not violate their confidential agreement and make these names identifying the schedules public to the world. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman will not answer my question. Do I understand that the man who made up these figures for the Tariff Board is a woolen manufacturer, as my friend said?

Mr. PICKETT. The gentleman is entirely in error.

Mr. HILL. I will answer the gentleman's question. These figures in the Tariff Board report are, so far as American mills are concerned, taken very largely from the books of manufacturing concerns, and they show the actual cost figures.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand, then, that the man who made up these figures is an American manufacturer who is in favor of protection?

Mr. HILL. The information was also obtained in the way I have described, although not to so great an extent, in Great Britain.

Mr. KITCHIN. I only want to know whether these figures were made by an American manufacturer who is interested in protection.

Mr. HILL. They were not made by an American manufacturer. The investigation was made by experts.

These schedules ignore day wages or piecework prices, except as a matter of general information, but show in each case the unit cost of a thousand pounds of tops, a thousand pounds of yarn, and a thousand yards of cloth. The policy pursued in making the primary schedules was to take the costs from the mill books by the records which had been made and from the accounts closed up for the preceding year, so that nobody could be fooled by them, unless the proprietors had deliberately fooled themselves and made it a matter of record. Samples of the cloths upon which costs were thus secured were then sent to several other mills and like blanks filled out with estimates of cost. Thus each statement was checked and counterchecked from four to six times.

The American samples were then taken to Europe, and like statements of costs made there, either by the mill proprietors there or from their books or by experts employed for the purpose. In the same way samples of foreign cloths were brought here, analyzed by our manufacturers, and comparisons made with fabrics of similar character. I can not conceive of any more thorough and exact ascertainment of the difference in cost of production.

Reports are made on 53 different kinds of American cloth, 14 high-grade German cloths, and comparative mill prices given on 61 samples of English and American cloths. These statements of costs have been tabulated, showing—

First. Price on which duty is assessed.
Second. United States conversion cost.
Third. English conversion cost.
Fourth. Difference in conversion cost.
Fifth. Needed ad valorem to cover conversion cost.
Sixth. Specific or compensatory duty on basis of 18 cents wool duty.
Seventh. Total duty.
Eighth. The English cost.
Ninth. The English cost plus the total duty.
Tenth. The American cost.
Eleventh. The percentage of the total duties to the wholesale English selling price.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If it will not interrupt the gentleman, I think it will be well if he will state, as a number of gentlemen are not familiar with the matter, how it would be possible to ascertain the wool contents of cloth.

Mr. HILL. It is done simply by the sulphuric-acid test. That eats out the vegetable fiber and leaves the wool fiber. There is no difficulty about it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And the department officials have facilities for doing it?

Mr. HILL. Absolutely; there is no trouble about it; they are doing it every day. Even now, when there is a doubt in regard to the valuation or of the undervaluation of a piece of fabric, it is sent right across the room from the examiner's office and an analytical chemist separates the fiber, and in that way determines the value. This plan would be to determine the weight only.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I only asked the question because there has been some objection made to the bill because of the impossible duty that is placed upon the officials of the Treasury.

Mr. HILL. There is not a particle of difficulty about it. If any gentleman has any doubt, he can call on Mr. Curtis, at the Treasury Department, or Mr. Halstead, of the Customs Division, and they will tell him that there is no trouble about it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. How about the wool in the cloth and clothing?

Mr. HILL. There is no trouble about that; not the slightest; and I am so informed by the appraiser's office.

The tabulations have been carefully studied, and repeated adjustment of tentative cloth schedules made to the facts there shown, and countertests made, by application of the statistical conditions of the various samples to the tentative schedules, until it is believed that, notwithstanding the enormous variety of fabrics made the world over, the cloth schedule presented by the minority of the committee is not only thoroughly protective in its character, but it is as near to the facts shown by the Tariff Board report as can be made, unless a separate rate of duty is made for each sample.

Mr. KITCHIN. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HILL. For a question.

Mr. KITCHIN. How much does your bill reduce the tariff on woolen clothing and woolen goods?

Mr. HILL. I have already told you—30 per cent on the whole cloth schedule.

Mr. KITCHIN. How much will it increase the importation?

Mr. HILL. I do not think it will increase the importation at all. You would utterly falsify the work of the Tariff Board if it did any more than find the facts, and as Republicans we are pledged to make a bill fit the facts, showing the difference in the cost of production, and how would that increase importation?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think it will increase importation.

Mr. HILL. It will increase the importation of free carpet wool, which the gentleman would have voted for if it was not for his caucus instructions.

Mr. KITCHIN. How much in woolen cloth and ready-made clothing and other woolen fabrics will your bill save to the consumers of the country?

Mr. HILL. I will show you that if I have time.

The average ad valorem rate of this paragraph with the present law applied to it would be 105 per cent. Without the effect of the cotton clause shown, which can only be done upon an actual ascertainment in each case of other than wool contents, the proposed reduction on this whole paragraph in the Republican bill will average about 30 per cent. The cotton clause would probably increase this reduction to more than 40 per cent.

The average reduction of the first two or cheaper grades of cloth from the present law rates is 45 per cent if all wool. If half cotton, which may be fairly assumed from the values, the reduction would be 71 per cent. Of course, it is understood that the present law rates are prohibitive on such goods.

The average ad valorem of the samples scheduled by the Tariff Board is 64 per cent.

The average ad valorem difference between the net English and American mill prices given on page 705 of the report is 63 per cent.

The average wool duty in the Republican bill, except carpet wool, which is free, is 36.21 per cent.

The average of all conversion duties is 35.20 per cent.

The average conversion duty on cloth only is 42½ per cent.

The Republican members of the committee have had no force of clerks and paid employees to prepare tables showing the effect of the duties on the importations of past years, but the general conclusion which I draw from the proposed rates is that they will show a reduction on the whole schedule of nearly 40 per cent, which, by the operation of the cotton clause, will be increased to about 50 per cent on actual importations, and yet the rates are so applied as, in my judgment, to make a protective bill and at the same time comply with the findings of the report of the Tariff Board.

The English figures, which are about 5 per cent lower than the German, have been made the basis for comparison. It is not necessary to go through the remaining paragraphs, for they are all constructed on the same general principle, except in the proviso of the basket clause of paragraph 24. There the specific duty is laid upon the wool contained in the article, and the ad valorem duty is based upon the rate which the component article of chief value carries in its own schedule. Whenever these schedules are changed, the rates in this proviso should be made to conform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has again expired.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. The wool duties would go into effect upon the passage of the bill and the manufacturing duties on January 1, 1913, thus following the precedent of the Wilson bill in this respect.

Now, gentlemen of the majority, I have a word for you, in all kindness and in sincerity, and I ask the especial attention of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, allow me to ask him a question first. How much will the gentleman's bill reduce the manufacturer's price of cloth, ready-made clothing, and other woolen fabrics?

Mr. HILL. It will reduce it to a price of equal, fair, and just competition——

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. HILL. Wait one moment—as shown by the actual statements submitted by the Tariff Board.

Mr. KITCHIN. How much do they say it would reduce it?

Mr. HILL. I will ask the gentleman to read the statement here.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no. We want to know how much the gentleman's bill will reduce it to the consumer.

Mr. HILL. Now, gentleman of the majority, what is the situation which confronts us?

You have presented a bill which you claim will reduce the duties in Schedule K by 48 per cent.

We have presented one which in practical operation will probably reduce them 50 per cent.

You have fixed your rates by guesswork for revenue purposes, with the intention of eliminating all protection.

We have fixed ours on a thorough and exhaustive investigation by a nonpartisan Tariff Board, with the intention of maintaining the true principle of protection, measured by the difference in the cost of production here and abroad.

Upon your own estimates you annually displace 200,000,000 pounds of domestic wool by the importation of the foreign product, and transfer to Europe $12,000,000 worth of labor by the increased importation of the manufactured product and still lose $1,348,349 of annual revenue.

We will lose $4,000,000 of revenue taken from a noncompetitive product, and every dollar of it will therefore, by the lower cost of a household necessity, go toward a reduced cost of living and at the same time will maintain the industry on a protected basis of equal, fair, and just competition.

You offer us a bill which the President has vetoed once, and which is in violation of the platform on which he was elected and on which we stand now.

We offer you one which fulfills your pledge to reduce duties, and which it is now in your power to enact into law.

For a year this industry has been tortured with doubt and harassed with uncertainty as to its future condition.

The whole country needs and demands industrial peace and with it there will surely follow industrial prosperity.

Let us in this matter forget partisanship and, as our mutual colleagues on the Tariff Board have done, work together for the common good. [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 25 minutes remaining.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the informal agreement made between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and gentlemen on the other side was that the gentleman from Connecticut was to have yielded to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania so much time as the gentleman from Connecticut required to conclude his remarks, and that then the time was to come to this side.

Mr. MANN. That is right. The gentleman from Pennsylvania merely reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman's side is not entitled to my time.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New Jersey misunderstood the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for one hour.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman [applause]——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose during the time I am permitted to address the House to submit some facts—results of my own investigation—going to prove that as the rate of tariff protection increases so does the death rate of those whose wages depend upon tariff-protected industries increase. I shall relate some facts which prove that as the tariff rate mounts high the living conditions of those wage earners who toil in the protected industries sink lower and lower. If I can present here official figures showing that throughout the United States, with all unfavorable conditions in various parts of the country bringing up the average, it is found that out of every 100 deaths 27 are of children under 5 years of age, but that in towns whose industries are most highly protected, out of every 100 deaths not 27, but 47, 48, and even 50 are children under 5 years of age; if it is found that the death rate from all causes is highest in towns where are located the most highly protected industries, even if in those towns natural conditions are most favorable to health, then it is proper for us to inquire if there is a condition of living among the toilers in these most highly protected industries which of itself, and in spite of naturally healthful surroundings, produces an appalling death rate as well as hopeless misery and suffering among the living.

If it can be demonstrated that as the subsidies paid to tariff beneficiaries increase the chances for life of the trust's wage toilers decrease, if it is found that as the privilege of the rich to tax the poor is extended and enlarged the opportunity for the workers merely to survive is restricted, if it is found that as dividends increase there is also an increase in the pitiful little mounds of babies' graves, if it is found that as the arrogance and pride begot from privilege grow, hope and joy in the hearts of the toilers decrease, then it is reasonable for us to inquire if these facts do not bear certain relations with each other. If there is a sinister relationship between the facts, then it is our duty to examine and to understand.

I recently visited and made some investigations in towns where wool and where cotton are made into fabrics. In the town of Lawrence, Mass., I learned that out of every 100 deaths 47 were of children under 5 years of age, and of these 35 were of children under 1 year of age. The average for the whole country is 27 children under 5 years of age instead of 47 as in Lawrence, and for the whole country 19 out of every 100 deaths are of children under 1 year of age, instead of 35, as in Lawrence. In order that this appallingly large percentage of child deaths in Lawrence, which, striking and significant as it is, is not as large as the rates for corresponding ages in Fall River and in New Bedford—in order, I say, that these rates may be better appreciated, let me give the figures for some cities also noted as manufacturing communities.

In the city of Newark, N. J., partly in my congressional district, where the values of finished manufactured products in 1910 exceeded $200,000,000, where there were more than 1,800 manufacturing plants in the year 1910, of every 100 deaths but 31 were of children under 5 years of age. Taking a city far removed from Massachusetts or from New Jersey, Seattle, Wash., we find the deaths of children under 5 years of age out of every 100 deaths were but 19, as against 50 in Fall River, 49 in New Bedford, and 47 in Lawrence, and of children under 1 year of age in Seattle but 14. Not to extend these comparisons too far I will make but two others, both of Massachusetts communities. In Cambridge, in that State, out of every 100 deaths. 26 were of children under 5 years of age, 19 of them being under 1 year of age; in Worcester, an industrial community, out of every 100 deaths, 30 were of children under 5 years of age, and of them 22 were of children under 1 year of age.

It is a frightful toll of child deaths exacted by these interests which have received from Republican Congresses the power to tax all the people, and that taxing power demanded and received under the immorally false claim that it was for the benefit of American labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

In Lawrence I determined to see for myself what were the living conditions of the toilers in the woolen mills. I was accompanied by interpreters, but made my own selection of tenements to visit, and in that way, going here and there in the quarters occupied by the mill hands, entering tenements which seemed to be of average condition, I talked with the workers, learning from whence they came and why, how long they had been in this country, what had induced them to come, their worldly state there and here, and facts as to their wages and their living expenses.

What their conditions of living were I saw for myself. That they were supplied with the necessities of life was demonstrated merely because they were alive, but it was hard to believe, in some cases, that human beings could exist under the conditions I found. In only one of a score of homes was there anything to eat except bread, and the supply of that was many times pitifully small. Two, three, and as many as four occupied one small room. The slender supply of furniture was cheap, rough, and many times broken. Of course, such things as carpets and curtains were unknown; men, women, and children poorly, and many times insufficiently, clad. This was the story simple observation told. As to other things which should be of interest to us who are asked to maintain a high protective duty, in order that the high standard of American living may be maintained, I made notes at the time, and it seems to me that instead of working those notes up to a statement in literary form that it will impart as much useful information and in less time if I give here a literal transcription of those notes written down as the information came to me in response to my questions. So I reproduce here merely some typical cases.

First. Husband, wife, and three children; two rooms; rent, $2 a week; here seven years; husband only worker; wages, $6.12 a week when he worked full time; no idea of weekly average for a year; had been shepherd in Italy; came because heard talk of plenty of money and work here; man had bought one overcoat and one suit of clothes in seven years, woman one dress.

Second. Husband, wife, two children, and boarder; five in three rooms; rent, $2 a week; man had been farmer in Italy; does not live as well here as at home; works in finishing room; wages $6.05, but made $7.15 working three instead of two machines; sometimes ran four machines, but no more wages. If boss sees good, quick workman gives him more work but no more pay. Receiving strike relief from Italian parish school.

I want at this point to interrupt this transcription of my rough notes to speak of a happening in that home which proved that these people are eager to improve themselves, and that they are ambitious that their children shall receive enough schooling to make them good, intelligent citizens. I made a friend of one of the children, a boy of 7 whom I took to be 4 years old; the mother, observing our friendly relation, proudly produced a dog-eared reader in which there were translations of simple words from Italian into English. My little friend was asked to show how well he was going on with his study, and read some translations to me, both father and mother looking over his shoulder, eagerly striving, as it seemed to me, to keep pace with the youngster's advance in acquiring the English language. I speak of this because it is sometimes said of these people that they come here merely to pile up wealth and return to their own country, where they can acquire estates, and live in luxury and everlasting disdain of the United States.

And before proceeding with my notes I want to say a word about that most serious charge brought against the foreign workers in highly protected industries that some of them have saved money. The manner in which this charge is made clearly shows that those who make it expect thereby to demonstrate that the wages paid by these protected industries are excessive, otherwise how could the wage earners save? Is thrift a sin? If one saves, though he starves to do it, is that Republican proof that wages are too high? Undoubtedly some of those people, where fathers and mothers and children have worked from 7 to 10 years, toiled eagerly, deprived themselves of every necessity except those absolutely required that they might barely live and continue to work, undoubtedly some such families have in 5, 7, or 10 years saved as much as $200, and I think I heard of one awful example of $300. But what they have done to save this dollar or two a month out of the wages of a family it would be cruel to expose in all its punishing poverty and suffering. Yet such thrift is used as an argument for the continuance of 90 per cent protection for the benefit of those who paid such families their wages. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Before leaving this subject, I wish to add testimony of an active and intelligent official of the Central Labor Union. When I visited him he was in charge of the union's relief station in Lawrence, where the union was giving relief, upon application, to any applicant, whether he was a member of the union or not.

If, upon investigation, the union was satisfied that the applicant needed aid, it was furnished. This official told me that no American mill hand had saved any money from his wages, and my belief is that he included among the American workers not only the few remaining native born at work in the mills but also the comparatively few English and Irish expert mill hands who had come to this country years ago and who had not, as most of their kind have, escaped from mill work. Some of these, he said, came to his home and asked if they might not get some relief for their families without going to the relief station, where their poverty and distress would become publicly known. He had been able to afford relief quietly in response to such requests and thereby save the self-respect of those who applied in that manner only when the necessity of the helpless members of their family became dire. That was his answer to my question as to whether the wages of the toilers in this highly protected industry had been large enough to enable the toilers to save any provision against such times of necessity.

I had been told that the deposits in the savings banks of Lawrence were evidence that the Republican rate of wages paid has enabled the toilers to save. In answwer to this my friend of the Central Labor Union replied that the savings depositors were of the usual class, the small tradesmen and professional people, bookkeepers and cashiers, and the members of the various locals of the Central Labor Union who were working in the unprotected industries—the carpenters, bricklayers, plasterers, blacksmiths, the railroad men, and, as usual, the various members of labor organizations working in industries unprotected by any part of the Republican tariff system. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I will resume the transcription of my notes.

Third. Six adults; 3 brothers, 1 sister, 2 nephews; 5 worked; 3 rooms; rent, $3 a week:

1 wasteman	$6.50
1 combing	7.70
1 doffer	5.10
1 spinning	6.55
1 set bobbins	5.10
Total	30.95

Average weekly wage, $6.19 when working full time.

In the above classification I have used the terms describing their employment as they were given to me by the interpreter, himself the son of a mill hand, and they may not be the terms used here by gentlemen in describing mill workers.

Fourth. Four couples, 1 baby, 9 in all; 4 rooms; rent, $3; 4 men and 2 women worked:

1 twist	$8.00
1 wool shop	6.60
1 spooling	6.05
1 twist	8.00
1 spinner	6.55
1 wool shop	7.50
Total	42.60

Average wage, $7.11 a week.

In this group, as in every other one I visited, I made inquiry as to the average weekly wages for a full year, but seldom could get any accurate estimate. There were layoffs or slack times, but what they amounted to in weeks in a year I did not learn until I questioned this group, where one of the women had kept some sort of an account of all their wages and the number of full work-weeks. Basing my estimate upon her statement, that there had been work which totaled 39 full weeks, a simple calculation shows that the average weekly wage, counting as many weeks in the year as they are obliged to live, was $5.30. They had saved no money.

(5) Twenty-two people in 6 rooms—19 adults, 3 babies—came to America because they read in Italian papers letters from New York and Boston that there was lots of work and money in America. Eighteen adults work, all but one very old woman, who was nurse and caretaker and cook and housekeeper. These were neighbors in the old country. Two work in twist room, get $6.35 a week, but worked overtime for four months for no different pay.

The interpreter explained that they got no extra pay for overtime work.

Would go back to Italy if they could, but had no money. One girl, with finger end cut off by machinery, asked for damages but got none; did not press for damages because lose job if she did. Two old women each got $5.50 a week; only boss, wife, and 3 children were getting relief from strike fund; other adults ashamed to ask. One man worked overtime 3 hours a day for 27 cents—that was not right pay, but would lose job if complained. Another girl (brought in), whole index finger of left hand taken off while cleaning twisting machine. Rule was then must clean while machine running; rule changed since. Lawyer got $25 for her, not damages, because they said it was her fault, but gave her money to feed herself and baby. Did not sue because she would lose job; went back to work for less wages; baby was 2 months old when she had accident; mother about 18.

(5) Polish, husband, wife, 3 children, 4 boarders, 9 in all, in 3 rooms, rent $2 a week. Husband a weaver, $7, sometimes $8 a week, about 3 months full time last year, 9 months slack time when he earned $3 or $4 or $5 a week. Farmers in old country. Read in papers that America was good country. One boarder (intelligent) earned $6.50 a week, does not smoke or drink, but was short $2 every month.

Q. Did you all want to strike?—A. Yes.
Q. If you lose strike will you go away?—A. Home?
Q. Yes, home?—A. No; not enough money to go home.

(6) Russians, 9 adults, 3 children, 12 in 4 rooms, rent $3 a week; 8 people working, only sometimes full work, same pay for overtime; 7 years in America; no money saved; get relief from station; orders for groceries, $1 worth of groceries a week for adults, 50 cents for children.

There is a literal transcription of some notes I took on my rounds. I have not attempted to supply any color to the picture drawn by those notes. I have refrained from any of the many comments that I might have made, refrained from shedding any side lights upon sights that I saw. I undertook that task with years of training in such work to aid me. I know that even a trained investigator may be deceived when seeking only the truth regarding such situations; I know that it is claimed that the average wage of the millworkers of Lawrence is something between $9 and $9.50 a week. I found just one man who said that he earned $9 a week when he was working full time.

My Italian interpreter was recommended to me by a banker of Lawrence who knew him as an intelligent, honest, hard-working young man temporarily out of employment because the store in which he worked had laid off clerks. He came from a family of mill workers, and it was evident that the toilers he questioned respected him for his superior intelligence and worldly situation; and because of these reasons I am disposed to believe that the statements of these people, as I wrote them in my notes, were statements of facts; and the paramount facts deduced from my investigations, and from the official statistics of mortality published in United States Census Bulletin No. 109, show that these people—men, women, and children—toiling in an industry whose owners are permitted to lay a tax of 90 per cent on the clothes all Americans wear, do not receive wages enough to live in decency themselves and to prevent their children from starving to death. Starvation is one of the principal causes of the deaths of thousands of children of the workers in the most highly protected industries in America.

On the question of the average weekly wage, which has so definite and pitiful a relation to the death rate, I was able to obtain more detailed information in Fall River. There I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of as fine an American citizen as I have ever met, Thomas Chew, superintendent of the Boys' Club of Fall River. He was a mill hand in Lancashire, England, when he reached the advanced age of 8 years, came to this country when he was 12 years old, and went to work in the mills of Fall River at a time when many English and Irish expert weavers were coming to this country. He had ambition and educated himself; he had the heart and soul of a philanthropist and a great pity for the children of the mill workers. He knew, what every investigator of such living conditions learns, that if you can save a boy from evil ways until he is 14 years of age you have done a great work for him toward saving him from ever falling into evil ways.

As a result of his effort Fall River has one of the best boys' clubs I have ever seen. At various times Superintendent Chew has induced M. C. D. Borden, one of the large mill owners of Fall River, to subscribe a quarter of a million dollars for these club buildings, and Chew supports and maintains them by subscriptions which he gets from people who appreciate the value of his work, but he gets no support from the mills. Boys under 14 years of age are glad to become members of one of these clubs, and many of the men working in the mills flock to the other, for there is also a men's club. There they have games, gymnastics, and many forms of entertainment, all under the least possible amount of oversight or supervision.

Unfortunately, no such work is being done for the girls of the families of mill workers. The mothers know the danger of allowing their girls the freedom of the streets, and it is a common thing in Fall River for the mother, when she goes to her work in the mill, to turn the boys out of doors, knowing they have the club to go to, and to lock in the girls under 14 years. When Mr. Chew made an investigation as to the causes which result in the death of 50 children out of every 100 people who die in Fall River, it was a common thing for him, when he rapped at a tenement door, to be answered by a little girl, who would say that she was locked in, taking care of the baby. Mr. Chew told me, also, that the school census takers frequently had the same experience.

I have told this much of that remarkable man because he was the only worker for the salvage of child life and child morals I discovered, and to show that he is familiar with wage and working facts, for the mill workers in Fall River all give him their confidence.

I took up with Mr. Chew this question of the average weekly earnings of the 35,000 or 40,000 mill hands in Fall River because I wanted to get from the best available authority information as accurate as might be; not what a pay roll of a single full week or month would show, but what these people earn on an average during 52 weeks in the year—that being the number of weeks in a year they are obliged to live if they can. As a result of our calculations, I find that the Fall River mill workers average during the year a weekly wage of $6.25. The mills that pay these wages have been granted by Republican Congresses the privilege of collecting from the American people a bonus of 90 per cent on the goods they manufacture. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This privilege was granted, of course, in order that those receiving it might pay wages to their work people so high that a comfortable and self-respecting condition of living should be enjoyed by those work people.

I shall feel amply rewarded for the time and labor I expended if my humble contribution to knowledge regarding the workingman's benefits from a high tariff—if my contribution, I say, shall hasten the death of that most malicious fable—that a high protective tariff benefits the workingman. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield for a question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I only want to say that I live in Fall River, and have lived there since 1844. There is a woman's union in Fall River. Did the gentleman visit that?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not; but I am very glad to hear it. Mr. Chew told me there was no such institution as his for girls.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There is a woman's union in Fall River that is cared for by contributions of the people, as there are several institutions especially for the care of children provided for in the same manner.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very glad to get that information, but it is clearly, however, not a question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I did not say it was a question, but I wanted to correct that part of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no doubt that in Fall River, as in many other American cities, there are Christian women who do something toward caring for unfortunate women in all respects. As to Fall River, however, I could state some facts which could scarcely be printed in the RECORD regarding conditions almost forced upon mill girls of Fall River, and if the gentleman wishes me to do so I will state them.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I appreciate that the gentleman can possibly state many disagreeable facts, but I know these are not common alone to Fall River, but to every manufacturing city, both North and South, and I very much regret it; but as the gentleman stated there was no provision for the care of young girls I wished that statement corrected.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, so far as the South is concerned, I deny that that is the condition of the mill employees in the Southern States.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. McCOY. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. McCOY. Was not the statement which the gentleman repeated as having been made by this head of the boys' club that there was no similar girls' club?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Quite so. I made no statement concerning any of the Christian women of Fall River giving ordinary care to destitute and unfortunate women. I stated, as my colleague suggests, that there was no similar institution for the care of girls.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have known Mr. Chew ever since he has been a resident of Fall River, and I want to say the boys' club which he has charge of, was originated in a very peculiar way by contributions from the people of Fall River, and finally becoming discouraged in maintaining it, in looking over the directory he found the name of M. C. D. Borden, of New York——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not yield further to the gentleman. I have given Mr. Borden credit for having established this club.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will take time later to reply to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And I will be very glad to hear the gentleman's testimony as to the condition of the mill workers of Fall River.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. And I think I know them very well, as I have lived there since 1844.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not yield further.

Before I present some interesting figures as to child mortality in Fall River, let me quote briefly from the writings of Samuel Hopkins Adams, an investigator of the highest standing of municipal health condition. He quotes from official vital statistics, which show that Fall River has the second worse death rate of its class in the United States, in spite of its most favorable natural condition, and says:

> Fall River is a healthful locality, well situated on sharp hills rising from a lovely bay. It is cleansed by the pervasive and consistent disinfection of salt breezes. It suffers no bitter extremes of heat or cold. At its very gates lies a good water supply, which, wisely, is guarded against contamination. Drainage is fair, though, unfortunately, not universal. There has been no sudden pressure of population to encourage and excuse the building of the evil type of tenement. Air and light are everywhere available. Broad areas of farming country near at hand furnish a milk supply which is at least of fair quality, as milk goes nowadays. Why, then, since Fall River is a healthful city, is it not also a healthy city?

The answer to that is, in my opinion, that even in that healthful city the wages of the 40,000 people working in its mills, turning out the many millions of dollars worth of goods, helping to make enormous dividends which are added to by a Republican tariff tax of 90 per cent, the answer is, I say, that those 40,000 mill workers get so small a portion of the mills' profits for their wages that they simply can not live in conditions where health is possible. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The mortality figures of these workers in Fall River are startling. I think I have already said that in that most favorably situated city, with no towering tenements, no congested areas, out of every 100 deaths 50 are of children under 5 years of age, and of those 39 are of children under 1 year of age.

If you will take Census Bulletin No. 109, and turn to table 3, on page 82, and run your eye along the columns giving the causes of death in Fall River, you will fail to find any deaths attributed to malnutrition or marasmus. Those two terms have been eliminated from the international list of causes of death, which list, very properly, has been adopted by Dr. Wilbur, who is at the head of the division of vital statistics in the Census Bureau. But among the causes of death even a layman will find many familiar names of diseases peculiar to children, and also he will find many diseases listed which modern medicine properly classifies as preventable diseases. Dr. Wilbur was kind enough to go over this very enlightening table with me, and he made two series of check marks, one indicating diseases peculiar to infancy and the other preventable diseases. A little examination of his check marks develops this fact—in the classification carried by the table there are 31 causes of death listed. Of these 19 are checked as preventable diseases, and I find that in Fall River every cause of death checked as peculiar to children has opposite, also, a check mark indicating that it is a preventable disease according to the theory of modern medical science.

If they are preventable why, in that healthful town, in that highly protected community, does the death rate of children under 5 years of age show 50 out of every 100 deaths? Why, when in the country at large there are out of every 100 deaths only 19 of children under 1 year of age, in Fall River are there 39? Why, when the owners of the mill are so highly protected by a Republican tariff, are not the bowels of compassion of those owners moved to protect just a little the children of their workers? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chew is a practical man, and when these grewsome figures of children's death came to him he started out to make an investigating campaign of his own. He knew that the reason malnutrition and marasmus have been removed by modern medicine from its list of causes of death was because they do not describe a disease but a condition; he knew that the words were not accurate, that they have been used in the past merely as polite terms to describe starvation, but he wanted to know how many children died of starvation in Fall River in 1909. I take the result of his investigation from a newspaper published in Fall River, and the first headline in that Fall River paper, printed in large black type, reads "Thousands of babies die in year." He based his investigation, it appears, on figures supplied to him by the local health officers, and incidentally I may remark that his figures of deaths of children under 1 year of age in Fall River in 1909 are nearly 100 less than the figures given by bulletin No. 109 of the Census Bureau. But taking the most favorable report it is seen that in that year in Fall River, including stillbirths, 1,036 children under 1 year of age died. As the result of his investigation Mr. Chew tabulated thus:

Stillbirths	250
From preventable diseases	501
Nonpreventable diseases	285
Total	1,036

Then he goes into the causes of deaths of children under 1 year of age, and he is not ashamed to use those tabooed words, malnutrition and marasmus, meaning starvation, and he finds from that cause that there were in Fall River in that year 141 deaths of children under 1 year of age. And their mothers were working for $6.25 a week manufacturing goods upon which a Republican tariff bonus of 90 per cent is charged against every person in the United States who wears a garment of cotton. And then, there were 250 stillbirths—250 little bodies starved to death before they were born, and the tariff only 90 per cent. Why, good God! the Republicans are only half right. If the privileged beneficiaries of a Republican tariff can not afford to pay wages high enough to prevent this slaughter of infants, let us double the tax, make it high enough, at least, so that babies may not be starved to death before they come into the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to exhibit to Members here this map of the city of Fall River, which, it can be seen, is marked with groups of pins, 1,036 pins roughly divided into three groups, 786 black pins and 250 white pins. Every black pin indicates the street and house where an infant under 1 year of age died in Fall River in 1909, and every white pin indicates a stillbirth. One group roughly outlines the section of Fall River where the Italians and Poles live, a second one the section occupied by French and Belgian mill hands, and the third that section of the city occupied by immigrants from 17 other European countries. This very significant map is the result of the personal canvass of Mr. Chew to determine the facts indicated. At the conclusion of his investigation he found that he had the record of the deaths of 400 children under 1 year of age whose births had never been reported.

Such indifference to life you would never find in a well-conducted stock farm, where the birth of every colt and every calf is carefully entered in the studbook and the cattle register [applause on the Democratic side]; such indifference to life you would not find in any kennel, where the record, for future bench shows, registers the birth of every puppy. I refer to this because it is a striking evidence of a fact of which lawmakers must soon take careful notice; of the fact that in these mill towns there is a complete separation between the welfare and interests of the well-to-do and prosperous portions of the communities and those of the communities who toil in the mills. There is no common interest; the classes are separated as it was never designed the classes should be separated in American communities. They are separated in a way that is dangerous to those communities and to American institutions. There is a submerged, a neglected portion of the community whose very births and deaths are matters of indifference to the municipal authorities. Lest it be thought that conditions have improved I will insert at this time these figures: In 1909, as we have seen, the deaths of infants in Fall River, under 1 year of age, not including stillbirths, were 786; in 1910 I find from the United States census figures that they were 854.

What personal suffering and misery this condition gives rise to in these towns of highly protected interests that which I have already said gives, I hope, some hint. With what danger this condition menaces our institutions I ask those of you wiser than I to pause and give thought to. I believe that this arrogance and civic indifference are begot of privilege—the privilege a few have obtained from Republican Congresses to tax unjustly the many. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The few have been enabled to make large dividends without earning them. They are relieved from competition and the necessity imposed by competition to improve their products.

Let me say a few words on that last proposition: In Fall River I visited the Bradford-Durfee Textile School, one of the three which the State of Massachusetts, greatly to its credit, assists in maintaining. This school has for its superintendent a textile expert named Umpleby, who learned his craft in England, and studied in its higher branches, or at least pursued and finished his studies, in Germany and France. He is my authority for this statement: Textile mills in England and in Germany and in France will take shoddy; that is, the soft and loosely woven rag fabrics, tear it apart, comb, spin, and weave it, and make a better looking, more highly finished piece of cloth from it than any American mill will make from the best quality of raw material.

The American mills, enjoying these monstrous subsidies granted to them by Republican Congresses, are under no necessity of installing the latest and best type of plants or of paying high wages in order to secure expert labor, and thus are enabled to charge an artificial price for inferior product. I believe that the subsidy that they have been granted by the Government, this privilege to tax, relieves them of the necessity of making the highest class product.

Their profits are insured. I believe that these discriminations in their favor produce a state of mind among this privileged class which makes them careless in their manufactures, indifferent to the conditions of their toilers, and, as one result, we find these groups here, these pitiful black and white marks indicating preventable infant mortality; a lamentable result peculiar, so far as my observations go, to communities where highly-protected industries exist.

I want to exhibit to you this chart. The vertical columns, as you see, represent the months of that year, 1909; the horizontal lines the days of that month. The red wafers show the deaths in Fall River in that one year, many of them from preventable causes, of children under 1 year of age; the blue wafers show the stillbirths. Notice how strikingly the deaths increase in July, August, and September.

Not far from Fall River is the home of a summer colony famous all over the world for the magnificence of its palaces, the extravagance of its people, the varied and whimsical methods of their entertainment, the gorgeousness of their lawn fêtes and their water carnivals, the splendor of their entertainment of foreign people of title, the stately sweep of their lawns, and the perfection of their gardens. The same water which partly surrounds Fall River laps the beaches and bluffs of Newport. But in Newport in July, August, and September these palaces, some of them, are occupied by men and women whose colossal fortunes have been given to them by the operation of this Republican tariff subsidy. Their children you will find there in July, August, and September, cared for by nurses, by governesses, by tutors, enjoying every pleasure, every entertainment that wit or fancy can devise and prodigality provide to make their little lives happy and healthy. They are taken there in private yachts; they are cared for like little princes and princesses, protected from chill or from the summer heat, nourished, petted, and amused. All of this during those three dreadful months, whose record of infant deaths in the town of Fall River make ghastly red the splashes on this chart.

I am not inventing this shameful story; it is taken from the official records of a city a portion of whose vast profits, enormous dividends, people enjoy from stock shares under suspicion of carrying an undue amount of water. I am not endeavoring to incite class hatred. I merely wish, if I can, to make my fellow Members of the House of Representatives ask themselves if all is well with a fiscal policy responsible for this hideous red record on one shore of the waters of that beautiful sound, and responsible at the same time for the conditions of wealth, of luxury, of idleness, at a near-by part of those historic waters.

Noting the condition of those who benefit by the tariff, contrasted with the overtaxed consumers throughout the country, as well as the unfortunate workers in highly protected industries, all of whom are robbed by the tariff, it seems fair to assert that governmental pap, such as is this subsidy, ladled out to a privileged few by the Republican Party, is a mighty bad diet for any portion of a free people. It quickens the appetite, to be sure, but it deadens the conscience; it gives luxuries to the few, to be sure, but it deprives the many of common comforts; it affords education, travel, leisure for those who fatten on this governmental pap, but it imposes on the many unrelieved toil and unjust taxes upon their necessities of life.

The salvage of human life must be taken as one fair measure of a community's conscience, its sense of right and wrong, of charity. What, then, must be our judgment of the rich in a community who are indifferent even to the salvage of the lives of those who can not save themselves—the little ones, the children? Let 90 per cent of helpless infants die if only those who need no aid are helped by tariff subsidies at a 90 per cent rate. What do they care about the death rate so long as the tariff rate is maintained by votes of a Republican Senate or the veto of a Republican President?

Where the black and white marks on the map tell the hideous story of preventable infant mortality, I noticed, as I walked through that District of Sorrow, that one of the streets was named Hope. That, surely, was the very malice and frenzy of satire. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Hope? What quantity of that merciful possession can sooth the heart of man, woman, or child working in dull and unilluminated routine, which gives but a feeble hold upon a miserable existence at best. What hope is there to assuage, even by promise, the dull pain of unsuckled breasts of mothers whose children were starved before they were born, while the mothers toiled with the pain of their untimely tribulation.

What hope for the boy who begins working in the mills when he should be playing in the fields, working at the start for $2 a week, earning a little more by slow increases, but only a little more; working on, just to preserve life, until at 50 he is worn out and becomes worse than the unemployed—the unemployable!

Are we not justified in thinking that they fare best who escape from that drab existence before they endure more than a few days of its suffering, before they can appreciate the glories and delights of high Republican tariff, before they are taught to understand the blessings granted by Government to insure the high standard of American living for all who toil in protected industries?

May we not excuse those who, after living such lives, look, perhaps not wholly in sorrow, at these black and white pins, at these red splashes on the chart? They know what years of misery were saved by the events which placed those telltale pins upon this silent but picturesque Republican tariff argument. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if I have any time left, I yield it to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished colleague, Hon. EBENEZER J. HILL, of Norwalk, Conn., who has written the minority report that accompanies this woolen schedule, has long posed as a high priest of protection as enunciated by Republican platforms and as preached from Republican lay pulpits. In addition to his belief in Republican tariff theology, he appears to be convinced that he has been commissioned from some more or less authoritative source as the champion of American labor and its defender against the hordes of the so-called pauper labor of Europe.

He has been fairly successful in making some people believe that he is and has been a high protectionist only because of his unselfish, undying love for the American workingman.

He has almost exploded with indignation when anyone has dared point a finger at the sacred Grand Old Party tariff; he has wept tears, copious and crocodile—but copious at any rate—over the woes of the workers in mill and factory; he has drawn pictures of the prosperity that prevails under the benign influence of 100 per cent duties and the dire distress that must ensue if those duties are disturbed. He has told you in his thrilling "Story of the Extra Session" of the cold-blooded attempts of the Democrats to ruin American industries; he has told you of their deep-laid plans to close the mills and the shops; he has told you of their efforts to bring disaster upon the people in general, either because of their ignorance in the matter of proper legislation or their willful intent to raise hell in general with business. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has tried to show you why no one but a Republican high protectionist should be permitted to enact any tariff legislation.

He has almost taken the stand that no one but himself knows anything about a tariff, and that when it comes right down to it, Messrs. PAYNE and DALZELL are mere tariff pikers. And this vast knowledge and this wonderful comprehension of the scope of a high protective tariff, he wants you to understand, have been used exclusively by him in all tariff legislation for the protection of the dear American workingman and his happy, happy home. Has anyone dared question the purity of his motives in his devotion to the cause of the tariff barons, especially the woolen kings? Has anyone dared insinuate anything mercenary in that specific or ad valorem loyalty to the princes of protection? No, siree. The fear of the dreadful blowing up that would follow even a mere hint of that sort has heretofore been enough to prevent. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To his Imperial Majesty Ebenezer I [laughter], King of Wooldom and Emperor of Tariffania, only the highest altruistic motives have been ascribed [laughter]; only a burning desire to help the wage earner in all his protective pyrotechnics. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There are dreams that one dislikes to dispel; there are pictures that one hates to destroy. To do so may be called cruelty and vandalism, but there are unpleasant as well as pleasant duties that must be performed.

Let us leave this HILL of altruism and get down to brass tacks. What do we find in connection with the attitude of the distinguished Connecticut champion of Schedule K and its minority offspring now under consideration?

We find that in addition to the protection for the American woolen workers there is other protection desired. There may be protection for the Norwalk Mills Co. desired. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BRADLEY], in the recent debate on the metal schedule, was questioned by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN] as to his interest in a certain industry upon which he desired a higher duty than the bill provided. The reply of the gentleman from New York was that before coming to Congress he had been interested largely in the industry in question, but when he was elected to or nominated for Congress he disposed of his interest, because he wished to be in a position to legislate without a personal bias on all matters. It was the expression of a high ideal of public duty and was characteristic of the gallant colonel.

The annual reports of the Norwalk Mills Co. from 1888, when the printing of the reports began under the Connecticut law, down to and including 1912, show that EBENEZER J. HILL, of Norwalk, owned from 70 to 140 shares of the stock of that concern. They show that he was not only a stockholder, but that he was and is a director of that company, and they also show that he was the vice president of the concern for several years. [Applause on the Democratic side.] So that there may be no mistake as to the identity of the E. J. HILL, one of the reports distinguishes the director as Hon. E. J. HILL, of Norwalk. Not only was he interested in the manner described, but one of his sons was treasurer of the company for a while.

Herewith are given some figures and facts from the annual reports of the Norwalk Mills Co., showing the connection of my colleague with the company as a stockholder:

In 1900 the law was changed so that it required only the filing under oath of the following particulars, namely, the amount, the capital stock actually paid in, a list of the directors and officers, and the location of the principal office in Connecticut. The report of 1900 of the Norwalk Woolen Mills Co. was made and sworn to by EBENEZER J. HILL, vice president, and Frederick J. Hill, treasurer.

From 1900 up to and including 1910 the name of E. J. HILL appears in the annual report as vice president and director of the Norwalk Woolen Mills Co. In 1910 Mr. HILL retired from the vice presidency, but remains as a director in the company, according to the reports filed, including the one filed for 1912 on the 2d day of January of this year.

The annual report of the Norwalk Mills Co. for 1900, when the change in the law took place, was made by the Messrs. Hill as vice president and treasurer, and is as follows:

We, EBENEZER J. HILL, vice president, and Frederick A. Hill, treasurer, of the Norwalk Mills Co., a joint-stock corporation organized under and pursuant to the laws of the State of Connecticut relating to joint-stock companies, and located in the town of Norwalk in said State, in compliance with the requirements of said laws, hereby certify under oath: That the condition of the affairs of said company, as nearly as the same could be ascertained, on the 1st day of January, 1900, in the following particulars, was as follows:

The amount of capital stock actually paid in was $100,000.

OFFICE OF TOWN CLERK.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT, COUNTY OF FAIRFIELD,
Town of Norwalk, ss:

I, Herbert R. Smith, town clerk of said town, hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the record of the instrument recorded in the records of joint-stock corporations of said town in volume 1 on page 118.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of said town this 25th day of March, 1912.

Is there any great surprise that my colleague should be selected to write a Republican woolen schedule? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Is there any great surprise that he desires to see a high tariff kept on woolen goods? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Is it all for the American workman that he is pleading?

I wish it to be clearly understood that I have no fault to find with my colleague for being a stockholder, director, or vice president of the Norwalk Mills Co. It is rather to his credit as a thrifty man. I have such a high personal regard for my colleague that I would like to see him a director and stockholder in many companies. His financial prosperity can not be so great as to in any way displease me, because, except when some one trespasses on his high tariff domain, my colleague is a most affable gentleman. [Applause.] But what I do find fault with is my colleague as the stockholder, director, and vice president of a woolen mill being permitted to draw up a tariff bill affecting that industry. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If this tariff question were being settled by a jury, my colleague would not be eligible for jury duty because of his interest in the case. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He has no moral right to be making tariff bills for a woolen industry. But it is a concrete example of what the Republicans mean by their plea to have the tariff revised by its friends. [Applause on the Democratic side.] When he gives his facts and figures, of which his head is filled, as the distinguished ex-Speaker of the House stated during the reciprocity debate, he gives facts and figures that are seen through bias and computed through prejudice. [Applause on the Democratic side.] His case is typical of the Republican policy of putting friends of various interests on committees that are supposed to regulate those interests.

Anticipating a statement that my colleague might make in relation to this Norwalk Woolen Mill if he were present—and I regret that he is not——

Mr. HILL. He is here. [Laughter.]

Mr. REILLY. I am glad to see the gentleman here. Anticipating a question he might ask, I will say that the mill has not been running for the past few months. Why? If I were to follow my colleague, I might say because the tariff was not high enough on woolens to protect the American manufacturer——

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question right there?

Mr. REILLY. Not now, as I have but a few minutes left. But that would not be a good answer, because for years Stockholder, Director, and Vice President HILL has been making woolen schedules as a majority member of the Ways and Means Committee, and if it were not high enough he would add on as much as he liked. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Then, again, he has shown in his minority report to-day that the tariff was high enough—in fact, too high—for, with an eye to the near future and with his ear close to the ground, he has recommended a reduction from the Payne-Aldrich figures.

If the tariff was not the cause of the closing of the mill, there is another reason that may be attributed—failure to meet the competition. Let us look at that a moment. Who are the competitors of the Norwalk mills? The American Woolen Co.—the Wool Trust. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Oh, the irony of fate! While my colleague has been here breaking his neck to put enormous dividends in the pockets of the Wool Trust by a high tariff wall, that trust was engaged in its usual pastime of putting a competitor out of business; and my colleague is one of the victims, unless he has been taken over. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The story of the Norwalk mills and my colleague's unselfish championship of the cause of American labor is the story of the robber tariff that the American people are beginning to learn by heart. They are getting their eyes opened to the iniquities that have been perpetrated upon the American people in the name of the American workingman. [Applause on the Democratic side.] They are realizing that it has been a crumb for wage earners and a loaf for the tariff and mill barons. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The day when the smooth-tongued, polished advocates of a piratical tariff can get away with that stuff is passed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The American workmen know they are the poorest paid in all the world when their productivity is taken into account. The American wage earners saw a panic and the hardest times in 1907 under the highest tariff, except the Payne-Aldrich-Hill tariff.

But they know now the tariff come-on when they see him, no matter how disguised, and will not be buncoed again. They see a Republican President and a Republican Tariff Board changing front and admitting that the "difference in the cost of production" bugaboo is busted and will have to go into the discard with the "reasonable profit" dodge. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. REILLY. I would like to finish.

Mr. FOSTER. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. REILLY. Two minutes.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the gentleman be allowed five minutes in which to finish his speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. REILLY. They can see the selfish interest behind the high tariff stalking horse, and they are simply waiting for November to come to prove that the hoodwink days are passed and that they have had enough of the so-called protection. The protection that makes them poor and lean in the sweat of their daily toil, while the tariff barons wax rich and fat; the protection that adds a dime to what they earn and a dollar to what they eat. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I yield back, Mr. Chairman, whatever time I have not used.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CONNELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5919. An act to increase the limit of cost for the United States post-office building at La Salle, Ill.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, my understanding was that there was to be two hours' general debate on this side, inasmuch as they have taken two hours on the other side.

Mr. DALZELL. Your side has occupied more time than this side. Your side has occupied 2 hours and ours has occupied only 1 hour and 35 minutes. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] himself occupied an hour.

Mr. FOSTER. Your side has occupied more time than ours. Mr. Chairman, I think I am recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. The condition of the record is this: The Democratic side has used 2 hours and 2 minutes. The minority side has used 1 hour and 35 minutes, leaving 55 minutes of my colleague's time and 25 minutes' time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

Mr. DALZELL. I do not care to be recognized, Mr. Chairman, but the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] does desire to be recognized.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor.

Mr. DALZELL. We are entitled to be recognized on this side of the House at this time.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will remember this, that his side was recognized according to an understanding with the majority leader, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and given an hour's time, and you consumed all but five minutes of that hour.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that I regret that the situation came about this way, and for that reason I did not want any man to use over an hour, because I was afraid it would bring about confusion. But I was recognized for one hour, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] was recognized for an hour. Then the time should have come back to our side, because we were entitled to it, which would have allowed the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] to come in, and then it would go to the gentleman's side and then come back to us. Now, two gentlemen have been recognized on this side and two on that side, and the result is that this side is now entitled to recognition. I am perfectly willing, however, I will say to the gentleman, when the proper time comes, to make up his time.

Mr. DALZELL. I will only say that the time ought to be divided equally between the two sides of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The recognition ought to go according to rule, because the two sides have been recognized.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that I have so much regard for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that if he desires to proceed I am willing to forego my opportunity now, if I have an opportunity. I may be laboring under a misapprehension as to my right.

Mr. FOSTER. I decline to yield if I can be recognized.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] is merely within his rights. I have no desire to cut off that side.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then, if I may be permitted to make an inquiry, is this side entitled to be recognized next?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], and unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] wishes to utilize his 25 minutes, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] will next be recognized.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. That will be to-morrow morning?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to occupy but a short time.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do not wish to go on to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, we have listened this afternoon to what was to my mind one of the most remarkable addresses ever delivered upon the floor of this House. I refer to the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND]. He has taken up a different line of argument than that usually heard in tariff discussions. We usually hear talk about what effect a tariff will have upon the business of the country, on the particular commodity upon which the tariff is to be levied, and the cost to the people of the country. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] has shown us this afternoon that in these mill and factory towns, in these mills for whose benefit the protective tariff has been levied, the mortality is greater than it is in any other cities of the United States.

We have heard much in this House in the last two or three years with reference to the protective tariff and the benefit that it is to labor. I have heard men talk here until they were blue in the face, until they sweat as they never sweat before in their lives, advocating a high protective tariff for the benefit of the laboring man of the country. Yet it has been demonstrated here to-day by Government statistics that these people in the mill centers of the country, in the cotton and woolen industries of Massachusetts, do not get proper food, clothing, or shelter. Whether they put all their money into savings banks and refuse to spend their wages to procure food to eat and proper clothing to wear for themselves and their families I leave for some friend of the protected industries to tell this House. I suppose that they would come upon the floor of this House and show that over in Massachusetts there are thousands of workmen in those mills who revel in wealth, that the vaults of the savings banks are bulging and bursting with the wealth of the laboring men, who are the direct beneficiaries of our high protective system of tariff taxes.

But do you know that a witness testified before the Committee on Rules a short time ago that these shrewd, smart mill owners, who, it is said, are looking out so well for the protection of the American laboring men, that their cards were distributed in foreign countries, in the labor centers, and that those cards contained upon the one end a picture of a beautiful mill and on the other end, a street between, is represented a savings bank, with a stream of people traveling from the mill over to the savings bank with bags of gold. And some of those people who came to this country brought some of the cards with them to Massachusetts in order that they might identify that mill and that savings bank, where they were to be so very prosperous. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Well, my friends, it seems strange indeed that these people working in the mills would live 8 or 10 or 12 of them in 3 or 4 rooms, and that they would live on food of the kind that has been testified to in order that they might take the money across the street and put it in the savings bank.

I will ask you, is it natural anywhere in the world that men who go out and toil from early morning until late at night will starve themselves if they have money with which to get enough to eat? There may be exceptional cases, but that is not the rule. Human nature is very much the same the world over when it comes to those things. The hunger of a man in Italy or the hunger of a man in Russia is very much the same as it is in England or in Germany or in the United States.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] spoke also of the great mortality in these mill centers. There is a reason for this; some cause is certainly to be found why the mortality is so great. What is necessary to make people strong and keep them healthy? There are certain essentials to do this. Among them are these: They must have proper houses to live in; they must have proper clothing, proper food, and proper hygienic surroundings. Do we find those conditions there? It has been testified to before a committee of this House that those people usually have meat once a week; that their wages are not such as to permit them to live as they ought to live and as all people ought to live. If there is any man in the world and any man's family that ought to have the proper necessaries of life, it is the man who goes out and toils and creates the wealth of the country.

On account of the improper housing of the people, on account of crowding them into rooms, as has been shown here to have been done in Lawrence and Fall River, Mass., and other mill centers of the country, we find that there is not sufficient air for each person to breathe in those crowded rooms. In order for each person to breathe properly, so that the body may be healthy, so that there may be sufficient oxygen taken into the system, there must be a certain amount of pure air to be breathed.

If we have not that air, our bodies will suffer. Deteriorated air brings on disease.

It is necessary to have proper clothing to keep the body healthy. It was testified by a trained nurse from New York, who appeared before the Rules Committee, that on her visit to Lawrence, Mass., among those children she found that out of 119 children only 4 had underclothing. She said that the shoes of the little children of that community were worn out until their bare feet were almost on the ground. She said that the older ones, those who were able to work in the mills and earn something for themselves, were better clothed. Yet those mill owners' cards, with the pictures of the mills and savings banks where they might deposit and hoard up their thousands upon thousands, were sent to the labor centers of Europe. This was done to secure the cheaper labor in Europe.

Every man who has studied hygiene and its relations to the human body knows that a certain amount of food and a certain kind of food is necessary if the body is to be properly maintained. The growing child must have a different food than the grown person who works. One of the witnesses who appeared was a Mr. Carter, who was employed as a missionary, one of these sanctified sort of fellows who would make the heavens weep when he prayed for the poor of Lawrence, Mass. He was employed and his salary was paid by the mill owners of Lawrence. He said his expenses were paid by contributions, but the fact was, as he testified later, that he was paid by the mill owners of that particular city. What was his business? It was to go around and help these people, and, when he found them without sufficient food or clothing or fuel, I suppose it was his business to comfort them and make them feel as good as possible on what little they had to live on.

I would like to read from his testimony that particular item and show how they did enjoy food that was given to them. Talking about giving these children a lunch he says:

> Another thing which became apparent, children were coming to school hungry. In one of the schools, while things were going at their best last November, a very bright and intelligent teacher noticed that the children of the school were not quite so wide-awake about the middle of the forenoon. Upon making inquiry, she discovered that the times being so prosperous the father and mother went to work and the children had to scramble out of bed, dress themselves, take a bite to eat as best they could, and go to school and go through the forenoon without anything very substantial to eat.

Now, gentlemen, mark you, this was a great thing that they were doing for these school children at Lawrence, Mass. He further says:

> The teacher canvassed the matter and this was the result, that she bought large loaves of bread that were 12-cent loaves, and they are big enough to knock a man down with, and are good, solid, wholesome food.

He was asked the question if they were big enough to knock a horse down, and he said "Yes." He said they were good, wholesome food for the children, and that a 12-cent loaf would cut enough portions so that they could sell them with a little corn sirup dribbled onto them for a cent apiece and not lose anything on the job. They were careful to cut their slices of bread so that there would not be anything lost on the job. He said the parents were delighted, and scores of children came every day with their pennies and were independently fed. I want to say to my good friend, Mr. WITHERSPOON, that down in Mississippi that would not be much of a luxury to give a child a piece of hard bread with a little corn sirup dribbled on it.

Then he says:

> We opened up one of the schools and some of the ladies came in and assisted in the work, and one lady, who holds a high social position in Lawrence, said, after the first day's experience, that she had spent a pleasanter forenoon than she ever had at a whist party.

Now, I call attention to this to show you the situation and to corroborate the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND], that there is no wonder that the infant mortality, living in the homes they do, living on the kind of food they are compelled to live on, clothing themselves with the kind of clothing that they are compelled to put on them, it is no wonder that the mortality is so large in these localities.

A man who has had much to do with the young men and boys of the industrial centers says:

> I think you will find that when the father's earnings are not sufficient to keep the mother at home, infant mortality, juvenile crime, ignorance, and poverty are the result.

We find that these companies in Massachusetts upon their pay envelopes give advice to the workmen in these highly protected industries—in these industries in which it is said that if you reduce the tariff you will close down the mills and throw workmen out of employment. Some of the pay envelopes were exhibited before the committee, and it seems that they give some wholesome advice on the backs of them. On the back of one was this advice, solemnly put out by the trustees of the Broadway Savings Bank, controlled by the Woolen Trust:

> Who own their homes? Those who save regularly and place it where it grows. One dollar will open an account at this bank, with 4 per cent interest.

Now, then, the real joke on this envelope was that on the other side in the opposite corner was the amount of wages that this particular workman received, which was $2. It went to No. 1607 for his week of labor. The employees are not carried on the pay rolls by name, but by their numbers, like convicts in a penitentiary.

Then the owner of pay envelope No. 1217 also got a very funny one when he saw what was coming to him. The envelope handed to him by the trust bore this legend:

> Don't spend all your income. A man's duty to himself is to save money out of his earnings and start an account and be independent.

The timekeeper's rate on this man's envelope was $6.05, which probably was the reason that he was advised to be independent. [Laughter.] Who that receives the princely sum of $6 a week would stop to think of such trifles as owning a home? This man probably owns a city mansion already and knows that the trust could give him no advice suitable beyond advising him to be independent. No wonder the textile-mill workers went on a strike. Who would work when there was an opportunity to listen to the funny jokes handed out to them every week by the funny old Woolen Trust. [Laughter.]

The end man in a minstrel show never perpetrated a funnier joke than these millionaire mill owners work off on their employees, and, like the end man, they keep a straight face during the performance.

What do we find in reference to the wages at Lawrence, Mass.? These are taken from the Tariff Board report, volume 4, page 1007. We find that their report covers 174 woolen mills, covering two-thirds of the productive capacity of the whole country.

Less than 20 cents, or $10.80 per week	1,745
More than 20 cents, or more than $10.80 per week	1,387
Total number of weavers	3,182

We paid a high price for these figures, especially as they were already extant in many receptacles, but having paid for them we have a right to use them as authentic.

Of 3,182 weavers in all the mills, 3,180 get less than $18.90 per week, and 2 over $18.90—nearly three-fifths of all the weavers get less than $10.80 per week.

The average wage for male weavers is 22¼ cents an hour, or $12.01 a week; for females, 17⅛ cents per hour, or $9.27 per week; for all weavers, 19¾ cents per hour, or $10.66 a week.

These figures are intended to show that these people who are asking us to maintain the high protective tariff on the wool industry are not paying their workmen the proper proportion that belongs to them or of what they are getting from the protective tariff, and in reality the tariff does not benefit the workmen, but only increases the fortune of the mill owners.

MASSACHUSETTS.

From the Thirty-ninth Annual Report on the Statistics of Labor for 1908 for the State of Massachusetts, a State noted the world over for the number of its protected industries—the poorest paid industry in the world—it appears that there were 108 strikes in Massachusetts in 1908, involving 10,864 men, women, and children of the laboring class. The strikes lasted from 1 to 79 days and were distributed for cause as follows:

	Strikes.
Increase of wages	40
Against decrease	14
Other wage causes	6
For decrease of hours	9
For union shop	9
For recognition	2
For union rules	2
For apprentice rules	2
For sympathy	3
Other causes	21

TOTAL CHANGES IN WAGES IRRESPECTIVE OF STRIKE (PAGE 210).

Five thousand nine hundred and forty-seven employees succeeded in getting an increase averaging $1.57 a week, while 95,420 sustained a decrease averaging $1.04 a week. Four thousand four hundred and twenty-eight employees got a shortening of hours averaging five and four-tenths hours a week. Six thousand and forty-four establishments, with a capital of $717,987,000, made goods valued at $1,172,808,000 and paid in wages $245,207,000, or an average yearly wage of $510.

Seventy-six thousand nine hundred and twenty-five employees, in making boots and shoes, received $551 a year, working 285 days; 91,645, in cotton goods, got $438 in 271 days; 18,179, on woolens, got $444 in 293 days; 11,390, in paper and pulp, got $489 in 253 days.

Such is the record of protection to its protected employees.

Received less than $3 a week	4,827
Received from $3 to $5 a week	30,519
Received from $5 to $6 a week	38,745
Received from $6 to $7 a week	54,950
Received from $7 to $8 a week	57,737
Received from $8 to $9 a week	59,651
Received from $9 to $10 a week	64,204
Received less than $1.50 a day	310,433
Employees had work in manufactures in 1908	575,997
Received from $9 to $25 or more per week	265,564

More than one-half of the employed get less than $1.67 a day, while less than one-half get more.

Three hundred and ninety-three thousand three hundred and one employees out of a total of 575,997 get under $2 a day, two-thirds and more received less than $2, while less than one-third of the employees received $2 or more per day. Such is Republican protection—a help for the few and a menace to the many.

WAGES MEASURED BY THE AMOUNT OF LABOR'S PRODUCT.

One of the main props relied on by the protectionists to maintain the protective tariff is the miserable subterfuge and falsehood that it benefits and "protects" the American wageworker by assuring him higher and better wages than are paid foreign workmen in similar industries. The utter falsity and shallowness of this claim of the advocates of protection has been exposed again and again, but by no one more logically and convincingly than by the Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, of New York, in his very able speech delivered during the first session of the present Congress, in which he proved conclusively that, measured by the standard of production, the American worker in the protected industries received no higher wages than his brother in foreign countries.

Measured by the standard of production, we have in the United States to-day the cheapest and poorest paid labor of any civilized country on the globe.

Our protectionist friends are wont to parade bewildering arrays of figures to show that the American wageworker, in comparison with his English, German, or Italian brother, receives a princely wage. The value of these statistics are discounted by the late James G. Blaine in his report on the textile industries, made when he was Secretary of State in 1881, in which he submitted a comparison of the wages paid spinners and weavers in the cotton mills of Lancashire, England, and Massachusetts. On pages 98 and 99 of that report Mr. Blaine gives the following comparison of the weekly wages paid in the English and Massachusetts mills as follows:

Spinners: English, $7.20 to $8.40 (master spinners running as high as $12); American, $7.07 to $10.30.

Weavers: English, $3.34 to $6.84; American, $4.82 to $8.73.

The average wages of employees in the Massachusetts mills are as follows, according to the official returns: Men, $8.30; women, $5.62; male children, $3.11; female children, $3.08. According to Shaw's report the average wages of the men employed in the Lancashire mills, January 1, 1880, were about $8 per week, subject to a reduction of 10 per cent; women, from $3.30 to $4.30, subject to a reduction of 10 per cent.

The hours of labor in the Lancashire mills are 56 and in the Massachusetts mills 60 per week. The hours of labor in the other New England States, where the wages are generally less than in Massachusetts, are usually 66 to 69 per week.

Then summing up and accounting for the difference in wages of English and American operatives, that great Republican Secretary of State and champion of protectionism goes to the heart and core of the whole subject of wages in these words:

Undoubtedly the inequality in the wages of English and American operatives is more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor.

There you have it. American factory workers are paid higher wages than the English workers because they are more efficient and skillful and work longer hours, consequently they produce more.

What is true of the textile manufacturing industry is true of every other manufacturing industry in this country.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that his use of the word "earned" in enumerating these various cases is possibly misleading. That is what these people receive. If you want to find out what they earn, go to the dividends; go to the great fortunes and the great mountains of money that have been piled up out of the sweat and blood of these people, who have received not what they earned but what they were given. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York is entirely correct, but I spoke of what they earned as being what the mill owners gave these people. This was a mistake. I should have said what they received, and so intended, and will correct my remarks accordingly. I do not doubt that the gentleman from New York is entirely right and that these people in these mills earned many thousands—yes, many millions—more than they received; but this was all they could wring from these tight-fisted men, who ask protection for their industries of nearly 100 per cent.

My friends, it was said this afternoon that these conditions exist almost within sight of where the waves lap the shore of Newport, where the rich revel in the wealth wrung from the American people because of our high protective tariff; and it seems to me that those people could hear the cry of the dying infant in the hovels in Lawrence or in Fall River, and that their hearts ought to be such as beat for humanity, for the upbuilding of men and women and children in this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We talk of charity, and we talk of helping these people. We talk of our fellow beings and what we would do for them; yet these people in Lawrence, Mass., these mill owners—and I dare say the same may be said of Fall River—seem to think that the idea of doing something for these people is that they should be thankful, like Lazarus, to get the crumbs that fall from the rich man's table. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Tolstoi said, "The rich are willing to do everything for the poor except get off their backs," and these greedy, grasping mill owners are willing to do everything for their employees except to cease robbing them. This may seem a harsh characterization of the mill owners, but it seems justifiable when we contemplate the enormous dividends paid the owners of the Fall River mills during the last four years ending June, 1908, as given by Samuel Hopkins Adams:

	Per cent.
Border City, 45 per cent yearly average	11.25
Cornell, 57½ per cent yearly average	14.37
Richard Borden, 72½ per cent yearly average	18.12
Tecumseh, 86 per cent yearly average	21.5
Union Cotton, 88½ per cent yearly average	22.12
Pocasset, 124 per cent yearly average	31
Laurel Lake, 146 per cent yearly average	36.5
Troy, 231 per cent yearly average	56.25

Not all the mills are so profitable, doubtless. But all of them seem to be successful, and most of them have made large fortunes for their owners. Large or small, all maintain the same wage scale.

It is yet strange that with an infant mortality of 50 per cent there should be a yearly dividend of 50 per cent. Yes, Mr. Chairman, they come to this Congress and ask that they may be given another lease, another right, another opportunity, another time, to rob the American people in the interest of labor. O Labor, what sins have been committed in thy name. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

These men who produce the wealth of the country, these men who go out and toil with their hands from early morn to late at night, ought to share in the profits that this high protective policy has given to these manufacturers for these many years, wherein the people have paid taxes on what they have been compelled to buy. Yet it is said they should be thankful because they have got old Brother Carter over there in Lawrence, Mass., to thank the Lord that they are able to live. They should be thankful that their children may be able to go to school with a penny in their pocket and have a treat and enjoy the luxury of a piece of hard bread with a little molasses dribbled on it. These people who advocate the high protective policy say they do not want the workmen of this country to have to be degraded to the level of the workmen of Europe, and yet their cards are distributed in the labor centers of Europe to induce men, women, and children to come to this country that they may employ them in their mills at a cheap wage in competition with American workmen and drive them out of the shop. The Literary Digest of March 9, 1912, printed the following article on the Lawrence (Mass.) strike:

So far as can be gathered from conflicting accounts, some 20,000 workers are still "out" at Lawrence. Renewed bitterness and new acts of violence are thought likely to follow the recent happenings. On the other hand, certain wage concessions recently announced by the mill owners may satisfy the operatives and thus end the strike within a few days. In both Houses of the Federal Congress resolutions for investigations of the Lawrence situation have been offered and discussed, and the Federal Department of Justice will look into the matter to see if any citizens have been deprived of constitutional rights. Senator POINDEXTER, Progressive Republican, of Washington, who visited Lawrence, found conditions there "the clearest illustration of the fallacy of an excessive tariff that the United States has ever known." The textile manufacturers have used the plea that a high tariff helps keep up the standard of living of the American workingman. The Senator finds, as he is quoted in the New York American, "that the textile manufacturers have at these mills as squalid labor as can be found in the four corners of the earth; they pared down the wages of these people not to meet the standard of living in the United States, but to the barest possible margin of existence."

In one miserable tenement building I found 54 persons living. Twenty-two of them worked in the mills at an average pay of $6.67 a week. This is $2.75 per week with which to buy food, clothes, light, and fuel, and pay rent for each of the 54. These are luxuries which the mill laborers enjoy under the rich picking of a high protective tariff.

Families are concentrated in Lawrence by sheer force. If they are starved into subjection and forced to go back to work at such wages as the manufacturers choose to pay, there is little substantial difference between their condition and abject slavery.

What can the Government do?

It can reduce the tariff to a reasonable rate, so that these manufacturers will not be able to gouge the workingman on the one hand and the consumer on the other.

Similar testimony leads the Louisville Post to conclude impressively:

Here we have a picture of the workings of the Payne bill, the best tariff bill that ever passed, as Mr. Taft called it. In the first place, as shown at the mills of the American Woolen Co., it secures only a starvation wage for laborers in New England manufactories. In the second place, the most pauperized labor of Europe has been brought here to work in protected mills, and the good of the "American laboring man" has been lost sight of.

It was an evil day for protection that brought the strike at Lawrence in a presidential year.

They say they want to help the laboring man of our own country. They want to see that he is properly taken care of, and so they want an opportunity to levy a high protective tariff and keep up this tariff so they may still help out the laboring men of the country. Oh, they are comforting when you think about it. On the envelopes of those who receive $2 a week they put an inscription advising the receiver to save this money and buy a home, and on the envelopes of the men who get $6.05 a week they put on the advice that they should save their money and be independent. What a farce! [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNELL. Get married and raise a family.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, the time will come, and I believe the time is here now, when the American people have made up their minds and opened their eyes to what is really meant by these men who profess great friendship for the laboring men of the country and yet in reality want to levy a high tariff for their own benefit.

The tender solicitude of these tariff robbers for the poor laboring man reminds one of—

The considerate crocodile
Who lived on the banks of the river Nile;
Who rolled up his eyes with a look of woe,
While his tears fell fast to the stream below.
"I am mourning," said he, "the unhappy fate
Of the poor little fish that I just now ate."

I believe the people fully understand that this high protective tariff is not for the laboring man, but that he is merely being used to satisfy the greed of the manufacturer. The saying of Lincoln that "You can't fool all the people all the time" is here now. They have conjured with the name "labor" because they have thought it would be popular and that through the laboring man they still might filch from the pockets of the people of this country the money which they get under the pretext of helping the workingman. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I hope that every man upon the other side of the Chamber, though it may be hard for him to do so, will carefully read the statistics given by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] in reference to the health and sanitary conditions of the people of Lawrence and the people of Fall River, Mass. After they have read that and studied the mortality statistics of preventable diseases, I feel sure that they will be willing to say this tariff does not benefit the laboring man. I see my good, genial friend and colleague from Illinois, the leader of the minority, Mr. MANN, in his seat, and I know him so well that I know that he always stands for humanity. I know when he reads these statistics, made by a Republican official over in the Census Bureau, and when he realizes the condition that these people are in and the thousands who are dying in those centers of the highly protected industries, even though he is a strong Republican and a strong party man, yet having the heart in him that I know he has, he will not fail to say that he believes that this tariff should be reduced and that these laboring men are not getting the benefits claimed for them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Does not my colleague think that in view of the mortality statistics which have been presented and to which he has referred it is highly advisable for that side of the House to present to this House a bill enlarging the power of the Public Health Service such as the last Republican House passed? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I would say this, Mr. Chairman, to my colleague, that I would rather have an ounce of prevention than a pound of cure. I would rather give these people the proper food and the proper clothing and proper housing, to remove the cause of this mortality, than to undertake to cure them after they have gotten the disease. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. The Public Health Service power enlarged might remove the cause of that mortality, but certainly the driving out of the country of the businesses which these men are now engaged in will not help them to get bread and butter.

Mr. FOSTER. I have heard the talk of driving industries out of the country very often upon that side of the House if we reduce the tariff. Why, they said that when the Payne-Aldrich tariff was revised upward that if the rates were reduced upon the woolen schedule it would drive that industry out of business.

Mr. MANN. Will my colleague yield again?

Mr. FOSTER. And yet we find that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] comes in here with a bill to reduce the tariff, as he says.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman, like myself, has heard for more than 50 years the statement made by Republicans that an undue reduction of the protective tariff would result in driving industries out of the country. That is a matter of opinion, and was possibly true until you passed a tariff bill, and since then it has been a certainty. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. Well, I will state this, that under a high protective tariff in 1907, when you had a panic, the Democratic Party was not responsible for that, were they? You had a panic in 1873. The Democrats were not responsible for that, were they? We have had one panic said to be under Democratic administration, but really what was left us from the former administration, and we are entitled to one more before we are even with you. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. You have already started it before you have come in power.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, it was started in 1907, while your party was in absolute control of all branches of this Government.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; a very quiet panic, and did not drive any industries out of the country, as were driven out 20 years ago and as they will be driven out again if you succeed at the polls.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the patient may not be in bed, but he has walking typhoid fever or malaria now, and is liable to drop over dead any minute under Republican rule.

Mr. MANN. And will have paralysis as long as there exists any possibility of Democratic success.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I suppose the gentleman has read in history, if he does not know by actual knowledge, of the panic of 1857?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; I have heard of it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Well, I know of it by actual knowledge; and the panic of 1907 was——

Mr. FOSTER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very well.

Mr. FOSTER. You had mills in that town in 1857?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. And you know something about conditions that existed then?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. And you know——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Would you like to have me state them?

Mr. FOSTER. Wait a minute; I am not through with the question.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Go ahead.

Mr. FOSTER. Have you found conditions in 1857 in regard to mortality as great among the people there as they are to-day?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There were no statistics gathered then.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the mortality conditions as high as now?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Very much lower; and I want to state to the gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER. Wait a minute. Some of these salaries have averaged $2 a week. How does it compare with conditions then?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No one was ever paid as low as $2 a week at any time at any mill in Massachusetts.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you know whether these people working in the mills at that time wore woolen clothing or not?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I do not recollect what they wore.

Mr. FOSTER. You think they did, do you not?

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. As I stated I do not recollect what the operatives wore, but I would like to state to the gentleman——

Mr. FOSTER. I can not yield any longer; I want to make this observation——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. But the gentleman wanted me to give some information as to the conditions——

Mr. FOSTER. You have given the information.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts (continuing). In 1857, and I want to give the information to you.

Mr. FOSTER. You have given me the information asked for, and I do not want any more now.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. You said you wanted——

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask for it when I want it.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Then you do not want it.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to state this, in conclusion——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. He has stated you have given him all he could stand.

Mr. FOSTER. You have given the workman in Lawrence about all the protection he can stand.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. He said he wanted the information.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman has given it, and that is all. I do not know but the gentleman from Massachusetts seems to be somewhat solicitous in regard to this tariff on account of the workmen in the mills and the mill owners at Fall River in Massachusetts. I do not blame him for that, for they live in his district, and he ought to exercise his fatherly care and see that these workmen get what should come to them for their labor.

I am sure, however, that there are many of those mill owners who have not divided their profits or anywhere near it, so far as the tariff is concerned, with the working people who are employed in the mills.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Let me say to the gentleman that I think the people of Fall River know what many of you gentlemen have never known, that I have always defended their rights against any injustice by mill owners, and I have never owned any mill stock myself.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I impute to the gentleman from Massachusetts the highest motives. The mills of Fall River are in his district, and I would not say for one minute that the gentleman would stand on the floor of this House and defend the high protective tariff for the mill owners of Massachusetts alone. Do not understand me to charge the gentleman with that. I agree that the gentleman is an able champion of the high protective tariff for the benefit of the mill owners of Massachusetts.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I am a champion of a protective tariff, and I am able to defend it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt of that; but I question whether the gentleman has defended so well the work people of those mills as to see to it that they are properly protected—the men, women, and children who are employed in the mills—because, I understand, the mortality in the Fall River mills is much greater than the mortality in other parts of the country. I have no doubt of that, but I hope and pray that if this bill becomes a law, or if it does not become a law and we are still operating under the old high protective-tariff bill which is claimed to be for the benefit of the working people—I hope the gentleman will go back to Lowell, Mass.——

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; I shall not go back to Lowell——

Mr. FOSTER. I mean Fall River. [Laughter.] You are so big up there that I get you mixed. You are scattered all over Massachusetts.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. There are no woolen mills in Fall River.

Mr. FOSTER. No; but you have cotton mills highly protected. I want to say this, that when the gentleman goes back to Fall River, Mass., I hope he will not forget to get together with those mill owners there and try to persuade them to see to it that those people who work in the mills get their proportion of the protective tariff that is levied under the Payne law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that I have talked with the millmen and the operatives more than the gentleman from Illinois ever talked with them, and have come nearer to them than the gentleman ever did.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, that may be true. The gentleman lives with them. I never was over there. I will say this, that according to the reports from the State of Massachusetts it does not look to me as though those mill owners of Massachusetts had paid much attention to what the gentleman told them. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I judge that because the rate of wages up there is still very low.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will say to the gentleman that I have talked plainly with them, and, further, if I had as much money as many of the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle I would have had some stock that would have permitted me to exercise a voice in controlling them. I may add that under the existing tariff law, upon an agreement between the cotton operatives and manufacturers, wages were increased 10 per cent to go into effect April 1, 1912. The same to be effective throughout New England.

Mr. FOSTER. The mill hands have been unable to get any increase without organizing and striking for higher wages. The manufacturers have not willingly raised their wages, and then just as little as possible. But the gentleman voted all the time for a high tariff.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Yes; Republican—straight. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt about that. I have no doubt of the gentleman's Republicanism and high protectionism.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have been a consistent Republican and protectionist.

Mr. BURLESON. You ought to be ashamed of it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. No; I am not. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. But after the next election I am sure the gentleman will conclude that he does not want to be a protectionist any longer. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I will take care of that part of it.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, the people over in your country may take care of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. I have no trouble about that. I pride myself upon the loyal support of my constituents irrespective of their political opinions. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, a protective tariff has not benefited the workingman. The standard of his living has not been raised as a result of the imposing of the unjust burden on the people. In the highly protected textile mills of Massachusetts and other sections of the country it has been shown time and time again that the workers do not get the benefits of this tariff. The same is shown to be true in the iron mills of Pennsylvania. But the tariff does increase the profits of the manufacturer, builds up trusts and combinations, stops competition, and raises the price of the necessaries of life to the consumer and robs the American people of hundreds of millions of dollars each year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] if some one on that side desires time.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no speakers desiring time just now. I am ready to rise.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If any gentleman on that side of the House does not care to go on this evening, I will move that the committee rise. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 22195, to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolutions of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 232. Joint resolution extending the operations of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, and for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 263. Joint resolution to authorize allotments to Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., of lands valuable for coal.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 3686. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Coal Co. and the Eastern Coal & Mining Co. to exchange certain lands embraced within their existing coal leases in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations for other lands within said nations.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5919. An act to increase the limit of cost for the United States post-office building at La Salle, Ill.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HOWELL, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADDITIONAL LABOR, DOORKEEPER'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] submits a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 466 (H. Rept. 476).

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper is authorized to employ additional labor, for folding speeches, at the rate of not exceeding $1 per thousand, and the sum of $2,000 is authorized to be expended from the contingent fund for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

REPORTS OF THE BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY (H. DOC. NO. 686).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the requirements of section 11 of the act approved May 29, 1884 (23 Stat., 31), providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Animal Industry, I transmit herewith copies of the reports of the operations of said bureau for the fiscal years ended June 30, 1910, and June 30, 1911.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 29, 1912.

VETO MESSAGE—MANEUVER GROUNDS AT OR NEAR ANNISTON, ALA. (H. DOC. NO. 657).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return House joint resolution No. 178 without my approval, for the reasons stated in the letter, under date of March 27, 1912, of the Secretary of War, copy of which accompanies this message.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 29, 1912.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire what the message relates to.

The SPEAKER. It relates to establishing a training ground in Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe it came from the Military Committee, did it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the veto message, with accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE—BURNT TIMBER ON THE PUBLIC LANDS (H. DOC. NO. 656).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith H. R. 9845 without approval. My objections to the bill are stated in the communication of the Secretary of the Interior that accompanies this message. I hope that the difficulty which the Secretary points out may be remedied, because I approve of the general relief sought by the bill.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 29, 1912.

The SPEAKER. That bill came from the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 30, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, withdrawing estimate of an appropriation for the construction of a breakwater at the Army supply depot, Fort Mason, Cal. (H. Doc. No. 652); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 30, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, increase our loving kindness that our hearts may expand and our sympathies go out in brotherly love to all mankind. We realize that the warm clasp of the hand, the sunny smile, the cheering word is easy if love is spontaneous and brings great reward, but if the heart is frigid the effort is hard and the returns meager. Increase, therefore, our loving kindness that we may be rich in the things which make for righteousness, peace, and good will, and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 473.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit during the sessions of the House of Representatives and during the recess of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Speaker, in a speech printed in the RECORD on the 22d of March there was added a clipping from the National Tribune of January 18, 1912, which contains some reflection upon the record of Charles Francis Adams. It is only proper that Mr. Adams should have a chance, since this has been printed in the RECORD, to give his version, and so I ask that a letter from Mr. Adams may also be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to print in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from Gen. Charles Francis Adams. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what the letter is in reply to.

Mr. McCALL. I will read it if the gentleman desires.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not care to have it read.

Mr. McCALL. Mr. Adams says in a letter that—

It seems hardly fair that the RECORD should be made the medium of perpetuating falsehoods about individuals, and under these circumstances I think I have a right to ask that similar prominence and permanence be given to the facts in regard to my military record.

That is in a letter to Senator LODGE.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that Gen. Adams has had sufficient publicity in the RECORD, from his standpoint, in attacking the soldiers of the country, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. PAYNE. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Alabama, whether we can have some information as to when a motion will be made to close general debate. Of course the gentleman realizes the embarrassment that we are under of Members desiring to be heard and not knowing when general debate will be closed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My purpose is that on Tuesday morning, after the reading of the Journal, to move to close general debate and take up the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PAYNE. I will ask the gentleman whether it will inconvenience him or interfere with the procedure of the bill to get unanimous consent, which I think can be done, to have two hours of general debate Tuesday morning, commencing at 11 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am perfectly willing to have two hours' general debate on Tuesday morning if the House will agree that after two hours' debate on Tuesday morning the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule for two hours, subject to amendments, and then reach a vote.

Mr. PAYNE. I have no objection to that arrangement.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I do not believe I want to agree to any proposition that would do away or curtail the rights that Members have under the five-minute rule. I want to say that I do it without any idea that there is going to be any prolonged discussion under that rule. I would be perfectly willing, although I am not interested in that part of it, to agree to two hours of general debate on Tuesday, or Monday, if we can change Monday's work over to a subsequent day, and include the proposition that we meet on Monday at 11 o'clock. Under that agreement general debate would close at 1 o'clock and we could take up the bill under the five-minute rule and have plenty of time to finish before adjournment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am willing to have any amendments offered under the five-minute rule, but I want to say that there are no amendments that are likely to come from this side of the House.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think that we will take more than two hours under the five-minute rule, but I do not want to agree to two hours because that time might be taken up on one or two paragraphs, and we would never be able to reach the part of the bill to which some Members want to offer amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My purpose in limiting the time under the five-minute rule is not for the purpose of cutting off amendments, but simply to limit debate under the five-minute rule, which by striking out the last word and making pro forma amendments is liable to be prolonged.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think there is any disposition to do that. I would not be a party to it; I am acting in the best of faith. I have talked since yesterday with quite a number of Members on that side, and they said that they thought I was right in objecting, that they did not like the idea of cutting off debate under the five-minute rule, because there is where we get the most intelligent discussion. Can not we meet at 11 o'clock?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to meeting at 11 o'clock on Monday, but the same bill has once been considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. NORRIS. That is one reason why I think we will not have much debate on it. My idea is that it will not take two hours, but I would like to have every Member offer an amendment to any portion of the bill that he desires.

Mr. CANNON. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is contemplated to have Monday for general debate by unanimous consent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from New York suggested that we have two hours general debate on Monday. Of course, the regular order of Monday will have to be transferred to Tuesday by unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. So that Monday will be devoted to general debate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Only two hours of it. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, if there are any eulogies set for to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. There are none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next; that two hours be devoted to general debate, and at the end of two hours general debate shall be closed, the bill shall be taken up under the five-minute rule, and that the order of business on Monday shall be in order on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on Monday next; that general debate on this bill shall be continued for two hours, at the end of which time it shall be taken up under the five-minute rule, and that the business on Monday on the Unanimous Consent Calendar and suspension of the rules to discharge of committees be transferred to Tuesday. Is there objection?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Chair stated there should be general debate for two hours; he means two hours on Monday.

The SPEAKER. Two hours on Monday. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Alabama as to the control of the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We started out by allowing the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to control the time, and I wish to let it run in that way.

The motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, with Mr. GRAHAM in the chair.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Chair how much time has been consumed by this side in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Two hours and two minutes on the Democratic side and 1 hour and 35 minutes on the Republican side.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is the Chair certain about that?

Mr. DALZELL. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] consumed an hour, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] consumed an hour, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] consumed 45 minutes, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to correct his statement. Two hours and forty-seven minutes have been consumed on the Democratic side and 1 hour and 35 minutes on the Republican side. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] is recognized for one hour. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it is a saying of Bacon that "Nations, like individuals, have their youth, their middle age, their old age, and they have their diseases."

As a Nation we are young in years, but old in the elements that compose us.

Ethnologically we are about all the nations of all the world and their descendants.

Zangwill compares us to a melting pot, in which all nationalities are being fused and transformed here on American soil into a new nationality; but we are something more than a melting pot of nationalities. We are a melting pot in which all creeds, cults, ideas, ideals, and institutions are being fused and transformed.

And sometimes the more radical and revolutionary the creed, cult, idea, or ideal, the more attention it attracts for a time till some other creed, cult, idea, or ideal boils to the surface—and that keeps the pot boiling.

After centuries of warfare with caste, privilege, prerogative, kings, and dynasties, humanity is realizing here its ultimate ideal and the people are supreme.

But some people are more supreme than other people, just as they always were; some people are richer than other people; some people are wiser than other people; and some people are healthier than other people, just as they always were; and some people are going around telling other people about it and explaining how all these inequalities are largely due to the last election and how much better it would be for everybody if Mr. So-and-so could be given a political job, just as they always did.

"Vote for Proclinus to-day and he will vote for you to-morrow."

They found that proclamation placarded on the walls of Herculaneum after it had been there 2,000 years, covered with ashes, but Proclinus is still running for office and still soliciting votes on the same old terms.

After all, we are nearly all of us just folks, and, fortunately, most folks want to do right, and so long as most folks want to do right in a government by majorities, we shall continue to go forward on the upgrade.

But in the midst of so much confusion, in the midst of so much megaphonic political holiness, in the midst of so many shouters at the doors of so many political tents, each advertising his own "greatest show on earth just upon the inside," in the midst of so many political necromancers and jugglers and sword swallowers and serpentine dancers and tight-rope walkers, plain people, who simply want the privilege of living and paying taxes, sometimes find it difficult to determine whether, to paraphrase Dickens, we are living in the best of times or the worst of times, in an age of wisdom or an age of foolishness.

It is easy to imagine an ideal state. Humanity has been imagining an ideal state ever since time began.

It is all perfectly plain that everybody ought to be so good as not to need any laws or the makers, administrators, or construers of laws; and poverty ought to be abolished; and nobody ought to have to work too hard; and nobody ought to want to loaf too hard; and nobody ought to want to buy too cheap; and nobody ought to want to sell too high; and nobody ought to put the big potatoes on top, and a peck ought always to hold 8 quarts; and things ought always to be true to name without the aid of Dr. Wiley; and nobody ought to want to beat his neighbor in a horse trade; and nobody ought to want to move his line fence over on his neighbor; and nobody ought to want to fence in the public domain; and there ought to be no demagogues in politics; and there ought to be no politics; and everybody ought to tell the truth and shame the devil, but they don't do it. [Laughter.] And, so far as I have been able to observe, you would never be able to tell a man's politics by the way he runs his business, except that when he has no business at all he is likely to vote the Democratic ticket. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman mean to say that a man finds after he has voted the Democratic ticket that he has no business?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. He is very apt to.

It is a long way yet to the millenium.

Therefore, as Hamilton says in the Federalist—

Because the passions of men will not conform to the dictates of reason and justice without restraint, governments are instituted among men.

And since it is necessary to have officers to run governments, it is necessary to have elections to elect them, and since it is difficult to put one man out and another man in, merely because one man wants another man's job, it has generally been considered necessary to assign some other reason.

And inasmuch as the average man, being busy about his own affairs, knows less about tariff schedules than almost any other thing, the tariff has generally been regarded as an excellent political issue, about which orators can talk with fluency and impunity without knowing very much about what they are talking about.

It is therefore fair to assume that the tariff will again be the issue this year. [Laughter.]

"CONSTRUCTIVE STATESMANSHIP."

At a time, Mr. Chairman, when the country was blessed with universal welfare, and universal difficulty in keeping up with it, and paying the incidental expenses, the country elected a Democratic House of Representatives pledged to level down all the high places, level up all the low places, to repair the crumbling edifice of our liberties, and remove all dandruff from the hair. [Laughter.]

And we shall, of course, be invited in the coming campaign to consider with enthusiasm what the gentleman from Missouri, the honored Speaker of this House, calls "the splendid record" of the Democratic Party "for constructive statesmanship during the extra session of the Sixty-second Congress," which he expressed the hope would be duplicated this session.

If it were not for higher considerations, the mere partisan advantage to be gained by such an object lesson might warrant satisfaction that the gentleman's hope of duplication is being realized.

A Democratic majority in the extra session of the Sixty-second Congress, operating under a dehorned Speakership, [laughter] proceeded to reduce the country to a state of apprehension, entirely surrounded by investigations [laughter], and in about four and a half months passed three and a half bills.

That is to say, it passed an apportionment bill left over from the last Congress.

It passed a so-called free-list bill "so loosely drawn as to involve the Government in endless litigation and to leave the commercial community in disastrous doubt."

It passed an antiprotection, tariff-for-revenue-only wool bill, which was swapped in the Senate for a protection bill and lost its identity in conference.

It passed a cotton bill with which, some time during the dog days last summer, an anonymous steel schedule and a vagrant chemical schedule casually became connected [laughter] and nobody knew much about the cotton schedule, and nobody knew much about the steel schedule, and nobody knew any more about the chemical schedule than a June bug on a giant firecracker knows about the chemical contents of the firecracker. [Laughter.]

The "constructive statesmanship" of the extra session of the Sixty-second Congress passed these "measures" without taking testimony, but these gentlemen have the happy faculty of being able to impart information without first obtaining it [Laughter and applause], and the net result was three veto messages.

RULES.

Gentlemen denounced the Payne tariff bill because opportunity was not given in the House to amend it generally, although opportunity was given to amend it in certain vital particulars.

But when the "constructive statesmanship" of the extra session of the Sixty-second Congress passed the cotton bill, amended by an iron and steel schedule framed and reported by no committee and amended by a chemical schedule framed and reported by no committee, it was put through under a rule, reported by a regenerated Rules Committee, permitting two hours' debate on a side and no amendments, and when gentlemen were being criticized for proposing to pass a rule permitting no discussion and no amendment they did not deny it—they passed the rule.

There had been arguments, essays, speeches, and denunciations against putting bills through under special rules. New Members had made their political campaigns upon the iniquity of rules and rules committees, and had been elected upon the eloquence of their denunciation of things about which they knew little then and know more now. Old Members had disclaimed all responsibility and rioted in rhetoric about being the victims of superior malignant force.

It is impossible to expect men to be as good in Congress as they are in magazines and on the stump, but the virtue on which they solicited votes ought to have withstood at least one shock.

I suggest to you that the people have a right to test the sincerity of your denunciation of rules by your adoption of rules; that they have a right to test the sincerity of your denunciation of the methods of 1910 by your adoption of the methods of 1910 in 1911.

The "constructive statesmanship" of the extra session of the Sixty-second Congress passed a half of a trade agreement with Canada, the net result of which is free wood pulp and print paper.

When I first heard that story about Herman Ridder taking Uncle Joe up on the top of the Capitol and showing him all the zones of newspaper influence and telling him that all these would be for him for President if he would order the Ways and Means Committee to report a free wood-pulp and print-paper bill, it seemed to me like an oriental dream; but when the shouting and the tumult in the United States and Canada died away and nothing was left but free wood pulp and print paper standing out, spared, solitary and alone, above the ruins of an otherwise repudiated transaction, I could not help wondering whether a Democratic House of Representatives, with its "splendid record of constructive statesmanship," had left it standing there inadvertently. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

DEFINITIONS.

This is the "splendid record of constructive statesmanship" to which the Speaker referred, and which he wants to see duplicated this session.

It will do no good to refer to it as the most grotesque thing in legislative history. People might think that was an exaggeration, and even conscientious Democrats might feel compelled to call it a campaign canard.

The story is largely written in the President's veto messages which actually saved Democrats from themselves, but immediately after these messages were transmitted to Congress Democrats, who were otherwise good, churchgoing citizens, felt constrained to refer to them as a tyrannical exercise of Executive power.

What they did do and what they would have done are quite different things, but if they had done what they would have done it would have been a good deal like one of Cæsar's campaigns written by himself, "having taken the city and killed the citizens, Cæsar invaded another tribe," and they would still have called it a "splendid record of constructive statesmanship."

Mr. Chairman, the word constructive has two meanings; one implies the power to construct something, the other implies something assumed, suppositious.

Let it pass, then, as a "splendid record of 'assumed,' 'suppositious,' 'constructive' statesmanship," which fortunately constructed nothing. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

THE YEAR 1910.

The year 1910 was a comet year, and, while there is no scientific basis for the theory, it would almost seem as if the tail of Halley's comet had whipped into the atmosphere of this particular sphere in passing mephitic gases conducive to hysteria, which found congenial lodgment in hospitable brains, which have ever since harbored and retained them.

In the year 1910 the public mind was predisposed to see things and to be seduced by stories of ghosts, hobgoblins, and chimeras, and even staid, old New England began to slip the moorings of her reason.

The year 1910 was abnormal also in that it produced discontent in a time of plenty. In 1910 times were good and prices were high. We all like high prices, but we like them for what we have to sell, and we all like low prices, but we like them for what we have to buy; that is, as Josh Billings said some years ago:

"It takes less philosophy to take things as they come than it does to part with things as they go." [Laughter and applause.]

But what we have to sell some one else has to buy, and what some one else has to sell we have to buy; and inasmuch as we are all buyers and sellers, it is obvious that we must all go up and down together, except when some monopoly locates itself at the commercial crossroads and collects toll from human necessity, and every law upon the Federal statute books against monopoly was written there by Republican Congresses. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In the year 1910, however, the people were told that the Republican Party was the party of protection, trusts, and monopoly; that protection protects trusts, makes prices high, and rears a wall around the helpless victims of licensed plunder. [Laughter on Republican side.]

I can hear my friend from Missouri over there saying it now. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Why, in 1910 prices were high the world over and the Republican Party had not built a wall around the world.

Prices were high in Europe, high in South Africa, high in Australasia, high in China and Japan, high in South America, high in the United States and high in Canada, high in nations which protect their markets, and high in nations which impose a tariff for revenue only.

But nobody saw that. All the people saw was some feverish orator on a platform somewhere denouncing something. And the man who denounced something did not care much what effect his denunciation might have on the country so long as he won. As Mr. Dooley says:

"It was like gettin' fame by bein' among those present at a boiler explosion." [Laughter.]

The nations of Europe have been conducting investigations as to the cause of high prices in Europe, and the President of the United States now recommends an appropriation of $20,000 to pay our share of the expense of an international conference to be held at Washington, to propose plans to the nations of the world for "an international inquiry into the high cost of living."

THE LOGIC OF THE LAST CAMPAIGN.

Notwithstanding all this, you gentlemen won the last campaign by telling the people that "the iniquitous Payne tariff law" was the sum total of human depravity and the cause of high prices.

Nobody read the Payne law—that is, not many people did—but everybody knew that prices were high. And for campaign purposes it was sufficient to assume that because two things existed at one and the same time therefore one was the cause of the other. It was like saying there is malaria in Washington. Congress sits in Washington, therefore Congress is the cause of malaria in Washington. [Applause on the Republican side.] That kind of an argument was a good deal easier to make than to discuss the law of supply and demand or the quantitative theory of money.

You told the people who live in cities that prices were high, because, by reason of protection, farmers were getting too much for what they had to sell; and at the first way station out of town you congratulated the farmer on the high prices he was getting for what he had to sell to the people who live in cities, and you will do it again.

But you never read to the American workingmen what Samuel Gompers, after a tour of Europe, reported in June, 1910, as to the state of American labor in comparison with foreign labor—

"That millions of wageworkers now have a shorter workday by several hours than 30 years ago;

"That the present organization of employing capital has almost wholly eliminated the uncertainty formerly experienced by wageworkers as to getting their pay when due;

"That constantly increasing wages on the whole during the present generation, considerably excelling the rise in average prices, meantime can be shown by the records of the wage scales for the workers, organized and unorganized;

"That the conditions for the education and normal growth of the youth of America never were better than to-day."

And—

"That looking over our whole broad land there was never a greater proportion of home owners, never a higher level of comfort for America's workers." [Applause on the Republican side.]

You never read this to any audience of American workingmen. You told them prices were high, and you talked to them about the "iniquitous Payne tariff law."

You never explained to the American laboring man that his wages would be reduced to the level of foreign wages if protection were removed.

You simply told him he was a consumer, and that with lower tariff rates foreign manufacturers, paying lower wages than are paid here, would get a chance at this market.

But you did not tell him that by so much as the foreign manufacturer gets possession of this market, by so much he displaces production here; and that by so much as he displaces production here he deprives American labor of employment here and increases the employment of labor abroad; and that by so much as he forces prices down by competition, by so much he forces down American wages; and that by so much as he forces down American wages he forces down the purchasing power of American labor.

You never told the American laboring man that it is of no advantage to a man to be able to buy things 5 per cent cheaper when his wages are 25 per cent lower or he is out of work entirely.

And you never told him that if the foreigner got control of our market, prices would go up.

You never told him that in the last analysis the question of protection of American labor and American industry is a question of American manhood and American citizenship, and that one reason why the American laboring man is the best all-round man on earth, mentally and physically, is because he is the best fed, best clothed, and best housed man on earth [applause on the Republican side], and that it takes a well-fed, well-clothed, and well-housed man to make a good citizen.

You never told him these things. You never read to any audience of American laboring men that John Mitchell said in the Outlook in September, 1909, that "any reduction in wages means a lowering in the standard of living; and the standard of living among a civilized people can not be lowered without lowering in the same ratio the physical standard and the intellectual and moral ideals of that people." [Applause on the Republican side.]

You never told any audience of American laboring men that inasmuch as this is a Government of the people and by majorities the Government is not lodged in legislative, executive, and judicial branches in the last analysis, but is lodged under every man's hat, and that as a man thinketh, so is he, and that as a majority think, so goes the Republic, and that a man is not apt to think right on an empty stomach or when he sees his family in want.

You never reminded the American laboring man that the more people there are employed in factories the more people there are to buy what the farmer grows to sell, and that the more people there are to buy what the farmer grows to sell the more the farmer sells of what he grows to sell, and that the more the farmer sells of what he grows to sell the more he buys of what the manufacturer makes to sell, and that the more the manufacturer sells of what he makes to sell the more people he employs to make more goods to sell to everybody and the more the railroads haul for everybody. You never told him any of these things. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You never told him that when a factory runs full time, at full capacity, each unit of production is made cheaper than when it runs haltingly, to supply a spasmodic demand, and that, therefore, consumers buy cheaper and laborers receive higher and steadier wages.

You never told him that other enlightened nations protect their own people and their own markets, and that by your policy we would be throwing open this twenty-eight billion dollar market for the exploitation of other nations which protect their markets against us. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You never told him that if our markets were thrown open to foreign producers one of two things would happen, either wages would go down or men would go out of work and factories out of existence.

You never told him any of these things.

And yet the fundamental reason for protection is that it does protect American labor, and the American laboring man never received better wages for shorter hours than now, and never had more money deposited in savings banks than now, and never went home to a better home than now, and the American school is the best school on earth, and the man born or naturalized under the American flag has the best chance on earth, and therefore the American flag is the best flag on earth [applause], and if any man born on foreign soil is disposed to deny this, why did he come here?

The Payne law did three things that place it far in advance of previous tariff bills in constructive legislation.

First, it established a Customs Court for the speedy and uniform construction of tariff law.

Second, it gave us equality of opportunity with all other nations in the markets of all other nations by a system of maximum and minimum rates.

Third, it provided for the beginning of a tariff board by which to seek to ascertain the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I regret I can not yield. I have only a limited time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just one question, which will illuminate the subject.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I can not yield. I do not wish to stop to discuss the gentleman's question now. My time is limited.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I just wanted to ask——

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I do not yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I differ with some of my associates in believing that the declaration in our platform of 1908 that duties should be so levied as to equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad was the declaration of the most enlightened policy of recent times, because it is a policy framed to meet conditions which have greatly changed in the comparatively brief time since the passage of the Dingley law.

SPEED.

Draper, in his "Intellectual Development of Europe," says, "Empires are only sand hills in the hourglass of time," and the running of the sand for a quarter of a century is swifter than a watch in the night.

Sometimes it runs red with blood, sometimes it runs golden with the harvests of peace, sometimes it is stagnant with doubt as if humanity were pausing which way to go, and sometimes it is electric, charged with the spirit of unrest and change, but always it is the seed bed and the graveyard of mankind, and always the sand runs on, and the old order is always passing away.

The occupant of the spot light plays his part and moves off the stage. The political faker of to-day becomes the laughing stock of to-morrow and a hazy memory next week.

Across the stage pass kings, conquerors, lawgivers, saints, harlequins, and jesters, in pomp or squalor, in ephemeral triumps or desperate reverses, and always the sand runs on.

The period since 1898 has been a period of swift and feverish evolution from what Carlyle called a "gross steam-engine civilization" into an electric civilization.

No one is willing to take 40 years or even 40 days now in trying to reach any kind of a promised land, but everybody wants to go by express in a Pullman car.

We live in an age of hurry and congestion. We hardly get our eyes fixed upon the moving picture before the moving slide has slid on.

In 30 minutes now, measuring life by its experiences and not by length of years, a man lives longer, sees more, hears more, and gets more indigestion and nervous prostration than old Methuselah did in all his stagnant years. [Laughter and applause.]

We do not want contentment and satisfaction. If we have them, we want something else. We want sensation.

And if we have a President who is going steadily along his unadvertised way, every day doing something substantial, the political gallery gods are dissatisfied, because they want him to smash something so they can hear it jingle. [Laughter and applause.]

THE TARIFF AND CENTRALIZATION.

We live in a world of rush and noise and machinery—in a tariff world and a world of centralization, in which industries are centralized regardless of free trade or protection.

Something like a hundred years ago Adam Smith, writing about corporations, said they could never hope to gain much ground because it is "inherent in men to manage more diligently their own property than the property of others."

But corporations nowadays are willing to manage not only their own affairs but everybody else's affairs.

Immediately after the passage of the Dingley law in 1897 the country entered upon a period of restored public confidence, in which men strained every resource to make the most out of a time of phenomenal prosperity.

Feeling the necessity of producing at central points commodities to supply increasing areas of trade, created by increasing facilities of transportation, communication, and exchange, resulting from the increasing use of steam and electricity, they organized new corporations and reorganized old corporations into new corporations until corporate combinations, organized under the laws of various States, have outgrown the States of their organization and become national and international in their scope.

For illustration, down to May 31, 1900, 2,160 theretofore separate, independent industries were organized into 185 trusts, and of these 185 trusts only 65 had been organized before 1897; and the sum of the capitalization of these 2,160 separate, independent industries was one and a half billion dollars, but the sum of the capitalization of the resulting 185 trusts was three and a half billion dollars.

This movement swept on into the opening years of the twentieth century, until now industries not only here but throughout the commercial world are reduced to a few large units, run by a few large units, each controlling an area of trade, within which smaller industries in the very nature of things can only exist on sufferance of their larger neighbors.

THE TARIFF PLANK.

What, then, is the relation of the tariff to centralized monopoly?

Down to 1897 it was easy to demonstrate that domestic competition would regulate prices, that when an industry was found profitable, A, B, and C, and so on down the alphabet would go into business, and by domestic competition reduce prices to consumers, even below the duty exacted on similar imported articles.

But now A, B, and C, and so on down the alphabet are organized into corporate combinations and competition no longer regulates.

Therefore, by as much as you raise the duty above the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, by that much you invite domestic monopolies to overcharge domestic consumers [applause]; and therefore, in our platform of 1908, we declared for duties which should equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad.

That plank has an upward limit and a downward limit.

An upward limit—why? To protect American consumers from being overcharged by American monopolies. A downward limit—why? To protect American labor from competition with foreign labor.

With the adoption of this policy it became perfectly apparent that some means must be devised to aid a Ways and Means Committee in ascertaining with some degree of scientific accuracy the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, and the Payne bill provided the beginning of a Tariff Board.

The reason is plain. Before the present Ways and Means Committee was created by the Speaker, and the chairman of that committee was given the power to run the House as the vicegerent and alter ego of the Speaker—in the earlier and less holy days—it had been the custom of Ways and Means Committees to hold open hearings and take testimony, not assuming that they could impart information without first obtaining it and never assuming that they could frame a tariff bill based upon backstairs communications from selected, biased sources. [Applause on the Republican side.]

In the earlier and less holy times it was the custom of Ways and Means Committees to take testimony, generally for months, before framing a bill.

But even then it was difficult to reconcile conflicting interests—difficult even to divide among the Democratic brethren the pabulum of protection which they wanted for their districts, so they could go out and yell the more lustily for free trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

FRAMING A TARIFF BILL.

Let us along this row of seats for a moment imagine ourselves a Ways and Means Committee, if you can mount to the dizzy and rarefied atmosphere of such power and respectability all at once [laughter on the Republican side], and let us proceed to take testimony.

Now here comes an importer. He may run a department store and run a newspaper at one and the same time, and he says he does not need protection at all.

Here comes a great corporation, which solely for purposes of illustration I will assume to be momentarily represented by my friend from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER]. He says "We are large and we do not need much protection."

Here comes a corporation with smaller capital represented by my friend from Michigan [Mr. DOREMUS], who demonstrates that his corporation can not run at all without considerable protection.

Here comes a man from the great Northwest and he says that just across the international boundary line they are digging coal and sawing lumber with oriental labor and that his country can not compete without high duties.

Here comes a Representative from the Great Plains country, a little farther east. He says his people need cheap lumber and cheap coal and demands low duties or no duties.

A Member appears from a little farther east and demands protection for coal and iron.

Here is another from the Southwest. He says his people grow cattle with hides on, and he wants a duty on hides. But a Member from New England wants free hides and promises cheaper shoes and cheaper harnesses.

Mr. PAYNE. Do not forget peanuts. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The bill is framed, and you report it. It is a compromise in the committee and a further compromise on the floor. It goes to a Senate committee, where the balancing and compromising goes on. It is reported to the Senate and further overhauled. It goes to conference, where "the disagreeing votes of the two Houses" are further compromised, and finally it goes to the President.

EVOLUTION OF A TARIFF BOARD.

For these reasons, and because the maximum and minimum provisions of the Payne law made it necessary to have persons skilled in tariff matters to aid the President in securing information to enable him to conclude negotiations with other nations, the Payne law, in 1909, carried a provision authorizing the President "to employ such persons as may be required."

By a process of evolution, admirably stated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], that provision was broadened into the present law in the first regular session of the Sixty-first Congress.

But the people were not satisfied with that provision, and in 1910 the Republican platforms of 28 States demanded a permanent, independent, nonpartisan commission; and in January, 1911, the National Tariff Commission Association met in Washington and adopted a resolution demanding "from the Sixty-first Congress, then convened in final session, the enactment of a bill creating a permanent nonpartisan tariff commission."

Pursuant to that demand a bill was reported unanimously by the then Committee on Ways and Means.

In support of that bill the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. CLARK, now the honored Speaker of the House of Representatives, said:

> We are not afraid of information from any source. We welcome it. I think I am at liberty to say that it takes a vast amount of information to get up a tariff bill which anybody of good sense is willing to stand to in days to come.

But the importance of framing a bill upon information that would appeal to people of "good sense" seemed more pressing upon the gentleman from Missouri in January than it did in June. [Laughter.]

In support of that bill, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, among other things, said (and I read this in connection with the speech the gentleman from Alabama delivered yesterday):

> You know, and every Democrat here knows, that one of the greatest difficulties we have had to face is that when the Ways and Means Committee goes into session to ascertain the facts upon which to write a tariff bill, the only men who are sufficiently interested to come before us and give the facts are the protected industries of the United States, and yet to-day you would vote to continue that condition.

And therefore the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] argued for a tariff board a year ago. Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. CLARK have changed since then—degenerated into mere candidates for the Presidency [laughter]—but the principle for which they stood has not changed.

PRESENT METHOD OF FRAMING TARIFF BILLS.

The testimony of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER], speaking on the steel bill, January 29 last, corroborates the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]; that is, it corroborates Mr. UNDERWOOD a year ago. He says:

> The committee has exercised patience with all of them, and has denied to no man the right to present his case in any way he saw fit, except by taking up the time of the committee and of this Congress by holding public hearings before the full Committee on Ways and Means.

That is to say, "interested" persons have been heard in private by the Democratic members of the committee, but not by the committee.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] said a year ago that you were not afraid of information from any source.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] said a year ago that one of the greatest difficulties a Ways and Means Committee has to deal with is that only men who are sufficiently "interested" come before the committee.

And now the only persons heard are "interested" persons, and they are not heard by the committee, but are heard in "private" by the Democratic members of the committee.

In the earlier and less holy times when you felt particularly reckless about language you used to berate the Republican Party unjustly for what you called its association with "the interests," but we never framed a tariff bill in secret, with the advice of unknown "interests." [Applause on the Republican side.]

We never framed a tariff bill upon secret communications of "interested" parties, who knew they would get a hearing because of sympathetic political affiliations.

I do not know why it is, but I am reminded of a prayer of the Chaplain which made an impression upon me at the time and which for some reason comes back to me now: "Since cant and hypocrisy are the worst of sins, preserve us, O Lord, from these." [Laughter on the Republican side.]

The Republican Party had entered upon a rational, scientific plan for tariff adjustment.

That policy has been supplanted now by a policy of tariff revision, based upon star-chamber, backstairs, secret communications and political guesswork.

THE NEED OF POLITICAL SANITY.

But the country can stand all that. It has lived, thriven, and grown for 136 years, counting the Declaration of Independence as the beginning of things national, and during all that time there have been legislative political manipulations, political agitations, and political agitators.

Generation after generation has come into being in a land of constantly widening opportunities, and the exploitations of political showmen, keen to guess what sensation the public will want next and to pander to it, keen to exploit a political emotion and to pander to it, have apparently had no retarding influence.

The country can stand these things. They are the surface operations of the men of the hour dealing with surface manifestations for their own ephemeral uses.

But below these are the profounder problems of the social relations of the people, by whom and for whom this Government was organized out of a dream of human equality, which ought to be realized more and more as the years go by.

But our population is becoming congested in great cities. Lines of caste are becoming more and more defined. The corporate machine employer and the corporate machine employee have taken the place of the old personal relation between man and man. We are building industrial towers of Babel, and we go our ways separately, although we jostle one another on the sidewalk. In short, the incubator is becoming more and more the mother of the chicken. [Laughter and applause.]

There never was a time of greater need of level-headed stability than now. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The Nation was never more in need of the kind of patriotism and political sanity that rises above mere self-seeking than now.

And yet there never was a time when men were apparently more willing to fan any smoldering discontent into a blaze for personal political gain than now.

There never was a time when men were more willing to sow grudges and discontent than now.

There never was a time when men were more ready to strain or amend the Constitution than now.

On the other hand, there never was a time when a larger element of our population were susceptible to inflammatory influences than now.

There never was a time when a larger element of our population could be played upon by opera-bouffe, whirling-dervish methods than now.

And there never was a time when party fealty sat more lightly upon American citizenship than now.

DANGERS.

The danger to our Republic is not in a strong, central, constitutional government—a government of "indestructible States in an indestructible Union of States"—but it is in the clamorous contention of the men of the hour for the loosening of constitutional restraints. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The danger to our Republic is not the power lodged by our fathers in executives, courts, congresses, and legislatures, which serve in the open and can be called up or called down, but in the breeding of public want of confidence in our institutions and in the men temporarily intrusted with power to run them.

The danger to our Republic is not in the men drawn from the ranks and temporarily intrusted with power, but in the light, flippant, vaudeville, ragtime treatment by a part of our public press of the serious efforts of honest men in public office to better conditions; in the blighting want of confidence in public servants, engendered by a certain sort of journalism, which creeps like a pestilence among the people and not only poisons the sources from which patriotic service must be drawn, but atrophies the patriotism that ought to make a man proud to die for his country if need be. [Applause on the Republican side.]

It can not be that the greatest good of the greatest number can be subserved by destroying public confidence in our public men and our public institutions.

While punishment swift and sure should follow every act of official corruption, because it is wrong and because every unpunished act of official corruption lowers the public estimate of the whole service, at the same time the reputation of every honest public servant is part of the assets of the Nation, and generous credit ought to be given to every man who faithfully performs the trust reposed in him.

I want to read you what John Morley said of the English Parliament:

For my part—

He says—

after 25 years of experience my strong impression is that * * * in manly conscientiousness, quick and sure response to high appeal, in public duty and moral feeling, in a strong feeling for fair play—that in these things the House of Commons has not deteriorated, but, on the contrary, has markedly improved.

Mr. Chairman, in my judgment that is true of the American Congress. [Applause.]

If I had my way I would not be anxious for far-flung boundary lines, but I would be anxious to widen the breathing space of American citizenship within our boundary lines—to try to prevent crowding and congestion—to try to get men to come out of crowded cities into the open country—to limit more and more the influx of undesirable immigration—to instill deeper patriotism and greater respect for our institutions, and to try to develop the sentiment of brotherhood among men.

Renan somewhere says:

What welds men into a nation is the memory of great deeds, done in common, and the will to accomplish more.

We have them—we have the memories of great deeds done in common—heroic memories stretching back to "Sea fights and land fights, grim and great, fought to make or save the State," and they are part of the heritage of every child born under the American flag. [Applause.] And we have the will to accomplish more against any foreign foe. But as Lincoln once said, if danger ever comes to us, it can not reach us from abroad. It must rise up from among ourselves.

The question whether government of the people and by the people will be able to continue to govern itself is no longer a far-off question; it is here.

On a lonely monument up in Birmingham churchyard, on the battle field of the Brandywine, there is an inscription taken from an address delivered by Lafayette at the Turks Head Inn, in 1825, which is just as applicable now as it was then:

"May the blood spilled by thousands with equal merit in the cause of independence and freedom be to ensuing generations an eternal pledge of unalloyed republicanism, Federal union, public prosperity, and domestic happiness." [Prolonged applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in nearly 20 years the Democratic Party has control of the House of Representatives, and this Congress has given it the opportunity to show to the people of the country its sincerity and earnestness in carrying out its preelection pledges.

The turning of a majority of 45 in one Congress into a minority of over 60 in the next is a fact of deep political significance. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The results of the election showed that the people of this country were thoroughly aroused. One issue had been growing in their minds with greater and greater distinctness. With each succeeding year the cost of living increased and at a much greater ratio than the returns for labor. As the cost of living grew higher the people became more and more convinced that the exactions of the protective tariff were a predominant factor in producing the results against which they struggled. This feeling naturally resulted in a demand for the lowering of the tariff rates.

Against this demand the leaders of the Republican Party, controlled by the high-protective interests, stubbornly contested. Forced by necessity, however, and coming face to face with the last presidential campaign, they were obliged to yield and insert in their platform, as one of their promises to the people, that there should be a revision of the tariff. Such a revision was said by their candidate for the Presidency and by all the Republican speakers, to mean a revision downward. That the people had confidence in that pledge was shown by the results of the election.

Intrenched once more in power, however, that Republican majority ignored its promises and failed to materially lower the tariff rates. The people were shown conclusively that they could look for no relief from a revision of the tariff by the party of high protection. Stung with a realization of the ineffectiveness of their demand, the voters in the next congressional election turned from this party, which had tricked and betrayed them, and placed in power the Democrats.

That the tariff was the dominant issue in the Democratic success of the State elections for 1910 will be shown by a glance at the State platforms. In five of our leading industrial States, where the Democratic Party incorporated in their platforms vigorous protests against the inconsistencies of the Payne law and insisted on a revision of the tariff downward, Democratic governors were elected to succeed Republicans.

STATE PLATFORMS ON THE TARIFF.

Let me quote briefly from the tariff planks of these five States, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Indiana, and Massachusetts:

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF CONNECTICUT.

We believe that an extension of the free list and a reduction in many of the rates * * * would advance the prosperity of the mass of our people without leading to any injustice to invested capital or any reduction in the wages of employees.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF NEW YORK.

The Payne-Aldrich tariff law * * * was a flagrant breach of faith by the Republican Party. * * * We declare our belief that only by an honest revision of the tariff downward * * * can this excessive cost of living be lessened and the necessaries of life again be brought within reasonable reach of the people of the country.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF NEW JERSEY.

* * * We charge that the Republican Party through the present unfair tariff * * * is largely responsible for the high cost of living now burdening our whole people.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF INDIANA.

We denounce the Payne-Aldrich tariff act as a masterpiece of injustice, involving remorseless exactions from the many to enrich the few.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF MASSACHUSETTS.

We demand the removal of taxes upon foodstuffs and other necessaries of life.

Quotations from other State platforms could be given, but these will suffice to show that the Democratic Party was elected in both Federal and State contests with a definite commission to perform.

With the issue of the tariff thus clearly presented the people in these five States not only elected Democrats for governors in place of Republicans, but sent to the Sixty-second Congress 46 Democratic Representatives where in the previous Congress there had been but 28. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Democratic House of Representatives, to which the constructive work of revising the tariff falls, went to work at the earliest possible moment to carry out its party pledges.

REVENUE DUTIES.

For over a year now I have had the pleasure, as one of the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, of assisting in the preparation of bills which in a straightforward manner meet the party promises and which seek to lower the cost of the necessities of life and place in lieu of a high protective duty afforded to certain favored manufacturers the lowest duties consistent with producing an adequate revenue for our Government.

The difficulties of the situation have been met and the efforts of our committee have given effective expression to the purpose of our party to revise the tariff. That this has been done is in no small part owing to the untiring efforts and conscientious service, as well as to the character and ability of the chairman of our committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. [Applause.] His unfailing tact, judgment, and the constructive leadership of himself and the Speaker of the House, the gentleman from Missouri, have enabled the Democratic Party to-day to point to tariff bills which are genuine revisions downward, and through their guidance the Democratic majority has so conducted itself as to win public confidence and approval. That such confidence will extend to greater responsibilities for the Democratic Party in the future seems assured. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

THE COST OF LIVING.

The ever-increasing cost of living brought home to our people the absolute necessity for calling a halt on the protective exactions of the Republican tariff. The present great advance in prices has been continuous since the year 1896. Bradstreet's Index Number shows an increase, from 1896 to the present date, of a little over 51 per cent in cost, or about 3.2 per cent a year. Even comparing February 1, 1912, with January 1 of the same year, we find that the Index Number works out a rise of a fraction over 1 per cent, though it is a drop of two-tenths of 1 per cent over December, 1911. It is, however, an increase of 2.1 per cent from February 1, 1911. This advance in prices diminishes the power to purchase of every wage earner and renders the struggle to obtain the necessities of life increasingly hard.

The prime necessities of life are food and clothing. In both of these the prices to the consumer has constantly increased, and in each case is fairly representative of the general increase of prices throughout the country at large. The prices of these articles are affected by the tariff rates in several ways. Certain of the products, more particularly clothing, have placed on them high duties, which in many instances give the manufacturers complete control of the American market. The fact that of the entire consumption of clothing in this country only 3 per cent of our woolen clothing and 6 per cent of our cotton clothing is imported shows that the duties on that commodity gave to the domestic manufacturers practically exclusive control of our market. In food products, while many of them are exported, yet those exportations are constantly decreasing in volume. The demand is rapidly overtaking the supply, and it is but a few years before many of them will cease altogether to be exported.

COMMISSION ON COST OF LIVING.

So insistent has become the demand for relief that the President sent a message to Congress on February 2, 1912, and recommended an appropriation to enable him to invite foreign governments to a conference on the subject, with which object I entirely agree. He says, in part, in his message:

For some years past the high and steadily increasing cost of living has been a matter of such grave public concern that I deem it of great public interest that an international conference be held at this time for the purpose of preparing plans to be submitted to the various governments for an international inquiry into the high cost of living, its extent, causes, effects, and possible remedies.

The Democrats took steps to end one of the causes of the increasing cost of living in this country, and had the President seen fit to sign instead of to veto the Democratic tariff bills there would not now be so pressing a need for a commission on this subject. Even a commission on the cost of living composed of protectionists can not justify a tariff on food products.

My own State of Massachusetts appointed a commission on the subject of the high cost of living, and I wish to quote from its report (Mass. House, 1910, Doc. 1750, p. 384):

But the tariff was never meant to apply seriously to the food of the people, save for the development of such industries as the growing of fruit in Florida or beets for sugar in the West. From the first it was designed to create and preserve manufacturing industries. The odium of the corn laws need but be suggested to show how obnoxious would be a serious tax on food. If we have reached the point where it is of real importance to us to have the product of the farms of the North, as well as that of the farms of the West, no tariff hindrance can be endured.

And, again, on page 530:

It is not probable that the removal of the duty on farm products would diminish by a penny the wage rate of farm laborers anywhere in the United States. That rate is determined by the competition of the mill and the attractiveness of the city. * * *

It is not our belief that removal of the tariff on the staple articles of food would speedily and greatly reduce the cost of living. The same causes are making food high in all the civilized world, and the difference between wholesale prices is not enough to warrant the expectation that a policy of what, for brevity's sake, would doubtless be called "free food" could change international transactions greatly and at once. Its importance comes from the fact that we are soon going to buy a material part of our food outside our own limits. It would further have the very beneficial consequence of removing what chance may now exist to "corner" food products—a chance that puts the public at the mercy of the speculator and the trust. To some extent, also, it would lessen our dependence on the seasons and the weather. Bad harvests rarely occur over all the world.

We submit, therefore, that it is a wise, economic policy to give the people free access to those articles of food that call for the bulk of the expenditure of the masses. For purposes of revenue it may be wise to tax somewhat the comforts, and the heaviest duties should be levied on the luxuries, but the food necessities of life should be "free."

In carrying out its pledges to reduce the cost of necessities the Democratic Congress has passed bills which, among other important items, place on the free list the following necessities of life, and I have placed opposite them the taxes which the people now pay as imposed on them in the Payne-Aldrich Act:

Fresh beef, 1½ cents per pound.
Fresh mutton, 1½ cents per pound.
Fresh pork, 1½ cents per pound.
Hams, 4 cents per pound.
Bacons, 4 cents per pound.
Lard and compounds, 1½ cents per pound.
Sausage (except bologna), 25 per cent.
Flour, 25 per cent.
Bread, biscuits, wafers, 20 per cent.
Buckwheat flour, 25 per cent.
Oatmeal, 1 cent per pound.
Salt, 33 to 80 per cent.
Sewing machines, 30 per cent.
Lumber (average on rough and dressed), $2 per thousand feet.

COST OF FOOD.

The United States Commissioner of Labor has compiled a table showing the average cost of the various articles of food consumed by 2,567 average-size families.

Average cost of the various articles of the food consumed in average family of United States.

[Compiled from eighteenth report United States Commissioner of Labor. The statistics are based on returns secured principally in 1901 from 2,567 families of the average size of 5.31 persons.]

Articles.	Unit of measure.	Quantity.	Average cost.	Per cent of total expenditures.
Fresh beef	Pounds	349.7	$50.05	15.31
Salt beef	do	48.6	5.26	1.61
Fresh hog products	do	114.2	14.02	4.29

Vinegar, pickles, and condiments			4.12	1.26
Other food			20.40	6.24
Total			326.90	100.00

MEAT.

From this table it is seen that fresh beef and meat products amount to 28.45 per cent of the total expenditures. Under the present Payne-Aldrich Act these products pay an average duty of 21 per cent. The Democratic bill proposes to place them on the free list.

SUGAR.

In addition to this, the bill recently reported by the Ways and Means Committee and which the House passed two weeks ago by so overwhelming a majority, takes from sugar its present tax and places it on the free list as well.

The following table shows the amount of dutiable and nondutiable sugar consumed for the fiscal years 1889–90, 1907–8, and 1910–11:

Amount, in pounds, of dutiable and nondutiable sugar for fiscal years of 1889–90, 1907–8, and 1910–11.

	1889-90	1907-8	1910-11
Free of tax	552,000,000	3,247,000,000	3,700,000,000
Taxed at reduced rate		2,491,000,000	4,180,000,000
Paying full duty	2,607,000,000	1,045,000,000	263,000,000
Total supply	3,159,000,000	6,783,000,000	8,143,000,000

THE SUGAR DUTY.

It will be seen by this table that in the eighties practically five-sixths of the sugar consumed in this country was imported and paid the full rate of duty. To-day, in contrast, we find that between one-third and one-half of our supply of sugar pays no duty whatsoever, and that a little over one-half pays a duty at a reduced rate—20 per cent off. But one twenty-fifth of the sugar consumed paid the full duty during the last fiscal year.

CHANGE OF CONDITIONS OF SUGAR.

There has been, then, a complete turn within the last 25 years in the amounts of duty-paying and duty-free sugar. It is obvious that if free sugar were desirable under the McKinley tariff law of 1890 we have a very much stronger claim to free sugar to-day.

Let us see what has been the real significance of this change in the relative amount of sugar paying full duty. In brief, this change means that in the eighties practically the whole tax paid by the consumer of sugar went into the United States Treasury, while to-day about one-third of the bonus paid by the consumer for his sugar goes toward making up the Federal income; the balance—that is, the remaining two-thirds—goes into the pocket of the producer. In other words, we are taxed $3 every time we raise $1 of revenue.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. With pleasure.

Mr. BATES. I have not been able to avail myself of the privilege of hearing the entire speech of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I would like to ask, in his opinion, whether the passage of the House bill taking the tariff off sugar will give any benefit whatever to the consumer?

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, I think it will give an enormous benefit to the consumer, and no better evidence or assurance of that could we receive than to say that in the nineties, when we had free sugar under the McKinley bill, there was a fall in price to the consumer almost exactly equal to the tax which that bill took off sugar at the customhouse. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. No. On the other hand, Mr. Chairman, let me further ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, Was that not due to the fact that there were heavier crops those years, and, as a matter of fact, does not the yield of sugar and the manipulation of the sugar producers and the middle men control the price of sugar to the consumer the world round, without reference to the tariffs in this country or any other country?

Mr. PETERS. No better aid could be given to the manipulation of the price of any commodity than to have a tariff put upon that commodity; and if there is manipulation of the price of sugar in the United States by reason of the tariff there is likely to be much less manipulation when sugar is free, for then we can buy it in all the markets of the world, which makes it impossible to corner the local market. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BATES. No. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will further permit me, the price of sugar is fixed, not with relation to the market of the United States, but with relation to the market of the world. For instance, is the gentleman aware that the same grade of coffee which is sold in the United States from Brazil is also sold in Germany, with a tariff paid, at a less price than it is sold here, where coffee is under free trade?

Mr. PETERS. The price will be the result of the supply and demand.

Mr. BATES. I think so.

Mr. PETERS. If we have here a tariff, the imported sugar which we buy in the world's market at Hamburg will come into this country, and the purchaser here will pay the Hamburg price plus the tariff rate which we impose on sugar, plus also the charges for bringing it from Hamburg here; and as long as we have to import part of our sugar, on which we pay full duty, that imported sugar will fix the price of all sugar to the American consumer.

Nothing can show that more conclusively than a study of the table of sugar prices in the nineties. When we had free sugar there was an immediate drop equal to just about the tariff rate which had been taken off that commodity.

Mr. Willett, of Willett & Gray, in his testimony before the Hardwick committee (Hearings, p. 3140) testified that the price of granulated sugar under the protective rates from 1886 to 1889 averaged 6.69 cents per pound, and under the free raw sugar of the McKinley bill, 1891–1893, fell to 4.41 cents per pound.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me to make the suggestion, the difference of the price of sugar in this country and Hamburg market is equal to the difference of the tariff rates at present.

Mr. PETERS. A perfect and complete answer.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, one other suggestion, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will good-naturedly allow me. I have been in grocery stores and seen barrels of sugar unheaded, and the first thing that greets the eye of the grocer and bystander is a placard in red paper with black letters, "This sugar costs so much per pound. If it were not for the tariff levied by the United States Government it could be sold to the consumer at so much per pound"—at less, of course. Now, that placard is put there by the sugar refiners, and that is one additional proof to the statement which has been widely made that this movement to get up blank petitions and send them to people to sign and send to myself and other Members of Congress originated with the sugar refiners, and it has raised a very grave doubt in my mind whether we are not by the proposed legislation taking $53,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States and handing it over as a present to these trusts and monopolies, who fix the price of sugar here and the world around.

Mr. PETERS. Well, if the gentleman will allow me, I am trying to show the effect of this tariff on the consumer, and I hope to relieve the gentleman's mind from that suspicion.

Mr. BATES. I shall be very glad to follow the gentleman further in his argument, and I thank the gentleman for allowing the interruption.

Mr. PETERS. The condition of affairs will be perfectly clear when one realizes that the price of all sugar to the consumer is the same, whether he buys sugar grown and refined in Europe, which sugar pays the full duty of $1.90 per hundredweight, or whether he purchases sugar grown in Cuba and refined in the United States, which pays the regular duty, less 20 per cent, or whether he buys sugar grown in the Philippines or in the Hawaiian Islands or in Porto Rico or in the United States, which pays no duty whatsoever. We all pay the same price at the corner grocery for our sugar, wherever it is grown. The reason for this is that the Hawaiian, the Porto Rican, the Filipino, and the local producer can furnish us with less than one-half the sugar which we need. We therefore go to Cuba, which is in a position, by reason of its 20 per cent reduction in the duty, to send sugar to the United States at a lower price than can European countries, which pay full duty. But after we have purchased all the sugar to be had from the small island of Cuba we are still short and are obliged to draw upon the products of European countries against whose sugar we collect full duty. The producer in the favored islands—Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Cuba—and the domestic producer know that we must purchase a certain amount of sugar elsewhere, on which we have to pay the entire duty. The island and the domestic producer realizes, therefore, that all that they need to do is to offer their sugar at a price just a trifle under the price of sugar abroad, plus the regular rate of duty, and that America, which must have sugar, will take all that they have to offer.

PRICE OF SUGAR.

The price of all our sugars is, therefore, about $1.90 per hundred pounds higher than it would be if all sugar were duty free. The Filipino and the Hawaiian and the Porto Rican producer, who pays no duty, keeps the $1.90 for himself; the Cuban, who pays 80 per cent of the duty, keeps one-fifth of the $1.90 per 100 pounds—all this is paid by the American consumer.

BURDEN OF SUGAR TARIFF OUTWEIGHS ITS BENEFIT.

It will be of interest to examine the following table and see the results of the present tariff on sugar. The table shows the benefit to the Treasury and to the producer and the cost to the consumer. To the domestic producer we pay about $30,000,000 annually, or a bounty of about 2 cents a pound on all the sugar that he raises. To the islander—the Cuban, the Hawaiian, the Filipino, and the Porto Rican—we pay over $50,000,000; or in all we pay about $90,000,000 excess profits to the producer, in order to realize revenue of about half that amount, $52,000,000. Certainly this is too expensive a form of subsidizing the industries of this country and our insular protectorates.

Estimated benefit of tariff duty on sugar to the Treasury and to the producer and the resulting cost to consumer.

1. Benefit to Treasury: Total duty collected on sugar for year of 1910–11		$52,496,000
2. Benefit to producer, distributed as follows:
A. Island producers—
Cuba (20 per cent of $1.90 times 41,800,000 cwt.)	$15,884,000
Hawaii ($1.90 times 10,670,000 cwt.)	20,273,000
Porto Rico ($1.90 times 6,400,000 cwt.)	12,600,000
Philippines ($1.90 times 3,300,000 cwt.)	6,270,000
Total benefit to island producers		$55,027,000
B. Domestic producers—
Beet sugar ($1.90 times 9,790,000 cwt.)	18,601,000
Cane sugar ($1.90 times 6,840,000 cwt.)	13,896,000
Total benefit to domestic producers	32,497,000
Total island and domestic		87,524,000
3. Total cost to consumer		140,020,000

A very conservative estimate of the amount saved to the consumers by this bill would be 1½ cents a pound on the consumption of 7,633,000,000 pounds, or about $115,000,000.

CLOTHING.

Not only by bills reducing the price of food have the pledges to reduce the tariff been carried out, but every attempt has been made to lessen the price of clothing as well. The woolen schedule, Schedule K, has received the most general criticism and condemnation of all the schedules. Woolen clothing enters into the consumption of everyone in this country, and the importance of reducing these articles to the consumer was keenly felt by the committee. The average rate of duty of manufactures of woolens for the last year was 90.12 per cent. The wool bill recommended to this House, which is similar to the bill introduced and passed at the first session of this Congress, proposes to reduce these rates to 42.55 per cent, and effects an average reduction in the entire schedule from 59.23 per cent to 31 per cent. This reduction includes such necessities of life as women's and children's dress goods, the rates on which are lowered from 102.85 per cent to 45 per cent; blankets from 73.42 per cent to 30 per cent; flannels from 103.87 per cent to 30 per cent; and a total average reduction on wearing apparel from 81.31 to 45 per cent.

A revision of the cotton schedule made a reduction scarcely less in importance. The total duties on manufactures of cotton, in Schedule I, were decreased from an average ad valorem rate of 48.12 per cent to a rate of 27.6 per cent.

These bills have been followed by bills revising the chemical schedules, which reduced the average rate of 25.72 per cent on chemicals to 16.66 per cent. Most of the articles in this schedule are not themselves directly used by consumers, but they enter into many of our manufactures, and a tariff on them tends to increase the cost to the consumer.

A bill revising the steel schedule reduces the average rate of duty from 34.51 to 22.42 per cent.

WAGES AND THE TARIFF.

That the tariff itself increases the price to the consumer can not be questioned. The manufacturers, however, endeavor to impress the wage earner that a high tariff means high wages, and that in some way the wages of the operatives depend directly upon the percentage rate of protection that is applied to the industry. I have compiled a table based on the report of the statistics of labor for my own State of Massachusetts for 1908, and have arranged the leading Massachusetts industries, first, by the average yearly wage of the operatives, and then by the average rate of protection which they receive. It will be seen that the average rates of wages bear no relation to the average rate of protection given the industry. Worsteds and woolens, which have the highest protection, 90 per cent, is sixth in the average wage of employees; silk, which is second in the rate of protection accorded it, is eighth in the average return of its employees, and boots and shoes, which item is last in amount of protection, pays third from the highest wage.

This table, of course, does not permit of a positive conclusion. It is presented here simply to show the absolute independence of wages and tariff rate:

Table showing independence of wages paid and protection received.

Leading Massachusetts industries.	Average wage per year.	Number employed.	Present average ad valorem duty.	Same industries arranged in order of protection received.
1. Foundry and machinery	$601	31,112	34 per cent (total iron and steel manufactures)	Worsted and woolen goods, 90 per cent.
2. Chemicals	588	1,047	26 per cent	Silk manufactures, 54 per cent.
3. Boots and shoes	562	69,250	10 per cent	Cotton goods, 48 per cent.
4. Rubber goods	498	5,763	35 per cent (n. s. p. f.)	Rubber goods, 35 per cent.
5. Paper and wood pulp	489	11,390	29 per cent (total manufactures of paper)	Foundry and machinery, 34 per cent.
6. Worsted and woolen goods	450	41,969	90 per cent (average for total manufactures of wool).	Paper and wood pulp, 29 per cent.
7. Cotton goods	439	60,935	48 per cent (average for total manufactures of cotton).	Chemicals, 23 per cent.
8. Silk and silk goods	429	3,235	54 per cent (average for total manufactures of silk).	Boots and shoes, 10 per cent.

VETO OF BILLS.

The Democratic Congress passed the bills I have mentioned and so did its part toward removing the exactions of a high protective tariff. The bills which our committee brought in passed at the first session of the Congress, went through the Senate, and in modified form came to the President for his signature, and were all vetoed on the grounds, substantially, that no report of the Tariff Board had been made on those industries. Rumor gives to their successors, should they reach him, a similar fate. In his veto message of August 17 of the wool bill, the President quoted from his message to Congress on December 7, 1910, as follows:

> I believe that the work of this board will be of prime utility and importance whenever Congress shall deem it wise again to readjust the customs duties. If the facts secured by the Tariff Board are of such a character as to show generally that the rates of duties imposed by the present tariff law are excessive under the principles of protection as described in the platform of the successful party at the late election, I shall not hesitate to invite the attention of Congress to this fact and to the necessity for action predicated thereon.

And later, in the same message, the President said:

> When I have the accurate information which justifies such action, I shall recommend to Congress as great a reduction in Schedule K as the measure of protection, already stated, will permit. The failure of the present bill should not be regarded, therefore, as taking away the only chance for reduction by this Congress.

The majority views of your committee on this attitude were expressed in its report on House bill 11019, in which it said:

> It would be trifling with the people to give further consideration to Republican counsels of more delay in this matter, whether with regard to statistical data concerning cost of production, promised at a future date, or for any further reason.

The report of the Tariff Board on Schedule K was finally made and was sent to the House on December 20, 1911, with a message, in which the President says:

> On the basis of these findings I now recommend that the Congress proceed to a consideration of this schedule with a view to its revision and a general reduction of its rates.

The majority members of the committee took the hope held out by the President on August 17, and despite the difficulty of reconciling the views of protection and of revenue tariffs, made a careful analysis of the Tariff Board's report. As a result of this study the committee again recommends the same bill it passed before, and that bill is now before us for consideration and will undoubtedly again receive the overwhelming indorsement of the House.

THE TARIFF BOARD REPORT.

A study of the report shows the futility of attempting to deduce revenue rates from a report which is based solely on investigations along the line of discovering the difference in the cost of production. The important person in our minds is the consumer, and no information is contained in the report of the Tariff Board as to the cost of an article to the consumer.

The wool report of the Tariff Board was disconcerting to those who have opposed any change in the Payne tariff law. The cotton report, made to this House and now being printed, is even more so. Whatever may be deduced from these reports, they demonstrate the impossibility of arranging a tariff on the basis of the difference in cost of production, the basis set forth in the last Republican platform, and which the protectionists have recently tried to stand on. Weary of the trading of the old tariff system, the Republican Party thought in this new war cry it had secured a fresh prop for the falling fortunes of protection. A single quotation from the cotton report shows the futility of attempting to fix a rate based on this evershifting factor:

Taking all the mills covered by the investigation of each country, there were wider variations in the American costs secured than in the English costs, due partly to the fact that the English mills were all in the Manchester district, where wages and other conditions are well standardized, while the American costs were taken from mills covering a much wider area, with much greater differences of labor and other conditions. Another reason for the wider variations in American costs is that the English mills for which figures were secured are of a modern and efficient type, while some of the American mills included were old and of low efficiency.

The inclusion of some American mills that were "old and of low efficiency" certainly may explain the "wider variation in American costs" and is no doubt an interesting matter of statistical fact. It also shows conclusively the utter impossibility of deciding on what we shall take as the American standard for cost. How much are we to-day paying to support concerns in all directions that need the tariff tax on the people to keep them going? This very report shows that in the cotton industry in many instances the American labor cost per unit of product is less than the foreign in spite of our higher wages. This is owing to the superior efficiency of American labor and organization. It also shows that the incomparable low wages of the Japanese workmen, on account of their lack of effectiveness, produces a labor cost only slightly lower than ours.

Why should the people of this country, by levying a protective tax sufficient to protect the inefficient and poorly equipped factories, lose the full benefit of superior efficiency where it exists? We must also remember that the wage to the American workman has far less purchasing power than that of his English or Japanese competitor. He has to purchase in a market in which the prices are artificially raised by the tariff barriers, which take from one of his pockets far more than they put into the other.

CONCLUSION.

Mr. Speaker, in the election of the last Congress the people of this country demanded in no unmistaken terms a downward revision of the tariff. Such a revision has been accomplished, so far as the action of their Representatives in this House is concerned. That such a revision is not complete and that the people still have placed on them the exorbitant protective rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill is owing to the veto of the Executive. In the hands of the Republican Senate and Republican President rests the responsibility for failure to enact into law the people's wishes.

No more clear issue could be presented to the people of this country than the Payne-Aldrich bill, drawn on the principles of protection, and the bills offered by Mr. UNDERWOOD, which are drawn on the principles of revenue and in the interests of the consumer. The people have repudiated the principles of Republican protectionism, have elected a Democratic House of Representatives, and now await the moment when they may elect a Democratic President. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has consumed 45 minutes. The Chair desires to call to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts the fact that under the plan we are proceeding he can not yield back any time. There is no one to yield time to, but the gentleman can simply abandon it; or if some one else on his side desires to use that 15 minutes, he can do so.

Mr. PETERS. I reserve the balance of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RUSSELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the Librarian of Congress to furnish a copy of the daily and bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendment, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 1. An act granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to my colleague [Mr. SWITZER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for one hour, and he yields three minutes to his colleague [Mr. SWITZER].

THE RAW-WOOL PRODUCT OF OUR COUNTRY—THE FARMERS' FINISHED PRODUCT.

Mr. SWITZER. Mr. Chairman, the Tariff Board report discloses that it costs more to grow wool in the United States than in any foreign country, and that it costs more to produce wool in the State of Ohio and the contiguous territory than it does anywhere else on earth. But while that is true, we would have you recollect that we produce the best wool on earth. We not only produce the best material out of which to make the clothing for the people of this Nation, but we produce the best material to make rulers for the Nation, and our last product, our last addition to the long line of Presidents of this Nation is the best. There are a great many people of this country who are coming to the conclusion that President Taft is hard to beat. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, I shall address my remarks chiefly to that part of the proposed legislation under consideration which bears directly on the raw-wool product of this country—the farmers' finished product.

This is a matter of the utmost importance to the people of my State, and especially so to a considerable portion of the agricultural class of my district.

It is important to the nearly 5,000,000 people of Ohio for the reason that any material depression of one of our leading industries or its extinction not only directly affects those engaged in the industry so depressed or annihilated, but its far-reaching and disastrous consequences are noticeably felt by all other classes of our citizens.

And I assume that what is true respecting the sheep-raising industry of Ohio is equally true respecting this great industry in nearly all of our Northern and Western States, as well as several of those of the Southland.

My observation during my short experience as a legislator leads me to believe that articles are placed on the free list of our tariff law solely by the grace of arbitrary, despotic force. Certainly no person can successfully contend that the proposed addition of sugar to the free list of our tariff law is the logical sequence of any well-considered revenue policy.

On the other hand, no so-called tariff-for-revenue measure has ever been proposed, to my knowledge, but what has always contained manifest discriminations in its proposed tariff rates. Along with all such measures there is usually to be found much protection lurking, accidentally or incidentally, within its innocent-looking folds.

And, upon the whole, I have failed to find any improvement in this respect in the proposed revision of the tariff on the part of our Democratic friends by the piecemeal plan.

During the first session of this Congress, on the floor of this Chamber, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCHENRY] stated:

We have heard much argument about this school and that school of the tariff, about this fundamental principle and that fundamental principle, but the only school we recognize or the only principle we will adhere to will be that principle which works for the good of the great mass of the people of the United States.

As this statement met with universal applause on the majority side of this body, I take it to be an ideal exposition of the present-day Democratic position on the tariff question. It is undoubtedly exceedingly illuminating. It assumes that Democracy is endowed with that peculiar foresight which enables it to readily discern just what will work for the future good of the masses of our people.

But of this assumption I am somewhat skeptical. I would like for some one, after taking a retrospective view of the sheep industry of this country, to demonstrate just in what way free wool worked for the good of the masses of our people under the Wilson-Gorman law. And if it failed to work for the good of the masses then, what assurance have we but that it would be a failure now?

What assurance have we that if the known protective duty on raw wool be removed and a measly tariff-for-revenue only be substituted therefor but that the consequences will be as disastrous as in 1896? None whatever but the assurance of that party which wrecked the country and finally itself in 1896.

Democracy scattered the shepherds' flocks to the uttermost parts of the earth under the Wilson-Gorman law; and now, after 16 long years, you have mustered up sufficient courage to again face this rehabilitated fold; but you come up to the scratch with much fear and trembling.

There have been rumblings of party discord concerning the advisability of again laying violent hands upon the frolicsome animal that proved such a boomerang to your party in 1896. To many of your old "war horses" throughout the Central and Western States "free wool" revives unpleasant recollections of a disastrous political past and chills the very marrow in their bones.

And as a result of your internal strife and nervous fright you have again reported a bill which not only rings the death knell of the sheep industry of this country, if enacted into law, but takes down with it the textile woolen industry, employing 168,239 persons and paying an annual wage of $79,214,000.

During the debate on the reciprocity and free-list measures at the first session it was frequently asserted by gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber that the American farmer had to sell his products in the free-trade markets of the world and that he was compelled to purchase his farm implements and machinery and practically all his necessities other than those produced by himself in a highly protected market.

This was reiterated so often and with such vehemence as to give it the impress of absolute sincerity, and it was one of the chief reasons given for urging the passage of the free-list bill.

Now, I desire to call the attention of my "tariff-for-revenue" friends to the fact that the wool product of the American farmer is not sold in the free-trade markets of the world, but, on the contrary, practically every pound of it is sold in our home-protected wool market.

The sheep-raising industry is a very peculiar industry; so much so that in my opinion it stands in a class to itself. And it seems to have strongly appealed to your notion of incidental protective relief. And while you profess to levy a tariff for revenue to meet the alleged extravagant expenditures of the party in power during the past 14 years, you are praying long and hard that some calamity may overtake the foreign sheep raiser, or something may happen which will enable you to demonstrate to the American woolgrower that your strictly revenue duty on imported raw wool has afforded him full and adequate protection.

Wool is unlike wheat or some agricultural product which we produce in much larger quantities than necessary to amply supply our needs and demands.

While we can and do produce wool, yet we produce only about two-thirds of the quantity our factories consume.

So it must be apparent to every fair-minded person that this important product of the farm is necessarily sold in our American-protected wool market.

If I am correctly informed, our factories consume about 500,000,000 pounds of wool annually, and we produce somewhere in the neighborhood of 300,000,000 pounds. We therefore not only consume the whole of our own production but an additional 200,000,000 pounds of imported wool, upon which we derive an annual revenue of about $20,000,000—a large sum, and which will be much needed should the majority side of this body succeed in having enacted into law their proposed free sugar and similar bills.

As I understand it, it is proposed to divert from a protected market to a free-trade market the wool product of the farmer, having an annual value of upward of $60,000,000, and the American farmer and sheep raiser who has his all invested in this great industry will not only be driven to the wall, his property confiscated, and an important industry destroyed, but he and his thousands and thousands of employees will be driven into other overcrowded fields of labor and compelled to embark in other overcrowded business enterprises and thereby make competition the more strenuous where it is not needed, to the great detriment of the masses of our people. The proposed bill spells ruination to the American woolgrower for the reason that all experience conclusively shows that this industry can not thrive in this country without adequate protection.

Certainly there has been no demand made on Congress by our woolgrowers, or any noticeable part of them, to have this product exposed to the tender mercies of a free-trade wool market.

It is an industry that should not only be fostered and encouraged but built up to such an extent as to make us independent of all other nations of the earth.

It was asserted by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] in a speech on the free-list bill during the special session that the true foundation of protection, as enunciated by the fathers who inaugurated the protective policies in this country, can be expressed in few and simple words, "Protection to infant industries."

And, as I understand it, he favors a protective policy of this kind. And further along in his speech he expressed his sentiments on the question of protection in the following words, to wit:

> Protect a legitimate industry up to a point where the industry fills the home market, but at that point protection should end. There might be an exception in the case of a product necessary to make our country independent of the rest of the world, for which we have not the natural conditions for competition, where protection would have to be permanent, but this would apply to few, if any, of our great industries.

Applying the foregoing principles, there should be a protective duty on wool for at least two reasons:

First. Our wool product is yet insufficient to supply or fill our home market.

Second. A product, like wool, which furnishes material for the clothing of the Nation, is certainly of sufficient importance as to require its development and production to such an extent as to make us independent of the rest of the world. And as our competitors in the production of raw wool enjoy to a high degree more favorable natural conditions for its production, it is clear that in order to be independent of the world there must be a permanent protection afforded our domestic woolgrowers.

It has been claimed by many Democrats for years that the tariff levied on farm products under the Dingley law and the Payne law did not afford any protection to the product claimed to be protected by the framers of the bills.

Granted for the purpose of argument that in many instances no protection was thereby afforded, yet it is clear and indisputable that the present and past tariffs on wool have afforded protection to this product. Now, what reasonable excuse can be given for removing it?

Certainly it can not be on the theory that the American farmer is selling wool too high, for the price of domestic wool was lower last year than it has been for years.

The average cost of producing a pound of fine wool in the Ohio region is 19 cents, and the average cost per pound to produce fine wool throughout the United States is 12 cents.

Similar wools can be produced in South America at a cost of 4 to 5 cents per pound, and in Australasia at a much lower cost. As the average cost per pound of producing wool of all grades and varieties throughout the United States is 9½ cents per pound, there can be no question as to the ultimate result if this product is admitted from foreign countries duty free, or if the domestic industry is not sufficiently protected.

As illustrative of the accuracy of the Tariff Board report as to the cost of producing Ohio wool I desire to submit a letter, written me by a sheep raiser of long experience, Mr. F. H. Parker, of Rutland, Ohio, bearing date of June 12, 1911:

Hon. R. M. SWITZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I take pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, soliciting information in regard to the "cost of raising sheep and cost of production of wool," and of submitting the following estimate in reply. I beg leave to offer my own flock of 145 head of sheep as an example, four months of feeding from December 1 to April 1, and eight months of pasture, allowing during the feeding season 1⅔ pounds of hay and ½ pound of grain per head per diem:

To hay 4 months, at 50 pounds each per month, 29,000 pounds, at 50 cents per hundredweight	$145.00
To grain 4 months, at 15 pounds each per month, 8,700 pounds, at 1 cent per pound	87.00
To pasture 8 months, at 10 cents each per month	116.00
To tagging and shearing, at 8 cents per head	11.60
To hired hands—feeding, housing, and care, 4 months	40.00
Total	399.60
By 1,160 pounds unwashed wool, at 25 cents per pound	290.00
By 30 head lambs or mature sheep sold	100.00
By 10 tons of manure, at 90 cents per ton	9.00
	399.00

In northern Ohio, I think, one month more of feeding, less one month of pasture, should be added.

In this account no estimate has been made of loss occasioned by death of sheep by accident, old age, or disease, nor of time and expense involved in the treatment of sick ones, nor of time lost on chasing after the predatory dog.

Where, pray tell, is the owner's salary to come from, and the taxes, repairs, and interest on the investment?

In my opinion, any such reduction in duty as contemplated in the report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives would be ruinous to the woolgrowing industry, as was the case during the early nineties under the administration of the Wilson bill.

Respectfully,

F. H. PARKER.

This letter shows it costs 25 cents per pound to produce raw wool in Ohio, and upon this proposition Mr. Parker is corroborated by half a dozen large woolgrowers of his county, whose letters I have in my possession. Mr. Parker's computation includes an item of $40 for labor in feeding, housing, and caring for his flock of 145 sheep; and his item for grain consumed is based on the market price, while the estimate of the Tariff Board is based on the actual cost of producing the grain fed. The board offsets the cost of labor in caring for the flock by the benefits derived from the sheep keeping the farm clear of weeds and the fertilizing value of the flock.

So, deducting the cost of labor and putting the grain item in Mr. Parker's estimate at the cost of production, it will show a cost of about 19 cents per pound to produce his wool. Therefore it is very evident to me that the Tariff Board, in its estimate, has resolved all doubts against the woolgrower and have followed those methods which show the lowest cost per pound possible to produce wool, and that their results are exceedingly accurate. The Tariff Board report is based chiefly on conditions existing in 1909 and 1910. The sheep industry suffered a great depression during the past year; and as a large portion of last year's clip sold from 16 cents to 20 cents per pound, and as sheep and lambs also depreciated in value, those engaged in the industry in Ohio—or, at least, nine-tenths of them—lost money during the past year; and, generally, throughout the country woolgrowers suffered severe losses.

The Tariff Board report shows that the Ohio farmer, or woolgrower, made a profit of 45 cents to 55 cents on all the wool used in making a suit of clothes in 1910; certainly no consumer of woolen cloth will contend that this is an unreasonable or exorbitant profit; but as the Ohio farmer or woolgrower during the past year furnished the wool for a suit of clothes at about cost—in other words, donated his profits, his compensation for his labor, and capital employed in the industry—I fail to see any valid complaint that the ultimate consumer can lodge against the farmer; and it is not just for our Democratic friends to now impose on the past year's liberality of our woolgrowers by insisting that they make further donations on their part or surrender their industry as a sacrifice to the fallacious doctrine of free trade.

It is apparent from the Tariff Board wool report that American raw wool has not been receiving the full protection intended by the framers of the existing tariff law, for the reason that the rates of duty on imported wool are based on a fallacious assumption, and it has been easy for importers of foreign wool to circumvent the law, and by a scheme of "skirting" wool they have been able to greatly increase the advantages in their favor, arising from the unequal shrinkage of home and foreign wool. The report discloses that our rates of duty on imported wool are based on the assumption that all wool will shrink 66⅔ per cent, when, in fact, Ohio and other fine domestic wools shrink 60 per cent, and the shrinkage of the lower grades of the domestic wools of our country is about 45 per cent. The national average shrinkage is between 55 and 60 per cent. South American crossbred wools now being imported shrink an average of 33⅓ per cent, and Australian crossbreds about 30 per cent.

So on account of the difference in its component parts and by removing from the fleeces the stained or inferior locks, such as grow on the belly, legs, and necks of the sheep (skirting), the importer, under a decision that such a trimmed fleece is not sorted wool, has been able to bring into this country upon payment of the duty of 11 cents per pound (on unwashed wool) an immense quantity of wool, a pound of which will produce as much cloth as 1½ to 2 pounds of our domestic wool, and some of it yielding as much pure wool per pound as 2½ pounds of our domestic clip. So that our duty of 11 cents likely affords a protection to the American woolgrower of only 7 or 8 cents per pound on a large part of his product.

The pending bill proposes an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent on practically all imported wools. During the past year, if this could have been honestly administered, it would have been equal to a specific duty of 4 to 5 cents per pound on imported wool in the grease.

But on account of its susceptibility to fraudulent invoices on the part of importers the apparent equivalent specific duties would be much less than 4 or 5 cents per pound.

These proposed duties do not begin to equal the difference in the cost of producing domestic and foreign wool, and can not by any stretch of the imagination be shown to afford any protection whatever to the domestic woolgrower.

An ad valorem duty on imported wool is also subject to another criticism, viz, that it will produce the largest amount of duty and afford the most protection when prices of wools are exceedingly high, and at such times our woolgrowers need less protection than when prices of wool are low.

Our consumers of raw wools would be compelled to pay larger amounts of duties on imported wool when it is most needed by them and at a time they can least afford it.

So the tendency of an ad valorem duty on wool is to work hardships on both consumer and producer when there is a scarcity of the domestic product and prices thereby high; and it will give the woolgrowers less protection when the domestic product is plentiful and prices low, at a time he needs the highest protection.

In order to avoid the inequities arising in the administration of the present tariff act, the Tariff Board, after a long and thorough investigation of the wool question and woolen duties, point out the probable failure of an ad valorem duty to give an adequate and equitable protection to our woolgrowers, and recommend that a specific duty based on scoured wool, or clean contents, be levied on all wool imported in the grease, as will appear on pages 396, 397, and 398 of its report, to wit:

A SPECIFIC DUTY ON THE SCOURED CONTENT.

A third method of remedying the unequal working of the present law lies in substituting for the specific duty on the grease pound a specific duty on the scoured content of wool. Such a duty would rest upon the material as it actually stands available for the use of the manufacturer, and would not involve the taxation of the great quantity of grease and impurities that raw wool contains. Furthermore, it would admit on equal terms wools of light and of heavy shrinkage, which our present method fails to do.

The proposal to levy a duty on the scoured pound of wool implies that it is possible to select samples that are fairly representative of a consignment of wool, and to ascertain the clean content of the consignment by scouring and conditioning such samples. It also implies the establishment of conditioning houses to be maintained by the Government at leading ports of entry. The Tariff Board has carefully investigated this matter and, with the aid of the Bureau of Standards, has reached the conclusion that it is not only possible, but it is relatively a simple matter to test wool by sample at the time of importation. It has also ascertained that the machinery required for scouring and conditioning wool in small lots is inexpensive and could be promptly installed, and the cost of operation would be light. If Congress should deem it wise to adopt this method of collecting duties upon raw wool, it would seem that the details necessary for its prompt, efficient, and economical administration may safely be left to the proper administrative officers of the Government.

In this connection the following table of equivalents becomes of value and interest. It shows for wools of different shrinkage the equivalent duty on the grease pound after applying certain specific duties on the scoured content:

Specific scoured pound rates, with grease pound equivalents, on wools of various shrinkages.

Objection is made to a flat rate upon the scoured pound on the ground that it would not be fair to subject wools of varying value to a uniform rate of duty. It must be conceded that there is some reason in this, but in any event it would give access to all fine, heavy fleeces on equal terms with the lighter-conditioned wools, thus meeting one great objection to the existing law. So far as the low-priced product of the skirting and sorting processes, warehouse sweepings, etc., are concerned, it may be said that their value would probably rise under the stimulus of American competition to a point where the imposition of a flat rate would not place the importer at such disadvantage as might at first appear. It appears that this cheap wool does not reach London in the grease in any quantity. The records of the year ending November 1, 1911, at that point show that out of 960,750 bales sold only 1,603 bales brought less than 8 cents per pound in the grease. There were during that period record of but 13 bales sold in London for as low a price as 2 cents per pound. * * *

* * * * * * *

In this connection it should also be added that a considerable quantity of merino wool appears in London for sale in a scoured condition. Such wool universally represents the heavy shrinkage wools of Australia, New Zealand, and British South Africa, which, were they to reach London in their natural condition, would have paid so heavily in freight on the grease and dirt contained as to have lessened materially the return to the growers. To offset this, scouring stations have been established in those sections where the heavy-shrink wools are reduced to a scoured condition and freight paid only on the clean wool therein contained, thus netting the grower a more remunerative price than if shipped to market as shorn from the sheep. The presence of this large quantity of scoured wool in London eliminates a certain amount of wool which would raise to a higher figure the average shrinkage of wools as offered from the above-named countries if they appeared in these public auctions in their original condition. The present duty on scoured wool of 33 cents per pound is prohibitive, because so greatly in excess of the duty on the grease pound. If all wool were imported on the basis of clean content, the above-mentioned scoured wools would probably become available to the manufacturer of woolens.

It is true that the refuse of over 325,000,000 pounds of domestic wool is already available at very low prices, as well as the entire spring and fall clips of short Texas and California. This, however, does not alter the fact that the present duty excludes the scoured "off sorts" of the foreign-grown clips.

The fixed charges on importation that rest upon weight alone, as against value, such as freight, cartage, etc., aggregate quite an appreciable amount, and this in any case operates to put more or less of a premium on lighter shrinking wools.

A full consideration of the above facts would seem to indicate that some method of assessing a specific rate on the clean content would remedy most of the primary faults of Schedule K; that it would best safeguard the important revenues derived by the Government from wool duties; that it would insure greater stability in the industries directly concerned than any other system.

Refusing to see the light shed by this voluminous report and absolutely ignoring the board's recommendations, the majority side of this body have reported the pending bill, providing an extremely low ad valorem duty on imported raw wool; and the minority side, heeding the mature judgment and wise suggestions resulting from a nonpartisan investigation, have reported a bill in conformity to the basic principles suggested by the Tariff Board, which will be offered as a substitute to the pending nonprotective measure.

This bill divides all imported wool into two classes and levies a duty of 18 cents per pound on the clean content of all wool imported in the grease under class 1, and a duty of 19 cents per pound on imported scoured wool.

The duties on wools included in class 2, chiefly the coarser and lower grades, if imported in their natural condition, shall be 7 cents per pound, and if scoured, 19 cents per pound, excepting certain wools used in the manufacture of carpets, which are admitted duty free.

Class 1 of this bill embraces practically all wools included in classes 1 and 2 of the existing tariff act; and by referring to the foregoing table of rates of scoured duties and their equivalents in grease wool of different shrinkages, worked out by the Tariff Board, one can readily see that a duty of 18 cents per pound (scoured) on clean content of grease wool will be the equivalent of 7½ cents per pound on imported wool shrinking 60 per cent, 8 7/10 cents on wool shrinking 55 per cent, 9 cents on wool shrinking 50 per cent, 9 9/10 cents on wool shrinking 45 per cent, 10⅝ cents on wool shrinking 40 per cent, and 11 7/10 cents on wool shrinking 35 per cent.

The 20 cents duty scoured-pound column shows that wool shrinking 45 per cent would be dutiable at 11 cents per greased pound, and in my opinion a duty of 20 cents per pound should be levied on the clean content of wool imported under class 1, to give to the American woolgrower the full measure of protection due him, as shown by the Tariff Board report; but as this report discloses that wools of this class now imported, and which come into strong competition with our domestic wools of similar fineness, have a much less shrinkage than our wools; and that the larger portion of such imported wools have a shrinkage of less than 40 per cent, while similar domestic wools shrink 45 per cent and more, it may be fairly contended that 18 cents per pound on the clean content of wool imported in the grease gives to the domestic woolgrower a more equitable and actual protection than he enjoys under the existing tariff law, although the duties now in force, as provided by Schedule K, on the whole are reduced 40 per cent.

The Tariff Board report shows that it costs more to produce the fine Ohio wools in Ohio and contiguous territory than anywhere else on earth, and that it is the best wool produced. But in South America wools approaching the Ohio wools in quality and equally as fine as much of the Ohio wool, can be produced at a cost of 4 or 5 cents per pound; and on account of favorable climatic conditions, an abundance of natural forage, cheap labor, and no housing, and a profitable return from mutton produced, it practically costs nothing to produce wool in Australia.

The average total annual receipts from all sources of our western flocks is $2.56 per head. It is estimated that the corresponding figure for Australia would normally be about $2.23 and for South America about $2.12.

While the annual operating cost per head in our Western States is estimated at approximately $2.11, in Australia it is $0.93, and in South America $1.15 per head. The cost of operation in Australia is less than half of what it is in the United States, and in South America but little more than half of what it is here.

Where sheep can be kept and clipped at a yearly expense of 93 cents per head it can be readily seen that a moderate return for the mutton yearly produced will pay all operating expenses and that the wool clip costs but little or nothing. So the proposed chopping of our import duty on raw wool in two by the decree of the Democratic House caucus would let the lifeblood out of the sheep-raising industry of the United States and necessarily result in its utter destruction.

Believing in the Republican principle of protection and that it is impossible for our domestic sheep-raising and woolen industries to thrive or even exist without adequate protection, I shall vote against the pending measure and support the Republican substitute therefor, which I believe to be in the interest of the woolgrowers and farmers, sheep herders and farm laborers, and which will enable the textile woolen industries of our country to continue in operation, giving employment to several hundred thousands of mill hands in our woolen factories, and thereby assist in building up and maintaining our greatly diversified industries, so necessary for the thrift and prosperity of the whole people.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it becomes more increasingly difficult day by day to take seriously the various tariff bills brought in by the majority, and the bill that we have before us now caps the climax. If it were not for the fact that we upon this side of the House have introduced a bill to revise and reduce the duties in Schedule K as a substitute for this, it would be a mere wanton waste of time even to debate it. As a revision of the woolen schedule, designed to be ultimately enacted into law, this Underwood wool bill is not to be taken seriously. It is the same bill precisely that passed this House last summer, was amended in the Senate, went to conference, where the duties were increased nearly 40 per cent, finally reached the White House, and was vetoed by the President. Does anyone contend that this bill would meet with any other fate? Does anyone contend that it has the remotest chance of becoming a law? Even if it were possible to secure its passage in another body, amended as it was last year, is there anyone so blindly sanguine as to believe that the President of the United States would reverse his position, and particularly when subsequent developments have proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that he was right then?

When the American people shall have repudiated the principle of protection, when the foes of protection shall occupy the seats of the mighty in the United States Senate, when a Democrat shall assume the reins of government in the White House, then, and not until then, can such a bill as this become a law, and we hope, for the sake of the happiness and prosperity of the people of America, that that day is in the dim and nebulous future. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Why, then, are we confronted with this same old proposition? Why has the "cat come back"? I do not assume to speak by the card, but I think I can guess. It was because the proponents of this bill were afraid to submit it again to the tender mercies of the Democratic caucus. It was because they feared to again run the gauntlet of the supporters of free wool. It was because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] hoped to be able to save some portions of his face, so badly damaged by free sugar last week. There is a reason, Mr. Chairman, and the reason is that with the successful advocates of free sugar beckoning them to advance the Democratic caucus, beyond the shadow of a doubt, would have made raw wool free as the air.

And why not, Mr. Chairman, from their point of view? Is there a single argument that can be offered for free sugar that can not be offered with even greater force for free wool? If it is unjustifiable to leave any duty upon an article which flavors some of the things the people eat and some of the things they drink, is there any justification for imposing a duty upon the clothes they wear? If, as the gentleman from Alabama says, we may not tax a man's belly, by what conceivable mental process can we reconcile our consciences to tax his back and legs? [Applause on the Republican side.]

I commend to your consideration the humble truths enunciated in this classic verse:

> You may live without poetry, music, or art;
> You may live without conscience, you may live without heart;
> You may live without kin—cousins, uncles, or aunts—
> But civilized man can not live without pants.

[Laughter.]

After voting, as you did the other day, for free sugar, it no longer lies in the mouth of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] or anyone else to say that the revenue from raw wool is necessary. You sacrificed three times as much revenue when you put sugar on the free list as you expect to retain by this bill. You disregard the example of every civilized nation of the world. No nation but this, excepting only Russia, imposes any duty upon raw wool. Every nation in the world imposes a tax on sugar. In the economic policy of the rest of the world sugar has always been considered a legitimate source of revenue; but wool, except in one case, has never been so regarded.

You are pursuing, gentlemen, a policy that you can not justify even by your own arguments. Only the other day you blithesomely threw away $60,000,000 of the annual revenues of this Government, and here you cling like grim death to a paltry $20,000,000 or so. You offer the consumer a gift with one hand and you take a part of it back with the other.

From our standpoint the revenue derived from imports of wool is purely a secondary consideration. The reason we impose a duty on wool is because we think that sheep ought to be raised in this country. We know that without a duty, or with an insufficient duty, the sheep industry would vanish from American soil, and whatever benefit might come to the American consumer by reason of a reduction in the price of clothes—assuming that any reduction in fact came—would be far more than offset by the irreparable damage that would result to the farming interests of the country.

We do not believe in legislating for the city man alone. We believe that the man who tills the soil, who raises agricultural products and cattle and sheep is entitled to at least as much consideration at our hands as is the city man.

Three months ago the President of the United States transmitted to this body a report from the Tariff Board on the wool and woolen industries. So singularly thorough is this report, so complete, scientific, accurate, and exhaustive that thoughtful men in this country have admitted it to be the most valuable collection of data relating to a great industry that has ever before been gathered together in any country. And this is true not only in this country. I quote a few words from a letter written to a friend of mine on this subject. The writer of this letter is Dr. Richard Schüler, of Vienna. He is one of the three experts in the Austrian Ministry of Commerce. His work for the last 20 years has been in making industrial investigations as a basis for tariff legislation, and it was upon these investigations that the last two revisions of the Austrian tariff were made. He says:

It—

That is, the wool report—

is an excellent standard work. The Tariff Board has come within a very short time to the head of the similar boards established in other countries. It is really true that no legislative body has ever had presented to it a better report on a tariff question. It will also be entirely impossible not to take your results in mind in proceeding to a revision of the tariff. It were a great mistake to stop the work of the board, and it would soon be necessary to reestablish it.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

I would rather take the testimony of this distinguished tariff expert than that of some of the alleged tariff experts whom we have heard in the last day or so decrying the work of the Tariff Board. But it is for that very reason, Mr. Chairman, it is for the very reason of the excellence of this report, that it has brought no joy to the hearts of the Democratic leaders.

The bitterness of their humiliation crops out in every line of the report they have submitted to us, and it cropped out yesterday in the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I regret to say that, in my opinion, the gentleman from Alabama did not quite live up to his reputation for fairness and accuracy of statement in that speech.

This report was a crushing blow to the Democracy, for it completely disproved almost everything that they said last summer, and wholly overthrew many of their most cherished theories of tariff making. The Tariff Board is to-day the bugbear of the Democratic Party. No lovesick swain ever courted his inamorata more ardently than have Democratic leaders courted the Tariff Board—at times. No maiden was ever more ruthlessly deserted by her lover than has been the Tariff Board by these same Democratic leaders at other times. "He loves me, he loves me not; he loves me, he loves me not," the maiden for centuries has said as she plucked out the petals of her daisy.

And it seems to me that that old refrain about suits the love affair between the Democratic Party and the Tariff Board. At the present writing it is a case of "he loves me not," and the reason is not far to seek. It is because the report of the Tariff Board has "put it all over" the Democratic wool bill, and they know it. It has not left them a leg to stand on.

This report proves beyond all question of doubt three important things:

First. That it costs very much more to grow wool in this country than it does in any other country.

Second. That the cost of manufacturing wool, not only so far as material and wages are concerned, but in actual cost of labor, is far greater in this country than in any competing country.

Third. That the price of clothing to the American consumer is not increased by anything like the full amount of the duties of the present law upon wool and woolens.

As to the first proposition, this report shows conclusively that a tariff of 20 per cent comes nowhere near equaling the difference between what it costs to produce wool in this country and wool in any other country whose wool clip competes with ours. It shows that a duty of 20 per cent would be as disastrous to the sheep-raising industry of this country as no duty at all.

With regard to manufactures of wool, the report shows that we are at a disadvantage as compared with every country with which we compete. The cost of our plants is greater. We have to import most of our machinery. Our wages average twice as high and the actual efficiency of our labor is less.

The third proposition, that only a small portion of the duty is added to the consumer's price, is the most damaging blow that antiprotectionists have received in years. They have been going about proclaiming from the housetops that every man in this country who wears a suit of clothes has been taxed by at least the amount of the duties imposed in the wool schedule. But this report shows, and proves beyond question of doubt by actual samples of goods produced here and abroad, that the duty is not by any means added to the price the American consumer pays for clothes, but on the contrary, that competition has kept the price down so that the American consumer pays little more than the foreign consumer pays for precisely the same thing in his own country.

Mr. HILL. And the actual samples are in the possession of the Ways and Means Committee—the samples of cloth, with the figures on them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I have no doubt of that; but if we are to judge by the report of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means the fact seems plain that none of them have had the time, or at least the inclination, even to read the report of the Tariff Board. I am forced, then, to assume that they have not had time to examine those samples.

Mr. MONDELL. Have they read their own report?

Mr. LONGWORTH. As the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] suggests, it seems very possible that they have not even read their own report. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me to interrupt him, I would say to him that no one of the 14 gentlemen whose names are appended to that report had anything at all to do with the writing of it. It was written by a newspaper correspondent of the New York Journal of Commerce, who enjoys the title of professor of political economy in Georgetown University, and I doubt whether any one of the 14 Democratic gentlemen of that committee have read it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. None of them have said that they have read it, and the speeches we have heard would not serve as an indication that they have received any information from any source whatever, even from the report kindly written for them by the individual referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Thus the whole Democratic theory that the tariff on a competitive article is a tax which is paid in full by the American consumer falls crumbling to the ground. No wonder the report of the Tariff Board displeases the majority. It has effectually undermined the entire structure of their policy of tariff making.

The bill which the majority offer to revise the wool schedule and the bill which we of the minority offer for the same purpose are perfect examples of the relative positions of the two parties to-day upon the tariff. By your bill you repudiate the Tariff Board; by our bill we indorse it. In your bill you disregard all of its findings; our bill is made in exact accordance with its findings. Furthermore, we submit to the American people that the report of the Tariff Board on the wool schedule has completely justified the necessity for its continued existence. [Applause on the Republican side.] We think that no more reactionary step could be taken at this time than to abolish the Tariff Board [applause on the Republican side]; that no more reactionary step could be taken than to cut off the appropriation that is necessary to enable it to carry out its functions.

We go further than that. We believe that true progress demands the creation of a permanent tariff board or commission or whatever you may choose to call it. [Applause on the Republican side]. A board nonpartisan in character, removed as far as possible from the domain of active politics, which shall investigate every schedule from A to N of the tariff in the same thorough way that the present board has investigated Schedule K, and report to Congress its findings.

The proposition contained in several bills introduced by gentlemen on the other side of the House that such a board shall be appointed by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee is a mere sham and a begging of the question. We believe that a tariff commission ought to rank in dignity and importance with any commission in the land. To make it a mere tool of the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee would be to utterly destroy its real usefulness to the American people. We demand that members of the Tariff Board shall be appointed by the President of the United States, so that its findings may be removed as far as possible from any suspicion of political bias and can be accepted as facts by the American people.

The avowed object of this Democratic wool bill is to surrender the American market both for wool and woolens to the foreign producer.

The object of our bill is to retain the American market for the American producer.

Our bill is designed to bring prosperity to the American manufacturer, the American workingman, and the American farmer.

Your bill is designed to bring prosperity to the European manufacturer, the European workman, and the farmer in South America and Australia. Both bills substantially reduce the duties in Schedule K. The Democratic bill, in some respects, reduces the duties more than our bill, but, on the other hand, our bill reduces some of the duties more than does the Democratic bill. They are both downward revisions of Schedule K. But there is one substantial difference between the two bills, and that is that the Democratic bill retains all the old concealed duties in the wool schedule and our bill wipes them out altogether.

The issue presented by these two bills is plain and clear. Stripped of all misleading arguments and unnecessary verbiage, it is just this: Shall we or shall we not have a downward revision of Schedule K at this session of Congress?

This House is Democratic, but the Senate is Republican, and we have, thank God, a Republican President in the White House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

You know and the American people know that this Democratic bill can not become a law during this administration. You know and the American people know that our bill can become a law during this administration. If you will only allow us to take our bill to the President, he will gladly sign it. If you stubbornly insist on your bill or nothing, you will get nothing. You say you want a downward revision of Schedule K. We point the way to get it. The way is clear and the time is here for you to show the sincerity of your professions. A vote for the Democratic bill is a vote to leave Schedule K as it stands to-day on the statute book for two years more. [Applause on the Republican side.] A vote for our bill is a vote to revise downward the duties of Schedule K and make it effective in two months. [Applause on the Republican side.] To vote for our bill is to progress. To vote for the Democratic bill is to stand pat. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

We welcome your support even though you be standpatters. [Laughter.] We urge you to cast aside petty party politics and, facing to the front instead of to the rear, to join with us in enacting speedily into law a measure which, while it will allow American sheep to live on American soil and will allow Americans to make clothing for their fellow Americans, will nevertheless bring about that consummation devoutly to be wished—a downward revision of Schedule K.

That is the question that confronts us, and my closing suggestion to my friends on the other side of the aisle is to either put up or shut up. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-seven minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, after the masterly address of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], explaining in full the details of the bill which we offer as a substitute, it would seem as if there was but little further to be said with reference to its provisions, but I wish to speak briefly at this time concerning some matters which the gentleman from Connecticut, owing to lack of time, was compelled to some extent to pass over.

I have observed in this discussion two methods of debate. One is dealing in generalities, and the other in existing circumstances and particular facts. It is admissible at times, and may perhaps always be admissible, to deal in generalities, but I wish to congratulate our friends on the Democratic side of the House upon the ease and freedom with which they are able to divorce themselves entirely from the facts and even from mathematics. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

In the previous discussions of this bill I have observed that although the tariff is a very dry subject our Democratic friends found that it afforded a vehicle for poetry and imagery. Soaring aloft on the pinions of their imaginations they have painted the clouds with their eloquence and rhetoric; and, somewhere in dreamland, they have constructed a new America, under the influence of their bill, which should enormously increase its purchases abroad and yet have as much money left here as before; in which great quantities of its products heretofore made at home were to be manufactured in foreign lands, and yet there would be as much employment for the laborer as ever and the manufacturer would sell as many goods; in which wages everywhere would be higher, and the products of labor in some way cheaper as a result; in which the food products would be down to the very lowest point, and in some way the farmer paid more than he has ever received for the beef, pork, and grain which he produced.

I shall not stop to consider at this time whether this Utopian commonwealth could under any circumstances exist, nor shall I go into a discussion of the protective and free-trade doctrines. So far as the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the House are concerned, it would be useless; so far as the gentlemen on this side are concerned, I hold it to be entirely unnecessary. We have had our differences on some subjects—we have differed as to schedules, as to rates, and methods of making a bill. There may be some differences at this time, although I think there ought not to be any as to this particular bill. Standpatters or progressives, we are all protectionists. Nor do I have any doubt as to the sentiment of the Nation at large. The recollection of the effects of the Wilson bill still sends gripes of hunger to the stomach of the laboring man and the mechanic; and even the Democratic farmer of my own State still has a shiver run down his spine when he remembers those dark days under it. It is unnecessary that I should pursue this subject further; the people at large, the great majority of the Nation are protectionists. Over and over again they have ratified by enormous majorities the principle of protection.

After the law now in force was put in operation people studied it and came to the conclusion that some of its provisions were too high; that some worked out unequally and unfairly. There was a disposition manifested in favor of its revision and modification, and the people began to consider how this should be done. They knew that heretofore in the hearings which had been held, and complained of it, too, that to a certain extent these hearings were one sided; that the manufacturer was represented, but not the consumer to the same extent, owing to the natural difficulty of getting them before the committees. And so, when it was asked what should be done, the natural answer was that a nonpartisan, fair, skilled board should be appointed which was capable of finding and ascertaining the facts upon which an improved bill should be based. This sentiment spread all over the country. It seemed to prevail among the Republicans and Democrats alike, if I am to judge by the utterances of prominent Democrats made upon this floor; and in pursuance of that sentiment the President of the United States appointed the present Tariff Board. Let me say right here that the most captious critic of the administration never ventured to intimate in the slightest degree that better men could have been obtained for the position they now fill and for the purpose for which they were appointed, namely, to ascertain the facts upon which a tariff should be based. The most partisan opponent of the board has never questioned its fairness or its honesty. The bitterest foe of the President never has suggested that the selections which he made in making up this board were not made without fear or favor and with an utter absence of desire to protect any interests except the interests of the people at large. The members of this board went to work and have produced the report which we now have before us. The facts found by them have not suited the gentlemen on the other side, and for that reason they challenge it and refuse to accept its conclusions. For no other reason that I can ascertain are they unwilling to accept the verdict, the finding of the facts, which this great jury, the Tariff Board, has rendered to the American people.

It has been intimated here, and possibly asserted, that the Tariff Board merely took the statement of the manufacturers as to the cost of their products. The fact is exactly the contrary. I think perhaps that my colleague Mr. PICKETT and myself are as well acquainted with the methods used by the Tariff Board to obtain the facts upon which their report is based as any gentleman in this House. My colleague and myself have made an exhaustive examination as to the methods and workings of the board. We found that nothing had been taken for granted and no statement was accepted by the board until it had been verified by a personal examination by its experts.

The system used was this: The board sent to each factory two experts—one who had a practical knowledge of the business investigated, the other an expert accountant. The accountant went through the books of the company; the other expert made sure that there were no manipulations. Together they made such an examination as some concern would have made which was considering a purchase of the business. From the books of the company elaborate tabulations were made showing the cost of material and work in every particular and with the most painstaking accuracy. It seems to have been thought because the board only submitted in its report its findings with reference to certain samples, numbered from 1 to 120 and A to N, that this was all of the samples upon which the cost was computed. It could have been ascertained by anyone who visited the office of the board that they have had the figures upon hundreds of samples—too many to be included in the report, and therefore only those in more general use were selected. The report as a whole is a monument to the skill, ability, thoroughness, and fairness of the board, and has so been received both in this country and in Europe.

Gentlemen of the majority, you talk of abolishing this board. Abolish it if you will and thus proclaim to the Nation what we know here to be the actual truth—that you dare not meet and face the facts which are contained in their report.

I know that upon this floor, by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the facts and figures and, to some extent, the conclusions of this board have been attacked as unworthy of credit; but upon whose authority was that attack made? I know not his age, his name, or station, nor do I care, but I understand from statements recently made here that he was some newspaper correspondent who also held a chair in a small college; but whoever he may be and wherever he may be, I assert, and will show before I get through, that he needs and ought to take a grammar-school education in percentages. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman think that he has ever passed through the kindergarten course?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have some doubt about it, and I think when I give the figures to the gentlemen here they will doubt it also; but before I take up his calculations I want to make a comparison of the two bills now before the House.

THE REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC BILLS COMPARED.

I propose to show that these two bills have been prepared by altogether different methods. In olden times when a man wanted an article of furniture for his house the pioneer went out to the timber, chopped down a tree, split off a log, drove in some pegs, and made himself a bench. He hewed out his furniture with a broadax.

As civilization advanced and means were at hand this crude method of preparing his table or chair would not answer, and now the parts are measured and fitted with accuracy. This describes the two ways in which these two different bills have been formed. One has been split out with an ax, chopping out or lopping off a chunk here and there with little regard as to how the parts should fit. The other has been prepared with scientific precision, has adjusted the tariff to meet the needs and wants of the American people, and while the Republican bill has lowered the tariff almost to the same extent as the Democratic measure now proposed, this lowering of the tariff in accordance with its provisions will not ruin any American industry.

There are protectionists, free traders, and tariff-for-revenue men in this House. Discussion might fairly arise as to which method was the better, but who is there so bold as to say that a bill which reduces the burden of taxation without injuring our American industries is not better than a bill which merely lessens taxation to the same extent and in its operation must necessarily destroy many thriving American industries and deprive thousands of workingmen of the opportunity to gain a livelihood at reasonable wages? No one, surely, but the ultra free trader, who would have nothing manufactured here which could be made cheaper abroad and who would put his theories into operation regardless of the consequences to our factories and their employees.

ADVANTAGES OF THE REPUBLICAN SCHEDULE.

The first provision in each bill establishes the rate upon wool itself. The Democratic bill provides for a tariff rate of 20 per cent ad valorem—that is, upon the cost of wool abroad. It may be safely said that no nation pretending to have any scientific adjustment of its tariff levies it by the ad valorem method. All students of the subject concur that it opens wide the door to fraud and enables the dishonest importer to drive out of business those who honestly state how much their importations have cost, while the proceeds of the fraud go not to the people but into the pockets of those practicing it. But this is probably not the worst feature of this schedule. If the figures presented by the Tariff Board are accepted by the American people—and I firmly believe they will be—this rate is too low to enable the American farmer and the sheep raiser to continue in the business. It is shown by the report of the board that the cost of producing wool in Australia is practically nothing, as the mutton alone will pay for the expense of raising the sheep, and the greater portion of the wool which we import comes from Australia.

In New Zealand it is only 2 cents a pound; in South America it is about 4½ cents a pound, while the average throughout the United States is 9½ cents. The tariff rate proposed by the Democratic bill amounts to about 5 cents per pound. That the woolgrower of our country can not survive under it is apparent. Thus it is proposed by the Democratic bill to destroy the sheep-raising industry in this country except in so far as sheep may constitute a sort of by-product of the farm, and to require the American to purchase abroad the greater portion of the wool that has heretofore been grown at home. Some amount would probably still be raised here, but the Democratic report accompanying their bill admits that if it goes into effect at least $60,000,000 more will have to be sent abroad annually to pay for additional wool and woolen goods imported, and our citizens, who have before received this same amount, would have just that much less to pay for foodstuffs and manufactured goods and to give employment to labor.

The Republican bill recognizes that there are two classes of wool, the clothing wools and the carpet wools. Upon the clothing wools it fixes a rate of 19 cents a pound on the scoured contents or 18 cents if unscoured. This method does away with the "joker," known as the "skirting clause," contained in the present law under which the present duty is evaded and which was criticized so severely by the late Senator Dolliver in his famous speech. It also does away with the inequalities resulting from the different shrinkages of the various wools and prevents all fraud or evasion on the part of importers. The present duty on scoured wool is 33 cents per pound; on raw wool 11 cents. The duty under our bill on raw wool would be a little less than 7½ cents per pound. There are many parts of the United States where this duty would not put the home woolgrower on an equality with the foreign producer, and, with the exception of regions where wool is merely a by-product of the farm, none where it would more than make up the difference between the cost of producing wool at home and abroad.

One of the most striking features of the new Republican bill is that the duty upon carpet wools is removed when they are used in carpets, and the amount thereof used in clothing is so small as to be hardly worth considering. The removal of the duty on carpet wools will cause a loss of over four and one-half million dollars in revenue, of which the people will receive the benefit; but there is no reason why there should be any duty whatever on wools used in carpets, as they are not produced in this country. I am speaking now from a protection standpoint. Of course, the Democratic theory is that the tariff should be levied upon noncompetitive products, and following this rule they have placed in their new chemical schedule a tariff upon medicines and necessaries that are in common use, like pepper, which under the present law are free. I suppose that if they should succeed in taking off the tariff entirely upon sugar, and thereby destroying the sugar industry in this country, they would then put the tariff back—at least they would have to do so in order to be consistent, but consistency is not a virtue to be expected from the Democratic majority of this House.

It has been asserted by a prominent Democratic Member of this House that the coarse carpet wools were used in making cheap clothing for poor people and in the cheaper classes of blankets. Such a statement betrays an absurd ignorance of the real facts. A small quantity is, indeed, used in making heavy clothing when it is desired to get a rough and hairy appearance, but this cloth is very expensive and used only by those who care little for expense and most for the vagary of style that calls for cloth having this appearance. It has been claimed on the other side of the House that this coarse, hairy wool was used in underwear for the poor. To do so would be to produce an instrument of torture, the composition of which may be judged by examining the texture of felt boots, which are made of carpet wools. It is equally absurd to talk about this class of wool being used in blankets, except horse blankets, for which it would not be assessed under our bill. The filling for the cheap blankets can even now be obtained cheaply. Under the Republican bill the duty on the material used for this purpose is cut to 2 cents per pound, and low-priced blankets would be much cheaper than now if this bill is enacted.

It is also urged that this reduction of duty upon the carpet wool would simply go to the benefit of the manufacturer, but I shall show later on that the corresponding and, indeed, a greater reduction is made on the carpets when manufactured from it, according to the Republican bill.

I have not time to discuss and compare all of these schedules. The Republican bill lowers the present duties all through, the average reduction being about 40 per cent, but I wish particularly to compare the duties on cloth under their respective bills.

A COMPARISON OF THE RESPECTIVE DUTIES ON CLOTH.

The Democratic bill levies a duty of 40 per cent on all cloth containing any wool, even though it be made principally of cotton. So far has this erroneous method of levying duty been carried that if a pair of suspenders contained somewhere in its webbing a little wool, the duty would be levied upon the whole cost of it, including the cotton, leather, and rubber; and if a button has any wool about it the tariff is levied upon the metal components as well. It would seem, in exercising the broadax method of chopping out the tariff bill, as if an extra chunk might have been taken out when the schedule was prepared for these articles. There are many similar instances which might be mentioned showing not only the unfairness of the duties now proposed by Mr. UNDERWOOD, but also what an exorbitant rate will at times be imposed by his bill.

The Republican bill levies the duty on cloth and such articles as have just been mentioned ONLY UPON THE WOOL CONTENT THEREOF, and no one has undertaken to give any reason why it should be done otherwise. The distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asserted that its rates upon cloth were so fixed as to make the poor man pay a heavier duty upon the cloth he used than the rich. The real fact is, and it is one of the great merits of the Republican bill, that it makes its greatest reductions upon the cloth and articles used by the poor and levies a much lower rate upon them, as I shall now proceed to show by actual examples, using cloth described in the tariff report, and computing the actual amount of tariff paid thereon.

I hold in my hand a portion of the cloth described in the report of the board as sample No. 2. I had part of this sent to the Bureau of Standards for analysis, and it was found to be 81 per cent cotton. In other words, less than one-fifth of this cloth, which is known as a fancy worsted with cotton warp, was wool. The duty under the new Republican bill would be 5 cents per pound and 30 per cent ad valorem. Under the present law it is 33 cents per pound and 50 per cent ad valorem. This is an example of the great reductions made on the cheaper classes of goods by our bill. [Applause on the Republican side.] The whole rate on ad valorem basis on this cloth, taking the figures for the foreign cost as shown in the report of the board, is about 40 per cent, or as low as it would be under the Underwood bill.

Sample No. 26, which I now present, is a cotton-warp worsted which I had analyzed in a similar manner and discovered it was practically one-half cotton. This is a style of goods, as you will see from examination, which presents a very good appearance and is often worn by those who desire to economize in their clothing. I shall not elaborate the figures, which may be computed by anyone after taking the English cost price from the tariff report and having the result of the analysis above given. It will show that the total ad valorem rate thereunder on our bill would be 60 per cent.

A fair example total ad valorem rate on the class of goods worn by the wealthy can be obtained by computing the duty on sample No. 47 of the Tariff Board. This is an unfinished worsted weighing 16 ounces to the yard and costing 91.5 cents per yard in England. Without going into the calculations, which are quite involved, the total ad valorem rate is nearly 75 per cent, or almost twice as much as upon the sample of cheaper goods first referred to, and a computation of the rate per yard shows that it is about eight times as much.

Under our bill, as the cloth gets more expensive, and particularly as it runs into the finer grades of imported fancy worsteds, the rate advances.

As I stated before, the Democratic bill lays a flat duty of 40 per cent upon all cloths. The rate should increase with the price, not only because there is more work per yard, as a rule, in the more expensive goods, but because those who are able to wear imported suitings are well able to pay a higher tariff, and I am in favor of making them do so. It is true that the cloth schedule in the Underwood bill, as a whole, is lower than in ours, but that it will absolutely drive out the manufacturer of certain lines of cloth in this country will be demonstrated by an examination of the statement of the costs at home and abroad of the representative samples selected by the board and specified in its report. These costs are given not only in the tariff report but in a most remarkable table which I will now discuss.

This table was introduced yesterday by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and in giving some figures from it he attempted to show that high rates were imposed by our bill upon the cheaper goods. The unfairness and inaccuracy of this table becomes evident when it is seen that no attention is paid to the fact that these goods almost invariably contain a large percentage of cotton, but this table gives the rate on such goods the same as if it was all wool. Such figures are not merely worthless, they are deceiving. I assume that they were made by the same gentleman to whom I have heretofore referred, and whose education in mathematics has been so sadly neglected.

The table to which I refer is found on page 57 of the majority report on the wool bill, which I am informed was compiled by him. In this table you will observe that the cost of each sample in the United States and in England is given, and he undertakes to state in the last right-hand column the amount of tariff duty which would measure this difference. In so doing it will also be observed that he has entered into a very elaborate calculation, although he had a very simple problem before him. He takes from the report the American and English conversion cost, which, with the difference between them, he shows in the table. He then finds the percentage of this difference to the English cost and adds that to the assumed duty on yarn, which he estimates at 30 per cent, and gets the total of 55.99 per cent for sample No. 1. There are two fundamental errors in this method. First, 30 per cent on the cost of yarn is not the same as 30 per cent on the English cost of the finished cloth, as any school child would know; second, taking the arbitrary figure of 30 per cent utterly ignores the board's statement as to the cost of materials in the particular sample, for by consulting the report, on page 652, it will be found that the stock cost to the American manufacturer was nearly double that of the English. After all, the problem, as I stated before, is an exceedingly simple one. In this particular table, contained in the majority report, the cost of sample No. 1 in the United States is $0.295; in England, $0.1535. It will at once be seen that the American cost was almost twice as much as the foreign cost, and therefore this sample cost the United States almost 100 per cent more than it did in England. Dividing the difference in costs by the English cost, it will be found that the actual rate necessary to be imposed on the English goods to equalize the difference is 92 per cent and a fraction instead of 55 per cent, as stated in the table. On sample No. 3 it is 63 per cent instead of 56 per cent, as stated in the table. On sample No. 27 the figures given by this most remarkable statistician is 60.59 per cent for the duty. A mere glance at the respective costs would show that it should have been over 100 per cent.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I will ask if it is not understood that this statistician was not a member of the committee and not employed by the committee or the Government?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. He was not employed by the Government, and I doubt whether he was employed by the committee.

Mr. SLOAN. That being true, is not this a legitimate conclusion that he was the result of a free trade in tariff experts?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Nebraska is correct.

Not a single one of these figures of the resulting tariff duty given on page 57 of the majority report are correct, and the most of them are from 25 per cent to 40 per cent out of the way. The whole majority report is a most remarkable document in the way in which it juggles the report of the Tariff Commission, and to present to the American people such a table as has just been referred to, in order that they may ascertain therefrom what the duty ought to be to put the American manufacturer on an equal with his European competitor, is something worse than a blunder. It is a farce and a fraud.

If we were to take from this table—certainly the most extraordinary conglomeration that I have ever fixed my eyes upon—the tariff rate necessary to protect the American manufacturer it will be found that the average rate for this purpose is given by it as 55 per cent, while the rate, granted by the Democratic bill is only 40 per cent. As a matter of fact, the correct figures are much higher than this average, for, although the system used in making this table has in a few instances resulted in making the rate too high, the greater portion of the figures for this purpose are far too low. The Republican bill is the result of careful computations, made from the report of the Tariff Board, which computations were then worked out in the bill.

I think it is not necessary to say anything further with reference to this table, except that, so far as the members of the committee are concerned who present it, I exempt them from any responsibility other than that which follows from their duty to at least casually examining figures before presenting them to this House and the public.

The tariff on blankets is levied by our bill only on the wool content; by the Democratic bill on the whole weight; with the result that on the cheaper goods of mixed cotton the duty is much less in the Republican bill. In fact, on some of the cheaper grades of blankets and underwear the duties proposed by our new bill are only a little over half those provided by the present law.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] undertakes to state what the tariff would be on some cheap blankets under the Republican bill without knowing how much wool was in them. This does not trouble his statistician, but it produces results far and away in error.

It ought to be said in this connection that notwithstanding the great outcry made by our Democratic friends as to the inability of the American people to wear woolen goods and the tearful tales which are told with reference to those who have been deprived of suitable clothing and underwear by a Republican tariff, the real fact is that, notwithstanding the advance in the price of such goods, the American workman, enjoying as he does the highest wages paid anywhere in the world, is taking and using more and more woolen goods every day.

In the decade ending 1910, the value of woolen goods used in America has increased far beyond the proportionate increase in population. At the same time, as shown by the report of the board, the percentage of cotton-mixed goods has decreased, notwithstanding the well-known fact, which is also stated in the report of the board, that for hygienic and other reasons all-wool underwear is not nearly as popular as it once was even among those to whom price cuts no figure.

The rates on carpets under our bill for the common grades have been reduced 50 to 60 per cent and on all grades are lower than those of the Underwood bill, with the exception of two classes, one of which has practically gone out of use, the other is the expensive grades of Aubusson, Axminster, and oriental carpets, used by the well-to-do and the wealthy, upon which the rate in the Republican bill is 50 per cent, while our Democratic friends concluded to fix it at 40 per cent, but this is only another example of how our bill discriminates in favor of the poorer classes and levies its rates upon the goods used by those who are best able to pay—an admirable feature which is nowhere found in the Democratic bill.

The rates provided by the Underwood bill are substantially lower than the Wilson bill and are levied in the same manner and with the same disregard of American industries. The Wilson bill, with free wool for the manufacturer, put so many of them out of business that they were unable to use the wool grown at home, and 7,000,000 pounds of it had to be sold abroad in one year. The decrease in manufacturing and in various employments which would be brought about by the Democratic bill would cause the American workingman a loss of not less than $20,000,000 in wages annually. Why, then, adopt the Democratic bill?

The Republican bill would keep our money at home, stimulate trade, and reduce the tariff. The Democratic bill would send $60,000,000 per annum abroad, close our mills in certain lines, reduce wages, slaughter sheep as effectively as did the Wilson bill, and all without making prices to the consumer materially lower than the Republican bill. Nor is this all. The members of the majority, in season and out of season, on the floor of this House and upon the stump, have proclaimed with all the powers of their voice and with every emphasis of which they are capable, that they were ready to take advantage of any opportunity "to reduce the burdens upon the American people" which they claim exist under the present law. They voted for the La Follette bill, the duties of which were higher than the bill which we now present, but now say they will vote for the bill they have brought out of the committee, which I have described, the duties of which are only a little lower than the one which we have offered. They know that their bill never can become a law during this Congress. Ours can and should be enacted, and in refusing it they refuse to give the people any relief whatever.

Gentlemen of the majority, we have now reached the parting of the ways. We know now how hollow your pretenses were when you said that you wished to reduce these duties. We know now what a wretched sham this talk has been about lightening the burdens upon the people, and we will go out at the next campaign to meet you upon the issue presented by these two bills, in full confidence as to what the verdict of the American people will be. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I feel like a bloated monopolist here to-day. By the generous indulgence of the House I have been accorded one whole hour in which to discuss the pending legislation and to endeavor to afford some enlightenment upon the situation. I am, however, as usual, as respects these tariff bills, somewhat in a position which has been described as "between the devil and the deep sea." I am enamored of a few of the provisions of the bill of the minority and, similarly, with a portion of the bill of the majority, but I am absolutely opposed to some of the features of the one as well as to some of the provisions of the other. But, as I have intimated, it is not an anomalous position in which I find myself.

Since I came to Congress I have felt compelled to occupy the center of this middle aisle most of the time. Last summer when I went home, after that very hot session, an old lady friend of mine, who was strangely impressed with my spiritual characteristics, asked me how I stood it down in Washington; if it did not remind me of another world, and if I was not prepared to reform my life and live a better one in the contemplation of possibly going to an even hotter place. I remarked that indeed the weather there was very hot, but that it was not alone the weather that made me hot. I suggested also that I was by no means the only victim of atmospheric oppression, for one of my Republican friends, during that intense period, narrated a rather harrowing dream which he had had a few nights before. He dreamt that he had died and that his disembodied spirit, in its perambulations, had wandered far from its natural bailiwick and descended into hades, where he was strutting in that same pompous and self-satisfied way which was formerly characteristic of my Republican friends [laughter], when of a sudden, from the roominess of the well-populated place, there appeared his satanic majesty, who, approaching him with jealous mien, sarcastically observed, "Well, stranger, you act as if you owned this place." The shade replied, "Yes; I do, for I am a Republican Member of Congress and the Democrats gave it to me at the last session." [Laughter.] My experience during that session almost persuaded me to become a Christian.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to convey the impression here that I am an expert in tariff legislation, nor do I venture to pose as a flockmaster, and yet there never has been a time within my recollection when I was not in the stock-growing business. Until I was 12 years of age I had never worn a suit of clothes the material of which was not spun upon my father's place, clipped from his flock, and woven into goods upon the farm. That was at an early period. I may say, in passing, that I have now arrived at the sensitive time of life when I do not inform even my most intimate friends just how long ago that was, and, being a widower and observing so many beautiful and possibly many marriageable ladies in the galleries, I will be pardoned for refraining now. [Laughter.] I am content with the true significance of Shakespeare, that "the habit oft proclaims the man," and at this age in life I have returned to some extent to the homely habit of my youth.

During the past session of Congress, as will be recalled, there was much discussion as to how much money we wool raisers received from a suit of clothes. We undertook to show that upon an ordinary suit of clothes 45 cents was approximately the sum, and we further contended that that was not robbing the American people very much; that they would not willingly put out of existence a great industry in this country because of a desire to save 45 cents upon a suit of clothes. I then determined to investigate that feature of the subject thoroughly. So I had some wool from my own clip used for the purpose of ascertaining the facts as to the cost. I had to have some assistance in this matter, however, notwithstanding the fact that I began by indicating that I felt like a monopolist. [Laughter.]

I belong to the National Woolgrowers' Association, and I doubt not that some of our Democratic newspapers will charge that I have been subsidized on this occasion, because when I received this clip I turned it over to the National Woolgrowers' Association, stating that I desired a suit of clothes made from it, and they came to my assistance and did so. I subsequently received a letter from the secretary of the association stating the cost of the suit. I was greatly surprised at the amount until I discovered that in my vanity I had somewhat overshot the mark in the desire to be, if possible, better dressed than others, and on the principle that "fine feathers make fine birds" and because of my pardonable ambition to compensate in this manner for my natural deficiencies if I am to be respectable at all [laughter], I chose some goods that were a little bit beyond the average cost, and that product of the tailor's skill I wear on this occasion. [Applause.]

This is what the secretary, Dr. S. W. McClure, writes me about this:

Judge A. W. RUCKER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR JUDGE: I have the honor to give you the following information relative to the suit of clothes which was made and presented to you by the National Woolgrowers' Association.

The following items of cost entered into the making of this suit.

3.6 yards of cloth, at $1.92	$6.910
1⅛ yards of mohair serge lining	2.030
1½ yards of vest and sleeve lining	.375
½ yard of haircloth	.250
¼ yard of padding	.125
1¼ yards of canvas	.440
1 yard of pocket lining	.200
Lining for trousers, buttons, and buckles	.350
Buttons for coat and vest	.150
	10.830
Cost of tailoring	24.370
Total cost of suit	35.200

The cloth used in this suit is a high-grade, medium-weight worsted, all pure wool, and represents about the highest quality and cost of cloth made for men's suiting. While the cloth in the average all-wool suit of clothes ordinarily is sold by the manufacturer at from $1 to $1.40 per yard, you selected a cloth representing almost the extreme of high value produced by the American mill. While the manufacturer received $6.91 for the cloth in this suit, $2.37 of this represents what he paid for the wool laid down at his factory; the balance must cover all the expense of handling the wool, converting it into cloth, and placing it upon the market, as well as his profit. The manufacturer's profit on this suit was between 15 and 20 cents.

It required 11.59 pounds of Colorado wool, shrinking 62 per cent, to make this entire suit; your woolgrower might receive for this wool to-day 17 cents per pound; therefore, for all the wool in the suit he received $1.97. In addition to making the suit, this 11.59 pounds of wool produced about 6 cents worth of waste, which, deducted from $1.97, leaves $1.91 as the share your woolgrower received from this suit, or 5.4 per cent of the total cost of the suit.

In order that you may understand exactly the way the costs to the woolgrower were distributed, I submit the following figures, based on the findings of the Tariff Board:

The average sheep in Colorado shears 6.1 pounds of wool; therefore, to produce 11.59 pounds of wool as required by this suit, 1.9 sheep had to be run for the entire year.

The average investment per sheep for improvements on your Colorado ranches is 44 cents, and for the wool required to make this suit the investment would be 83.6 cents.

The average value of Colorado sheep is $4.15, and for the 1.9 sheep would be $7.844; this makes the investment to produce the wool for this suit $8.72, excluding all investment in lands.

In producing this 11.59 pounds of wool your grower paid to labor $1.14, for feed for the sheep he paid 49.4 cents, and his miscellaneous expenses for the sheep were $1.71; the interest on his investment at 8 per cent was 69.7 cents, making the total costs to produce this wool $4.037.

This, however, represents the total cost of maintaining 1.9 sheep for one year, and as there was other income from them than that derived from wool, such income must be deducted in order to determine the actual cost of the wool. The Tariff Board estimates that the increase among Colorado sheep is 61.9 per cent, and that the income from sources other than wool for 1.9 sheep would be $2.28. This, deducted from the total cost of $4.037, leaves $1.757 actual expenditures which must be met from the sale of wool. If the receipts from the sale of wool in this suit were $1.97 and the cost of its production was $1.757, your woolgrower had remaining as his profit on 1.9 sheep just 21.3 cents, or a profit per sheep of 11.2 cents, amounting to 1⅛ per cent on his investment.

In determining the cost of producing this wool we must not fail to recognize the fact that the Tariff Board credits the woolgrower with an average loss of sheep amounting to 3 per cent, when every western woolgrower believes that the loss is at least 6 per cent. And again, that the 49.4 cents' worth of feed consumed by these sheep represents, if produced on the owner's ranch, not the market value of the feed, but the actual cost of production. And also the fact that the board reports the average price of wool in Colorado last year to have been 14.2 cents per pound, and I have credited your woolgrower with receiving 17 cents per pound for the wool in this suit. And neither should we neglect to recognize that this profit of 11.2 cents per sheep was made at a time when the tariff on wool of this class represented 46 per cent ad valorem. May I therefore ask you, Judge, how is this woolgrower to survive if the Underwood bill reducing the tariff 60 per cent becomes a law?

Of course, Judge, you will understand that the tailor who made this suit for $24.37 was one of the reasonable-price tailors of the city of Washington, and plenty of tailors in this city would have charged as high as $40 for making this suit. Investigation convinces me that if this suit of clothes were purchased from the tailor under ordinary circumstances it would cost you not less than $55, and if purchased in a store probably $35.

Very respectfully, S. W. McCLURE, Secretary.

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Are you sure you have got all your buttons?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I am sure I have not missed a buckle. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that while the manufacturer of the cloth received $6.91 for the cloth in this suit, $2.37 of it represents what he paid for the wool laid down at his factory and the balance must cover all the expense of handling the wool, converting it into cloth, and placing it upon the market, as well as his profit. The manufacturer's profit on this suit was between 15 and 20 cents.

I shall not discuss that feature of the argument. I find that we are very scarce here upon our wool end of it, and yet at the same time truth must out, even if it be in favor of the manufacturer.

You will observe that the interest on my investment, as stated, at 8 per cent was 69.7 cents, making the total cost to me of producing this wool $4.037.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman whether that is the ordinary rate of interest?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Eight per cent?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes; 8 per cent.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Yes; 8 per cent, but that depends a good deal upon your indorser. [Laughter.] The ordinary sheepman in that territory can not borrow any money at any rate without an indorser. [Laughter.]

This, however, reduced the total cost of maintaining 1.9 sheep for one year, and inasmuch as there are other sources of income from them than that derived from the wool alone such income must naturally be deducted in order to determine the actual cost of the wool. My correspondent, you will observe, states that the Tariff Board estimates the increase among Colorado sheep 61.9 per cent and that the income from sources other than wool for 1.9 sheep would, therefore, be $2.28. This deducted from the total cost of $4.037 leaves $1.757 actual expenditure, which must be met from the sale of the wool.

You will observe that in the enumeration of items of cost there is one of 12½ cents for one-sixth of a yard of padding. Of course I had to be padded. [Laughter.] Then there is 1 yard of pocket lining, at 20 cents. The tailor, observing that I was a cowboy, made a pocket, of course, on my right side for my gun and one on my left side for my flask. [Laughter.] In fact, they loaded me down with pockets. I think probably there are some pockets for dirk knives, tobacco, and so forth, which I may not have discovered. [Laughter.]

I have never had as handsome and as good a suit of clothes in my life as I now have upon my back, and I now desire to publicly extend my thanks to the association for having discovered my needs and satisfied my vanity. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have been the subject of divers hopeful experiments in a good many pursuits of life. I had my initiation as a farmer's boy. I entered upon the practice of the law as soon as I could get into it. I was tried at that. Then I was the subject of the more ambitious experiment as judge. They tried me as a farmer and then tried to make me governor, and after ascertaining that I was not adapted for any of those occupations they finally made me just a plain, ornery Member of Congress. [Laughter.] My patient and devoted constituency has been all these years acting upon the assumption that I must certainly be good for something. [Laughter.] As an illustration, my father had an old negro by the name of Isaac. Isaac owned a dog which he claimed was the best coon dog in the country. On one occasion a man came along who desired a coon dog, and the trade having been made, the man took the dog home. In about a week he returned and said, "Isaac, you old scoundrel, you cheated me in that dog trade." "How is that, massa?" "You said that dog was a good coon dog, and he won't pay any attention to coons." "Dere sure must be somethin' wrong about dat," said Isaac, scratching his head in a puzzled way, "'cause I done tried that dog wid squirrels and possums and rabbits, and he wouldn't pay no attention 'tall to them varmints, and in course you must know, as well as I do, dat dat dog must be good for something." [Laughter.]

Now, if I have accomplished any real good since I have had the honor to be in Congress, and not proven an entire disappointment to my constituents, my one act of pulling you Republicans from your obstructive attitude in the doorway of the prosperity of the sheep grower of this country—where you have consistently stood since you have been in power—stands out, if I may modestly so express it, like a beacon. Not until I came here, a coyote from the wild and wooly West, and demonstrated to this House the absurdity of your tariff legislation, enacted nominally in the interest of the stock grower, was there ever introduced a bill to put the duties on wool upon a specific basis on the scoured content. That amendment I offered in the House on the 20th day of last June, and I think it received four or five votes on the Republican side. I know just exactly how many votes it received on this side. It received one vote. That vote was my own. [Laughter.] Not one of you Republicans, in the whole history of your legislative lives, have until now supported such a measure. You are now engaged in a wild and rather flattering effort to steal my thunder. Of all the Presidents you have had, but one, the present Executive, has ever suggested in a message that a specific duty should be placed upon wool, and that it should be upon the scoured content.

When the first wool bill was passed, it was upon the theory that all wool shrunk 66⅔ per cent. That was supposed to apply to foreign wool as well as to American wool, and it did at that time. Immediately upon that bill becoming a law, and operations began under it, the foxy foreigner evolved a method of cheating the woolgrower of this country, as well as the Treasury. He proceeded at first to wash the wool on the sheep's back. Then he winnowed out all the rubbish, dirt, straw, and vegetable matter that he could eliminate in that manner, and reduced the shrinkage to somewhere in the neighborhood of between 40 and 50 per cent by that method. But, in view of the exactions of the tariff and freight, that did not satisfy his greed, so by some hocus-pocus he secured the passage by Congress of what is known as the "skirting clause," which left the fleece stripped of most of the grease and foreign matter. That still not being entirely satisfactory he winnowed it and brought it into this market with a shrinkage of not to exceed 40 per cent.

It must be remembered that during all this time we were in competition with the foreigner, who was bringing his wool here with that shrinkage of 40 per cent, while our wool always remained the same—a shrinkage of 66⅔ per cent.

It is therefore manifest that under the 11 and 12 cents per pound duty we have never received more than 4 or 5 or, at the most, 5½ cents protection under a Republican administration.

Mr. Chairman, there is an element of contagion in this matter. It is akin to the subject of conservation. Conservation is a contagious disease. [Laughter.] You Republicans took the initiative in promulgating the doctrine of conservation. A Republican President had two bills before him—one an act declaring that there should be no more land withdrawn from the public domain unless it should be specifically under an act of Congress, and the other a proclamation withdrawing 200,000,000 acres of land in our Western States and Territories from settlement and the taxing power. One piece of paper seems to have been more conveniently within his reach than the other, and he signed the last first, and thus ignored the wishes and instructions of Congress as evidenced by the bill lying by the side of the one he first signed.

But that is apart from the story. It is simply an indication of the fact that my Democratic friends at times manifest symptoms of the disease which they have contracted from you.

This situation is contagious. You Republicans first, by specious provisions, closed the mouth of the woolgrower. Convention after convention was held between the woolgrower and the manufacturer, but there never was a convention held west of Washington. They were all held up in the section of the country where there are four or five manufacturers to one woolgrower. There was no representation of the western interest or sheep grower. This select coterie met and formulated this legislation to which I have referred. The confiding woolgrower was beguiled by the promise that at the next session of Congress the duty would be raised a little. He rested content in this assurance, only to discover that when the Democrats came into control the infection had extended its baleful influence to this side of the Chamber.

And now what do my Democratic friends propose to do? They say, "The credulous old woolman has been fooled for a long time by the Republicans. We must not be outdone. We will now, as a fitting climax, put on the capsheaf and take all of the protection from him"; for that is the logical interpretation of the bill under consideration. Obviously the 20 per cent ad valorem duty upon the grease content is no protection to the sheepman.

I am not at all amazed that my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] failed to say a word concerning the raw-wool proposition in his speech to-day, nor as to its effect upon the sheepman. When he made his speech at the last session he electrified us by tracing these sheep from the rocky hills of Vermont down through Connecticut, on through this country, eating up everything they could reach—land had gotten so high that the sheep could not justifiably be raised upon it—following them diligently out across the American desert and across the trackless plains, making them climb the snowcaps of the Rocky Mountains, driving them, with their tongues lolling out and their tails hanging behind them, through the desert of Death Valley and beyond into the Pacific Ocean, where he left them eating crabs. [Laughter.]

To-day there is a different story. A change has "come over the spirit of his dream." There has been an appreciable bit of ground swell. The people of the West are a little dissatisfied. Ohio is a big wool State and they are looking a little to the future. The sheep business is not disintegrating so rapidly after all, and it may become necessary for us to hold on to it a little longer, and this impression has prompted some faint effort to show that we can survive under this bill.

There is but one substance in the mineral kingdom that is indestructible, and that is gold. Its usefulness is not greater than its indestructible counterpart in another kingdom, namely, wool. It has only three enemies—one, the nonfurtiveness of the ragpicker; another, the moth; and, third, fire. On another occasion I said to you:

> Many of you doubtless have in your households treasured antiques a thousand years old. There are prayer rugs known to be over 4,000 years old, the wool in which might have been clipped by Abraham, and as they are rare, there are many imitations of them. I bespeak for you, my friends, in the hour, yea hours, of your atonement for the sin you will commit in the passage of this bill the peculiar appropriatness of a prayer rug woven from the fleece of the American sheep, that your hands may be raised alike in supplication for pardon and benediction of the home-grown product which makes so much for American greatness. From the cradle to the grave, from the clipper's hand to the tailor's shears, its fruitful coat of down has ever thrown its benign protection around young and old. The babe in arms, the rugged mountaineer, the aged and infirm alike are secure within its ample folds, and the best that is within us should be devoted to its safety and not its sacrifice.

Mr. Chairman, of course I can not support the pending bill, and I am utterly unable to understand how any Democrat can consistently do so. It would amount to absolute stultification for anybody who voted for a duty of 29 per cent ad valorem last session to now, after the Tariff Board has reported and notwithstanding there has been no untoward change of conditions in any direction, favor free wool at least. There is no justification for us to now stultify ourselves by voting for 9 per cent less duty at this session of Congress.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It is nearly 30 per cent.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. No; it is 9 per cent lower than the conference bill that we passed at the last session.

The bill proposed by the minority is equally objectionable to me. The bill introduced by me at the last session put the duty at 30 cents a pound. Thirty-four cents a pound is exactly what the western sheep grower must have in order to compete with the Australian woolgrower. Of course if it is proposed to eliminate the sheepman altogether—if it is the desire to put him out of the business entirely; if we are to say to him, "Notwithstanding here is an industry as old as Abraham himself, and which is contemporaneous with the glorious history of our country and has brought to it so much enduring prosperity, we must let it go"—if we are to ignore not only the history of our own country but that of all countries as to its great value as an integral part of our national greatness, then pass this bill providing for a 20 per cent ad valorem, and it will effectually give it its quietus.

As a matter of fact I do not know that we could enact any legislation that would resuscitate the sheep business at the present time, because of the fact that the sheep people are so much discouraged by the tariff agitation. They have lost millions of dollars by reason of this agitation since last June. The speculator has been quick to take advantage of the possibility of this bill becoming a law, and the woolgrower has become bankrupt in his effort to keep his flocks and his possessions out of the hands of the banker, of whom he has borrowed money on them, and it has been an unequal struggle.

Mr. Chairman, England did not abandon the protection policy, in so far as the wool business was concerned, until she had established the industry, and she is now almost the third nation in the world in the production of both wool and mutton. She does not now permit sheep to remain over 24 hours on her soil or get beyond the docks before it is slaughtered. She is still vigorously protecting her sheep industry.

Until 104 years ago, and for 130 years before that, England had a statute requiring the dead to be enshrouded in woolen cloth with a view to protecting and nurturing the woolen industry. As an evidence of solicitude for the safeguarding of that industry the mother country forbade our Colonies to export any of their wool. In Virginia in 1664, the Commonwealth passed a statute by which she gave 5 pounds of tobacco—the only money she had at that time—for each yard of homespun cloth that might be manufactured. Two years afterwards she passed a law by which she put into every county in the Commonwealth looms and weavers for the manufacture of wool.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 35 minutes.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Massachusetts in 1645 passed a law compelling each family to weave 1 yard of cloth out of wool flax or cotton for 30 weeks during each year. She also gave to her weavers a bonus of 30 acres of land. In those days it was the unanimous judgment of all that it was imperatively necessary to develop and sustain this industry. Will anybody be good enough to tell me when there has been a time when this industry needed to be built up more than at the present? We produce 70 per cent of the wool we consume. Now, if it is demonstrated, as I believe it must be, to our Democratic friends that if we pass such a law as this it will mean the annihilation of the sheep industry of this country I am entirely sure no one would longer indulge in the sophistry that it would be in the interest of the consumer. When by a simple arithmetical process you subtract 70 per cent of our consumption from the total, does it appeal to anyone's reason that it would tend to lessen the price? Is it not convincing to the analytical mind that the result will be diametrically the opposite, and is it not a solecism to pretend that to subtract from means to add to; that in order to cheapen the price you must lessen the supply? And yet that, Mr. Chairman, is irresistibly the character of philosophy that must be invoked in justification of the passage of a bill of this kind.

Another and equally vicious feature of the proposed legislation would be the surrender of our domestic market to the foreigner, thereby vesting him with power to arbitrarily fix prices. Listen to what is said in the last issue of the Australian Pastoralist Review:

> The writer ventures to state that if the duty upon wool in America is removed for any length of time sheep numbers in the United States of America will, as they did before, rapidly diminish. This would be a bad thing for the States, but a good thing for Australia and New Zealand.

To digress for a moment. We are all aware of the proverbial æsthetic taste of the good people of Massachusetts. In 1684 William Foster, a representative from this country to Spain, purchased three rams at auction for $1,500 apiece and shipped them to a friend in Massachusetts for breeding purposes. However, unmindful of their other attributes and of the intent and purpose of their shipment, the gentleman in Massachusetts slaughtered them and ate them, writing a very cordial letter of thanks to Mr. Foster for remembering him with such delicious meat.

As a matter of fact and in the interest of truthful history, it may be said that those rams were smuggled into this country because of the rigid statutes of Spain upon the subject of the exportation of sheep. Under the Spanish law at that time it was an offense punishable by death to ship sheep from that country. But our friend from Massachusetts did not enjoy an exclusive monopoly in that inhibited industry, for there lived at that period another smuggler of no less prominence than Thomas Jefferson, who was, as we all know, well versed in international law and ethics, and as an evidence of whose lively interest in the development of the wool industry of this country at all hazards I desire to read from a letter written by him to the American representative at that time in Spain. Among other things, he says:

> An American vessel, the property of a respectable merchant of Georgetown, on a voyage to some part of Europe for general purposes of commerce proposes to touch at some part of Spain with a view of obtaining merino sheep to be brought to our country. The necessity we are under and the determination we have formed of emancipating ourselves from a dependence on foreign countries for manufactures which may be advantageously established among ourselves has produced a very general desire to improve the quality of our wool by the introduction of merino sheep. Your sense of the duties you owe your station will not permit me to ask you, nor yourself to do, any act which might compromise you with the Government with which you reside or forfeit that confidence on their part which can alone enable you to be useful to your country; but as far as that will permit you to give aid to the procuring and the bringing away of some of the valuable race, I take the liberty of soliciting you to do so. It will be an important service rendered to your country.

[Laughter.]

I cite these two prominent instances as showing that for the advancement of the great wool industry in this country, not only did a citizen of the law-abiding and thrifty Commonwealth of Massachusetts, but that great Virginian, the father of Democracy, himself risk the dire international and personal consequences of the detection of such an act. If perchance he had been caught on Spanish soil he would have been indicted as particeps criminis and liable to the penalty of death under the statute to which I have referred.

It will thus be seen that Massachusetts and Virginia, the two oldest and most conservative Commonwealths, joined hands for the upbuilding of this important industry.

To return to my line of thought. It is clearly impossible to add to by dividing. How can it be sensibly or reasonably maintained that by taking 70 per cent of our consumption from the total we will lower the price upon wool? At the risk of repetition I desire to emphasize that inquiry. If I have not already done so, let me state now that the wool man, especially of the West, is to-day realizing his only revenue upon the lean sheep that he may be able to drive to the market, he being absolutely helpless in any other respect.

Mr. Chairman, I have just a few words more. I am not a very good statistician, and I have difficulty in following the line of argument of those gentlemen who deal in fractions. I come from the western country where those who play poker play with blue chips. They do not use the white ones. I prefer to deal with larger sums than fractions.

Upon the subject of statistics, if I may again digress, I am minded of a darkey who was captured by old Jubal Early in one of his raids through Virginia. He was nearing his old town, and he produced his pencil and paper and was noting the names of some of the people who lived in his old home town, and calculating how many graves he would have to dig when he got there. There was one particular man whom he desired to inquire about, and as this darkey resided in the neighborhood he supposed he would be able to secure accurate information from him. Early said, "Sam, do you know a man down there by the name of Sandford?" "Oh, yas, sir, yas, sir; I knows Mr. Sandford very well." "What does he do?" pursued Early. "Well, Massa Jubal, he keeps a kind of little grocery sto' and he sells medicine, and when I gets a stummick ache sometimes he gives me medicine and I gets well right away." "Orderly," said Jubal sternly, "take this nigger out and have him shot. There is only one fellow down there by the name of Sandford and he is a lawyer." Sam, apprehending that he was about to be shot, cried out quickly, "Hold on there, Massa Jubal, I think we's both right, but you is more wrong than I is. I knows dat dis is de same man, fur he did run for dat dere office but he got lef'." [Laughter.]

In my school days I found extreme difficulty in mastering the science of arithmetic, and I confess that I am not near so skillful in the art as my friend UNDERWOOD and some of my other associates on this floor. However, when I reflect upon my restricted scholastic opportunities this is not to be wondered at, and I am glad now of the opportunity to forsake the smaller figures for the larger and more important ones.

I desire to refer for a moment to a statement made by my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yesterday to the effect that the sheep growers of this country have ample protection, that there was a healthy competition existing, and that the report of the Tariff Board would show this. There is a striking dissimilarity between his present line of thought and that of last year, when he, too, indulged in the pleasing occupation of driving these sheep clear out into the Pacific Ocean as a preliminary to our relinquishing the sheep-growing business entirely.

With a view to my further enlightenment upon the subject, I took occasion to analyze this report to some extent, and discovered a few large figures, minus the fractions, which accommodated themselves to my understanding.

I find that the total labor cost, including the shearing of the sheep and their handling in this country and the competing countries, Australia and South America, was as follows: In the United States, on 52,000,000 sheep—that is all we now have—lambs and all, $47,580,000; in South America the cost was $15,080,000; in Australia it was $7,280,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to agree with my friend UNDERWOOD in one respect with reference to the Tariff Board. I do not think it was necessary for them to go to that country to get this information. Most of the material information concerning these costs was available in any trade journal. We are perfectly familiar with the geography of that country. We know its climate, we know its area, we know of its immense pampas, we know how many sheep they have, we know also the character of the labor they employ. We know they have hatless, shirtless, shoeless, breechclouted bushmen to attend their flocks. I have a picture here which I would be glad to show some of you. Here it is. My word painting of him is not in the least exaggerated. He is also languageless. He is unable to comprehend in the dark and conveys his meaning by gesticulations. These bushmen, the Arapaho Indians, and the Fiji Islanders are in a class by themselves. They are the only known people who are unable to make themselves understood in the dark.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says we know these things. We do not know it except from the report of the woolgrowers in the United States.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his suggestion. That is good enough evidence for me.

Mr. PAYNE. It is for me, in some respects, and still your people are always raising the question that we only get one-sided information from people who are interested. How could we get evidence to satisfy the gentleman from Alabama unless we sent some one over there?

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I think the gentleman from Alabama knows more than he "lets on." I think he was satisfied, just as I was.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; he was never satisfied with anything that came from the woolgrowers.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama, as well as many of these questions, are peculiarly suggestive of the man who imagined he had discovered in the distance a great conflagration, while the closer observer perceived but the golden glory of a newborn day. The sun was just rising. [Applause.]

Now, I desire to go just a step further in this——

Mr. GARNER. The sun of the gentleman from Alabama is just rising; that is all right.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. I accept with pleasure the interjection of the gentleman from Texas.

With regard to the cost of feeding these 52,000,000 sheep, and dealing in these large figures again, we find that in the United States it is $23,400,000; in South America it is $18,200,000; in Australia, our competitor, as is recognized by everybody, it is only $4,160,000, as against $23,000,000 in the United States. That, it will be observed, is for feeding. Of course the climatic condition there is a matter of common knowledge. The sheep can run the year round. The growers there procure a lease for 40 years and are at liberty to fence the land in. I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] knows something about the sheep business——

Mr. LONGWORTH. He has goats.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. Well, he is not one. Besides, he is honest enough to acknowledge that if one has the opportunity to secure twenty or thirty thousand acres of land, subject to a lease of 40 years, he can construct a coyote-proof fence around his pasture, wherein one man would be able to attend to 20,000 sheep. Conditions in our country are entirely different, as is well known.

Then we should bear in mind the amount of the taxes on 52,000,000 sheep. In this country the annual tax is $2,000,000, while in Australia it is $1,000,000, or perhaps a little in excess of that sum. Then there is a very considerable difference in the relative cost of getting the wool into the domestic market as between the two countries, the western American producer paying just three times as much as the foreigner to lay his wool down in the markets of Boston, Philadelphia, and New York, for instance, and this item of transportation alone consumes the duty, so far as the western woolgrower is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, my time has about expired. As long as I have the honor to be a Member of the American Congress, I shall raise my voice in the interests of the American farmer and stock raiser and for what I conceive to be his adequate recognition, and if I have been successful in affording any enlightenment as to his requirements in the hour that has been so generously accorded me, I shall not have spoken in vain. Since the wool industry, as well as many other of his products, is assaulted on the theory that raw material shall be duty free, and that in order to gradually reduce the tariff one industry may be made the dumping ground, I cite briefly some of the declarations of our national platforms and leaders of our party, showing that such legislation is emphatically repudiated. And these references show that it is you, my Democratic friends, who are departing from the faith of the fathers, not I.

President Jackson, in his first inaugural address, March 4, 1829, puts the question in these words:

With regard to a proper selection of the subjects of impost with a view to revenue, it would seem to me that the spirit of equity, caution, and compromise in which the Constitution was formed requires that the great interests of agriculture and manufactures should be equally favored. (Messages and Papers of the Presidents, vol. 11, p. 437.)

The first distinct effort to adopt the doctrine of raw materials of manufacturers was made in the Whig act of 1842, which act was condemned by leading Democrats at the time it was passed and resulted in the overthrow of the Whig Party and the passage of the act of 1846, variously called the Polk tariff and the Walker Act.

In speaking of the act of 1842, Mr. Calhoun said:

An examination of this bill will show that there is not an article manufactured in the country, nor one which might come into competition with one that is, which is not subject to high protective duties.

* * * * * * *

To this may be added that there is not a raw material scarcely on which manufacturers operate or any material which is necessary to the process of manufacturing which is not admitted free or subject to a very light one.

* * * * * * *

The bill, in short, is framed throughout with the greatest art and skill to exempt as far as possible one branch of industry from all burdens and shackles and to subject the other exclusively to them; and well may our political opponents raise their heads amidst their many defeats and exult at beholding a favorite measure—one above all others indispensable to their entire system of policy—about to be consummated.

The first Democratic national platform that was adopted by the national convention was in 1840, at Baltimore, Md., on May 5, and I quote verbatim from the platform:

4. Resolved, That justice and sound policy forbid the Federal Government to foster one branch of industry to the detriment of another, or to cherish the interests of one portion to the injury of another portion of our common country; that every citizen and every section of the country has a right to demand and insist upon an equality of rights and privileges. * * *

5. Resolved, That it is the duty of every branch of the Government to enforce and practice the most rigid economy in conducting our public affairs, and that no more revenue ought to be raised than is required to defray the necessary expenses of the Government.

And I emphasize the fact that the identical language verbatim et literatim was repeated in the Democratic platforms of 1844, 1848, 1852, and 1856.

The Whig platform adopted in Baltimore in May, 1844, favored "A tariff for revenue to defray the necessary expenses of the Government, and discriminating with special reference to the protection of the domestic labor of the country."

Upon this issue the Democrats elected James K. Polk as President in 1844. The first President elected after the first Democratic platform ever was made. Polk brought to the Presidency the widest experience on the tariff that any Democratic President has had before or since the war. He was 14 years a Member of this House, was 4 years Speaker of this House, was on the Ways and Means Committee, and he wrote more as President on the tariff than any other President has written, and I shall quote from his messages at considerable length for these reasons and the additional reason that he construed the first Democratic national platform that ever was made.

In his inaugural address March 4, 1845, among other things, he said:

The incidental protection afforded to our home interests by discriminations within the revenue range, it is believed, will be ample. In making discriminations all our home interests should as far as practicable be equally protected. The largest portion of our people are agriculturists. Others are employed in manufactures, commerce, navigation, and the mechanic arts. They are all engaged in their respective pursuits, and their joint labors constitute the national or home industry. To tax one branch of this home industry for the benefit of another would be unjust. No one of these interests can rightfully claim an advantage over the others or to be enriched by impoverishing the others. All are equally entitled to the fostering care and protection of the Government.

Let us pause a moment and ask ourselves what was meant by President James K. Polk when he said:

The term "protection to domestic industry" is of popular import, but it should apply under a just system to all the various branches of industry in our country. The farmer or planter who toils yearly in his fields is engaged in domestic industry, and he is as much entitled to have his labor protected as others.

Again, what did Andrew Jackson mean when he said:

The agricultural interest of our country is so essentially connected with every other, and is so superior in importance to them all, that it is scarcely necessary to invite to it your attention. * * * The general rule to apply in graduating duties upon articles of foreign growth or manufacture is that it will place our own in fair competition with those of other countries. * * *

And what did the Democratic platform of 1888 mean when it said:

Our established domestic industries and enterprises should not and need not be endangered by the reduction and correction of the burdens of taxation. On the contrary, a fair and careful revision of our tax laws, with due allowance for the difference between the wages of American and foreign labor, must promote and encourage every branch of such industries and enterprises by giving them assurance of an extended market and steady and continuous operations.

And that of 1896, which was equally impressive in its enunciation:

The duties to be so adjusted as to operate equally throughout the country and not distinguish between class or section.

And then in 1904, when it declared that such duties should be—so levied as not to discriminate against any industry, class, or section, to the end that the burden of taxation shall be distributed as equally as possible.

Now, my Democratic friends, let me ask you in all earnestness, in view of these plain, positive, and unequivocal utterances of the great minds of our party, what possible defense can you urge to the people of this country for your undisguised purpose to strike down at a single blow one of our greatest industries, in which over a million people are directly interested? As I have before indicated, it is not seriously claimed that under this present bill the American sheep grower will be afforded fair competition with the foreign grower; and I affirm that by no possible process of analysis is such a demonstration possible.

I am sorry I was not searched more thoroughly during this debate for further information to impart to you concerning this important industry, and especially with reference to the pecuniary situation of the woolgrowers of this country, and, at the expense of repeating what I said on this floor at the last session of Congress, I conclude by saying:

The wool feature of this bill is incomplete, inadequate, inequitable, and iniquitous. I reaffirm that it is unfair in its provisions and seemingly recklessly inconsiderate of the interests of that foundation of our national fabric—the American farmer.

If one can view with equanimity the situation of this forlorn flock master, I believe he could have witnessed without emotion the pressing of the crown of thorns upon the head of the Nazarene, the stretching of His body on the cross, the driving of each nail through His limbs, the dipping of the soldier's sponge into a tankard of vinegar mingled with gall, and the putting of it to His parched and quivering lips, and, following His last cry of agony, see deliberately scrawled above His head the words, "This is Jesus, the king of the Jews."

I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] five minutes of my time.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his generosity, but I have been informed that at 5 o'clock I shall be recognized for half an hour.

Mr. RUCKER of Colorado. The gentleman asked me for time and I was willing to yield it to him. I desire to reserve my five minutes, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, one proposing to discuss the questions presented by the two wool bills before the House at this time is confronted with some embarrassment, an embarrassment of riches. There is so much that might be properly said, the subject of the growth and manufacture of wool is so large, the matter presents itself in so many different ways, the industries affected are so vast and so diversified, the record of the Democratic Party on the subject is so extraordinary, that one scarcely knows how to approach the discussion having only a limited time to command.

One very pertinent inquiry at this time is, Does the Democratic Party really want to revise the wool schedule or are they simply using the schedule as an asset for the coming presidential campaign? The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle will, of course, plead not guilty, and yet all the circumstances of the case convict them.

A little less than a year ago they introduced and, under caucus dictation, passed through the House a facsimile of the bill they now present. That bill was amended in the Senate by a general increase in rates, and then came from conference a hybrid, which the President very properly vetoed. In his veto message the President made it plain that he would sign no wool bill that did not carry rates which would afford adequate protection to American woolgrowing and woolen-manufacturing industries.

The unanimous report of the Tariff Board on woolgrowing and woolen manufacture is now before us. It is thorough and complete. No one except the apologists of the Democratic bill has ventured to question the finding of the board as to facts, and the report clearly shows that the bill presented by the Democratic majority will not adequately protect our industries. In fact, it shows plainly that their bill will give such an advantage to the foreign competitors of our people as to destroy our industries. As the President will not sign such a bill, it is clear that the measure is not presented with the expectation that it will be enacted into law, and therefore the only purpose it can serve is to keep alive the agitation over Schedule K.

In striking contrast to the Democratic position is that of the Republicans of the House and those engaged in the industries affected. At no time has our party desired, or the industries affected expected, tariff rates higher than are necessary to enable American producers and manufacturers while paying American rates of wages to maintain their industries against foreign competition.

Three years of constant tariff agitation has been vastly harmful to the wool producers and woolen manufacturers alike. The wool producer has found his markets uncertain and his prices unsatisfactory. The manufacturer, buying his wool from hand to mouth, has been facing a curtailed and timid market, and both have suffered severe loss without any corresponding gain to the users of woolen goods.

In this condition both the wool raiser and those who use his product are anxious to have the matter settled, and, rather than have the present condition continue, are willing to accept a tariff rate which holds any reasonable promise of allowing them to continue in business.

Our party has, in its national platform, laid down a fair and reasonable measure of protection, and now that we have the facts from a fair and unbiased and unprejudiced source, we stand ready to apply the rule "that protection shall measure the difference in cost of production at home and abroad"; and on that measure of protection we are prepared to go to the country, confident that the American people do not desire and will not sanction the transfer of our woolgrowing and woolen-manufacturing industries to foreign shores.

The Democrats present a bill which, by placing an ad valorem rate of only 20 per cent of the foreign value on imported wool, will reduce the value of every pound of wool grown on American farms and prohibit the growing of all wools of the finer grades, a bill which carries such low rates on manufactures of wool as to close American mills and thus deprive the few growers of coarse wools who might survive of a market for their product.

The Republicans present a bill based on a report of the Tariff Board, but with rates placed at the very lowest protective point; so low indeed as to leave the growers of fine merino wools and the makers of fine woolens dangerously near the line of destructive foreign competition; and yet a bill under which it is hoped our wool and woolen industries can survive and, in the absence of tariff agitation, prosper. As between these two measures—the one brutally destructive, the other but barely protective—no one but those who are willing to raise the black flag of piracy against American farmers, ranchmen, and manufacturers can hesitate.

My first duty on this floor is to those who sent me here, the tens of thousands of men and women whose accumulations of a lifetime of toil and struggle are invested in the sheep and wool industry, and the other thousands who are largely dependent, directly and indirectly, on the prosperity of those industries; but they would not expect me to ask for them or on their behalf any opportunities the pursuit of which would not be useful, helpful, and beneficial to the country at large. They believe and know that in the long run the destruction of the industry in which they and many others throughout the land are engaged would be nothing short of a national calamity, and so believing, they do not expect to appeal in vain for such protection as will enable the industry to exist and prosper.

DIFFERENCES IN COST.

I shall support the Republican bill not because I think all its rates are safely protective, but because I believe it is the best measure of protection obtainable. I do not question the approximate accuracy of the rate fixed on wool—18 cents per pound on the scoured content of imported fleeces or 19 cents per pound on wool imported scoured, and amounting to about 36 per cent ad valorem on present foreign cost—as measuring the average difference in cost of producing wool at home and abroad, as shown by the Tariff Board, but it must be borne in mind that any rate based on averages may leave a considerable portion of the product without adequate protection; and the portion of our national wool clip thus left somewhat in jeopardy is the portion which comes largely from the region which I represent. Furthermore, the Tariff Board did not take into consideration at all certain factors of cost which are of vital importance. Most important in these are the differences in interest charges and in the cost of transporting wool to market. To reasonably cover the differences in these items of cost in the case of the so-called territorial wools, it would be necessary, in my opinion, to increase the rate on class 1 wool at least 2 cents above the rate contained in this bill.

Furthermore, the board does not take into consideration investments in lands, and we know that in the region from which our sharpest competition comes—Australia—the woolgrowers have practically no investments in land, whereas all American woolgrowers, those who produce the coarse mutton sheep and those who produce the territorial wools, have a large and, in the case of the latter, a constantly increasing investment in lands; and if this difference in investment were taken into consideration it would, in my opinion, necessitate a higher rate than the bill carries. And yet, as I said, I think the rate in the bill fairly measures the difference as set out by the Tariff Board.

Let us consider for a moment some of the items of difference in the cost of wool production at home and in some of the competing regions. I have some data compiled by the secretary of the National Woolgrowers' Association from the report of the Tariff Board. The following is given as the comparative labor cost to raise and handle a sheep:

Average labor cost per sheep.

United States	$0.82
South America	.23
Australia	.07

This labor cost per sheep does not include the cost of shearing, and the board finds that the labor cost of shearing is as follows:

Labor cost shearing, per sheep.

United States	$0.09½
Australia	.07
South America	.06
Africa	.02

In order that the relative importance of this item of labor in the expense of sheep husbandry may be fully appreciated, we submit a table showing the total labor cost, including shearing, of handling 52,000,000 sheep, or the full number in the United States.

Total labor cost, including shearing, of handling 52,000,000 sheep.

United States	$47,580,000
South America	15,080,000
Australia	7,280,000

In the matter of feed it should be remembered that the Tariff Board fixes the value of feed at the cost of production and not at its market price, and therefore there is no profit whatever in the feed that the sheep consume.

Cost to feed 52,000,000 sheep one year.

United States	$23,400,000
South America	18,200,000
Australia	4,160,000

Then we come to taxes. The wools with which our fine wools compete are, most of them, produced in a sparsely settled region having a cheap government and therefore low rates of taxation. All our Territorial wools are grown now in regions where, though there are very considerable areas that are very thinly settled, they are surrounded by and interspersed with thickly settled communities, communities that maintain schools and all of the agencies of government, and where the burden of taxation, by reason of the small amount of real estate that is taxable, is comparatively high. The rate of taxation per sheep is given as follows:

Taxes per sheep.

United States	$0.05
South America	.04
Australia	.025

Mr. LONGWORTH. What is the average rate of interest in your State?

Mr. MONDELL. The average rate of interest?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. RUCKER] I think stated it quite accurately a few moments ago. It depends at this time very much upon a man's indorser. A fair or low rate of interest in our region is 8 per cent.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A low rate?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes. In good times some of our sheepmen secure funds for less than 8 per cent. The average sheepman, I think—the small sheepman—pays more frequently about 10 per cent, and in times like this he is very glad indeed to get money at almost any rate. The gentleman from Ohio understands that just now we are passing through perhaps the most trying climatic experience that the territorial wool industry has ever known. We can not cure that with a tariff. It is not the fault of the tariff. Tariff agitation, which has reduced prices, has, however, intensified the hard conditions, and the passage of the Republican bill would help and hearten our people. It may be the fault of the Democratic House. I would not be at all surprised if it were a dispensation of Providence on that account. But we have had two exceedingly dry years. Winter before last was very severe. The winter a year ago was mild, but the past winter, which has lingered long, but is now happily passing away, has been, perhaps, the worst in the history of the Rocky Mountain country.

The Tariff Board has fixed the loss per annum of American sheep at 3 per cent. It seems to me that is quite low under any circumstances. The average loss to the flocks in my State in the past year has been, in my opinion, not much less than 20 per cent. I think that is a conservative statement. I hope it is less, but there are many who make it more. We can not provide by tariffs for losses of that kind. We do not expect any such provision. But I simply mention that to show the difficulties under which we labor in the production of our territorial wools. We meet a winter climate of a severity unknown in Australia or New Zealand; that is, our winters are much more severe, and then occasionally we suffer very nearly as badly as Australia does from severe droughts, although we have never had as severe a drought over so large an area as Australia has had once or twice in her history.

In addition to that, we suffer in the Rocky Mountain and plains country from losses by predatory wild animals, a cause from which the loss in Australia and New Zealand is very small indeed. These can not be measured in the differences of cost in a report of a Tariff Board, but yet they are all handicaps, making difficult the carrying on of the industry in that country.

The table I presented gives the taxes per head of sheep in the United States as 5 cents, 4 cents per head in South America, and 2½ cents in Australia. The 5 cents per head, given for the entire United States, is less than the average rate of taxes in my State for the last two or three years, based upon the investment carried with each sheep.

On this basis the taxes in the United States on 52,000,000 sheep would be $2,600,000, in South America $2,080,000, in Australia $1,300,000.

And so this increased cost runs all the way through, not only on items included in the report of the Tariff Board, but in others not taken into consideration by the Tariff Board at all, such as freight. The table which I have is as follows, and I hope I may have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who, I know, is familiar with this, and I think it is correct:

Freight on 1 pound of scoured wool from the grower's railroad station to Boston.

Western United States	$0.06
Australia	.03
South America	.0105
London, dock	.0025

The 11 Western States reviewed by the board produced, in 1911, 56,875,000 pounds of scoured wool, that cost in freight alone to market 6 cents per pound. For comparison we show in the following table what it cost the growers of these States to market their wool and what it would have cost the foreign growers in freight to market a similar quantity of scoured wool in Boston:

Freight cost to market 56,875,000 pounds of scoured wool.

11 Western States	$3,412,500.00
Australia	1,706,250.00
South America	597,187.00
England	142,187.50

These tables show that, in addition to the differences in cost indicated by the report of the Tariff Board, there are a number which are not taken into consideration and which, if taken into consideration, would considerably increase the rates that would be necessary in order to be fully protective as to the average territorial fleece of the country at least. And as high a rate at least would be necessary for the full protection of the fine merino fleeces of Ohio and Michigan.

The Republican bill is carefully and wisely drawn. It is perhaps the first wool tariff ever presented, all of the rates in which are clear and definite, with no ambiguity, no concealed rates. There are many most excellent things about the Republican bill. The form of the wool duty is the correct one. In my speech last year I said that, in my opinion, our wool duties should be levied on the scoured content of the wool. It is the only fair and equitable method of adjusting duties on wool; and while, in my opinion, the rate carried in this bill, as I have just stated, does not fully cover the difference in average cost of production between our foreign competitors and at least our western American woolgrowers, still it is in such a form that we will get the benefit of the full amount of the duty. Of course, if we had the actual protection which in theory we have under the present law it would be very much higher than this bill, but we never have had a protection of 33 cents on the scoured pound, which on the shrinkage of western wools is the theory of the present law. Why we have not had it is entirely familiar to all those who are acquainted with the wool business, and it is unnecessary for me to go into it in detail. But with the duty assessed on the scoured content the woolgrower in the United States will receive the full benefit of the duty in increased price and, in my opinion, the rate carried in this bill, at least if we can have an end of tariff agitation, will, in the running of the years, bring the American woolgrower a fairer and more adequate protection than he has had in the last 10 years.

Mr. STEENERSON. How much has he been getting in the last 10 years?

Mr. MONDELL. There is a great diversity of opinion with regard to just how much protection we have been getting. There have been limited periods of time when, in my opinion, we did not receive more than 2 or 3 cents for some clips of our Territorial wool above the price of a like Australian wool, with the duty added.

The wool business is the most peculiar in the world. It is a business with regard to which it is possible, in times of tariff agitation and uncertainty, to press the price of the domestic clip down almost to a free-trade basis, and I have known of clips—not many, but some—being sold in my country that did not, in my opinion, bring more than 2 or 3 cents above a free-trade basis.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is not one of the reasons the fact that the rate of interest is so high that very often the sheep raiser can not afford to hold his clip for a favorable market, but must sell it?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman understands the situation thoroughly. The rate of interest is high. The sheep business is oftentimes carried on to a considerable extent on credit. The buyer refuses to buy in times of agitation, but stands ready to pick up a clip that must be sold at a sacrifice, and under those conditions are able to secure them at times at but little above a free-trade basis.

Unfortunately that low rate is never reflected in the price which the ultimate consumer pays. If it was the people as a whole would benefit by our losses; but I doubt if the American people as a whole have benefited by the failure of the western woolgrower, the merino woolgrower, to receive the full amount he was expected to receive from the rate carried in our tariff laws.

I do not mean to say that our protection has always or generally been that low. In my opinion, we had been receiving on an average, and when there was not too much agitation, an actual protection of between 7 and 8 cents on the grease pound. Perhaps that is a rather high estimate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The price is quite low now, is it not?

Mr. MONDELL. The price is quite low; not as low as it is sometimes and not as high as it ought to be in order to give us anything like the benefit of the present tariff. Our flock masters are offered, I am told, between 16 and 17 cents for the average fleece at this time. Anyone who knows about foreign prices knows that is not high enough to cover the foreign cost of the same wool, adding the full amount of our duty.

There is one feature of the Republican bill that I want to refer to briefly in passing, not in the way of criticism, but because, as it is true that no piece of legislation is ever absolutely perfect when first presented, I want to offer a suggestion of possible slight amendment. While I admit I may be mistaken, I am rather inclined to think that the rate carried in the bill on noils and waste is rather too low, rather dangerously low. I think the rate on tops is a little low. On the basis of the wool rate in the bill, I would increase the rate on tops 1 or 2 cents and the rate on noils possibly more. I think the rate on roving waste and ring waste is pretty low. On carbonized and uncarbonized noils it is rather dangerously low. We are quite as much interested in the rate on tops and noils as we are in the rate on wool, because if these rates are by comparison lower than the wool rates tops and noils will be largely imported and our actual protection lowered.

AN AMAZING DOCUMENT.

Now, having said some things about our bill, I want for a few moments to pay some attention to the amazing document which the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee present with their bill. I am very glad, indeed, to have learned from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] that the document was not prepared by the members of the committee, but by some one from New York known as "The Professor." I am only too happy to have the gentlemen relieved from all responsibility for it, even though they signed it, for I have no personal grudge against them. In some respects it is the most amazing document I think I ever read. As a combination of fiction, garbled figures, lame logic, and misstatement of fact, it is a gem.

I can not believe that the 14 majority members of the Ways and Means Committee ever read it, for I can not conceive how it is possible that any intelligent man could ever read that precious document and put his name to it. I will guarantee that any intelligent American citizen—I do not care what he calls himself, Democrat, Republican, Socialist, or what not—that reads that report will say that the man who wrote it did not know what he was writing about, and that the men that signed it ought to be ashamed of themselves. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I wish I had the time in the few moments at my disposal to go over this extraordinary document and point out some of its peculiarities. I hope that everybody will read it. It ought to be widely read to illustrate the kind of document that the Democratic majority will put forth in support of its measure. A party that hopes to win anywhere or any time by such a garbled mass of misstatements certainly misjudges the intelligence of the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.]

However, that report is not very much more remarkable than the speech made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] in support of this bill. The only reason why practically every statement that he made will not appear in the RECORD as challenged is entirely due to the fact that the gentleman declined to allow anybody to interrupt him. Had they been given an opportunity gentlemen on this side would have successfully challenged practically every important statement made by him in the course of his speech.

How about this document? In 70 dreary pages it lays down and argues several propositions, as follows: First, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] yesterday, that "to ascertain the difference in cost of production at home and abroad is impossible."

Second. That if the comparative cost of production were possible of reasonably accurate ascertainment it would not furnish a guide to the proper amount of duty needed for protective purposes.

Third. That assuming it were possible to approximate the difference in cost of production at home and abroad, and that such approximation were a proper guide in determining the amount of duty needed to insure reasonable protection, that the researches of the board have not been such as to secure the facts, and that the report is fragmentary, inaccurate, illogical, and based on assumption or erroneous figures.

The 14 majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, no one of whom can qualify as an expert on or as even being familiar with the production, handling, or manufacture of wool, having thus demolished the work of the experts of the Tariff Board, proceed in an involved and labored effort to prove, by the very report they have attempted to discredit, that the rates fixed in their bill afford ample protection to the industries affected.

Evidently the incongruity of the position thus assumed never occurred to the gentlemen who signed the report. The most charitable view we can take of the matter is that they never read the report and therefore do not know the position they have assumed, for in the only part of the report which bears any evidence of having been considered, the first two pages, it is stated that the rates in the former bill, of which this is an exact copy, "were fixed without any reference whatever to protection." What an amazing circumstance it is that rates fixed a year ago without any reference to protection should now prove, according to the framers of those rates, to afford just the amount of protection needed, according to a report which the same gentlemen declared to be "inaccurate, erroneous, and fragmentary" and "based on false premises."

What does this all mean? It means that the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have not the courage of their convictions. They are free traders masquerading under the misnomer of a tariff for revenue, and yet in defense of the very bill that was framed "without regard to its effect on industries," they attempt to screen themselves behind the claim that this bill will not be totally destructive of industries. They begin to hear the rumbling of the storm which will sweep their free-trade camp in November.

But to return to that charming report signed by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee. I commend it to all lovers of pure fiction. It contains more misinformation, doubling and crossing itself at more angles, than any work of an untrammeled imagination I have ever had the pleasure of reading.

After boldly misquoting the report of the Tariff Board in an effort to prove that much of the wool product of our country needs no protection and the bulk of it no more than the amount carried in their bill, they then proceed, on pages 43 and 44 of their report, to juggle the figures in an attempt to prove that the Ohio and Michigan fine merinos need so much more than they can hope to secure that there is no help for them.

These paragraphs on the wools of the Ohio region are obscure, involved, and full of errors and inaccuracies, and yet out of it all are involved conclusions which flatly contradict the arguments and conclusions which precede them, to wit, that the fine merino wool of the Ohio region must have a tariff rate of 28 or 29 cents per scoured pound, or at least 55 per cent ad valorem, in order to be adequately protected. Let us see how this works out.

The cost charge against the Ohio fleece, according to the Tariff Board, which our friends seem to accept when it serves their purpose to do so, is 19 cents. The cost charge against the Territorial fine wool, according to the Tariff Board, which they also seem to accept, is 12 cents. The Territorial cost is therefore approximately 60 per cent of the Ohio cost. If the Ohio wools need a rate of 28 or 29 cents on the scoured pound or 55 per cent ad valorem, as our Democratic friends say they do, then the Teritorial wools, in order to be protected, must have 60 per cent of those rates, or about 17½ cents on the scoured pound, or 33 per cent on an ad valorem basis—very nearly the rates carried in the Republican bill.

Thus we find that the Democratic report which at one point, in an effort to justify the Democratic bill, claims that a duty of 20 per cent will be amply protective for the Territorial wools; at another point, in an effort to discourage the Ohio and Michigan raisers of wool, claims that a rate of nearly twice the amount carried in their bill, and almost the rate carried in the Republican bill, is necessary to protect the Territorial fleeces.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

The fact is that the Democratic majority started out last year on this wool-tariff revision with the free traders in full control and insistent on free wool; but the clamor of wool-producing Texas and some districts in the Ohio Valley they hoped to control caused them to halt. They excused their departure from free trade in wool by the mendacious fiction of a depleted Treasury. In the hope of putting the President "in a hole," as they expressed it, they accepted rates in conference which, according to their declarations, were unjustifiable. Their hybrid, conceived, as they admitted, in absolute disregard of its effects on industries, and completed, so far as they were concerned, for no other purpose than to secure political advantage, met the fate it deserved in a presidential veto.

Then came the report of the Tariff Board flatly contradicting every argument they had made in support of their bill, showing that the American wool industry must have a very considerable protection in order to survive and that while some of the rates on woolen goods were unnecessarily high an intense competition among American manufacturers kept the prices down to a point which, in the majority of instances, marked almost exactly the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

In this condition of affairs, if we are correctly informed, consternation reigned in the Democratic camp. The free traders had had their way with regard to the sugar schedule, even to the certain destruction of a great industry. No doubt they insisted that there was ever more reason why they should have their way in the matter of the wool tariff, for are not woolen garments even more essential than sugar? On the other hand, the gentlemen on the other side who represented wool districts insisted that the report of the Tariff Board made it so clear that the industry must be protected in order to survive that they could not excuse themselves in voting for free wool, and so a compromise was struck on the old, discredited bill of last year.

Of course, they realized how desperate was the situation which confronted them. They must discredit the report of the Tariff Board in order to defend their bill from any standpoint. They must accept and exaggerate the report of the Tariff Board touching certain coarse wools in the vain hope of calming the fears of growers of coarse wool in the southern and eastern portions of the country.

They must accept certain figures of the Tariff Board and discredit others in a vain attempt to prove that the Territorial wools do not require any more protection than the 20 per cent carried in their bill, and they must juggle and confuse and misquote the report of the Tariff Board in an effort to prove to the growers of fine wools in Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Virginia, and elsewhere that, so far as they are concerned, the jig is up anyway; they can not hope or expect, even under the Republican bill, an adequate protection; and all the time that the Democratic band is playing these conflicting and discordant notes the free-trade bass drum is pounding away on the dominant note in this Democratic House, as voiced by the gentleman from Alabama in his speech on the sugar bill, that no protective tariff is justifiable from a Democratic standpoint, emphasized by the notice served on the producers of fine wool in Ohio and elsewhere that if they can not do business under free trade they had better go into some other line of industry.

That is the best that the American farmer engaged in the raising of sugar cane and the raising of sugar beets, millions of them on the farms of the United States engaged in the raising of sheep—that is the best they can get from a Democratic Congress. They virtually say to them, "If you can not prosper in the business you are now in under free trade, go into some other business."

MERINO VERSUS COARSE-WOOL SHEEP.

And this brings me to the consideration of a feature of the wool question in regard to which the Democratic majority, with its astounding lack of knowledge on the subject, is hopelessly in error, and touching which some others even better informed seem to have entertained curious notions. On page 10 of its letter of submittal the Tariff Board states among its findings:

That in the States east of the Missouri River wool production is incidental to general farming. Here producers, with the exception of certain-named districts, lay more stress upon the output of the mutton than of wool, and in such cases the receipts from the sale of sheep and lambs ordinarily cover the flock expense, leaving the wool for profit.

The Democratic majority assume from this statement that the woolgrowers referred to need no tariff protection, and, as a matter of fact, in figuring the average requirement of protection, this has to a certain extent been assumed to be the case; but such is not the case by any manner of means, and nothing in the report of the Tariff Board justifies such a conclusion. It is true that in the districts named, good markets for mutton being easily accessible and therefore the net receipts per pound relatively high, the board finds that these receipts for mutton ordinarily cover the flock expense, leaving the wool as a profit and the only profit.

What is going to happen to this profit if you reduce the receipts from that wool to a free-trade basis? The price received for wool under reasonable protection is sufficient to make it profitable to remain in the business; but reduce that profit, which is the only profit, by a third or a half and the grower of coarse-wool sheep can no more afford to remain in business, except in certain particularly favored localities, than can the grower of fine-wool sheep in the West. The investment continues the same; the cost of caring for and feeding the sheep is not reduced, and yet it is assumed that you may reduce by half or a third what is at present only a fair return on the investment at best and still have those people continue in the business of growing sheep. There is only one way in which it could possibly be accomplished, and that would be through an increase in the price of mutton. If anybody can figure out how the public at large would be benefited by shifting the profit from wool to mutton they are entitled to a membership on the majority side of the Ways and Means Committee. [Applause on the Republican side.]

A still more profound and dangerous fallacy is contained in the assumption that all the Ohio and Michigan and Territorial growers of fine wool need to do to make their business profitable under a lower tariff rate, or no rate at all, is to change from merino to cross-bred or coarse-wool sheep. So far as the Territorial wools are concerned, the change is largely an impossible one, as I will point out later. If it were possible it would not necessarily decrease to a very considerable extent the cost of wool production, for the apparent higher cost of wool production in those regions is not largely due to the type of sheep or class of wool.

All of the regions in which the Tariff Board reports a high charge against the fleece are regions where a large number of sheep are produced. Where there are but few sheep to the farm the actual cost, or apparent cost, of producing the wool may be negligible. Where sheep are produced in large numbers and become an item of importance on the farm or ranch, the actual cost of care and maintenance is a matter of sufficient importance to demand and receive attention, and the flocks, not being a mere incident to the general business, requiring little attention, consuming little but waste material, as in cases where there are but few on a farm, do require and receive attention, the cost of which is appreciated, do consume feed, the value of which is known and understood. And so in the Ohio Valley where the flocks are of considerable size and the industry of large importance the animals, whatever the breed may be, must have the care and attention of men paid good wages, must have feed which would otherwise be marketed, and while a change to crossbred sheep or to the straight, coarse-wool breeds would bring a larger return per animal in mutton the return in wool would not be increased, the amount of feed consumed per animal would be increased, and the situation would not be far different from what it is now.

THE TERRITORIAL WOOLS.

On the Great Plains and in the Rocky Mountains, from Canada to Mexico, the region which produces the so-called Territorial wools, a shifting from the Merino type to the coarse-wool sheep is in the main impossible. In that region the great majority of the flocks are not under fence, but are herded on the open range, utilizing the mountains and high lands in the summer and the plains and the valleys in the winter. The merino is the only type of sheep that can be successfully herded in large bands; the coarse-wool sheep scatter hither and yon, break up into small bands or stray singly, thus escaping from the herders to wander through the hills and become the prey of predatory animals. Crossbreeding with the coarser-wool sheep is common, but there must be frequent reversions to the merino type to secure an animal that can be successfully herded.

Furthermore, the merino type is by far the best adapted to the dry summers, cold winters, and rough mountain pastures of that region. In favored localities the coarse-wool sheep can be successfully grown, and crosses are and will continue to be common, but in the main the merino type must prevail, for we can not change the climate or the topography of the country, and unless we radically change our land policy we can not have the enormous fenced pastures in the forest reserves, in the hills, and on the plains, such as they have in Australia and largely in South America.

The ridiculous character of the Democratic suggestion, that in search of a wool more cheaply produced we abandoned the merino type, is shown when we consider that of the approximately 52,000,000 of sheep in the United States in 1910, 69 per cent were half-blood merinos as above, 52 per cent being nearly full bloods. Even in what the board calls the fleece country—all the region east of the Mississippi, and Minnesota, Iowa, and Missouri—the percentage of sheep of half merino blood and above is 31. The wool of all such sheep is of the merino type. The fact is that pure-bred coarse-wool sheep, except in breeding flocks, are rare in any part of our country.

THE MERINO SHEEP.

Even if we could change from the merino type in the Ohio Valley and in the West and grow only the coarse-wool sheep in this country, the change would be a national calamity and one everlastingly discreditable to the good sense and judgment of the American people. Not only does the merino type of sheep produce the only wool in the world that can be used in the manufacture of woolens, but it is essential for the finer grades of worsted. American wool of merino blood grown in the Ohio Valley, as well as some grown in the Territorial regions, is the strongest fine wool in the world. Our Army and Navy Departments do not insist upon the use of American merino wool in the manufacture of cloth for Army and Navy uniforms for purely patriotic reasons, but because there is no wool in the world that will make the cloths they need of such strength and wearing quality as the American merino wools. [Applause on the Republican side.]

THE QUESTION CONFRONTING US.

The question presented at this time is after all not one of rates, but of policy. How long and to what extent will the country support a party that by its representatives in the popular branch of Congress declares war on American industries? At the very moment that they cry that no American industry need fear their legislation they are proposing legislation that they must know and do know will cripple and destroy industries. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RANDELL] warns his party against the poison of protection. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] refers to those engaged in the wool industry as "mendicants," and jokes about the meager returns they have been receiving, as shown by the report of the Tariff Board. The gentleman from Alabama says that no industry in this country has any claim to tariff protection. Surely such utterances as these and the legislation which is proposed makes it clear that no man whose industry needs protection, no man who believes in the policy of protection, even in its mildest form, has anything to hope for from the Democratic Party.

One after another they present their tariff bills. Each one proposes deadly breaches in our tariff walls. Each proposes to transfer to foreign shores a portion of our industries. Each would, if enacted into law, deprive large numbers of our people of employment. Taken together, they would take us back to the condition we experienced under the Wilson bill, when no industry but the soup house flourished. No one had profitable and steady employment but the sheriff and the auctioneer. Will the American people stand for it? I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Chairman, by some sort of incantation of wizardry or magic a large number of the people of the United States were led for many years to believe that a protective tariff gave an increased price to the manufacturer who sold the goods and at the same time a low price to the consumer who bought them. This paradoxical tariff problem was enough to give any man a brain paralysis, and the people, in contemplating that problem, made more complex by the intricacies of the Payne-Aldrich tariff, engaged in the revolt which has brought about the great change in this House. Specious arguments fell at length before the awakened consciousness of the American people—that they were paying dearly for the benefit of the favored few.

I want to say to my friends on the other side that, coming from Rhode Island, which is a veritable hive of industry, I believe in protection [applause on the Republican side]; but, lest my friends on the Democratic side should for a moment think I am getting off the reservation, let me assure them that I believe in protection to the American consumer. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the manufacturers have had more protection than they needed and that it is now ample time for Congress to pay attention to the needs of the millions of consumers instead of the century-fattened interests.

We have been told repeatedly that we were absolutely ignorant if we challenged the statement that the tariff tax was not paid by the consumer, and if we denied that it came from high heaven itself—this protection theory—we were charged with dereliction in patriotic duty. The people now know that the need for this Tariff Board, of which we have heard so much, was not discovered by the Republican Party until the expressed verdict at the polls by the people showed that they wanted the tariff to be revised downward in their favor. Then we were treated to the suggestion of a Tariff Board cunningly calculated to act as a stay of execution of the popular mandate and the popular judgment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

We owe the present tariff largely to the Senator from my State—now the ex-Senator—to Senator Aldrich and "his languid disciples of the Finance Committee," who, in framing their tariff bill, listened to the claims and to the entreaties of the manufacturers of this country and paid but little heed to the needs and the necessities and the demands of the people. What shall we say in condemnation of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill if, contemplating what was said of the Dingley bill by a Philadelphia manufacturer, "We have paid for it, and it is ours," we consider its even more indefensible character? If they paid for the Dingley bill, they must have doubly paid for the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill.

The Republican Party is facing a situation which was prophesied by a man for whose memory I have the highest respect—one of those insurgent Republicans whose conception of duty to the public interest was as high as heaven itself—Senator Dolliver; and he warned the Republican Party of the coming storm when he said:

> If you want a tariff agitation to begin the moment this bill is made a law you have pursued a wise and proper course.

He further said on August 5, 1909:

> I have but a few more years in this world. I sometimes have been willing to deceive myself for the sake of the comfort which comes from the society and the good will of others; but I do not propose now to become a party to a petty swindle of the American people without telling them the truth and without appealing to their good will and their confidence in the integrity of my motives.

And when the Dingley rates were raised, another Republican Senator, also of the insurgent stripe, said:

> They are endeavoring to make billionaires of millionaires.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

And now we have the spectacle of the Republican Party making a bold attempt to hoodwink the people by the report of a spineless and powerless Tariff Board. Speaking of this woolen Schedule K, I can only say that they drew the wool over the eyes of the people, but when the people listened to the enlightened reasoning and the appealing force of the Democratic Party, the wool was quickly lifted, and that lifting resulted in the great change in this House, now dominated by the Democratic Party earnestly endeavoring to do delayed justice to the consumer, and not forgetful of the legitimate needs of our manufacturers.

What need was there for a Tariff Board to inform Congress that the tariff rate of 91 per cent on cheap cotton stockings, 100 per cent on cotton underwear, 78 per cent on sugar, 136 per cent on woolen blankets, 154 per cent on women's dress goods, 121 per cent on flannels, 96 per cent on shawls, and rates in like proportion on other necessaries were too high and should be reduced at once? The Republican plan has compelled the masses of the American people to go through another winter, awaiting the pleasure of this board, before even getting a promise of reduction of these unconscionable rates.

And the percentage which labor receives upon the gross product in the textile industry is 19.5 per cent!

The financial loss to the people has been $50,000,000 by reason of Republican delay through its Tariff Board. The President had his opportunity to give the people relief; they cried out for cheaper clothing and food; he gave them veto messages and subtle disquisitions on tariff commissions.

Speaking of the profit made for the manufacturer through the instrumentality of this Payne-Aldrich tariff, and especially of this infamous Schedule K, characterized by the President as indefensible, if it were the profits of the woolen manufacturers that alone were at stake, the American people could take care of these at a much smaller cost than the present tariff imposes on them. If the woolen duties were removed altogether, the American people could afford to pay the American woolen manufacturers every year a sum equal to their annual profits, and then would save tens of millions of dollars as compared with what the woolen tariff is now costing them. The schedule is based on a lie. Here is Senator LA FOLLETTE'S proof of this statement, taken from his speech in the Senate on July 26, 1911:

> Now, Mr. President, when the manufacturer and the grower came together in agreement, and when Schedule K was first constructed—right at the very outset they agreed upon a false standard by which to measure compensatory duties.
>
> The manufacturers persuaded the Congress that adopted that scheme of legislation that it took 2½ pounds of wool in the grease to make a pound of yarn worth not to exceed 30 cents per pound. That is false. That is not true. We know to-day, if we have cared to look into it, that on the average it does not take to exceed a pound and a half of wool in the grease to make a pound of yarn worth not to exceed 30 cents per pound. They had that false basis incorporated in the law; it was made a part of the statute, that yarn worth 30 cents a pound or less should take a compensatory duty equal to the duty on 2½ pounds of first-class wool. That means it will take a duty, when computed on the 11-cent-a-pound basis, of 27½ cents. They persuaded the Ways and Means Committee to believe that it took 2½ pounds of that kind of grease wool, which paid a duty of 11 cents a pound, to make a pound of yarn of the 30-cent-per-pound grade. It does not. That falsehood, Mr. President, was written into the law, and we have been paying duties on that false basis ever since.
> Now, what does it take? Decisions of the Treasury Department on drawback propositions show that on the average it takes a pound and a half of wool in the grease of the first class to make a pound of yarn worth 30 cents per pound.
> This "compensatory" duty, therefore, of 27½ cents per pound gives an excess compensatory duty of 11 cents on every single pound of yarn valued at 30 cents—in other words, that duty of 27½ cents levied on all yarn worth 30 cents or less per pound, on the theory that it takes 2½ pounds of wool in the grease to make it, gives an advantage to the wool manufacturer of this country of 11 cents on every pound of that grade of yarn, which, figured on an ad valorem basis, shows the duty to be 40 per cent in excess of what actually measures the difference in the cost of raw material. Then, in addition to that, they secured the protective duty that they contended was necessary to measure the difference in the cost of production in this and competing foreign countries.

Coming from Rhode Island, I am pleased to speak upon this subject, because down there we have an organization known as the Tariff Publicity League, which sprang up into very active being in our last gubernatorial campaign. Every dead wall and every fence in the State of Rhode Island, and the morning and evening editions of the newspapers, were plastered with its advertisements, hurling anathemas upon OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, and of course consigning me to perdition because I was one of his humble followers. They were very bold in their advertisements, but they were cowardly enough never to disclose their names or their identities. They covered the State with these advertisements, working on the fears of the people employed in the mills, and saying that such and such a mill would close if the Underwood bill should pass; that such and such a mill was tottering to its very foundations, simply because Mr. UNDERWOOD had introduced the bill.

Now, I had occasion to go down into one of the mill towns in Rhode Island, and I asked the people in that town, "What about this mill whose owner says it has closed by virtue of the agitation started by the Underwood bill?" The information was handed back to me that that very mill had been closed for two long years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They advertised the fact that some Central Falls mill closed for tariff reasons, and I discovered the fact that it was never closed for tariff reasons, but that it was closed on account of worn-out machinery. I do not believe any tariff tax should be substituted for worn-out machinery in order to make a mill run and in order to make it pay. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

It is profitable at this time to consider that out of the 90,000,000 people in the United States at the time of the passage of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill there were only 5 per cent directly interested financially in maintaining the exorbitant tariff on woolen goods, and of those 5 per cent perhaps less than 1 per cent got 95 per cent of the spoils. And yet every citizen must have woolen garments and blankets. Thus it is that the vast majority of the people pay tribute to the syndicate of greed, and this iniquitous trust which forces shoddy upon the workers of our land instead of good woolen cloth has caused to be added to the silent occupants of our cemeteries thousands of victims.

In Rhode Island we have an abundance of child labor, and if a man will study the Rhode Island statistics he will learn some interesting things. These statistics are gotten up by Republicans, and no Democrat has had, or perhaps ever will have, a chance to participate in the making of them, owing to the archaic constitution of Rhode Island and its rotten borough system which denies representative government to the people.

When these statistics are studied, we find an absence of the vaunted prosperity of which we hear so much. Would that we had an abundance of prosperity. I would like to see Rhode Island overflowing with milk and honey by reason of this protective tariff, but it is not. I want to call your attention to these facts: In the industrial statistics of Rhode Island for 1908, compiled entirely by Republican hands, and therefore the more to be quoted by Democrats, we note the wages paid in the textile industries to be $8 to $9 a week for men in cotton goods; $9 to $10 a week in cotton small wares; $8 to $9 a week in dyeing and finishing textiles; $11 to $12 a week in hosiery and knit goods; $9 to $10 a week in silk and silk goods; and $10 to $11 a week in worsted and woolen goods.

In those same statistics are more significant columns which tell the story of how the people of Rhode Island, working in the mills, are able to keep body and soul together. It is a sordid story. It is a story that appeals to human sympathy. It is a story that makes us feel that there ought to be some remedy, and some way by which the American workingman, seeking to keep his family in comfort, seeking to provide for them the ordinary necessities of life, should not be compelled to drive his wife into the mill and to drive his child into the mill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But those statistics tell the story. They tell it more eloquently than any man could tell it. They tell the story of how the women receive $6 to $7 a week and the little children $3 to $4 a week in the mill. In a further investigation, conducted in November and December, 1910, by Republican officials, it was found that the wages paid were absolutely unsuited to proper family support unless other members of the family assisted the chief breadwinner. It was shown that a large number of families containing more than three persons are living on less than $10 a week, and that the much-vaunted prosperity of New England mill operatives is made up, not by decent wages paid to any one individual, but by the combined earning capacity of practically the entire household who have come to the age where they are able to work. I believe that the average wage is about $409 a year, and some one in Rhode Island challenged me one night and said, "Is not that a decent wage for an American workingman? What would you have him receive? See what he does with his money and how he builds homes." And when I figured out that $409 a year was $7.80 a week, I concluded that if they had built homes they must have been made a present of the lumber.

I will here incorporate in my remarks the tables sustaining what I have said. These tables are taken from the Twenty-second Annual Report of the Commissioner of Industrial Statistics, pages 376 and 377, made to the Rhode Island General Assembly at its January session in 1909:

Considering tariff commissions, it is well to consider the Tariff Commission of 1883 and its work. This Tariff Commission of 1883 traveled 7,000 miles, visited 29 cities, examined more than 600 witnesses, took 2,625 pages of testimony, and then recommended a reduction of tariff duties of from 20 per cent to 25 per cent. Of course, their recommendations were disregarded, and in the tariff bill that was subsequently framed there was a substitution of specific for ad valorem rates, and the revision was so cunningly performed that in the end higher duties were enacted than had been in the old tariff bill. After the labors of the commission and the work of the Finance Committee in considering the bill based on their recommendations, the cotton manufacturers appeared before the committee and told them what they wanted, and their orders were obeyed. That brings me to the consideration of the present Tariff Commission, whose existence hangs by a very slender thread. A few lines in the Payne-Aldrich tariff law are responsible for its existence. The commissioners are personally appointed by the President, and answer to him and not to Congress.

Now, I want to call your attention to what the chairman of this board said at a banquet in New York on the 8th of December, 1910. This information I get from the Worcester Evening Post of September 1, 1911. I think it is well worth listening to. On this occasion Chairman Emery said:

> There are certain things that are very difficult to get, and one thing that according to the platform of the Republican Party—and incidentally that does not mean anything to me except that I have been given the job according to that platform—is to try to get the cost of production. I thank you all, gentlemen, that you did not laugh. [Laughter.] I frankly say right here that this idea of settling things on cost alone by any mathematical or algebraical or geometric ratio or problem or theory is all nonsense. You must not think I am joking about this thing, but there is a joke about it, and the joke is this: I have no power whatsoever. The Tariff Board has no power. There is really no such thing as a Tariff Board. The law says that for certain purposes the President may employ such persons as he sees fit. I am one of such persons. That is all.

This is the Tariff Board that had no right, no power, no authority to go into the factories and get the information in the way that it ought to be obtained. What credence is to be placed in the statement of a manufacturer who, listening to the humble petition of the Tariff Board commissioner, gives him some off-hand information? That manufacturer ought to be put under oath, and every book in the establishment ought to be open to the careful examination of the tariff commissioners, and under this law no such thing was done. And a real tariff commission would inquire about wages, and the capital stock, and the dividends paid, and the water in the stock, the dividends on which were being ground out of the souls and bodies of underpaid men, anemic women, and starving children.

I want to introduce at this time a succinct history of Schedule K. Here it is:

[Revised and reprinted from Worcester Evening Post, Sept. 1, 1911.]

A HISTORY OF SCHEDULE K.

April, 1866: The woolgrowers and wool manufacturers meet at Washington, D. C., and recommend to Congress a tariff on wool and wool goods.

March 2, 1867: A Republican Congress passes a woolen tariff law substantially the same as that recommended the year before by the woolgrowers and manufacturers.

January, 1880: Agitation for a revision of the tariff. The National Woolgrowers' Association opposes any change in Schedule K, but favors a tariff commission.

February, 1880: The president and secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers interview the President of the United States and obtain assurances as to the personnel of the new tariff commission.

March, 1880: The National Association of Wool Manufacturers recommends the passage of the tariff-commission bill without amendment.

July, 1880: The National Association of Wool Manufacturers circulates among manufacturers a petition which says:

"That the manufacturer should have a protective duty sufficient to offset the high cost of labor, interest, and taxes; that the present tariff (Schedule K) should continue until special and minute information from experts shall indicate the changes that can safely be made; that the best method of obtaining the required information is through the Eaton Tariff Commission."

May 15, 1882: A tariff commission authorized by act of Congress.

May, 1882: John L. Hayes, secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, appointed president of the Tariff Commission. Later he is made chairman of the subcommittee to prepare the woolen and worsted schedules.

1882: John L. Hayes, secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers and president of the United States Tariff Commission, addresses, as secretary, the tariff commission of which he is president, and recommends a schedule of duties on woolens.

December, 1882: Report of the tariff commission sent to Congress.

March 3, 1883: Tariff bill passed increasing some rates in Schedule K and making reductions that did not help the consumer.

October 1, 1890: The McKinley bill is passed by a Republican Congress increasing duties on wool goods. The duty on worsted tops manufactured by William Whitman, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, is made equal to the duty on finished cloths.

August 27, 1894: The Wilson bill, passed by a Democratic Congress, becomes a law, revising Schedule K, with free wool and ad valorem duties on goods.

March, 1897: S. N. D. North, secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, is admitted to the secret sessions of the Senate Finance Committee during the framing of the Dingley bill. On April 4, 1897, Secretary North writes to William Whitman:

"I am the only person whom the committee allows in its meetings."

June 2, 1897: William Whitman writes to Secretary North, who is attending the tariff sessions of the Finance Committee:

"We all depend upon you to watch closely our interests."

July 10, 1897: William Whitman writes to Secretary North, who is attending the tariff sessions of the Finance Committee:

"I depend on you, dress goods, yarns, and tops."

July 25, 1897: The Dingley bill, with Schedule K practically unchanged, becomes a law.

1898: The National Association of Wool Manufacturers presents $5,000 to S. N. D. North, its secretary, for services in connection with the revision of the tariff.

June, 1908: Agitation for a revision of the tariff. The Republican national convention at Chicago pledges the party to revise the tariff to equal the difference between the foreign and domestic cost of production plus a profit. This is practically the same as the proposition laid down by the National Association of Wool Manufacturers in July, 1880, for the revision of the tariff.

September 26, 1908: William H. Taft, Republican candidate for President, makes the following pledge in a speech at St. Paul:

"I am here to plight the faith of the Republican Party, in accordance with its platform, that the revision will be honest and exact, according to the measure stated in the platform."

October 15, 1908: Seven men from the National Wool Growers' Association, and five men headed by William Whitman, from the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, meet at the Palmer House in Chicago, and adopt a resolution that—

"In the coming revision of the tariff the present duties, both on wool and woolen goods, be maintained without reduction."

May 4, 1909: Senator Dolliver in the Senate begins the insurgent attack on Schedule K.

August 5, 1909: A Republican Congress passes and President Taft signs the Payne-Aldrich bill, which leaves Schedule K practically unchanged.

September 17, 1909: President Taft, at Winona, Minn., makes the following confession that it was impossible to revise Schedule K, because of the combine of woolgrowers and wool manufacturers:

"Mr. PAYNE, in the House, and Mr. Aldrich, in the Senate, found that in the Republican Party the interests of the woolgrowers of the far West and the interests of the woolen manufacturers in the East and in other States, reflected through their Representatives in Congress, were sufficiently strong to defeat any attempt to change the woolen tariff, and that had it been attempted it would have beaten the bill reported from either committee. * * * Allowing the woolen schedule to remain where it is is not a compliance with the terms of the platform as I interpret it."

April 8, 1910: William Whitman, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, before the Massachusetts Cost of Living Commission, says:

"I do not know any reason why President Taft should know any more about the wool tariff than does the gentleman who recently refused to receive Mr. Roosevelt."

August 20, 1910: President Taft, in a letter to Congressman WILLIAM B MCKINLEY, states that—

"The precise difference in the cost of production sought for is not capable of definite ascertainment" and "all that even the most scientific person can do is to exercise his best judgment in reaching a conclusion."

October 17, 1910: William Whitman, president of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, spends four hours with the Tariff Board at Washington and then issues the following statement:

"I opposed the Tariff Commission very strongly, but the Tariff Board is a very different thing. I want to do what I can to show my appreciation of President Taft. I believe he means well and is doing well, and I am ready to meet him half way."

February 1, 1911: Banquet of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers at Washington, attended by 35 stand-pat Senators and Representatives, and two members of the Tariff Board, Chairman Emery and J. B. Reynolds. William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Co., said on this occasion:

"If all the schedules of the tariff were as well balanced as Schedule K it would be the most remarkable document, next to the Constitution of the United States, that the human mind has ever produced."

August 15, 1911: Passage of the Underwood-La Follette bill to revise Schedule K, and providing for duties of 29 per cent on wool and 49 per cent on wool goods.

August 16, 1911: President Taft vetoes the Underwood-La Follette bill to revise Schedule K on the ground that the Tariff Board has not yet reported.

This history of Schedule K, which we have now brought down to date, suggests the question: How long are the people to be burdened by legislation for the special interests of woolgrowers and worsted manufacturers? Is the woolen tariff of 1867, made more indefensible by each Republican revision, now to have a new lease of life? Particular attention is invited to the similarity of the conditions now and in 1882, nearly 30 years ago.

Then, as now, the people were clamoring for relief from a burdensome tariff.

Then, as now, the proposition was advanced by the standpatters to revise the tariff on a basis of the difference between the foreign and domestic cost of production.

Then, as now, the standpatters urged that the only right way was to refer the question to a commission.

Then, as now, a tariff commission or board was formed.

Then the Tariff Commission fell under the influence of the special interests.

Has that occurred now?

Then the result was a revision of the tariff which gave the consumer no relief.

Is that what is in store for us now? The people must decide.

Speaking of wages, I have an important table here which I think will interest you. We have been told that under a low tariff business would go to the dogs in Rhode Island, that workingmen would be thrown out of employment, that mills would shut down. Well, we can only judge the future and the present by the past. In 1846 we had the Walker tariff, which lasted 15 years, and which was commended by some of our good Republican brothers in later days, and their comments I will read to you. That Walker tariff of 1846 was 25 per cent, and it gave such a revenue that all parties combined to reduce the tariff, and so they brought it down to 20 per cent in the tariff law of 1857. In the decade covered from 1850 to 1860, operating under these two tariffs, cotton manufactures in Rhode Island increased 176.1 and woolens 87.1, and in 1857, when one of the Rhode Island Members of this House, Benjamin B. Thurston, and all the Members from Massachusetts voted to reduce the tariff from 25 per cent to 20 per cent, the Representatives of the Western States denounced their action as being one in favor of the manufacturers. Standing here to-day I want to say that I am proud to follow in the footsteps of that Rhode Island Representative, and I will vote to reduce the tariff to a basis that will consider the consumer as well as the manufacturer. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I will now quote from some Republicans who looked with favor upon the low tariffs of 1846 and 1857. The Republican Senator—afterwards Vice President—Henry Wilson, in a speech in the Senate in 1857, said:

I wish to say to the Senate and the country that the Commonwealth I represent has a deep interest in the modification of the tariff of 1846 by this Congress. They are for the reduction of the revenue to the actual wants of an economic administration of the Government; for a free list embracing articles of prime necessity we do not produce; for mere nominal duties on articles which make up a large portion of our domestic industries; and for such an adjustment of the duties on the products of other nations that come in direct competition with the products of American capital, labor, and skill as shall impose the least burden upon that capital, labor, and skill.

In the same speech he said:

We of New England believe that wool, especially the cheap wools, manila, hemp, flax, raw silk, lead, tin, brass, hides, linseed, and many other articles used in our manufactures can be admitted duty free or at a mere nominal duty without injuring to any extent any considerable productive interest of the country.

The Republican Senator Allison, in this House, March 24, 1870, said:

The tariff of 1846, although confessedly and professedly a tariff for revenue, was, so far as regards all the great interests of the country, as perfect as any that we have ever had.

James A. Garfield, afterwards President, said in this House in 1878, in answer to the charge that the year of 1860 had not been one of prosperity:

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, the decade from 1850 to 1860 was one of peace and general prosperity. Yet to suit a theory of finance we are told that 1860 was a year of great distress and depression of business equaled only by the distress of the present year. I hold that the facts I have recited establish, in so far as anything can be established by statistics, that the year 1860 was a year not only of general peace, but of very general prosperity, in the United States.

James G. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, said:

The tariff of 1846 was yielding abundant revenue, and the business of the country was in a flourishing condition.

Those who wail and lament and cry over proposed tariff reform had their prototypes in England prior to 1842; they tore their hair over the prospect of the protection system of centuries being abandoned, and prophesied disaster to industry. Parliament was flooded with petitions of protest. What was the result?

Forty years after tariff reform came in England the net earnings of the people increased by $86.50 a year; where there had been three paupers before there were only two; estates rose on an average $1,700; before tariff reform there were 106,000 taxable incomes in Great Britain; after 40 years these had increased to 320,000. The wages of carpenters, bricklayers, masons, miners, cotton and woolen workers advanced.

Here is a table prepared for me by the Bureau of the Census, Division of Manufactures:

The following table shows the percentages of increase in wages in the cotton goods and in the woolen and worsted goods industries for each decade from 1850 to 1909:

Rhode Island.

	Cotton goods.	Woolen and worsted goods.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
1850–1860	40.2	163.1
1860–1870	84.0	167.7
1870–1880	7.3	29.4
1880–1890	39.0	68.2
1890–1900	2.8	6.6
1899–1909	46.9	73.7

The tremendous advance in the wages of textile operatives in Rhode Island made under the low tariffs of 1846 and 1857 in force during the period from 1850 to 1860 should silence those who attempt to play upon the fears of their employees. What say my Republican brethren to this? Will they explain why the 25 per cent tariff of 1846 and the 20 per cent tariff of 1857 caused an increase of 163.1 per cent from 1850 to 1860 in the wages of woolen operatives? Will they explain why the high Dingley tariff of 1897, in operation until 1909, did not exercise as good an effect on wages? If low tariffs destroy industry, why did the cotton-goods industry increase 176.1 per cent and the woolen industry increase 87.1 per cent under low tariffs?

New England need never fear low tariffs if her industries are honestly capitalized, efficiently managed, and the machinery kept up to standard. No tariff crutch can help a decayed mill. Let us congratulate ourselves that the Tariff Board has seen one light; it reports:

Wages are much higher in the United States, but wages are in themselves no necessary indication of relative cost of production. Frequently it is found that high wages and low labor cost go together.

I must not close without a specific instance of the outrageous robbery of Schedule K. I will here incorporate an editorial from the Providence Tribune, under date of June 18, 1911:

THE TARIFF ON A SUIT OF CLOTHES.

A reduction of 5 cents a pound in the duties on woolens doesn't seem to amount to much on a suit of clothes weighing 4 or 5 pounds. But those who think that is all there is in the talk of ameliorating the hardships inflicted by Schedule K should take note of the suit of clothes analyzed by Chairman UNDERWOOD in his highly entertaining report from the Committee on Ways and Means submitting the bill to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures thereof.

The material for this suit is a comparatively cheap cloth for the making of ordinary suits of men's clothing worn by the great masses of the people. It is known in the woolen trade as "an all-worsted fancy fabric from half-blood wool," weighing 9½ ounces to the yard and 56 to 58 inches wide. In England it costs at wholesale 77 cents a yard, and the freight to New York is 1 cent a yard. On this fabric the Payne tariff levies a specific compensatory duty of 44 cents a pound, or 23 cents a yard. In addition, there is an ad valorem duty of 50 per cent, or 38 cents a yard, making the total duty 61 cents a yard, equal to 78 per cent of the import price. As it takes about 3½ yards of this cloth to make a suit of clothes, this makes the tariff tax on such a suit $2.14; and, of course, the price of the corresponding or competing American fabric is increased by the amount of that duty.

Now, the contention is, as everybody knows, that tariff duties are levied, not for the enrichment of manufacturers, but for the protection of the laborer. And yet the labor cost in the cloth here described is only about 25 per cent of the total production cost, so that the protective duty of 78 per cent is more than three times the entire labor cost. Observe the farce of it.

Chairman UNDERWOOD estimates that the total annual consumption of this cloth in this country is not less than 171,200,000 yards. "The tariff tax of 61 cents per yard means, therefore, to say nothing of any increase of tax as it passes down through the hands of the manufacturer, jobber, and retailer, not less than $104,400,000, or, say, $100,000,000 per year paid by the people." Of this great sum the Treasury receives only $15,500,000. The remaining $85,000,000 is taken from the people by the Government in the performance of the Republican pledge guaranteeing "reasonable profits to the American manufacturer."

No wonder that even the Republicans are taking back all the pretty things they said about the Payne-Aldrich tariff and Schedule K; it is no longer the "best tariff ever"; they now see flaws in it. The Democratic Party saw flaws in it from the beginning; the people with shoddy on their backs realized its petty larceny characteristics and sent a Democratic majority to this House to enact proper legislation correcting the evils complained of. We have corrected it once, only to be turned down in our efforts by the President. We present our bill again, confident that it is right, that it is what the people want. Let the President veto it if he will. If he does he invites the veto of the people at the polls next November.

The Democratic Party believes that it is absolute robbery to impose upon ninety millions of people a tariff that enriches the few, gives but a scanty wage to labor, and adds to the consumer's burden. We must never forget that Garfield said that the "Republic was opportunity." Where shall the opportunity be if millions are to be multiplied in the hands of the few by virtue of tariff legislation? Where shall our young men turn for advantage and opportunity if they see every industry controlled by corporate greed, and what incentive shall be furnished to patriotic impulse if they see the degrading spectacle of Congress listening not to the people but obeying the mandates of the favored classes? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MAGUIRE] is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. MAGUIRE of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, three years ago the Congress of the United States spent much time and energy in writing a new tariff law. When the work was finished the country was asked to accept it from its authors as a wise piece of legislation, and it was insisted that the result as enacted into law was in compliance with promises previously made. But the people refused to approve the work, because upon investigation it became apparent that the same old structure, the Dingley tariff law, remained in the new Payne-Aldrich law, with very slight alteration. Disappointed in their public servants, the people called again for a real revision downward, and this time the power to revise the tariff was given into other hands to carry out. This is therefore part of the work in which this House is now engaged, and I feel sure that when this Congress shall have completed the work of rebuilding our revenue system upon a broad and stable basis the people to whom we are responsible will find no difficulty in recognizing a genuine revision of the tariff downward, and they will cheerfully commend their servants in this House. The men who are responsible for the legislation passed here and who have the courage to remain true to their trust will merit and, I believe, will receive the continued confidence of the public.

The tariff question, Mr. Chairman, has always been one of the great questions in our national politics in this country. It doubtless will always remain so, at least until some other and more satisfactory method of raising a much larger part of the needed revenue for the maintenance of the Government is adopted. The tariff is, of course, primarily a question of taxation. Our people have always watched with distrust and jealousy the power that levied and the hand that collected their taxes for whatever purpose they might have been necessary. It is not strange, then, that the people of this country are studying more closely than ever the problems of taxation.

The enormous sums collected through the customshouses to-day and which must ultimately be paid as taxes by the consumers of the country almost stagger the imagination. In 1846 only $27,000,000 were collected from customs duties, in 1890 we collected $229,000,000, in 1900 we collected $233,000,000, and in 1910 the amount collected was something like $333,000,000. In addition to the customs we also collected about $290,000,000 from internal-revenue sources.

Taxation is always and everywhere a burden whether it be direct or indirect. We have used at different times both methods, but for the most part the indirect taxation. In the earlier years of the Republic the work of devising revenue policies was largely left to the Secretary of the Treasury. Such men as Hamilton and Gallatin formulated the fiscal policy of the Government in their times and led the way for Congress. Later the great report of Robert J. Walker, as Secretary of the Treasury, formed the basis of the famous Walker tariff bill of 1846. The history of our revenue system shows it to have been one of considerable uncertainty and instability. The amount of revenue needed annually and collected has been increasing rapidly in recent years, and the appalling expenditures must necessarily impress the thoughtful men of our times with the fact that there is a great field here for practical and efficient economy in the administration of Government. There have been times when it seemed necessary to levy special war taxes, and again at other times the problem was how to get rid of the accumulating surplus of public revenues, and at still other times our Nation was confronted with deficits.

Internal and customs receipts and expense of collecting by per cents for the years following.

At present the chief sources of revenue are, first, from customs which, up to June 30, 1910, as estimated, amounted to $333,683,445.03, and from internal revenue sources for the same time $289,933,519.45, which also includes the corporation tax. Of the total amount collected from these two sources 53½ per cent was collected from customs duties laid upon articles imported into this country. The subjects of taxation under our present system includes every possible and conceivable article of consumption, whether manufactured or unmanufactured, except a very few imports now admitted free of duty. Up to this time there has been little dispute among men as to the wisdom of raising a portion of our public revenues by means of a tax on imports. They do not agree, however, upon what proportion of the total necessary revenue should be levied as import duty. The great tariff issue to-day is whether the Congress shall or ought to use the taxing power to levy tariff duties solely for revenue, or shall that power be used to continue a policy called the protective system, under which raising revenue becomes incidental and the industrial welfare of the manufacturing interests of the country, as understood by its advocates, becomes primarily important. The one theory of the tariff insists that duties should be levied for necessary revenue only, and so levied with respect to rates and articles affected as to bring about an equitable distribution of the burden that must be borne by the people to maintain the Government. This theory is based upon the assumption that if no revenue were needed by the Government then no duties should be levied for any ulterior purpose.

England once left the tax on tea used by the Colonists, not so much because she wanted the revenue as because she wanted to maintain the principle as it seemed to her which was involved.

If no revenue were needed, would the advocates of the protective theory justify the levying of duties on imports for the sole purpose of prohibiting the importation of goods? In other words, if we could remove the necessity for revenue, which has operated to obscure the workings of the protective system, would that system then be able to maintain itself? To do so it would have to ask and secure the unrestricted privilege of exercising the taxing power of the Government for its own benefit and for private purposes alone. I will venture to say that such a use of the taxing power, even if it were constitutional, would never be tolerated by the people of this country.

The theory of protection insists that taxes in the form of import duties should be levied for the advantage of the manufacturers, and so levied with respect to rates and articles that the system will effectually protect the few for whose benefit it is designed. Revenue is secondary and incidental in a protective tariff. An example of the extremity to which such a system goes is found in the McKinley law of 1890, in which a bounty was given of 2 cents a pound on sugar. This was the boldest step taken up to that time, and yet it represents the inevitable result of the policy of special privilege.

The beneficiaries, the Sugar Trust, at that time were not willing, as other beneficiaries of protection were, to be content with collecting the tribute themselves from the consumers. They were powerful enough to ask and secure the disgraceful concession from the Government that this tribute should first be collected by the agents of the Government itself and at public expense, paid into the public Treasury, and then, in good hard cash paid out of the Treasury directly into the coffers of the trust. This example, however, illustrates the practical difference between the bounty system and the protective tariff system. In the one case the beneficiaries are permitted to collect the tax themselves from the consumer of the protected articles, and in the other case the Government first collects the tax from all the people and pays it into the pockets of the beneficiaries.

High protection can not produce revenue because it is not its purpose to do so. When a rate drops to the revenue point it ceases to be primarily protective. Protection as a system is effective only when it so completely restricts importation of the protected articles that there is very little or no competition from such imported goods. A tariff is a tax always, and the consumer pays it whether it be a revenue tariff or a protective tariff. The essential difference lies in who gets the tax money finally. The revenue tariff goes largely and at once to the Treasury of the United States, and the consumer has the consolation, at least, of knowing that he has contributed his portion to the expenses of the Government; while the protective tariff goes largely and indirectly to the protected manufacturers. The process by which this is done is very simple.

The manufacturer insists that he needs a certain amount of protection. The necessary tariff wall is raised by legislation to comply with his wishes. Then, finding themselves secure against competition from without, the manufacturers proceed to organize their line of industry into a noncompetitive combination. Then orders are given to limit the production and the output of the mills and factories, and finally they fix their own prices to the American consumers. With competition shut out no revenue, therefore, can come to the Government, and the combination, sheltered behind the protective wall, advance their prices in amount equal to the duty levied, and then they collect for themselves the duty which was levied by Congress, not for revenue, but for protection. This is why the manufacturer enjoys the system of protection. This, then, is the "modus operandi" of that benevolent protective system which was fastened upon the country years ago and which is to-day making a last desperate struggle for existence. Nominally and originally protection meant simply to keep out foreign-made goods, and home competition in our own markets was relied upon to protect the consumers from excessive prices. But in practice and for many years protection has meant quite another thing. Now protection is construed to mean that all foreign competitive goods are to be shut out, so that the American manufacturer may proceed to exploit the American market by means of trusts and combinations and monopolies. Protection in operation, therefore, is a two-pronged weapon. It denies to the consumer the advantages of foreign competition and at the same time compels him to buy in the markets of monopoly. No one would deny prosperity to American manufacturers if they can secure it upon the basis of merit and without the special aid of the Government, but they should not ask nor be given by law the right to collect for their own private ends the tax which the Congress levies for public purposes.

Let us examine into the platforms of the two great political parties and some of the utterances of the representative men of these parties for the past 20 years and see what they reveal on the tariff system. In 1888 the platform upon which Mr. Harrison was elected said:

> We are uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection—the protective system must be maintained.

In compliance with that platform the party passed the McKinley tariff law of 1890, which levied a tariff of 91.78 per cent on the average on the woolen schedule, and even went as high as 138 per cent in some instances. This was a heavy increase over the then existing tariff law—the Mills law of 1888—which levied a rate of 40 per cent ad valorem. The next tariff law passed was the Wilson law of 1894, which levied an average ad valorem of 47.84 per cent on woolen manufactures and put raw wool on the free list. Two years after the Wilson law was passed the Republican platform of 1896 contained the following plank:

> We renew and emphasize our allegiance to the policy of protection—true American policy—we are not pledged to any particular schedules. The ruling and uncompromising principle is the protection and development of labor and industry. The country demands a right settlement, and then it wants a rest.

Mr. McKinley was elected with that plank as a part of the platform, and the Dingley tariff bill of 1897 was enacted into law as a fulfillment of the policy. In this law the woolen schedule was put back practically as it was fixed in the McKinley law of 1890, and the law as a whole was an extremely protective measure. The majority report of the Ways and Means Committee which brought in the Dingley bill says:

> The manufactured lumber which was put on the free list by the tariff of 1894 (Wilson law) has been transferred to the dutiable list as an act of justice to this large industry.

Also:

> Such articles as wool, lumber, burlaps, bags, and salt have been restored to the dutiable list, from which they should never have been removed.

The protective system has always showed great solicitude for the great industries, such as the Lumber Trust and the Woolen Trust, and others. Not even salt, they say, should be free. Again, in the platform of 1900, the Republican Party renewed its faith in the policy of protection. In 1904 their platform says that protection is a "cardinal policy of the Republican Party," and here, for the first time, we find a specific meaning of protection. The platform says:

> The measure of protection should always at least equal the difference in cost of production at home and abroad.

It will be noted that this attempt to measure the amount of protection has been repeated in a more definite and pronounced way in the platform of the Republican Party adopted at Chicago in 1908. After promising to revise the tariff by a special session of Congress, it says:

> In all tariff legislation the true principle of protection is best maintained by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries.

Mr. Taft was elected upon this platform, and later the Payne-Aldrich tariff law was enacted in 1909 as the latest authentic legislative expression and interpretation of that extremely novel theory of protection. Understanding the "reasonable profit" theory as it was doubtless intended to be understood, the framers of the present tariff law left the woolen schedule unmolested just where it had been for 20 years. And this in spite of the notorious and unfair discriminations in Schedule K, and in spite of the demands of the consumers of the whole country. To those who framed that bill it doubtless seemed necessary to leave the woolen schedule remain with an average ad valorem of 90.10 per cent in order to insure a "reasonable profit" to the manufacturers—or the Woolen Trust.

In no instance, perhaps, is the injustice of the indirect system of taxation so well illustrated as in the present woolen schedule. From the standpoint of the tax collector it is more desirable to levy taxes indirectly, because the taxes are then mingled with the goods purchased by the consumers and the tax element of the cost is paid in disguise. Taxation always diffuses itself along the line of least resistance. The poor people have the least power to resist, and so the burden of indirect taxation bears more heavily on them; while the rich have more power to resist and they bear the least burden. Again, indirect taxes are more expensive to collect and thus less of the total collected ever reaches the Treasury. Furthermore, in this country this system has brought about the concentration of business in a few hands and has promoted monopoly by granting special favors and privileges. A tax on consumption is in effect a per capita tax, and as such the families of the poor, if they get all they should have to eat and wear, pay actually more than those of the rich. How unjust a $10 per capita tax would be in this country. The poor man with eight children might pay a hundred dollars and the rich man might not pay more than ten. Yet this is the effect of a tax on articles of consumption. Such a tax that operates through consumption affects directly human life, human comforts, and happiness. John Stuart Mill says that indirect taxation violates two of the cannons of taxation. One is that it takes from the taxpayer more than it puts into the Public Treasury, and the second is that it violates the principle of equality, because it fails to take in proportion to the ability to pay. Mr. W. F. Dutton in the American Journal of Politics estimates that the cost of living is increased 25 per cent by indirect taxes. Benjamin Harrison realized the inequality of the present system of taxation when he said:

> We must establish, and at once, a system that shall equalize the tax burdens. The men of wealth in our great communities should lead the movement.

A distinguished Representative of California, when speaking in Congress on the Wilson bill in behalf of the income tax, said:

> I am in favor of the income tax as proposed by the Committee on Ways and Means because it is better than the system of taxation now prevailing; because the burdens which are laid by the income tax, wherever they may ultimately fall, are all for public uses, while under the tariff system three parts of the burden are laid for the enrichment of private individuals to every one part that is collected for public use.

If the taxes now collected from customs of over three hundred millions a year were laid as direct taxation and demanded in the same unfair proportion as they are now paid the system would not be tolerated by the taxpayers, no matter upon what theory it was advocated. The hand of the taxgatherer could then be plainly seen and resisted. But by the system of indirect taxation the phantom hand of the taxgatherer is concealed. We may well ask why it is now tolerated. If a man buys a dollar's worth of sugar he pays from 38 to 40 cents tariff, or about $1.90 a sack. On a pair of shoes he pays about 50 cents tariff. On a knife valued at 10 cents he will pay 9 cents tariff, one one valued at 30 cents he will pay a tariff of 32 cents; on a $4 blanket he will pay over $2 duty. And in all these cases it must be remembered that the large part of the amount paid because of the tariff goes not to the Government, but to the protected industries to make up their "reasonable profit."

Realizing that we can not entirely dispense with the policy of raising a part at least of the needed revenue for the support of the Government by a tax upon articles of common consumption, my investigations have lead me to the conclusion that a just system of taxation ought not place so large a part of the burden as is now imposed upon such articles as all the people need to feed, clothe, and shelter them. We can not, of course, carry on the extensive functions of this great Government without raising in some way a large amount of revenue. I would be the last person to favor curtailing the necessary and legitimate functions of the Federal Government. I would not favor retrenchmen at the sacrifice of efficiency.

I am, indeed, anxious that ours shall be the best and most efficient Government on earth. But while I would not hamper any department of the Government in giving the best possible service to the people of this Republic, still I would not have one cent of taxation levied unnecessarily, even for public purposes, and certainly not for special privileges or for private enterprises. Before beginning to lay any burdens upon the taxpayers of this country for any purpose, I should insist upon a systematic and wise economy in the administration of the Government. In my judgment, it is a reckless and ruinous policy that raises a great surplus of revenue. Such a policy is a public menace, because it offers a temptation that leads to extravagance on the part of those in charge of the Government, and they might easily be persuaded to devise unnecessary and unjustifiable ways to spend the surplus. I hope and trust that the time is not far away when this Government will be able, under a constitutional amendment, if necessary, to enact an income-tax law by which the larger portion of the necessary revenue may be collected.

There is already an amendment proposed which, when ratified by three-fourths of the States, will give Congress the power to levy and collect an income tax as an indirect tax and without apportionment. I believe it will not be long until the requisite number of States, which is 36, will have ratified this amendment. Thirty of the States have already done so. Pending the ultimate ratification of such an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, Congress is not without power to lay and collect indirect taxes as it may seem wise to do.

To this end the Ways and Means Committee submitted a bill which this House passed about a week ago whereby large incomes will be compelled to bear their just share of the burdens of taxation. The Supreme Court held the corporation tax law constitutional, and the excise tax bill which is now in the Senate simply extends the provisions of the law to include individuals, firms, and copartnerships.

This bill proposes to levy a tax of 1 per cent upon all incomes in excess of $5,000 derived from the carrying on of any business or occupation. It is thought by those who have given the matter careful study that this bill as drawn, in view of the opinion of the Supreme Court on the corporation tax law, will not be subject to the constitutional objection to an income tax such as was pointed out by the court in the decision of the Pollock case. If this bill is approved, as I believe it will be, it is estimated that it will bring in about $60,000,000 the first year of its operation. This will offset approximately the loss of revenue suffered by the proposed free-sugar bill and thereby benefit the great consuming public and also shift the burdens of taxation to those whose salaries or incomes can well afford to bear a more equitable share of the public taxation. Such a tax, in my judgment, is the fairest and the most equitable of all taxes, because it compels every man to contribute in proportion to what he has. It will place the burden upon those who are most able to bear it and will lift the weight of taxation from those least able to stand it. Such a tax will take from all according to their ability to spend rather than in proportion to their ability to consume. It will tax what men have accumulated above what they need rather than what men are striving to accumulate for their physical needs and comforts.

After raising a large part of the revenues by an income tax, I would collect such part of the public revenues as seems wise by internal-revenue taxation, as we do to-day, upon the articles which are not classed as necessaries. For the balance of the taxes I would levy import duties, but purely for revenue necessary to make up the total revenue required to defray the expenses of the Government economically administered. In levying such import duties I would deny protection, as such, to any article of production or class of articles. I would so fix the rates that were found to be necessary to produce the sufficient amount of revenue as to make the burden lightest on articles of general use and heaviest on articles of luxury. Food, clothing, and shelter should be taxed as lightly as possible. Luxuries should bear the maximum revenue rates, but no rate in any case should be prohibitive. It must yield revenue to be justified. Montesquieu, a noted French political philosopher, makes a classification that commends itself to the standards of justice. He says that necessities ought not to be taxed; that articles classed as useful should be taxed a little and superfluous articles should be taxed heavily.

A vital principle which the protective theory has always ignored is that taxes on imports should be so laid that when they are actually paid they shall be paid into the Public Treasury and not to private interests by way of enhanced values. The argument that the foreigner pays the tariff is no longer seriously advanced in support of this particular method of collecting revenue. It therefore must not be overlooked that the consumer of the articles taxed will ultimately pay the tariff to some one. Whether the consumers will pay much or little will depend, therefore, upon whether they pay it as a protective or a revenue tariff. If they pay it as a revenue tariff, then the needs of the Government will determine the amount they are called upon to contribute; but if as a protective tariff, then the consumers are at the mercy of those who control the output and fix the price of the protected article. To draw up a tariff bill such as will be purely a revenue measure and which will do exact justice as to classification of rates and items is, of course, impossible; but to get one that will approach these ends is the aim of every tariff-for-revenue advocate. There are many considerations to weigh in reaching the most equitable and satisfactory results. We must know how much revenue should be collected on imports, then what articles shall be subject to duty and at what rate, then what articles should be exempt from duty entirely. It also involves the question as to what is the maximum revenue point for each article and what is the competitive point in the scale of rates. As to rates, the Democratic theory is that ad valorem rates are the fairest and the simplest of application and the most likely to be in harmony with a tariff for revenue.

As to classification of articles and which shall be admitted dutiable and which free, the Democratic national platform of 1908 gives a general and simple guide. The tariff plank of that platform reads as follows:

> We favor immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties. Articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products should be placed upon the free list; material reductions should be made in the tariff upon the necessaries of life, especially upon articles competing with such American manufactures as are sold abroad more cheaply than at home; and gradual reductions should be made in such other schedules as may be necessary to restore the tariff to a revenue basis.

In the application of general principles, however, many conditions are found to exist in detail not contemplated by the general rule. It is found necessary to inquire what articles are luxuries, what are necessaries, what are raw materials, what are trust-controlled products, what articles are imported that are not produced here, what articles do we produce in great quantities and what in small quantities; and, too, as to trust products, it is material to inquire whether the article is controlled by a world trust or monopoly. These and many other important considerations must enter into a careful and equitable adjustment of import duties in making up a tariff schedule.

Accepting the verdict rendered by the American people at the polls a year ago last fall as a complete repudation of the high-protective policy, as that policy is exemplified in the Payne-Aldrich law, the party now in control of this House has accepted the responsibility placed upon the Members by the people, and they have set about the task of reducing the enormous burdens of tariff taxation. Their work thus far has commanded the attention and merited the approval of all people who are sincerely in harmony with the struggling taxpayers in their efforts to rid themselves of the effects of that iniquitous system which has been robbing honest labor of the fruits of its toil for the purpose of enriching the few, in whose favor that system has been operated for years.

Thus far this House has accomplished a great good. It has set in motion a plan of economy in the administration of public affairs which is daily revealing the extravagant conditions that have existed in different branches of the Government.

Last summer we passed the free-list bill, which would have been one of the greatest relief measures ever enacted into law if given a trial. The following table shows a few of the gains it would have made over the present law:

Articles.	Present law.	Proposed law.
Farm machinery	15 per cent	Free.
Farm wagons	35 per cent	Do.
Leather boots and shoes	10 per cent	Do.
Harness and saddlery	35 per cent	Do.
Fence wire	¾ cent per pound	Do.
Woven wire	40 per cent	Do.
Lumber	$1.75 to $2.75	Do.
Shingles	50 cents per 1,000	Do.
Laths	20 cents per 1,000	Do.
Sewing machines	30 per cent	Do.
Salt	11 cents per pound	Do.

While the free-list bill, which passed the House by an overwhelming majority, involved a loss in revenues of only about eight millions, on the other hand it would have unburdened the farmers and others of this country to the extent of enormous sums which have been paid as a tariff tribute to the manufacturers and as a bonus, by reason of the present high and unconscionable rates on lumber, farm machinery, and other articles of common use. Farm machinery and other trust-controlled products, which the manufacturers have been shipping abroad and selling in foreign markets for less than here, are certainly able to compete with foreign-made machinery in our home markets without the aid of a tariff. Their own abuse of the protection which they have enjoyed is a condemnation of the whole tendency of a protective tariff. The Government statistics show that in 1890 we exported to foreign countries of farm machinery $3,859,184, and in 1910 our exports had increased to $28,124,033. Such a condition does not indicate that the manufacturers of farm machinery are threatened by foreign competition.

The next great service rendered by this House for the American people in the special session was to revise the schedule on wool and woolen manufactures, designated as Schedule K. The bill passed the Senate in a modified form, but was defeated by Executive veto, leaving the woolen schedule of the Payne-Aldrich law in operation. Still hoping for relief, the same woolen schedule that passed the House last summer has been reintroduced, bearing the same identical rates, and is now before us for consideration. This woolen schedule, though appearing under the names of the Payne-Aldrich law, the Dingley law, and the McKinley law, has remained practically without change, in substance, on the statute books for more than 20 years, and this, too, notwithstanding the fact that it embodies all of the grossest evils and the most cruel discriminations of the whole protective system. It is so bad that even the President admitted, after its passage, that it was "indefensible." The bill which is now before the House makes a reduction in this schedule from 90.10 per cent in the present law to 42.55 per cent. This sweeping reduction of over 50 per cent doubtless will not please the pampered manufacturers and beneficiaries, who have grown into opulence because of the tribute they have collected for two decades under this schedule. But this reduction will be welcomed all over the land by the great mass of men, women, and children who form the devoted, industrious citizenship of our Republic.

They never ask nor do they receive special favors at the hands of the Government. All they ask is to be permitted to live and enjoy the fruits of their own toil. Nor is the reduction of over 50 per cent the only thing accomplished by the proposed woolen schedule. It goes to the root of the evil and eliminates the specific duties and substitutes an ad valorem duty throughout, which is recognized by the leading economists as a fair and equitable duty on textile schedules. To show how unfairly the specific rates discriminate in favor of the rich and against the poor, it is only necessary to take a single example from the present woolen schedule. Woolen blankets valued at 44 cents a pound are subject to a duty of 44 cents specific and 50 per cent ad valorem, which makes a compound rate of 150 per cent; while if valued at 70 cents a pound the same rates prevail and makes a compound rate of only 112 per cent; and if valued at 88 cents a pound the rates are 44 cents and 55 per cent, which make an equivalent ad valorem of 105 per cent. Thus the cheaper blanket pays a rate of 150 per cent and the better one pays only 105 per cent. Again, as to women's and children's dress goods made wholly or in part of wool, if valued at 7 cents per yard the duty is 7 cents and 50 per cent, which makes a combined rate of 150 per cent, but if valued at 24 cents per yard the duty is 8 cents and 50 per cent, or a combined rate of only 83⅓ per cent.

These compensatory and specific rates which have concealed by far the worst vices of the present woolen schedule are abolished in the bill which is being considered by this House. The proposed schedule levies a simple and honest ad valorem rate for revenue of 42.55 per cent on manufactures of wool instead of the Payne-Aldrich rate of over 90 per cent.

Following the passage of the woolen bill last summer the House took up and revised the schedule including cotton manufactured goods. While it was generally believed that this schedule was subject to the same needed revision as the woolen schedule, still its examination confirmed the belief that it, too, was subject to the same unseen methods of eliminating competition and charging over the compensatory rates to the ultimate consumer. This schedule was revised downward with practically the same cut in rates as the woolen manufactures, and had it reached the statute books would have given needed relief to the great body of American consumers.

Although the conscientious efforts of this House last session to reduce the tariff were met at every step with Executive vetoes, still we have not despaired of securing for the people some relief from the injustice of the present system of taxation. The first great tariff work of the present session was the passage by this House of the steel and iron schedule. The American people have been the victims for years of the gigantic Steel Trust, which has been fostered by high protective tariff, and it was left for this House to bring out a bill which has greatly reduced the former unjust and discriminating rates of the steel schedule. No sooner was this schedule passed than the chemical schedule was taken up and revised in rates and classification. Then came the sugar schedule, and here, again, the House repudiated protection and even sacrificed a great revenue-producing item in the interest of cheaper food for the struggling masses. The Sugar Trust has levied tribute upon hungry children for a score of years. They have successfully resisted heretofore all efforts to take from them this special tariff privilege. Not satisfied with shaping legislation, they have even gone to the extent of corrupting customhouse officials.

Now they threaten that this bill will destroy the sugar-beet industry, but no substantial evidence of this effect has been produced. To place sugar on the free list, as this bill has done, may and should operate to cut down the enormous profits of the Sugar Trust, but I refuse to credit the statement that the high tariff is necessary to maintain agricultural industries in the United States. Our farmers receive no share of the large dividends distributed among the stockholders of the Sugar Trust. What the farmer needs is the opportunity to buy in a fair market what his family needs and also the machinery which he must use upon his farm. Then he can produce and afford to sell his products in a fair and open market without contributing the profits which belong to him to those who control and fix the prices of his products and also what he consumes under the present system.

I venture to say that the period of usefulness for the protective system has gone and high protection in this country is doomed. It is undemocratic and un-American. Having imposed itself in the early days as a foster mother to infant industry it has retained its selfish existence by craft, cunning, and intimidation. It had its inception in national optimism, and at one time was a factor in the growing nationality, but it has long since degraded into a juggernaut of organized selfishness for the purpose of exploiting the unsuspecting and patient public. The good faith of the American people has been betrayed by its sophistry and greed. Under the philanthropic inspiration of protecting home industries its triumph has been that of a special few over the struggling and impoverished masses. Its advocates have shifted from one fallacy to another in their persistent course of deception. It is interesting to observe that when one fallacy failed to work longer to justify the system of protection another was taken up and advanced in popular arguments. At first the argument in justification for a high tariff was that the foreigner paid the tax. When no one would believe this any longer we were told that the object of the system was to encourage domestic infant industries.

That slogan worked splendidly until the industries grew out of their swaddling clothes and became gigantic trusts and combinations. Now, instead of Government aid to encourage their growth, it keeps the Government busy trying to keep them from controlling the Government itself. But the modern argument is that we need the high tariff to protect labor. That worked well for a few campaigns, until the laboring men began to inquire how a high tariff that shut out foreign goods, but let in foreign labor to compete with them, was much protection to American labor. Again, we hear much now about how the American market must be preserved for American manufactures. Experience has demonstrated that those most anxious to preserve the American markets are those who use special legislation to get these American markets under their control and then reap the benefits of unfettered monopoly. They insist on a highly protected market in which to sell their manufactured products, but at the same time they tell the American producer that he must dispose of his products in the free markets of the world. That is the absurd position of those who want to preserve the American markets for American manufactures. There has recently, however, come into the field of political science a new and heretofore unheard-of modification of the old theory of protection to American industries. It asks not only protection that shall equal the difference in the cost of production here and abroad, but, in addition to that, "a reasonable profit" to the manufacturers. Confident in their system of industrial control and in their success at deceiving the people, they have at last sprung the trap. A "reasonable profit" to the manufacturer. And what is a "reasonable profit" is to be left to be determined, as formerly, by the manufacturers and beneficiaries themselves. No wonder the manufacturers believe in protection. No wonder they have successfully resisted all attempts to revise the tariff, and especially Schedule K.

With the permission of the House I desire to insert as a part of my remarks at this time a few extracts from an address of Dr. Charles W. Elliott, as printed in the Wall Street Journal of September 22, 1908. There are few authorities in this country whose opinions carry greater weight on public questions than those of Prof. Elliott. In speaking on the tariff, Dr. Elliott says:

In the first place, it [high tariff] has postponed and obstructed the effective entrance of American products into the markets of the world. Many American industries, including the fundamental industry of agriculture, produce much more salable material than can possibly be sold in the United States; and all these industries must sell their surplus products outside the United States at a great disadvantage, because the products have paid high duties on the raw or partially manufactured materials which enter into them, on the implements or machinery which were used in producing them, and on the structures which sheltered and distributed them. As a country which produces in normal years much more grain, meat, and cotton and many more manufactured goods than it can consume, it is the interest of the United States to develop for itself world markets under the most favorable conditions possible. The tariff prevents or obstructs the attainment of those favorable conditions. A nation which prohibits the importation of the natural exports of other nations or, what amounts to much the same thing, charges higher duties than other manufacturing nations charge on foreign raw or unfinished products, can not maintain a profitable carrying trade with other nations.

* * * * * *

Despotic and aristocratic Governments have long practiced the creation by law of privileged or favored men or classes. The American democracy has abolished or had nothing to do with the ancient privileges of nobles, court favorites, sinecure holders, and commercial adventurers by royal monopoly charter, but has been more than ready to create privilege manufactures by tariff legislation, in spite of the fact that equality before the law has been theoretically the very foundation of American government and society.

The enrichment of a few individuals of a small class at the expense of the community and with no benefit to the State is, however, not the worst result of the protective policy. The worst result is the legal violation by the Republic itself of the fundamental equity, and this result is aggravated by the falsely altruistic argument used in support of the tariff. The man who acts unjustly for reasons which seem to him benevolent or humanitarian is more dangerously poisoned than the man who is unjust for straight selfish reasons and admits to himself just what he is doing and why. The fallacies of protection are all the worse because they are covered with the nauseous slime of a pretended altruism. In short, the chief objection to protective legislation is a moral one, namely, that it diminishes the enterprise, self-reliance, and sense of justice of the population as a whole. That legislation is a serious mental and moral evil which has been for 50 years working injustice at home and contracting American exchanges abroad, because two generations of voters have been hoodwinked with a word—"protection." No revision of schedules can dig up this evil by the roots. It will only be cured when the National Legislature makes the tariff nothing but one means among many of raising needed revenue.

That the tariff is not necessary to the maintenance of American wages or American standards of living appears clearly from the common practice of selling American goods in foreign countries at much lower prices than they are sold in the United States and yet at a profit.

* * * * * *

The tariff establishes a tax paid by the great body of consumers, not to the Government for its support, but to the capitalists who have invested their money in those plants which produce protected articles.

I would not deny to the laborers of our great country any protection or any of the comforts of life to which they are justly entitled. I care not whether they labor in the mills or in the mines, in the factories or on the farms; the American workmen deserve to share in the prosperity and the progress of our Nation. But I am opposed to an industrial system which seeks special privileges in legislation in order to protect, not legitimate industries while in their infancy, but to shield great industrial and financial combinations which have long outgrown their swaddling clothes and have piled up such wealth and accumulated such power that they threaten our national welfare. I am oposed to a protective tariff which is a protection to the few against the many in this country, a tariff which has become so high in many instances that great corporate wealth and combinations have been permitted to levy tribute upon the masses of consumers and have grown rich while they have operated under the guise of protecting labor. These protected interests have been so long the favored beneficiaries of special legislation that they have come to believe they have a vested right in the protective system, and they even grow alarmed at any attempt which seeks to deprive them of the special favors which they have enjoyed so long. They complain that such attempts will cripple industry and destroy property and prosperity. They threaten dire calamity if they are not permitted to continue to receive their regular allowance from the public bounty.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO].

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I would not from choice select the tariff as a subject in which to interest this House, but I am not willing to let a measure be considered in which at least one-third of the entire population of my home county is directly interested, and in which every resident of the county is, directly or indirectly, interested without raising my voice in their behalf.

For the last half century no other public question has received so much attention from Congress as has the question of the tariff. For years the two great political parties have divided on the question of whether we should have a protective tariff or no tariff other than one for revenue. Every national election fought with these two propositions clearly defined has resulted in such an overwhelming victory for protective tariff that in our State of Pennsylvania it had become the fashion for anyone running for office on the Democratic ticket to proclaim himself a good protectionist.

The last presidential campaign was somewhat different from the others, and many people believing, honestly mistaken though they were, that the high cost of living was the result of protected industries, and forgetting the lesson of a few years ago, demanded of the Republican Party a gradual reduction of the tariff along certain lines. The discussion of the question at this time led men to see that there must be some better way of adjusting such intricate questions than leaving them to the whims of politicians, so the idea that a permanent Tariff Board, removed from partisanship, composed of men who have made a study of economic questions, just as the judges of our courts have made a study of legal questions, should be able to more intelligently present to Congress the facts regarding the workings of the tariff met popular approval.

With a report from such a board at hand it should easily be determined whether any tariff schedule gives the necessary protection or whether it is merely a revenue schedule or an out-and-out free-trade measure.

This idea, seized on by the then minority party, received rather coldly by the dominant party, has been partially put into law, and to-day we have before us the findings of that board accepted by the party now in the minority in this House, but rejected by the party now in power.

To-day the issue of free trade and protection is more clearly drawn between the great parties than for a generation, and, thanks to the frankness of the gentlemanly leader of the minority, the country now knows exactly where each party stands on the tariff—the Republican Party standing for a tariff which as nearly as possible makes up the difference between the cost of production in this and competing countries, while the Democratic Party stands for a free-trade policy, except where it is necessary to have some duty levied in order to raise revenue. With this line-up we are content, and confidently appeal to the good judgment of the people, with an abiding faith that they will see and do the right.

The wool industry has been an important factor in our development as a nation; it has also played its part in the making of other nations. With us for several generations it has been the football of political battles, and while the men who by their labor have produced it have toiled and worked to make for themselves and families an honest living, statesmen have argued pro and con the right and necessity of its protection. It shall not be my purpose at this time to take up the matter of a tariff on manufactured wool or woolens, at the same time our people realize that unless the home manufacturer of woolens is protected against the foreign manufacturer they have no market, and no matter how high the duty on raw wool may be, they receive no benefit from it. I leave this, however, for men who have made it a study and are familiar with its details. What little I shall say will be in behalf of the men who raise the sheep to produce the wool; the men of southwestern Pennsylvania, West Virginia, and eastern Ohio, who have, by years of toil and study, brought this industry to its present high standard; who have succeeded in producing the finest wool of its kind grown anywhere in the entire world, and who to-day are willing to meet you in any reasonable reduction of duty and adjust themselves to the new rates, provided they can continue in the business and make a reasonable profit. I have talked with many of these men, and they believe that if the findings of the Tariff Board on Schedule K are accepted and enacted into law they can continue at a small profit, but if you reduce the duty below that line you have simply made a present of that much to the woolgrowers of Australia, and at the same time our people will pay the same prices for clothing made of wool grown in foreign countries, the product of foreign labor and foreign capital, while the domestic industry will be gradually destroyed. This is no theory, but a demonstrated fact.

Prior to the passage of the so-called Wilson bill the rich hills and fertile valleys of that section, so well adapted to this industry, were dotted everywhere with sheep. The sheep raisers were prosperous, and as a result the communities were also prosperous. And then came the change, and in 1896 the flocks had disappeared from our hills. The sheep were sold for 50 cents and $1 per head, "for mutton only" was an accomplished fact.

With the return of the Republican Party to power and the passage of the Dingley law these same men, anxious to again engage in this business, sent to other parts of the country for sheep, but it was 10 years at least before the industry was again firmly established, and millions of dollars had been lost to that section of the country. Do you wonder, then, that our people look with disfavor on this attempt to repeat the conditions of 1896?

In 1909, for my own county of Greene, the Census Bureau gives the following data:

Farms on which sheep are raised	1,615
Fleeces of wool marketed	135,791
Number of wool-bearing sheep	141,373
Number of pounds of wool produced	842,495
Value (practically 30 cents per pound)	$291,447

This county has a population of but 30,000 people. Assuming that on each farm there will be an average of six persons, and you have almost one-third of the entire population engaged partly in the raising of sheep. The reduction of the duties, as proposed by the Underwood bill, will mean a loss, as I figure it, of more than $50,000 annually to the people of this county alone—will take away all the profit from the industry and in a few years destroy it entirely.

In 1890 Fayette County is reported as producing 173,904 pounds of wool and Somerset County 79,557 pounds. In 1909, Fayette County produced but 37,865 pounds and Somerset County 42,954 pounds. This decrease in production in these two counties can in part be accounted for by the fact that during this period the mineral resources of these counties have been developed to a great extent, and this has made the raising of sheep unprofitable, but it also goes to show that but one of these three counties has in any way recovered from the almost complete destruction of the industry from 1893 to 1896.

Mr. Chairman, in considering this bill we are face to face with the question of whether the tariff on wool shall be such as will protect our citizens who raise sheep on land worth from $60 to $100 per acre, where they must feed the sheep grain many months of the year, where they employ men who receive living wages and who enjoy the benefits of our high standard of living; who pay taxes to keep up the best of schools, build good roads, and make for themselves and families a community life of culture and refinement, or whether that tariff shall be one for revenue only, too small to give any adequate protection to our own people, who have their money invested and have given the best years of their lives to the study of this industry, and which will compel our people to compete with the countries where land is worth but a few dollars per acre, where the sheep graze 12 months of the year, where men live like uncivilized beings on the unkept, boundless domains of a country where modern living and culture are unknown.

Our Government spends millions of dollars annually in sending out reports and valuable information to the people who live from the product of the soil, and I take pride in the fact that it does all this, but Congress sits up nights devising laws which make the work of the farmer unprofitable and thus drive the younger men into other fields of activity.

Back in feudal times the demands of war frequently suspended the operation of industries for long periods and thus delayed the industrial progress of the world. To-day we are seeing the demands of partisan politics accomplish the same purpose, and what in former centuries was a game of conquest is now a conflict of those forces which would by industry and labor work out the common weal, as against that baser side of human nature which seeks to make of prejudice and indolence a condition whereby our citizens are turned from the useful arts, and are made to believe the Government owes them a living, instead of teaching them that they owe our Government their loyal support, in order that it may the better protect them in their labors and secure them and those who come after them in their right of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

The greatest function of Government is to give people opportunity, opportunity to work and receive the proper reward for their labor; opportunity to grow and develop the powers with which they are endowed by nature.

This our people ask and demand—nothing more, nothing less.

Mr. Chairman, so long as I shall serve in this great legislative body I want to be counted on the human side of every problem, and I believe the uncertainty of legislation affecting industries is the greatest menace to industrial prosperity, and, as a result, a menace to human progress. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, at this late hour of the evening I have an announcement to make that I think will be rather popular, and that is that I do not expect to occupy nearly all of the time that has been assigned to me. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] for the applause which everybody feels like giving, but which he was good enough not to give. However, Mr. Chairman, representing as I do one of the great woolgrowing districts of this country, I should feel that I would be remiss in my duty if I did not say something about this bill, which, as I understand it, is extremely inimical to the interests of a large number of the people whom I represent and not beneficial to anyone, and which, if enacted into law, would mean practically the destruction of the sheep industry, particularly in Ohio, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia—that section known in the report of the Tariff Board as the Ohio region. I think I can show before I close that this is undoubtedly the case, and that the majority in their report practically say that if this bill becomes a law the industry in what is known as the Ohio region must either very materially change its form or absolutely cease to exist. If this concourse with its sad assemblage of mourners is to be regarded as a sort of funereal occasion, if the wool industry is to be consigned to destruction, it seems to me that what little the friends of that great industry have to say about it would better be said before the industry is dead. I am reminded of that little stanza of poetry which my friend from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], with his poetic instincts, will appreciate, and which runs like this:

A rose to the living is more than sumptuous wreaths to the dead;
In filling Love's infinite store, a rose to the living is more.
If graciously given before the hungering spirit has fled.
A rose to the living is more than sumptuous wreaths to the dead.

So, in harmony with the spirit of that stanza of poetry, I want to place a few little flowers at the feet of the wool industry of this country rather than to place sumptuous wreaths upon its coffin, for that is what I should have to do if I spoke after this bill became a law.

This debate, which has been prolonged rather extensively, is useful in a good many ways. To my mind one of the things coming out of it that is the most valuable is the fact that in connection with the debates had on this bill last summer, it has made the position of the gentlemen across the aisle with reference to the wool industry and the other industries of this country absolutely clear. As was said just now by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], some of us in certain sections of the Union have known of gentlemen running on the Democratic ticket and asserting that they were good protectionists. This debate has torn the mask off that proposition, because we have heard it asserted here by the leader across the aisle, we have had official pronouncement to the effect that the Democratic Party does not stand for any such thing as protection to any industry. For example, here in debate the other day on the sugar bill the distinguished, able, and courteous leader of the Democracy, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], said in response to an inquiry by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] that he did not know what effect that bill would have upon the sugar industry of Louisiana—proposing legislation not knowing whether it would strike down or destroy an industry; and that was followed up a little later in that same debate by an admission of another distinguished leader on that side of the House, the gentleman from Georgia, in which he said substantially that he was willing to go further than the gentleman from Alabama. He said that in his opinion it would absolutely destroy the industry in that State; and then upon the question of the wool industry it has been said upon this floor several times in the course of this debate, admitted in the reports of the committee, both upon this bill at this time and upon a similar bill last summer, absolutely officially admitted, that it is going very seriously to cripple the industry, if not absolutely to destroy it, and a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS], said here in the debate, when questioned by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], in response to the inquiry of Mr. LONGWORTH, that it did not make any difference, in his judgment, if he knew that the rate proposed in this bill, namely, 20 per cent, would absolutely wipe out the industry, that that would not be considered at all, that the only thing our friends, the Democrats, were considering was the raising of revenue.

It has been stated here that in time to come when the revenue would not be needed, then that the duty should be absolutely and unqualifiedly abolished. In other words, it is now known to the farmers of this country and the sheepmen of this country that it is proposed absolutely to put wool upon the free list just as soon as it can be done. Why, it is said here in the committee report that was made last summer, and I read from it; you will find it on page 26 of the report of the Ways and Means Committee:

It is maintained by a very large number of our best economists and statesmen—

I suppose he refers to Democratic economists and statesmen—

It is maintained by a very large number of our best economists and statesmen that the economic situation involved in our rapid progress as a Nation requires that our ports should be thrown open to the importation of wool free of duty; and this view, based on the most profound consideration of the public welfare, has found expression in Democratic legislation. It is the constant intent of the Democratic Party to make the burden of tariff taxes as light as possible for the people, and to levy tariff taxes on a revenue basis as promptly as possible, for the party recognizes no justification whatever for tariff taxes except the necessity of revenue.

Later on in the same report it is said:

The bill, H. R. 11019, is not to be construed as an abandonment of any Democratic policy, but in view of the Democratic platform for a gradual reduction of the tariff—

And, by the way, as we go along, if that is the attitude of the Democratic Party, when you brought in the sugar bill the other day this platform declaration ought to have been considered in regard to a "gradual" reduction of the tariff.

and of the depleted and depleting condition of the Public Treasury—

Is not that awful? Of course everybody knew at the time that that statement was a fiction, and the logic of events has absolutely proved it to be so, because the "depleted Treasury" turned out to have a surplus of something over $40,000,000.

And of the depleted and depleting condition of the Public Treasury, a result of Republican extravagance, a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem on raw wool is now proposed as a revenue necessity.

In other words, it is perfectly clear that there is no intention to maintain any protective duty whatever on wool. I think I am perfectly fair in making that statement and am not misrepresenting anybody. So the woolgrowers of the country ought to understand that they are face to face with the proposition of free wool. We have torn the mask aside, and we know where our good friends the enemy are located on this proposition. Now, I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that, so far as I am concerned personally, I am not altogether satisfied with some provisions in the present tariff on raw wool. All woolgrowers are well acquainted with the fact that because of the peculiar classification and provisions in the existing law washed wool of class 2 comes in at the same rate as unwashed wool. Every woolgrower knows the importer takes advantage of that and brings in large quantities of washed wool; in fact, there is practically no unwashed wool of the second class brought in. This practice reduces the shrinkage of imported wools and thereby crowds out our own wool. Then, in the second place, through the operation of the skirting clause, which will be found very carefully referred to in the report of the Tariff Board, pages 287 to 293, volume 1, advantage is again taken of the farmer:

These provisions are contained in paragraph 368 of the act of 1909, which is as follows: "The duty upon wool of the sheep or hair of the camel, angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals, of class 1 and class 2, which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, or which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject: Provided, That skirted wools as imported in 1890 and prior thereto are hereby excepted.

As has been explained here by two or three gentlemen who have spoken, in Australia they will take a fleece and lay it on a table or the floor and cut off the dirtier portion, the less valuable portion, and keep in the fleece only the best and cleanest wool. Then, under the "skirting clause," this skirted fleece is brought into our country, and, of course, everybody understands it must have a very low rate of shrinkage, as low as 40 per cent, and, in many fleeces, much lower than that. Now, the Tariff Board refers to that in a very interesting way, and I want to trespass on the good nature of the committee long enough to call attention to their statement, because some of my friends on the other side of the aisle have not read the report of the Tariff Board. I know some of them have not, else they would not make the statements they have made. Why, it has been stated here that there is not anything new in this report of the Tariff Board. It was said that the information acquired might just as well have been acquired by correspondence. The gentleman who makes that kind of statement surely does not have the materials of the report of this Tariff Board well in mind.

I think in regard to the details of the wool industry in the United States and elsewhere that this is the greatest work that has ever been undertaken by any nation. There never has been any such collection of materials at first hand. They did not simply write to somebody. Why, it has been said their men were sent abroad. Certainly they were sent abroad. They went into the sheep-raising districts of Australia and South America and made careful personal investigation; that was the only way in which they could get at the facts and report to this Tariff Board.

It is a very voluminous report, and they show some interesting facts at page 382, volume 2, on the subject I have just discussed. I want to read part of their statement, because I think it is very valuable information:

The complaint of the grower of domestic wools that he is not now and has not during all these years been receiving the amount of protection nominally extended by the 11-cent duty on the grease pound is based upon the heavy shrinkage of the domestic fleece as against the light-conditioned skirted wools selected for importation primarily for their large net yield. An examination of the existing duties will show that the schedule is constructed upon the theory that wool shrinks 66⅔ per cent in the scouring. Since, however, it is certain that the wools actually imported shrink something less than 40 per cent, it is obvious that instead of paying $11 duty for every 33⅓ pounds of actual wool brought in, the importer is really securing some 60 pounds at a rate of not to exceed 18 cents per scoured pound.

In order that this matter may be more clearly understood, the board has prepared a tabular statement in which the full effect of shrinkages upon the actual operation of the existing wool duties is shown:

Present grease-pound rates with computed scoured-pound equivalents.

Shrinkage.	Actual duty on scoured content.
	Class I wools.—Duty per pound, 11 cents.	Class II wools.—Duty per pound, 12 cents.
75 per cent	$0.44	$0.48
70 per cent	.36⅔	.40
65 per cent	.31⅜	.34⅜
60 per cent	.27½	.30
55 per cent	.24⅝	.26⅔
50 per cent	.22	.24
45 per cent	.20	.21 9/11
40 per cent	.18⅓	.20
35 per cent	.16½	.18 6/13
30 per cent	.15⅝	.17 1/7
25 per cent	.14⅔	.16
20 per cent	.13¾	.15

Gentlemen can readily figure that out for themselves. Of course, everybody knows that is true. But let us see how it works out. Suppose that the law operated as it was intended that it should operate. In that case if you bought 100 pounds of wool in the foreign market and it was brought in here and would shrink 66⅔ per cent, you would have left 33⅓ pounds of wool. That would make the rate what the law intended it should be—that is, 33 cents on the scoured pound. As a matter of fact how does it work out? Under this skirting clause, of which I have spoken, the importer goes into the foreign market and buys wool that shrinks not 66⅔ per cent, but wool that shrinks 40 per cent or less. Then out of his 100 pounds of wool, instead of having 33⅓ pounds, he will have 60 pounds, and if he divides the amount of duty which he has to pay—$11 on the 100 pounds—by 60 instead of 33⅓, under the supposed arrangement, it will be seen that the farmer has not been getting anything like 33 cents protection on the scoured pound. He is really getting only about 18 cents protection on the scoured pound. Here is the thing I am objecting to. Under the present law the farmer has been charged with receiving a protection of 11 cents a pound on grease wool or 33 cents a pound on scoured wool. The fact is he has not received it. He has received only a little over one-half of what he was really entitled to under the law.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. WILLIS. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say to the gentleman that that has been understood by the sheepmen of California for many years, and they have been trying to get recognition and have it remedied, but they have not got it. How, may I ask, will the gentleman remedy that?

Mr. WILLIS. Speaking frankly, but not seriously, I think the reason why that has not been remedied heretofore is because the gentleman from California and myself have not been in Congress heretofore. That is the occasion for it. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to insert in the RECORD certain tables——

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from California are in Congress now, will that be remedied? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I have no doubt of it. In the next Congress I hope to be here, and I hope the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] will also be here, for if the people of his district are going to have a Democrat here I should prefer that they should send him, and I will say the same also of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY]. For what would this Congress be without his loving and serene smile? [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, as to the result of this skirting clause——

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to call for a vote on the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I object to that, because I do not wish to have my friend humiliated by a vote on that proposition. [Laughter.]

Now, as to the result of this skirting clause to which I have referred the Tariff Board says, on page 382 of volume 2, that in wools with a shrinkage of 40 per cent the actual rate on the scoured wool nets per pound 18⅓ cents instead of 33⅓, as the supporters of the law supposed. In wools with a shrinkage of 35 per cent the rate on the scoured pound is only 16 cents. That shows the reason for the dissatisfaction on the part of the woolgrowers with the present law, and consequently I am very glad to have the opportunity to comment upon certain things in that section. In this connection I desire to add an extract from an address recently delivered before the Ohio woolgrowers by Gov. Gooding, of Idaho:

To the woolgrowers it is a well-known fact that some parts of the fleece are very much lighter than other parts. It is by selecting the lightest fleeces that can be found in the world and then taking the lightest part of these fleeces that the importers beat Schedule K when shipping wool into America. Now let me show you how the importer beats Schedule K and you will understand why we want that schedule revised and the duty on wool assessed on the clean contents of a pound of wool. He looks the whole world over for light shrinking wool to ship to America; in fact, the whole wool world has been pitted against Schedule K. In Australia they go so far as to "willow" the fleeces. "Willowing" them means shaking them over a wire screen so as to remove all the dirt possible. The lightest fleeces of the flock are taken; the dirty wool around the neck, legs, and belly are taken out. This is called "skirting." In this way it is plain to be seen how all the lightest fleeces and the lightest parts of the fleece are shipped into America. The same is done in South America, and a phrase has grown up in the wool markets to-day, in speaking of a light fleece of wool, as being "fit for the American trade." Not that America needs any different kind of wool than any other country on earth, but being light in shrinkage, more clean wool can be brought in for 11 cents per pound. For instance, we will buy 100 pounds of wool in the London market, ship it to America, and pay the duty of $11. We will scour it and we find that we have washed away 66⅔ pounds of dirt and grease and have 33⅓ pounds of clean wool left. This is just what the law presumes will happen with wool that is shipped into this country. But Mr. Importer never buys that class of wool. He takes the lightest he can find, and the average wool that he ships in here will not shrink more than 40 per cent. Now we will buy the second hundred pounds of wool, ship it to America, and pay the $11 duty. We will scour it and we find that we have washed away 40 pounds of dirt and grease and have 60 pounds of clean wool left. So we find that we have imported into this country, under Schedule K, 60 pounds of scoured wool for $11 instead of 33⅓ pounds, as the law presumes is being done. So this is the way Mr. Importer has beaten Schedule K and has nearly cut our protection in two.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I shall be very glad to yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. SHARP. Is not this true, that another element that enters largely into the dissatisfaction of the woolgrowers is the fact that whereas there is not now and never has been such a relation as that which we call a "trust" or "trust system" among the woolgrowers, there has been, and is to-day, recognized quite generally more or less, a sort of combination between the buyers of the product, so that there is really no active competition among the bidders for the product of the woolgrowers? I ask that question because I find that state of affairs to exist in my own district, and I have been informed to that effect elsewhere by a reputable woolgrower.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the observation of my colleague from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] is correct. There is no combination among the farmers. They shear their sheep and have their little clip of wool, and they have no opportunity for combination. On the other hand, there is opportunity for combination on the other side, and that combination has undoubtedly existed among the great buyers in the eastern markets.

I might say another thing, and that is this: Every rumor of a proposed change in the tariff law is laid hold of by the wholesale buyers of wool to beat down the price paid to the local buyer, the farmer, and the woolgrower. I dare say that as a result of the agitation of the wool question in the last two or three years in some parts of the country wool has been practically sold on a free-trade basis and the woolgrowers have lost millions of dollars without the price of clothing being reduced one penny. I honestly believe that is true. I doubt whether the protection has exceeded in some instances 2 or 3 cents per grease pound. That is not true generally, but it applies in certain places.

Now, if we change this tariff, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me we ought to exercise a good deal of discretion and care in determining the kind of tariff that we shall adopt. We should decide intelligently whether it shall be an ad valorem duty or a specific duty. I am strongly in favor of a specific duty, based on the scoured content of the wool imported.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. I want to state to the gentleman that in southern Oregon and in California, where my home is, last year wool was selling at from 9 to 12 cents a pound, and the owner, shipping that wool from 50 to 200 miles, pays the freight on it himself. Now, where does he get any consideration?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, undoubtedly that is one of the cases that I was just referring to. It is quite evident that in the case to which the gentleman from California adverts the wool is sold practically on a free-trade basis.

Now, I want to call attention to the fact that the matter which the gentleman from California referred to absolutely disposes of the Democratic contention that the amount of the tariff is added to the price of the article. I thank the gentleman from California for that suggestion. It disposes of that argument effectively.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will pardon a suggestion, I want to say that the eastern buyers tell the farmer that they can not get anything for the wool. Then they fool around for two or three months, and finally they get the sheep raiser or the farmer to sell his wool for practically nothing. The combination and the men concerned in the wool monopoly in the East are the fellows that have been reaping the reward that the farmers and the woolgrowers should have had.

Mr. WILLIS. That is precisely the point that my friend from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] referred to. Now, the woolgrowers of the country are interested in having at least two changes made in the existing law. Of course I do not need to say that they expect and hope that an adequate protection to equalize the difference in costs of production here and abroad will still be afforded to their industry. I think I do not misstate the matter when I say that every time that farmers and woolgrowers have met together anywhere in this country within the last two or three years and have discussed the subject they have unanimously adopted resolutions saying, "We want, first, not an ad valorem duty, but a specific duty; and we desire, second, that that duty shall be levied on the basis of the scoured content." That, of course, would do away with the inequalities of the skirting clause.

Upon that point, it seems to me, there is another reason why we should have a specific duty. If we have an ad valorem duty at the time when the world price of wool is low, and when, therefore, our woolgrowers need protection the most, and when by the same token the manufacturers need cheap wool the least, under this ad valorem duty that is the time when wool comes in most freely. In other words, under the operation of the ad valorem scheme, it makes it easier to import wool at the time when you need it the least. On the other hand, suppose the world price of wool is high and you have an ad valorem duty. When the world price is high and the producers in this country therefore will not need the protection so much, and when the manufacturers of woolen goods need the opportunity to get wool with which to carry on their business, then, under the operation of your ad valorem system, you mark up the duties. Do you not see that it makes it still more difficult? In other words, the system of ad valorem duties on the importation of wool works exactly the reverse of what it ought to. It makes it easier to bring wool into the country when the country does not need it, and makes it more difficult to bring it into the country when the country does need it.

On the other hand, a specific duty will work just the reverse of an ad valorem duty, because when the world price of wool is low—and when the producers, therefore, need protection the most—if you have a specific duty then, relatively, it will be high. On the other hand, when the world price of wool is high, and when, therefore, it is desirable that there should be importations, the specific duty will be relatively lower, and importations can be had. In other words, the system of specific duties works automatically—just as we want it to work—and the system of ad valorem duties works automatically—just as we do not want it to work; it is just the reverse of what we want. This system of ad valorem duties is like a rain-making machine that will work only in wet weather. It is like a stove that will burn only in July. It accentuates the very thing you do not want, and when you do want it you can not get relief under it. For that reason the woolgrowers of this country want a specific duty, and for the reasons I have already given they want that specific duty levied on the basis of the scoured content.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. SHARP. I ask the question purely for information, because I am greatly interested in the gentleman's splendid exposition of this subject. Has the gentleman, in his study of this question of the relative merits of a specific duty and an ad valorem duty, run up against any difficulties in putting into practice the specific duty? I assume it to be true that you will find different values of scoured wool. Certain kinds of scoured wool will be worth very much more, perhaps, than other kinds. I would like to ask, for information, the manner in which the gentleman would meet that situation so that there would be no inequality or liability to fraud in grading these different kinds of scoured wool.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, that is a very proper and pertinent question, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP], with his usual frankness and clearness, has stated it as well as it could be stated.

That is one of the difficulties that you always are bound to run against in a system of specific duties. I do not know of any way by which you can avoid a little inequality; but I will say to my friend that it seems to me the inequalities that will proceed from the difference in values of the differing varieties of wool will be so slight compared with the inequalities that grow out of the ad valorem system that they are practically negligible. I am frank to state that there is that objection, but I do not know how you could draft a law that would entirely meet it.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman is exactly right, but the difficulty will be greatly relieved by the better ascertainment of the value of the wool when it is scoured and tested, and the price in the market will regulate the value of the wool.

Mr. WILLIS. I thank my friend for his suggestion. I think this will very largely obviate the difficulty.

Mr. RAKER. Will my distinguished colleague from Ohio yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. RAKER. Would there be any difficulty in enforcing the ad valorem duty in importing wool?

Mr. WILLIS. I am glad of that suggestion. There undoubtedly would be great invitation to fraud under a system of ad valorem duties. It would be a matter very difficult to guard against.

Mr. RAKER. Just how? I should like to have the gentleman give an illustration.

Mr. WILLIS. A number of consignments of wool will come in on the same steamer, and they may have been purchased at different prices. There is no standard of prices. The prices may vary in the same market, as is shown in volume 2 of the report. When you undertake to levy ad valorem duties you will have difficulty in ascertaining the actual value of the wool, and there will be a premium all the time upon fraud; whereas if you levy a specific duty on the basis of the scoured content there is no trouble about that, because, as was explained by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], whether it is fleece wool or a woolen suit, there is no difficulty at all in telling almost immediately and with practically no expense what the actual amount of scoured wool is in the garment or in the fleece. This is done by the carbonizing test through the use of sulphuric acid.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. With pleasure.

Mr. RAKER. There is not much wool imported in the scoured form, is there?

Mr. WILLIS. Not under the present system.

Mr. RAKER. Now, if you put 19 cents on the scoured content, would not there be just as much opportunity for fraud as there is in the duty on the greased wool?

Mr. WILLIS. No; there is no difficulty at all in determining the scoured content in any given quantity of wool.

Mr. RAKER. Is there not a great chance for fraud on the question of how much the shrinkage would be?

Mr. WILLIS. No; I do not think there is much opportunity for fraud there. I think in the markets of the world there is no difficulty about it. Anyone skilled in the wool business can take a sample from a sack of wool, no matter what the condition is, and they can tell you approximately what the scoured content will be. I think the chance of fraud is very much less than under the ad valorem system.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without taking the time of the committee to read it fully, I want to refer to a statement in volume 2, page 394, of the report, which is as follows:

> The economic objection to an ad valorem duty on wool arises from the fact that the amount of duty paid, since it fluctuates with the foreign value of the commodity, would not be adjusted to the needs of the Government, of the consumer, nor of the American woolgrower. A speculative change in the market which increased the price of wool would automatically lead to an increase in the amount of duty at the very time that the manufacturer is most hampered by the existing high price, when the consumer most needs relief, and the woolgrower is most prosperous. On the other hand, a fall in price brings a reduction of duty at a time when the woolgrower is at greatest disadvantage and when manufacturers can best afford to pay the tax.
> The tendency of sheep breeding all over the world is toward crossbreds, and the advocates of ad valorem wool duties have complained that under the present system of specific duties crossbreds can be imported more favorably than merinos, and that when the market for crossbreds declines the advantage in favor of the crossbreds is still further increased. During the season 1906–7, which was a normal one, the specific duty on South American crossbreds, taking into account the prices then prevailing in the foreign markets, was equivalent to an ad valorem rate of about 43–45 per cent. In the following season, 1907–8, including the time of the financial panic, prices abroad declined steadily, so that in May, 1908, the specific duty on the same grade of crossbred wool was equivalent to an ad valorem rate of 75 per cent. By thus increasing the ad valorem equivalent when foreign prices are low and decreasing it when foreign prices are high the specific duty automatically protects American woolgrowers against declines in the wool markets abroad and at the same time favors the American buyer when the foreign wools increase in value. In the case of drought or other calamity in the American woolgrowing industry and overproduction abroad, or vice versa, the specific duties would have a corrective tendency. Ad valorem duties would act in an entirely contrary manner—decreasing with the decline of values abroad and increasing with the rise of foreign markets, thus tending to throw open the American market to foreign wools in times of depression, when they could least withstand such pressure, and, on the other hand, when there was a scarcity of wool at home and prices soared, it would be impossible to find relief abroad.
> America occupies a unique position among the nations with regard to her woolgrowing and wool manufacturing, having practically no outlet for either in foreign markets. The American woolgrower is entirely dependent upon the home market. If the basic idea of the duty on wools is to give the domestic grower permanent protection, it should remain as uniformly effective as possible under all changes of foreign conditions (shortage, overproduction, etc.). Ad valorem duties would not accomplish this, being ineffective in times of overproduction and low prices abroad and giving an unnecessarily high protection in times of scarcity and high prices in foreign countries.

It seems to me that this succinct statement shows that it is very desirable that we should have a specific duty on wool, and that this duty should be based on the scoured pound.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a few matters to which I wish to refer. Some of them have been covered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in his remarks, and I shall pass over them hastily but insert the tables in the RECORD. These tables were prepared, as the gentleman from Wyoming stated, by S. W. McClure, secretary of the National Woolgrowers' Association, but I have taken the pains to verify them in every instance. I think I have cited the volume and page from the Tariff Board's report, and can certify that the computations are absolutely correct. A great many of them I made myself, so that I know they are right; others I have carefully checked over.

The first thing to which I wish to call attention is the question of wages. It is said that we can compete with the producers of wool anywhere in the world. I deny that proposition, and say that in the first place the reason why we can not successfully compete is because of the larger labor cost per sheep. By these tables it is shown that in the United States the average labor cost per sheep is 80 cents, in South America 23 cents, and in Australia 7 cents. That is for the labor outside of the cost of shearing the sheep. The labor cost of shearing in the United States is 9 cents, in Australia 7 cents, in South America 6 cents, and in Africa 2 cents per sheep. So measuring from any standpoint the labor cost is a great deal larger in this country than in any of its competitors.

Now, if we figure it on the number of sheep in the country it would amount in this country to $47,000,000, in South America $15,000,000, and in Australia $7,000,000. So that you see that the foreign countries referred to, particularly Australia and South America, have a great advantage in respect to the labor cost.

Mr. RAKER. Has the gentleman any figures or any statistics on the question as to the kind of labor employed in this country, as to whether it is American or foreign labor in the West?

Mr. WILLIS. As I recollect it, the Tariff Board does not give any definite statement as to that. I do not know that they tried to make any special investigation of that phase of the question. But it is brought out in the report that the labor is of a much higher grade in this country than in South America, where they rely largely on native labor, or in South Africa, where native labor is surprisingly cheap. The average monthly wages in the Transvaal are $10, in Natal $4.87, in Orange Free State $3.75, and in Rhodesia as low as $1.21.

Now, another point to which I wish to invite the attention of the committee is the cost of feed. I am not criticizing the Tariff Board in this respect; I am not criticizing them because they did not include interest; I am not criticizing them because they did not include the investment in land. Probably it would not have been feasible to make a computation otherwise than as they did, but we want to bear these things in mind in estimating costs. Upon that point—the feed of a sheep—some surprising facts are brought out. You will find them in volume 2, page 341, or thereabouts. Here, in a word, is what appears.

In the United States it costs the owner annually 45 cents per head, in South America 35 cents a head, in Africa 35 cents a head, but in Australia the total average cost per sheep is only 8 cents. That is to say, the Tariff Board finds by personal investigation that the feed of a sheep in Australia a year costs 8 cents. Any gentleman knows the climate there is such that it is not necessary to house the sheep; it is not necessary to make any provision for feed for winter time, because there is no winter time. The sheep run out of doors all the year round. The farmers do not need to feed them and do not feed them an ounce of grain. The wethers that go to the slaughter pens to furnish the great supply of frozen mutton that is sold all along the shores of the Pacific and in Europe are fattened simply upon the native grass, so that the men who raise wool and sheep in Australia have an amazing advantage from the standpoint of feed. Gentlemen will say, Why is that? I will tell you why it is. The Government of Australia is doing more to protect its sheep industry than any other government in the world. I am frank to say that it is doing more than I think a government ought to do. It is allowing the sheepmen to pasture their sheep upon Government lands almost without cost, as can be seen from that statement. When you can pasture a sheep for a year, getting all the food that the sheep needs, for 8 cents, it means that the Government is practically giving the sheepmen of Australia the food for their sheep. That I have worked out here considerably in detail, but I shall not stop to state it fully at this time. I will put it in the form of a general statement here. Take the number of sheep that we have in this country, approximately 52,000,000. To feed them here one year would cost $23,000,000; in South America it would cost $18,000,000; and in Australia, $4,000,000. In other words, between one-fifth and one-sixth of what it costs in the United States.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] referred to the question of taxation in the United States. It is 5 cents a head here in the United States, in South America it is 4 cents a head, and in Australia 2½ cents a head. So that it can be seen that the Australian producer has an advantage there. The same fact is brought out if we estimate it on the total number of sheep.

Another thing I wish I had time to go into, although I shall not take the time, is the question of transportation. A feature of the report of the Tariff Board that is important from a legislative standpoint is the relative charge for transporting wool to Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, the central markets to which all American wool goes, the markets to which imported wools are brought. The board finds the average charge for transporting 1 pound of grease wool from the western railroad station to the eastern market is 2 cents. From the Australian grower's port to the port of Boston per pound it is 2¼ cents. Passing from that, which I have gone into very carefully, I have reduced the whole thing to the basis of the scoured pound, because that is the only way in which you can make a fair estimate, and we reach the following conclusions that are borne out absolutely by this report of the Tariff Board. Here is what we find. We find that the freight on 1 pound of scoured wool from the grower's railroad station to Boston in the case of the western United States is about 6 cents a pound. In the case of Australia it is 3 cents a pound, and in the case of South America it is 1 cent a pound. From London it is one-quarter of a cent a pound. In other words, here is the actual fact: From the great pastures where the largest amount of wool is produced in this country the freight rates to the Boston market are, to put it very conservatively, vastly greater than they are from the sheep pastures of our great competitors.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SHARP. In that connection has the gentleman given any thought or consideration to what possible influence the opening of the Panama Canal will have in enabling the western wool, which admittedly can be raised more cheaply there than in any other section of our country, to reach the Boston markets?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, that is a very happy suggestion and one of my hobbies. I, of course, have not gone into that question far enough to be able to say what the result will be, but it is my hope, as I am sure it is the hope of every other patriotic American, that when we get the Panama Canal finished and keep it in our own control—not turn it over to the management of some great railroad corporation—and maintain it and own and maintain the Panama Railroad, we will be in a position to see to it that the great transcontinental railroad lines no longer can hold up the woolgrowers and other producers and shippers, and make them pay exorbitant prices, so exorbitant that they are almost shut out of the Boston markets. In my judgment that will be one of the greatest benefits flowing from the completion of the Panama Canal. [Applause.]

Making the same computation on the basis of the total production of wool, to bring that amount of wool from our 11 Western States, costs $3,400,000; from Australia, it costs $1,700,000; and from England, $142,000. In other words, our chief competitors have a great advantage in the matter of freight rates. Another thing to which I wish to call attention very briefly is the question of the total expense per sheep per year, not counting interest. We are leaving that out. The total expense in Ohio is $2.40; in western United States, $2.11; in South America, $1.15; in Australia, 93 cents; and in Africa, 93 cents, so that we are again at a disadvantage. I referred before to the fact that the board in its invesigations had omitted interest. The board is fair and conservative, and it is positively ridiculous for anybody to say that the Tariff Board is the representative of anybody's tariff views. It is perfectly absurd. The Tariff Board does not represent anybody's tariff views. They are not making a tariff. They are collecting facts. They are not the representatives of the President or of anybody else.

I want to call your attention to the reason they give why they leave out interest. (Vol. 2, pp. 314–356.) I find I have opened the volume at page 356:

> Sheep render a useful service by keeping a farm free from weeds, and the fertilizing value of the flock is so universally conceded that farmers generally agree that these two items offset the ordinary farm labor involved in caring for the sheep.

That brings up an interesting point concerning the Ohio region, showing how conservative the Tariff Board is in its report. There is not a penny allowed the farmer for the labor of caring for the sheep. It is estimated by the board that the value that comes from the fertilization of the soil and the destruction of weeds and briers pays the labor cost, and they made that offset. Surely the board has not been any too liberal with the woolgrower in this case.

Here is what they say in regard to interest:

> Interest is usually figured as a part of production cost in such operation, but as rates are not uniform it gives a fairer basis of compensation to omit any charge on that account, leaving that item for the consideration of each individual as bearing upon the question of his profit rather than his cost.

I think the board is fair, as they left out the item of interest everywhere. But so far as they go on the subject they say what the interest is, so we can understand what it would amount to if it were taken into consideration. I think the gentleman from Wyoming referred to that in his statement.

Page 314 gives further reasons, substantially the same as I have read, why they have omitted the statement of interest. I am going to state, by the way, what the rates of interest are; I do not know whether it was stated by the gentleman from Wyoming or not. On page 314, volume 2, of the report of the Tariff Board they say:

> In examining our various tabulations it should be remembered that no interest is allowed on capital invested or on capital borrowed. Our schedules contained statistics of the amount of capital borrowed and the rate of interest paid; but, notwithstanding the fact that it has been the practice, in discussing the sheep industry, to consider interest as an item of cost, it has been thought advisable in this investigation to consider it in connection with profits. Since some flock owners use much more borrowed capital than do others, this elimination of interest from costs makes the schedules more comparable.
> In the western United States the prevailing rate of interest varies from 8 per cent to 10 per cent, in Australia from 4 per cent to 6 per cent, and in South America from 5 per cent to 6 per cent.

So you see again, in a matter of interest, we are at a disadvantage. I have already referred to the average cost per sheep per year, not including interest. I shall not take up your time now to go into the question further than to say it shows when we take interest into consideration the American producer of wool and sheep is at a still greater disadvantage. Now, in order to determine the cost of producing wool the board determined the total expenses of the flock. How did the board figure out to determine the actual cost of producing a pound of wool? I have that information in volume 2, page 313. Here is what the board says about it:

> To this end we have considered wool as the chief product, and the receipts from mutton are offset against costs. When the receipts from mutton are less than the total flock expense, the difference is the "net charge against wool." When, on the other hand, the receipts from mutton are greater than the expense, the difference is the "net credit to wool." And this net charge or net credit to wool, divided by the number of pounds of wool, is the "net charge against or net credit to a pound of wool."

I submit that that method is fair.

Mr. SHARP. Does that refer to the net price of mutton or to the gross receipts?

Mr. WILLIS. As I understand, they will take the total receipts from items other than wool from the expenses of carrying on the flock, excluding interest and investment in land. They take the total expenses and offset against that what they receive from mutton and what they receive from sheep for breeding and other purposes. For example, say those items of income just offset the cost of keeping up the flock. Then the wool has cost nothing, so far as the price at which it can be sold is concerned.

Mr. SHARP. They consider the gross receipts.

Mr. WILLIS. Precisely. Now, in that connection, for the benefit of American woolgrowers—I see my time is almost gone—I want to call attention to another fact here set forth very clearly in volume 2, page 350, wherein it shows the kind of competition that our woolgrowers must meet. I think a portion of it was embodied by the gentleman from Connecticut in his speech, but I want to use some in connection with what I have to say here. This is on page 350, where they use the following language:

> There remains, therefore, only the simple operation of subtracting from the flock expenses the receipts from other sources than wool, to reveal the fact that as against a clearly demonstrated net charge against the western American wool of from 10 to 11 cents, there is probably not more than 4 to 5 cents per pound against the South American clip, and if the season is normal and the sheep market steady, little, if any, charge against the Australian. Indeed, well-managed stations in many parts of Australia are showing at the present time a profit before any wools are sold.
> This qualification is generally applicable to the stock trade in all of the larger sheep districts of Australia. Statements similar to the above are made by two other prominent owners with regard to returns from surplus stock in Queensland and Western Australia. But both say that in good years, and on well-managed runs, the sales of sheep yield enough to pay working expenses. One of these anticipates that, in view of the increasing exports of Australian mutton and lamb, the surplus station stock will in future years give an annual return considerably in excess of the amount of the working expenses—assuming that no large addition is made to the cost of labor in the meantime.
> In the light, therefore, of the best information to be obtained, the board believes that at the present time the entire Australian output of merino and crossbred wool (interest being left out of account, as in the case of the United States) is moving to market, under present receipts from sales of sheep, with a net average charge of but a few cents per pound; and this estimate apparently holds good of New Zealand and the African Cape as well.

That is Australia, gentlemen. Then reference is made to the South American clip. In Australia, if the season is normal and the sheep market is steady, there is little, if any, charge against the Australian wool. In all well-managed stations in many parts of Australia they are showing at the present time a profit before the wool is sold.

You see the income from mutton and other sources keeps up the running expense of the flock, so that the wool costs absolutely nothing. In other words, the prices are figured just as they are figured in the United States, and the farmers of Ohio and the farmers elsewhere throughout the United States are in competition with farmers who make a profit on their sheep, even without selling their wool.

Mr. SLOAN. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that I was very much interested in what the gentleman has said about the sheep-growing industry of Ohio, and I was reminded of what was said by Roswell G. Horr or "Sunset" Cox as to what would take place when a Democratic statesman would meet an Ohio sheep. I want to know if a Democratic statesman now can look an Ohio sheep in the face—a thing which it was said he could not do a generation ago? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am unable to answer that. I could not say whether they would be able to look an Ohio sheep in the face without being ashamed or not.

Now, in Australia this wool goes to market without a penny of cost charged against it. That is the kind of competition that the farmers of this country must meet.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. According to the gentleman's system of reasoning, if a man were raising cotton in the South and raised one bale of cotton, when the balance of the products that he raised on the place would pay the expenses of running the place, then the cotton would be all profit, and the result would be that the bale of cotton would cost him nothing, and if he got 5 cents a pound for it it would be all profit. By segregating the costs of the various activities on the farm, omitting one particular thing, you would be able to show a clear profit on that particular thing. In that way a farmer might be able to show a clear profit on the potatoes that he raises, just the same as on a bale of cotton. Suppose a man did not count his cotton as a money crop, but raised potatoes principally as the source of his income. Then the cotton would show a clear profit, and the same calculation could be made with respect to any other crop.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that that is not my philosophy or my logic. I am trying to set forth the findings of fact reported by the Tariff Board. But, so far as that is concerned, it seems to me that that is a fair method of procedure. Take the growing of cotton, for example. If it could be shown that the cotton seed alone sold for enough money to pay for the expense of raising the cotton crop, the cotton fiber itself would be clear profit. That would be an apt illustration of the woolgrowing situation in Australia.

Now, on page 514 of this same volume it is shown that in South Africa the same condition obtains. The statement is as follows:

Sale of surplus stock and mutton: In the Cape Province fat ewes are reported as selling for $4.50 per head and fat lambs 5 months old at $4. Old ewes are readily sold for local slaughter at from $2.50 to $3 per head, according to their flesh.

At the present time the demand for mutton is so strong that there is a good profit in breeding the woolless sheep for mutton alone. Where the sheep combine both wool and mutton the profits must naturally be much greater.

Cost of production: The average shearing per head is estimated at 6 pounds, with an average price received by the growers of 13½ cents per pound.

With an average valuation on breeding sheep of $2.50 per head and an investment, excluding lands in improvements and equipment per head of not over 40 cents per year, and taking into account the low cost of wages and provisions, the moderate leasing values of their grazing lands, the mild winters which do not demand other food for the animals than that found on the ranges, the strong demand for mutton of all classes, it is evident that the African woolgrower is able to meet all his expenses from the sale of his surplus stock and mutton, leaving the wool as a clear profit on his investment.

One flock owner in Rhodesia reports he can sell his wool at 12 cents per pound and make money.

They carry on the business there at a clear profit without counting in receipts from wool. That is the kind of wool with which our American farmers have to compete.

Now, I have a lot of figures here, but I shall not take any more of the time of the committee in discussing this phase of the question. The tables that I have here I shall insert in the RECORD. I want, in the concluding moments that I have, to refer to the effect that this bill will have on the woolgrowing industry in the Ohio region. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has already touched upon that, and upon its effect in the territorial region. It is shown by the report of the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, pages 43 and 44. I am not giving the figures of the Tariff Board now, but the statements by the majority of the Committee on Ways and Means:

Figuring this as a percentage upon the cost of the competitive Australian wool imported into the United States, which may be taken as 50.8 cents a scoured pound, on the average, it is found that 28.6 cents represents over 55 per cent ad valorem. This is very much more than the protection amounts to, accorded under the present specific basis. In the board's table of actual importations and scourings in a representative American mill (pp. 387–389) the equivalent ad valorems run from about 34 per cent to about 55 per cent. In a very few instances there are equivalent ad valorems as high as 55 per cent. It would seem, then, that the Ohio wool-producing region is not protected now on the assumption that the board's cost figures are correct and that, if it is to be protected at all, the tariff on wool would have to be very much raised above its present figures, so as to give a rate of 28 or 29 cents on the scoured pound and of at least 55 per cent ad valorem.

It should be frankly admitted that on the Tariff Board's estimate the Ohio region and a very few of the Western States would need a protection in excess of 20 per cent.

In other words, not taking time to read all that, it is shown by the majority report of the committee that according to their own figures the woolgrowers in the Ohio region are entitled to something like 28 or 29 cents on the scoured pound.

Now, I want my friends from that woolgrowing section, not only the Ohio Members, but all Members from that section, to ask themselves this question, In what position will we put ourselves with the woolgrowers by this bill? Here is an admission by the framers and defenders of the bill that the bill will absolutely put the Ohio woolgrowers out of business. That is stated absolutely in the majority report of the committee, that the sheep business can not live if this bill becomes a law. I am not expecting that we will get a rate of 28 cents a pound on the scoured content, but I am expecting and I am saying that the woolgrowers have the right to expect better treatment than is accorded to them in this bill, which accords to them only a pitiful 20 per cent ad valorem. That is no protection at all. I have talked with hundreds of farmers—not with the silk-hatted varieties of farmers, but with the real farmers who farm and raise wool—and they have said to me, "We would rather have absolutely free wool than this Democratic scheme on a 20 per cent ad valorem basis. Then we would know where we are."

Mr. BOWMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me, I would like to say that on the question of the price of wool paid to the farmers I was very much interested by the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] in regard to the uncertainty of the price paid to the farmer and the low prices received by him. Suppose the policy on the part of both the leading parties in this country was that protection to the limit of competition should be given on wool, and there was certainty about it. Would there not be a very much greater certainty and assurance on the part of the farmer as to the price he would get than there is now?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly; that is desirable. We want to get this thing settled in some way. I am willing to concede something. I am frank to say that as I study the report of the Tariff Board I do not believe that the rate of duty on raw wool in the bill reported by the minority is quite as high as it ought to be. I mean the rate on the scoured pound.

According to the report the cost to produce 1 pound of grease wool, without interest, is as follows:

Ohio	$0.19
Western United States	.11
Average, United States	.096
South America	.045
Australia	.00
Africa	.00

Since Australia is the greatest wool-producing country in the world, and is the country from which we import the bulk of our foreign wool, and since Australian wool competes directly with our own product in quality, it is essential that a tariff drawn with the idea of producing revenue or protecting the American woolgrower must be based upon the relative difference in cost between wool production in this country and Australia. When interest is included we find that it costs on an average 11.3 cents more to produce a pound of grease wool in the United States than it does in Australia, excluding the difference in cost of transportation. Now, if these wools were of equal shrinkage—that is, if they produced an equal amount of wool when scoured—a tariff levied upon the grease basis of 11.3 cents would be the difference in the cost of production, based on the findings of the Tariff Board. But since it is recognized by everyone who has studied the question of wool and its products that 1 pound of grease wool may be equal in scoured wool to 3 pounds of grease wool from another section, and since the value of wool depends upon the amount of scoured wool that the grease wool produces, it must be clear that a tariff to afford the difference in cost must be based on the difference in the cost of producing a pound of scoured wool in this country and its chief competitor.

Of course, it would be fair in determining the difference in the cost of producing scoured wool to base that difference upon the average shrinkage of imported wools, which is approximately 40 per cent or less; but, in order to present this matter without prejudice, we shall accept the shrinkage of foreign wools as given by the board on page 12 of volume 1 of the report:

Shrinkage of wools.

	Per cent.
Ohio	60
Western United States	62
Average, United States	60.4
England	25.1
Australia	48.54
South America	51.04
Africa	58.4

The following table shows the cost to produce 1 pound of scoured wool without interest:

Ohio	$0.475
Western United States	.289
Average, United States	.242
Australia	.00
Africa	.00
South America	.092

On the basis of the above table it is therefore clear that if interest is not to be included as a cost there is an actual difference in the cost of producing a pound of scoured wool between this country and Australasia of 24.2 cents per pound. This, however, does not take into consideration the difference in the cost of transportation.

But this is a question on which men's judgments will differ. I am willing to concede something. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] may be right about the rate. We want to get this thing settled on the basis of a specific duty and on the basis of the scoured content.

I have samples of wool which I have collected from among the woolgrowers of the eighth Ohio district. I wish we had time, so that every Member could see what I want you to see with reference to the character of this wool.

The wool grown in the Ohio region is the best grown anywhere in the world. Take this wool right here. Here is a prize Australian fleece. You can pull the fibers apart as you would pull cotton batting; the Australian fiber is lustrous and beautiful, but not strong. Take the same number of fibers of Ohio wool, and the moment you make the test you realize that when you put the same amount of force on it as I am now doing it does not break them at all. The Ohio wool is the strongest wool to be found anywhere in the world. There is no question about that. It is the best wool grown anywhere. On this point Gov. Gooding says in his address to the Ohio woolgrowers:

Do you know that here in Ohio and in some of your adjoining States you produce the best wool in the world; that the Army and Navy of the United States are dressed in cloth principally made from wool grown in Ohio? In the days of the Civil War this Government required that all cloth for the Army and Navy should be made out of American wool. It was a war measure, and put into effect to encourage wool production in this country, for wool is conceded by all to be a great necessity in times of war. The great Napoleon attributed his defeat in Russia more to the lack of woolen clothing for his men than to any other one cause. This Government, however, has since discovered that cloth made from American wool stood a very much stronger tearing test than wools produced in any other country. The wearing quality of wool depends solely upon the strength of the wool fiber from which it is made. In its contracts to-day for cloth this Government specifies that cloth weighing 13 ounces to the yard shall stand a tearing test of 65 pounds to the inch in the direction of the warp. A piece of cloth is placed between two clamps and thumb screws are applied and a tearing pressure of 65 pounds applied to the cloth. If one thread of wool breaks, the cloth is condemned. There is no wool grown in the world, with the exception of that grown in Ohio and some of your adjoining States—a little in Nevada; a little in my own State, Idaho; and some in Oregon—that will stand the high tearing test that this Government demands to-day for the cloth for the Army and Navy.

Here is another thing to be noticed. Gentlemen say, Let the woolgrowers in the Ohio region go into some other branch of the sheep industry. I tell you, gentlemen, that if you destroy the great merino flocks of Ohio, you will cripple the wool industry of the world, because it is only by crossing the breeds, by using the crossbreeds that they already have as a foundation, and improving the stock by importations from the Ohio flocks that you can keep up the standard. This is the origin of the "comeback," a term so familiar in foreign wool markets. Why, bless you, this wool right here that is raised in Australia has its fineness and its luster because of the imported blood from the flocks of Ohio. We must maintain these flocks in the Ohio region if our country is to remain one of the great wool-producing nations.

The committee have been very kind to me, and I shall not detain you longer, except that in the name of the woolgrowers of this country I say to the majority, it seems to me, gentlemen, that we are entitled to fairer treatment than we are about to receive at your hands. The sheep industry of this country has a right to live. If you pass this bill, you invite a repetition of the disaster of 1894. The farmers and woolgrowers of Ohio ask no special favors; they simply want a fair chance. In their behalf I ask for a specific duty on raw wool to be based on the scoured content at a rate sufficient to equalize the difference in cost of production here and in the chief competing foreign countries. Do not paralyze Ohio's industries and darken her homes by passing this free-trade bill!

The sun never shone on a country more fair than beautiful, peerless Ohio:
There's life in a kiss of her rarefied air—Ohio, prolific Ohio;
Her sons they are honest and valiant and bright,
Her beautiful daughters are just about right,
But her sheepmen and farmers would be in a sad plight
Under Democrat rule in Ohio.

[Laughter and applause.]

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. FINLEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GRAHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following joint resolutions:

H. J. Res. 263. Joint resolution to authorize allotments to Indians of the Fort Berthold Indian Reservation, N. Dak., of lands valuable for coal; and

H. J. Res. 232. Joint resolution extending the operation of the act for the control and regulation of the waters of Niagara River, for the preservation of Niagara Falls, and for other purposes.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the president of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, of California, in relation to the San Francisco Mint and the Panama Canal, my answer thereto, and a statement by myself.

Mr. WILLIS. Reserving the right to object, I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman, but it was understood that after the general debate closed there was to be no further business. I was so informed by gentlemen on this side of the aisle.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, this was understood some time before, that this particular matter would be permitted.

Mr. RAKER. I do not know anything about the arrangement, but I saw the leader on this side of the House, and he said he had no objection to my making the request.

Mr. WILLIS. Can not the gentleman just as well have it inserted in the RECORD on Monday?

Mr. RAKER. It is only a telegram from the grand president of the Native Daughters of the Golden West, who reports that 8,000 ladies are interested in the San Francisco Mint, a historic place in California, and I would like to have it go in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the Daughters of the Golden West and the Daughters of the Golden East, but I believe that this matter will keep until Monday, and I feel constrained to object.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 93. Joint resolution authorizing the Librarian of Congress to furnish a copy of the daily and bound CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard; to the Committee on Printing.

H. R. 1. An act granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, with Senate amendment; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. THAYER, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for five days, on account of attendance at court as a witness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors was discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 21590, a bill to authorize levee and drainage district No. 25, of Dunklin County, Mo., to construct and maintain a levee across a branch or cut-off of St. Francis River in Missouri, and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, when the House meets at 11 o'clock, I be permitted to speak on this bill for 20 minutes; that general debate continue thereafter for two hours, one hour to be occupied by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the second hour by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], and that general debate close at 1.30 instead of at 1 o'clock, as heretofore agreed upon. I will say that this is in accordance with the consent of the parties who have heretofore been managing the matter, and that the extra time in compensation to the other side of the House has already been used.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the agreement heretofore made in reference to closing debate on the bill be modified so that when the House meets on Monday next he shall have 30 minutes, the gentleman from New York one hour, and the gentleman from North Carolina one hour. Is there objection?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire if this is an understanding that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has had with with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]?

Mr. GRAHAM. I will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] agreed before me that that program should be carried out on Monday, and in conformity with that proposed agreement the Republican side of the House has already had 31 minutes more time than has the Democratic side.

Mr. HILL. I have no objection, if that is the understanding.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say that under an arrangement between myself and the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] that he will not object next Monday to my putting the telegram I have referred to in the RECORD, I will not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Monday, April 1, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, submitting department views on H. R. 22048, a bill to further restrict the admission of aliens into the United States, in response to inquiry of Mr. BURNETT (H. Doc. No. 659), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 22593) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 477), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURGESS: A bill (H. R. 22636) to provide for the erection of a public building at Yoakum, Tex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22637) to provide for the erection of a public building at Bay City, Tex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FERGUSSON: A bill (H. R. 22638) to provide for the purchase of a site and construction of a Federal building in the town of Las Vegas, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22639) for the purchase of a site and erection of a Federal building at Las Cruces, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22640) to provide for the purchase of a site and erection of a Federal building at Raton, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 22641) providing that storekeepers, gaugers, and storekeeper-gaugers shall be allowed their actual expenses, not to exceed $1 a day, while on duty under an assignment away from their legal residences; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (by request): A bill (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, April 1, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, who hast been our refuge in all generations, we come before Thee with bowed heads and saddened hearts over the great loss we have suffered. We know indeed that the way of man is not in himself alone, and that it is not in us who walk to direct our steps. Therefore we submit our lives unto Thee, whose we are. Though Thou slay us, yet will we put our trust in Thee. Deepen in us, we pray Thee, the confidence that amid all earth's changes Thou changest not, and fulfill unto us the promise that Thine unfailing love shall be sufficient for our deepest sorrow.

And unto Thee, our Father, who hast loved us with an everlasting love and hast given us comfort and good hope through the gospel, be glory and praise now and for evermore. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the last legislative day, Thursday, March 28, when, on request of Mr. CULLOM and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR ROBERT LOVE TAYLOR.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the Senate the death of my colleague, Hon. ROBERT LOVE

TAYLOR, a distinguished Member of this body and three times governor of the State he represented in the Senate. He died yesterday at Providence Hospital in this city.

I fully appreciate the profound sorrow which his death has occasioned in the hearts of the Members of this body, for in my short experience here I have learned of the affectionate regard in which he was held by Senators on both sides of the Chamber.

It is not now the proper time for any extended remarks upon Senator TAYLOR's distinguished public service and his eminent character, but at the proper time I shall ask the Senate to suspend temporarily its business that fitting tribute may be paid to his high character and distinguished public service.

At the present time I offer the following resolutions, and ask for their adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 271) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. ROBERT LOVE TAYLOR, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. TAYLOR.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from Washington to Nashville, Tenn., for burial in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee under the second resolution Mr. LEA, Mr. BACON, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. BOURNE, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. PAGE, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. KERN.

Mr. LEA. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 2, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 1, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We come to Thee Almighty God our heavenly Father with glad hearts, rejoicing in the possession of life with its splendid environment, its lofty hopes and glorious aspirations, which are ever moving us onward and upward to higher manhood. Strengthen, we beseech Thee, our faith in Thee, that when sorrows gather about us we shall not fail, when the storms of adversity burst upon us we shall be firm, and when temptations roll in upon us like the mighty waves of the ocean we shall be strong to resist, for "He that dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

Touched by the sudden death of another one of the congressional family, whose smiles and cheering words brought sunshine into the hearts of thousands, comfort his many friends and bereaved family with the thought that he still lives to the larger life in Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, March 30, 1912, was read and approved.

SERVICE PENSION BILL.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I call up the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico, with Senate amendments, and move that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana reports the bill H. R. 1, and moves to disagree to the Senate amendments and asks for a conference. The question is on disagreeing to the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. SULLOWAY.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 22195, to revise the woolen schedule.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 22195, with Mr. GRAHAM in the chair.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in the concluding hours of the debate on this pending measure—the woolen schedule, commonly known as Schedule K—it is apparent that no argument which can be made will in any manner affect the terms of the bill as it will pass the House; but the debate has shown conclusively that the Democratic bill framed in the last session of this Congress by the Committee on Ways and Means, and which was adopted by the Democratic caucus and is identically the same as the pending bill, should have been passed into a law at that time, so that relief might have been then given to the people of the United States. The Republican objections to it have all been met. The reasons for delay have been shown to be groundless. The President's veto of the measure was an exercise of Executive authority—no matter how honestly exercised—which resulted in placing upon the people of the United States the burden of Schedule K for one year longer, a burden which he himself had previously said was indefensible from any standpoint. The Republican position in politics is the opposite of the position of the Democrats in principle and policies; and it might be well, while we consider these various schedules and the revision of them from time to time, to stop and consider why the Republican Party stands out against every reform proposed in the interest of the common people. While they profess allegiance to American industry and American labor, they continuously oppose every measure that tends to free industry from embarrassment or ameliorate the conditions of labor. When driven from one position they fall back to another; but the fight is continuous, and always to prevent reform.

The difference between the Democratic and the Republican tariff is as distinctive as the difference between equal rights and special privileges. The Democratic Party has always looked upon the Constitution as a charter from the people of all the States which gives to the National Government only the power expressed therein, the limitations to which should be as sacredly guarded as the power conferred should be wisely and efficiently executed. The constitutional power of the Congress to levy a tariff on imports was intended as a means of raising revenue for the administration of the Federal Government. It is a tax pure and simple, and the principle of economy applies as well to the levying of the tariff as it does to the appropriation of the revenue derived therefrom. The Democratic doctrine maintains that no more revenue should be collected than is needed for the economical administration of the Government; that this revenue should be secured in the most just and economical way; that high rates of duty should be avoided; that the necessaries of life should, if possible, be relieved from taxation, and luxury and wealth should be made to bear their full measure of the public burden.

The Republican Party, being both sectional and partisan, has constantly opposed the Democratic policy, and has in the last 50 years succeeded in building up, step by step and stone by stone, a tariff system and a tariff wall which have established monopoly of home industries and warped and paralyzed our foreign trade.

It has always been the pretense of protectionism that high rates of duty would give the American market to the protected industries, and at the same time labor would have a proportionately increased wage, and high prices to the consumer would be prevented by competition. None of these claims are true except the first. The protected industries have, indeed, full control of the American market, but labor has received no share of the benefit, and monopolistic combinations have destroyed competition. All the evils that were feared by its opponents have materialized without any of the good results that were claimed by its advocates. The cost to the consumer and to all unprotected industries has greatly increased; the cost of living has been made oppressively burdensome and American workmen have been forced to compete not only among themselves, but also with the hordes of cheap labor imported by the protected industries.

The whole system is wrong, both in policy and in morals. It stands in violation of equal rights and common honesty. Its mailed hand strikes with fearful force the principles of free government and the liberties of the people. The tariff on many articles is higher than the whole labor cost of production. It is levied not for revenue, but to enrich the privileged classes. It is, in plain words, a system by which the few are enabled to levy tribute on the whole country. It is so cunningly devised as to place heavy burdens on labor and secure for wealth immunity from taxation. The Democratic doctrine is reversed and the heaviest burdens are placed on the necessaries of life instead of upon luxuries. The Government is made to secure its revenue from the pittance of the poor, leaving practically untouched the untold millions of predatory wealth.

Were these statements new they would, indeed, be startling, but they have been so frequently made as to be almost trite, and yet no relief has been effected. For more than 30 years the people of this country have been struggling to secure revision of the tariff, lowering the rates and lessening the burdens; but this long warfare has been so successfully met by the beneficiaries of protectionism that instead of lower rates and lighter burdens the rates have been raised and the burdens increased.

In dealing with the question of tariff revision the Democrats in Congress have two great obstacles. First, the artificial environment of our industries to which they have been compelled to conform; and second, the immense amount of revenue it is necessary to collect in order to meet the extravagant legislation heretofore enacted by the Republican Party. In some instances a return to just and proper rates at one step might prove hurtful to some investments that have been honestly established under existing laws, and in other cases the necessity for revenue will not permit of reductions that could otherwise be made.

The Republican system of tariff legislation has been so complex that an accurate understanding of its real effects and burdens is almost impossible. The Democracy, however, true to its pledges, is determined to effect its revision of the tariff schedules with justice to all and for the interest of the whole country. The only hope of an equitable and proper tariff revision lies in the success of the Democratic Party. The Republican organization is determined to prevent revision if possible, and to circumvent by any and all means any attempt at revision. The stand-pat Republican controls the party. The Republican insurgent is a tariff reformer only on dress parade. He clings persistently to the doctrine of protectionism and thereby renders futile and absurd his reform theories.

As long as our tariff laws are written in the interest of protected industries, instead of for revenue only, the robbery of the people will continue as in the past. The insurgent's doctrine of tariff reform applies to everything except the products of his own district and State. The stand-pat Republican has quite a clear appreciation of this liberal spirit on the part of the insurgent, but exercising as he does the control of the Republican machine, he understands that a sufficient number of interests covering a sufficient amount of territory must combine and recognize each other's claims in order to make safe their own. The stand-pat Republican is working for such combination in order to keep his party in power, while the Republican insurgent is struggling desperately to keep apparently abreast of the Democratic reform element in his section, holding out a promise of relief through the Republican Party, in order that he may retain his seat in Congress.

Those who hope for reform can reasonably look to the Democratic Party alone, and those who would have the tariff revised in the interest of the people, whatever their party affiliation, should see to it that no protectionists are sent to Congress. A protectionist in the Democratic organization is more hurtful to the cause of tariff reform than a Republican occupying his place.

As long as the tariff laws are made by those who favor the few as against the many, just so long will the many continue to be robbed by the few, and in this connection I want to say that the most dangerous advocates of the special interests to-day are those who preach the doctrine of tariff for revenue only in States that are naturally Democratic on this issue, but who claim that the protection enjoyed by the manufacturer should be extended to the producer of raw material in order to equalize the burden of taxation. It is a dangerous doctrine because it is deceptive in its nature, has something of the appearance of fairness, and appeals strongly to the self-interest of those producing the raw materials.

Every time tariff protection is extended downward from the manufactured article to the raw material a new group of protectionists is created clamoring for more protection and joining in the cry with all other protectionists. Those who shout for a protective tariff on raw wool, for instance, support also the efforts of the woolen manufacturers to maintain a high tariff on woolen goods.

There should be no tariff levied for protection. The principle involved is very clear. There should be collected only the necessary amount of revenue, and this amount should be obtained in the most economical manner. A tariff bill made by the Congress on this basis would include in the dutiable list very few, if any, of the articles of commerce commonly known as raw materials.

The pending bill is the same which passed the House at the last session. It was then prepared by the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means and adopted by the Democratic caucus of the House. It reduces the present rates of Schedule K and would if enacted into law greatly benefit the country. It is a step in the right direction and should be followed at the proper time by still greater reductions. Woolen goods are perhaps more important in reference to health than any other item among the taxed necessaries of life. It would be a blessing to the country if all manufactures of wool could be placed on the free list.

I do not intend to go into a general discussion of the bill, as I made extended remarks upon it at the last session, but in this connection I want to again call attention to what I then endeavored, among other things, to impress upon the Congress and the country in reference to the effect the present high price of woolens has upon infant life. I stated then, and assert it now, that the death rate among the young infants of the very poor is fearfully increased by lack of proper woolen garments. The discussion at this session, I am pleased to note, has brought out many strong statements along this line. There can be no doubt but that the exorbitant rates on the woolen schedule have caused the death of thousands and tens of thousands of American infants. In addition to this, the old, the sick, the feeble, who by their poverty have been unable to pay the high prices demanded for woolen goods, have suffered in untold numbers great injury to health and much loss of life. The outrageous exactions in Schedule K are miserably mean and pitifully cruel. It is a notable illustration that "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

All legislation should be enacted in the interest of the whole people. This everyone would admit as a sound principle. The influences, however, that have operated in the development of the Republican tariff system have not been exercised in the interest of the public, but with a view of bestowing special favor upon the privileged class. Greed has dictated the policy of protectionism and, shame to say, the special interests themselves have written the tariff schedules. The real history of tariff legislation in this country is almost incredible when we consider that for decade after decade a free people in a popular Government, who boast their love of liberty and who have in each succeeding election an opportunity to correct existing evils, should fail so repeatedly to assert themselves and to hurl from power the party organization which has so often and continuously betrayed them.

As every despotism pretends to be established in the interest of freedom, so organized monopoly proclaims itself the friend and protector of labor. Its slogan is the protection of American industries and American labor, while it seeks to shackle the one and enslave the other. It now shamelessly declares that combination and monopoly, which it has heretofore denied—even many times denied under oath—is but the natural outgrowth and evolution of modern civilization, and that the Government, whose laws they have defied and set at naught, should legalize their infamous policy.

The effect of protectionism on business has been to cut off foreign competition in our home markets, enabling protected industries to exact higher prices and greatly enlarge their profits, thus year after year building up great and growing fortunes, owned by the few, at the expense of the toiling millions who are victims of protectionism. As the holdings of the rich grew greater their capacity to organize larger business and widen their operations increased in geometrical ratio, controlling production and the various channels of trade and absorbing the great reserve wealth of our natural resources. To do this it was necessary to control the Government, which they have done with ruthless hand.

In the few minutes that I have in which to conclude my remarks I wish to call the attention of the committee and the country to the methods by which the Republican Party has been able to control the Congress, has been able to build up this tariff system which operates so oppressively on the consumer, the producer, and all the people. Special privilege has been built up because special privilege has controlled the lawmaking power. An assertion like that ought to elicit the earnest attention of every patriot, be he Republican, Democrat, Populist, Socialist, or Independent. If special interest can control the lawmaking power, the people have no rights that will be respected. I assert that the methods which have been adopted are plain when you study the organization and operation of the various Congresses. I shall not speak specially in reference to this Congress, but as to former Congresses. Look at the membership, look at their employment, look at the committees upon which they were placed, and when you find that those who are interested in the protected industries and their officers, agents, and attorneys are upon the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the House, and on similar committees in the Senate, it is very easy to understand that the legislation emanating from those sources will be poisoned with self-interest and with special privilege. The fact that the lumber interests write the schedule on lumber, that those who are interested in the Woolen Trust write Schedule K, that those interested in cotton manufacture write the schedule on that textile, that those interested in steel and coal and meat and in everything you can name in the whole catalogue of protected industries write the schedules affecting them, discloses the plot by which the public is defrauded.

The beneficiaries of special legislation and their officers, agents, and their attorneys sit and misrepresent the people on these committees and help enact such legislation as they desire. The result is that we have a system of tariff exaction more corrupt and more outrageous than any tax law that was ever passed by a free people. Yet you can scarcely awaken the masses of the people on the question. There seems to be a kind of lethargy not only among men in public life, but through all classes in private life, and they go on and on electing men to Congress who build up their own fortunes and the fortunes of their associates by using the legislative power for that purpose instead of exercising it for the good of the people. These words are not pleasant. It is a very unpopular task for anyone to undertake in a legislative assembly to lecture the members of that body along lines of reform which affect their business interests, their moral conduct, and the question of their fidelity to the people who have trusted and honored them. I assert in conclusion that the underlying prerequisite of all reform to-day is the getting a disinterested Congress to make the laws.

The only hope to-day is in the Democratic Party and in Democratic success. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I will tell you, in this connection, that unless the Democratic Party eliminates from itself the poison of protection, and unless it passes a law forbidding Senators and Representatives to act as the agents, employees, attorneys, or officers of the corporations and others interested in legislation during their term of service it will not make good when it comes into power, because you can not get pure water from a muddy spring. Men who represent the interests will not represent the people. I hope that the Democratic Party when it comes into power will show, as it has heretofore shown by its votes in this Chamber, that this is its policy, and that it will scourge from the Congress of the United States those who are the officers, agents, and attorneys of the interests—all those who are the representatives of greed and graft. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this is supposed to be the last act in the great tariff reforms of this present Congress. There may be another last appearance, I do not know. They are as numerous with this committee as with some of the celebrated actresses. This bill relates to a great industry. There are great interests at stake, I want to state to the gentleman from Texas, dependent upon tariff legislation in reference to wool, and the interests are very largely centered in the little homes of the country where the laborers in woolen mills live, and on the hillsides and mountain sides, and on the farms of the country where the raisers of sheep and the producers of wool also are getting their livelihood by reason of the wool of the sheep which is cared for in Schedule K. Now, some gentlemen seem to believe that a majority of this country are against protection through tariff legislation. They were never more mistaken in their lives. There were never more people in this country in favor of a protective tariff than there are this blessed day. [Applause on the Republican side.] They are not in favor of an excessive protection; they are not in favor of a duty which is higher than sufficient to make up the difference between the cost of production here and abroad.

A majority of the people are not for that, and that is where our Democratic friends make the mistake. They think after bringing in a wool bill or any other kind of a bill that slashes the duties without regard to the effect upon the industrial conditions of the country, that it will make them popular because they assume the majority of the country believe in free trade. The elation over the result of the election of a year ago last fall has taken away their ability to properly appreciate the facts and the conditions of the country and form a judgment upon those facts and conditions. They will find that out some day. You may go ahead and pass these bills. I do not know but it would be better for the country in the long run if you had power to put them on the statute books now. I do not know but it may be possible that the country needs another lesson of 1894. That lesson was wholesome and it resulted in much good finally, although the immediate effect was widespread suffering throughout the whole country. But I do not believe it. Men's memories are not quite so short. You had an opportunity not alone to play to the galleries, but to show the people what you would do if you had power in the Senate and in the House and a man in the White House to sign your bills. The people of the country are looking into these bills of yours. They are comparing the effect upon the industry in which they are associated in some manner. The laborers in the country are looking into these bills. Why, in my district I heard the other day that the workers in the cities were forming tariff leagues, because they feared the threats of the Democrats and Democratic tendency in the country. Go on gentlemen, do not stop with this bill, I pray you do not stop; go right on with the whole program and show the country what you are going to do, so they will be able to appreciate it when it comes around to November, when we elect a Congress and elect a President.

Mr. Chairman, wool is not only important to the people engaged in that industry but to the whole country. I caught the word "tuberculosis" in debate the other day and I was surprised to be informed that tuberculosis generated in woolen mills. I do not know whether the gentleman carried it out to its logical conclusion that therefore he wanted to vote for your bill to destroy woolen mills or not, but when you do destroy them you will have to look out for something worse than tuberculosis even. You will have to look out among the army of the poor for pneumonia and other fatal diseases. We know we must have wool, gentlemen, in this climate of ours; we must have woolen clothing and woolen blankets for our soldiers in time of war, and it is just as much a war necessity as battleships; the Democratic Party are against battleships as they are against wool. They do not want any preparation for war, even to insure peace; all they want is a chance to divide up the offices, to play economy for one year, and show a less total of appropriations this year to be made up by deficiency appropriations after the election. What a grand thing they have done by omitting to provide for battleships. Gentlemen, the country is more intelligent than you take it for; the people of the country are more intelligent and they have their ideas in regard to battleships. They want them, and they are going to have them, and they are going to have them if they have to turn you sweet gentlemen out and put us in next time. They know what they want. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, the present Schedule K, Mr. Chairman, has been in existence substantially for about 50 years. It has been open to assault, and is now open to assault, and there are points where it is not defensible against that assault, and yet, notwithstanding its imperfections, there has ever been a sentiment in the country to encourage the raising of sheep and building up the woolen industry here; notwithstanding the assaults and notwithstanding the weakness of its defense as regards some items, they have maintained for about 50 years this Schedule K nearly in the form in which it exists to-day. But we agree that Schedule K should be revised. I have agreed with that sentiment for some time, and did not fail to so say, and I did not fail to embrace the first opportunity I had to attempt to revise it. And why? Well, now, the duty on the wools in the grease is not so much out of the way; it is not so much above the protective rate when you get right down to it and it is enforced.

Conditions have changed since that rate was first put upon the statute books; conditions have changed regarding the relative amount of wool that it takes to produce yarn and cloth and clothing and all that sort of thing, and the inequalities in the law have become exaggerated. No one will contend that it is necessary to have the compensatory duties upon yarn and cloth and clothing and tops that are included in Schedule K to-day; no one will contend for that who understands the subject, unless it may be the "expert" employed by the Committee on Ways and Means, who seems to be able to argue himself into any position. Those inequalities should be corrected—the compensation in each case should be no greater than is actually necessary to cover the amount of wool that appears in the article.

Mr. Chairman, in the Payne tariff law—against which there appears to be so much aversion and aspersion among gentlemen on the other side and certain newspapers that aided them, over which they have had considerable frolic for the last three years—there were some good points at least, and I could take up the rest of my hour to-day in speaking about them. Most of you admit them yourselves. It was the first tariff bill that ever had a maximum and minimum provision in it. We laid a maximum tariff with an increase of duty of 25 per cent, under the third section of the bill, against any country that would not give us fair trade relations, and we authorized the President to go ahead and negotiate bargains with those countries and to get good terms. It was necessary to do it. They all had maximum and minimum provisions, and we were getting the maximum from them. It hurt our foreign trade.

My genial friend from Missouri, the Speaker of the House—I do not see him here now—wrote an article, published in a magazine at Buffalo under the editorship of Norman E. Mack, chairman of your Democratic national committee, soon after Congress adjourned, and in that article the present Speaker argued that this was a joker, that it meant 25 per cent additional tariff, and that after all we meant to increase the tariff in this country by an additional 25 per cent under section 3, and he predicted that that would certainly be the result. He was just as sure of that then as he was three years before of carrying the elections in 1906, and one year before in carrying those of 1908, and just as sure as he is now that his party will elect their President next fall. If he would stop and put on his thinking cap for a moment he would realize that section 3 did not do any such thing, but it gave the President the power to negotiate. And the President did negotiate under section 3. And then it gave him a little more power than that. It gave him the power to appoint a board. They did not call it a board formally, but it gave him the practical power and authority to appoint a board. It provided that—

To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section and the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required.

Out of those words grew this Tariff Board, because it was demanded by the great majority of this country at that time. The President took advantage of section 3 to negotiate trade agreements with foreign countries, and he did negotiate. There were exported from the United States in 1909 manufactured articles for further use in manufacturing to the value of $253,000,000; in 1910, $287,000,000; in 1911, $324,000,000. And there was also exported from the United States of articles ready for consumption, in 1909, $467,000,000; 1910, $541,000,000; 1911, $639,900,000; showing a tremendous increase from year to year—a total in 1909 of $720,000,000, in 1910 of $828,000,000, and in 1911 of $963,900,000. We are getting after those foreign markets—the markets of the world—under a live President, who is reaching out for them and using every means in his power granted by the Congress of the United States to bring about those negotiations and those agreements and a better rate on many articles exported to the various countries of the world.

And, superadded to that, our Consular Service has been improved and built up under a Republican administration so well that it is stated—and I believe the statement is not anywhere contradicted—that Emperor William has written a circular letter to his consuls, instructing them to follow the methods of the United States consuls in the same towns where they are, because the American consuls are so successful in extending American trade. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Well, we availed ourselves of that section 3 and appropriated for a Tariff Board, the present board. We went a little further, and we tried to make a permanent law for a Tariff Board, but that failed because of filibuster at the last end of the Sixty-first Congress by a band of Democratic Members, although our side of the House were for it and many on your side. In the Committee on Ways and Means every member was for it, and only one Democrat changed his opinion over night. We wanted the information. Why, even our friends over there wanted it in making a tariff for revenue only. They probably overestimated themselves, because when they got the information they did not know how to use it; but they wanted it then. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

This board went to work. They first went to work on the woolen schedule. Then, one day my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] brought in his woolen bill—a bill just like this bill, only with a change of the date, as he says—imposing a duty of 20 per cent on wool and a lower rate on manufactures of wool, and he brought in a report here that showed that he believed the effect would be so great in increasing the imports of wool, and especially of woolen goods, that there would be enough coming in to crowd out two-thirds of the American production of wool and woolens in this country—thus deliberately slaughtering the sheep and repeating the operation of the Democratic Party under the Wilson bill, when, in 1894, they destroyed the flocks and shut up the mills.

I can not understand the antipathy of Democratic gentlemen to the mills in this country. I can not understand why they put a duty upon articles that are used only as raw material for manufacture when there is nothing of the kind produced here. I can not understand how they will get up here and shout, "Oh, it will make it a little harder for the manufacturers, but it will tax them, and therefore we put it on." I can not understand this political economy that believes that a workingman will get more wages, or as much, when the proprietor of the factory in which he is employed is running behind every day and anticipating a loss of what money he has invested and the closing of the factory, and is not able to keep the factory running.

Why, you pledged yourselves time and time again not to destroy any industry. The gentleman from Alabama talks about the business of the people, and assures us that the Democratic Party is not going to hurt them, and then he smiles and stabs those people beneath the ribs with his free-trade bills, in which he assures us that there is no protection whatever, and that if any has crept into any bill he did not mean it. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Well, they passed that bill, and then it went over to the Senate, and they jumped it up to 35 per cent on wool, and they finally agreed upon 29 per cent in conference, and got a bill before the President, and then they walked around saying, "Oh, we have put Taft in a hole now. That is the end of him." I told them then in the House that they had given President Taft the opportunity of his life, and he took it. He vetoed your mongrel bill, and he satisfied the country, who wanted intelligent action, upon the report of a Tariff Board, that the country should wait until we got that report before Schedule K was amended. After a while, on the 20th of December, we got the report.

How well I remember what consternation there was on the other side. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] did not seem to be in the House at the time. The other side did not seem to want to print the report. They had a premonition in regard to it—I do not know why. But finally they got it printed, and then the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] wondered that we could get any consolation out of it. I told him he would find that no Democrat could get any consolation out of that report, after we had heard the summary read, and they can not.

Did they bring in a wool bill right after that? No. Did they take it up right after that? Not at all. They brought in the same old bill. Why, they were paralyzed and dumfounded by that report. It destroyed so many of your theories that you had paraded before the country, swearing that they were the very facts. It destroyed them utterly. One of your theories was that the duty was added to the price in all cases and came out of the American consumer. For the first time this board demonstrated beyond cavil that that was a falsehood.

They showed the difference in cost between this country and abroad by a detailed report on numerous samples. They showed the efficiency of labor. Why, you have been testifying for years—of course, you did not know anything about that, but that did not keep you from testifying for years—that because of the greater efficiency of labor in this country, notwithstanding we paid double the wages, yet the unit of cost abroad was as great as it is here. They got the unit of cost and demonstrated it, taking account of efficiency and wages and everything else, and the unit of labor cost here is found to be double what it is on the other side.

Nothing in the report justified a 20 per cent duty on wool. Nothing justified a 29 per cent rate. The report shows that an equivalent of about 36 per cent is necessary.

The report fully vindicated the President of the United States. British looms run at higher speed. English weavers work at the looms for a lifetime, ours for only a few years on the average. It was the unanimous finding of the board, signed by the two Democrats on the board.

It recommended no rate of duty, but showed conclusively the difference in cost of production here and abroad. It was merciless and conclusive in criticism of ad valorem duties on wools, which impose a greater duty in a high-priced market, when not needed, and a lower duty on wool in a low-priced market, when more protection is necessary. It proved that the specific duty on the "clean content" in raw wools was the best method of assessing duties on wools. It showed that such duties could be collected with certainty and with ease. It disclosed all the facts necessary in drawing a protective or revenue bill. I will quote the words of one of the world's greatest experts, Dr. Richard Schüller, one of a board of three experts in the Austrian ministry of commerce, whose sole work is to make industrial investigations as a basis for tariff legislation. This organization has been in existence for over 20 years, and has been the guiding body in two great revisions of the Austrian tariff:

IMPERIAL ROYAL MINISTRY OF COMMERCE,
Vienna, March 18, 1912.

* * * It is an excellent standard work. The Tariff Board has come within a very short time to the head of all the similar boards established a long time since in the other countries. It is really true that no legislative body has ever had presented to it a better report on a tariff question. It will be also entirely impossible not to take your results in mind in proceeding to a revision of the tariff. It were a great mistake to stop the work of the board, and it would soon prove necessary to reestablish it. * * *

RICHARD SCHÜLLER.

I do not wonder you looked around for somebody to try to destroy that report. I do wonder that you even stopped at Willis. I know you looked around before you struck him. And then you employed him to check up "our data," as the chairman said, with the report. You employed him to demolish the report. The result is that he has demolished himself, and he has hurt you, every man of you who signed that performance of Mr. Willis', which you now call your report. How many of you would like to get your names off of that document now?

This report of yours is a criticism of the Tariff Board's report on Schedule K from a majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the House written by a free-trade newspaper correspondent. It is mighty unfortunate that this report emanated from a person like the gentleman whom you employed, for it is not entitled to the dignity of a reading, hardly of a reply. The wonder is how it could get itself signed by a majority of the Ways and Means Committee and force for itself a recognition and a hearing which dignifies it into a respectability which it is not entitled to.

The early pages of the document are occupied with political-economy vaporings, which suggests a 10-year-old boy, who, having accidentally parsed a sentence containing the phrase, "the law of diminishing returns," thinks it means something. Whatever value or price cant phrases may have to a space writer on a newspaper that does not deal in news or on a lecture platform "for revenue only," such phrases have little place in a factory producing commodities for the market. To devote a page to showing that "money expenses of production" is a better term than cost of production may have advantages for the compositors in the Public Printing Office, who are paid for setting type by the 1,000 ems.

The cant and pedantry of the introductory essay on political economy could be ignored even though dignified by the indorsement of the Ways and Means Committee if it were not followed by pages of deliberate misstatements not only as to the methods employed by the Tariff Board, but as to the results of its work. Throughout this document the candid statements made by the board in its report as to the difficulties encountered are misused and distorted to make it appear that it is impossible to obtain cost of production, and these distortions are followed by flat statements that it did not obtain costs. This is the whole method of attack upon the sections of the report dealing with tops costs and yarn costs. The board fully and carefully explained the difficulties, the method adopted in meeting them, and in overcoming them so far as that was possible, and then exactly how it arrived at the best possible action in the case, and gives the reasons for believing that substantial accuracy attaches to its figures of costs on these intermediate steps in the manufacturing processes.

One is reminded of Mark Twain's reason for studying the Encyclopedia Brittanica, "because," he said, "to juggle with facts one must first have the facts. I get the facts out of the Encyclopedia, then I juggle them." The "expert" of the Ways and Means Committee got his facts from the Tariff Board report, and then he juggled them. The cloth costs occasion the greatest venom on the part of this party who is able to get behind other men's names as a breastwork. The first attack upon the cloth costs, or cost of conversion from yarn to finished fabric, is contained in pages 28, 29, 30, and 31 of the committee's report.

The first objection is that the board did not use the aggregate output of mills over a long period to determine cloth costs, but adopted a sample basis. In other words, did not get the total cost of an indiscriminate medley of cloths to be used as cost of cloth in the abstract; but secured costs on definite units of production indicated by samples. Since, of course, there is no such thing as abstract cloth, the cost of which can be secured by dividing the output into the expense, as one would do with a coal mine, this objection seems to be that the Tariff Board is not composed of fools. But is this criticism indicative of the method the Ways and Means Committee, as at present constituted, would go at the cost of production of woolen and worsted fabrics? After criticizing the board for not using the sample method on tops where it was unnecessary and inadequate, this critic became furious because the sample method was used on cloths.

There are no standards of cloth; each mill turns out a large variety of fabrics, with almost infinite variations in weight, color, and quality. Selecting sample fabrics representative of grades and types of cloth was the only method open to the board for securing cloth costs. Bearing this in mind, let us examine this alleged criticism of the board's work. On page 28 it says:

It is found, therefore, that the board almost wholly dismisses the cost method of analysis when it comes to fabric costs. Instead it submits samples of given fabrics to the mills and permits them to give estimates on the cost of making these fabrics based upon experience with similar operations, but largely conjectural, because in many instances, probably in the majority, the mills had never devoted themselves to manufacturing this particular kind of cloth on which they were asked to furnish cost estimates.

There was nothing conjectural about it. In each and every instance the board had the actual cost on the sample from the books of the mill that made it. In each case the board had the full detailed mill or loom analysis of the cloth by the mill, showing exactly its construction and composition. If the board had no more than this—the actual costs of the originating mill—it would have had cost of production on cloths in this country and abroad, and have had more than Congress ever succeeded in getting before in any tariff hearing or investigation. But not satisfied with that, it took these samples to mills making the same general line of cloths. No mill was permitted to figure on the cost of any sample unless it made practically the same goods itself. The result was that on some samples there were a large number of costs secured, on others few, but always the cost from the original mill. No mill figured on all the samples, each mill selecting from the samples the ones with the manufacture of which it was familiar. The paragraph quoted above it thus seen to be deliberately false.

Now, as to the validity of cloth costs on a sample basis with all the facts as to construction of cloth, weight, quality of wool used, and so forth, being detailed in the specification, it should be reiterated that this is precisely the way every manufacturer figures his costs and fixes his price before he starts in to make up a line of styles for the trade. The Tariff Board did not go at its work in a way to suit this newspaper reporter, who gets a side-line job as "expert" from the Ways and Means Committee, but it did go at it in precisely the way every cloth manufacturer who attempts to keep costs goes at it, and in the only way by which intelligent results can be secured.

The cost reported on these samples was the typical cost in each case as determined by (1) the cost at the mill actually making the sample and (2) costs secured from 4 to 26 other mills making the same line of goods, on each sample. As to how representative these mills were the board prints a complete list of all the mills visited, and anyone who wants to know can examine them. Never in any Government report has there been a more candid and frank showing of just what has been done.

Now, on the foreign costs on American samples, costs were secured from as many mills as were obtainable which had made cloths of the type of the sample. On some samples more mills were secured than on others; in England the number of costs ran from 2 to 8, besides the subsequent checking by another experienced manufacturer.

In France costs were secured from 1 to 7 mills on the samples showing French costs. The foreign samples A to N are German-made cloths, and the German costs were taken direct from the books of the mills making the samples. In every case these mills were exporting goods to the United States, and goods of the grades as shown by these samples. Now, as to the number of American mills which figured the cost of making these foreign cloths in the United States, if you will examine these foreign samples you will know that very few mills in this country make fabrics of this grade. The Tariff Board secured costs from practically every mill in the United States which had made anything which would compare with these samples.

Much stress is laid upon the different methods of bookkeeping as found in the mills as being a bar to the possibility of securing cost of production. Any method of bookkeeping would show total or final cost. Mills that kept no cost accounts at all were not scheduled or considered by the board. Some mills did not keep process costs in the detail contemplated by the board's schedules. This would, however, affect only process costs, which, in the case of cloth, is not important, since there is not salable intermediary product. When the warp is put on the loom there is no salable output until the finished cloth is reached, and if you have the final finished cloth cost it is not important to show the process costs, and the board does not show these process costs even when it secured them.

Suffice it to say that in all new designs and styles of cloth put on the market, sold from small samples and not made up until the jobbers' orders are taken, the selling price is fixed upon cost of production figures secured by the manufacturers in precisely the same way. If it is a good enough method for the manufacturer to risk in taking orders for thousands of dollars' worth of goods it will have to suffice whether it suits newspaper reporters or not.

In the so-called analysis of the report of the Tariff Board on wool and wool manufactures by the expert of the Ways and Means Committee the following statements are made at pages 9 and 10 (vol. 4):

> Wages and Efficiency of Labor and Machinery in the United States treat a subject which has already been exhaustively discussed by the United States Immigration Commission in reports on the woolen industry, and the Tariff Board undoubtedly drew upon this source. * * * As a contribution to tariff discussion at the present time it has no value. * * * Taken in a general way as showing the status of labor in the woolen and worsted industry it is less comprehensive than the reports of the Immigration Commission.

Notwithstanding the fact that the report of the Tariff Board has been in the hands of the Ways and Means Committee since December 20, 1911, and that the report of the Immigration Commission, following it six weeks later, has been available since February 3, 1912, the statements by its expert show that neither of these reports have received even superficial examination at his hands.

The report of the Immigration Commission is almost entirely sociological. It deals with housing and living conditions of immigrants, their ability to speak English, their illiteracy, their citizenship, their conjugal conditions, the renting and owning of homes, and estimates of probable family income based on statements of weekly earnings made by immigrants and others in which for the week in question "no account is taken of voluntary lost time or lost time from shutdowns or other causes."

Volume 4 of the report of the Tariff Board deals with the experience, productive efficiency, labor cost, and wages, obtained directly from mill books of account for all operatives, and the production in each and every department.

The Immigration Commission report contains no data of this character in any table or text of its preliminary reports, nor in any of the 314 pages of its completed report issued February 3, 1912, six weeks after the publication of the report of the Tariff Board.

All of the Tariff Board data was secured directly from books of account in the mills during the six months from May to November, 1911, while the Immigration Commission material, for an entirely different purpose, was obtained from individual workers and in households mainly during the years 1908 and 1909, several years before the Tariff Board inquiry, and during which period many important changes had taken place in the industry.

And yet this expert, with the facts fully explained in both reports, states that the Tariff Board "undoubtedly drew upon this source," and that wages and efficiency of labor and machinery had already been exhaustively discussed by the Immigration Commission.

The Immigration Commission makes no pretense in a single line or table in its entire report of having obtained, presented, or discussed anything, even remotely, bearing upon the production of a pound of wool in any of its stages of conversion or of the manufacture of a yard of cloth, and does not even name a single machine or operation from scouring to weaving, much less a discussion of the efficiency of a man or a machine.

This expert says that volume 4 "is less comprehensive than the reports of the Immigration Commission." The investigation of the Tariff Board included mills and their employees in all of the New England States without exception, and New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, and Wisconsin, while the Immigration Commission's report includes only the North Atlantic States—omitting Vermont—for its immigration and sociological purposes. The Tariff Board presented data for 164 separate occupations in 44 mills for 35,029 persons. The Immigration Commission uses only a part of a single page in presenting wage estimates for 16 occupations in two mills. This fact alone indicates that in the investigations of the Immigration Commission such data, occupations, wages, efficiency, and machinery used was entirely foreign to its purpose. So much for the lack of comprehensiveness in the report of the Tariff Board.

This "expert" on the Ways and Means Committee says of volume 4 that "as a contribution to the tariff discussion at the present time it has no value," because "it deals only with American conditions." This is a most extraordinary statement and is as ludicrous and superficial as other parts of this ridiculous analysis of the report of the Tariff Board.

The demand for a Tariff Board to ascertain in a thorough and scientific way the facts relating to production was largely owing to the assertion that on account of superior efficiency American labor and American machinery were producing goods at a lower labor cost, notwithstanding higher rates of wages, than our European competitors. Volume 4 is a complete response to every question that has been asked on the subject in every tariff discussion that has taken place in any and all parts of the United States during the past 40 years and have never before been answered. Volume 4 leaves no question relating to American labor and machinery in the woolen and worsted industry unanswered, and, used in connection with the ascertained facts in volume 3, the conditions in competitive countries are made clear and conclusive.

Volume 4 shows that we are not using American machinery in the production of worsted cloth; that we are importing foreign machinery at 60 per cent higher cost to scour, card, comb, draw, and spin the wool; and that this foreign machinery is of necessity operated to a great extent by foreign-born operatives having little or no experience in the mill industry or the occupation. It shows the number of years that the 20,227 machines and looms had been in operation from the number less than 5 years to the number of 25 years and over.

Securing in each establishment the earnings of each employee, the hours worked, the machines operated, spindles run, and the exact production during the period, the accurate labor cost per pound is shown in the production of 168 separate units. Included in this presentation are the pounds produced per one man per hour by the machine operatives and all others. It shows the cost per pound for machine operatives, nonmachine operatives, and the supervisory forces. This is followed by the wages of the three classes of operatives, and from these tables in volume 4 the American people have had solved for them in these 168 units, in all parts of the United States where the industry is carried on, the disputed questions as to whether high or low wages results in a high or low labor cost per pound of products. Yet the "expert" of the Ways and Means Committee and the committee itself has the effrontery to assert in practically so many words that the American people may not make use of these demonstrations in their debates of the tariff; that labor costs, efficiency, and wages have no place as factors in the present-day tariff discussion.

The Ways and Means Committee, and especially its newspaper "expert," with a nose only for sensational surface generalizations, dismiss, like all of his particular kind, the evidence and details of thoroughness shown in the report of the Tariff Board. He is apparently unaware of the fact that the costs of manufacturing tops, yarn, and cloth, shown in volume 3, were obtained in establishments from which the data for volume 4 were secured. He does not know that the labor costs of conversion of tops and yarn in all stages, of the 168 units shown in volume 4, were obtained independently of the costs shown in volume 3, and were used to verify and check the latter.

The study of weaving efficiency in the production of woolen and worsted goods in the United States, as set forth in detail in volume 4, is not alone a most notable and conclusive contribution to the literature of the subject at the present time, when successful shop management demands an efficient day's work to the end that American industry may be successful and extend its operations, but is of the greatest importance in its bearings upon the tariff question and the future of the woolen and worsted industry. If more than 60 per cent of American worsted and woolen weavers are below the average standard of productive efficiency, as shown at page 1052, and if unemployment and migratory movement from place to place and entering into other occupations has caused the employment during each of the past five years of upwards of 130 per cent of persons in the weave room in excess of the required number as shown at page 983, while in competitive countries there is greater stability and immobility and a much higher degree of efficiency among a thousand weavers, owing to their making it a lifetime work in one mill or community, the occupation descending from father or mother to son or daughter for generations, then these facts and conditions become paramount in all tariff discussions of labor costs, more especially in view of the insistence on the superior efficiency of labor in American mills.

If the "expert" of the committee were honest or thorough and conversant with the subject he attempts to treat of he would admit and point out the great value of the data for tariff purposes. But he has no personal knowledge of the industry, while he has a personal animus toward the Tariff Board. He was never in a woolen or worsted mill for over a day, if at all; is a newspaper correspondent, and for some years past has been engaged in writing sensational and abusive political dispatches of a column a day or over to a New York journal. Surely not qualified to act as expert upon industrial conditions of production in American and European mills or to pass judgment upon the work of those who have spent months in the mills for this purpose and years in the study of industrial conditions. For more than a year he has been wiring attacks on the board to his paper almost daily.

This is the manner of man and his "expert" experience which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has used to analyze the work and to pass upon the ability of the experts of the Tariff Board.

In connection with cloths the report is attacked because it employed the sample method, but in connection with the criticism of tops the board is criticized because it failed to use the sample method and to get comparable costs on a "sample of Australian wool." The answer to both criticisms is not far to seek. In figuring the costs on cloths the method universal in the industry is the sample method—that is, the cost of actual samples based on the book costs—while the cost method for a uniform product like tops is based on the bulk. The statement that the figures of the board on the cost of tops is conjectural (p. 22) is true, if figures are conjectural based on several hundred mill returns.

After the board states, with scrupulous care, the causes of variations in costs of combing, the committee report (p. 22) makes a point that the final conclusions are worth nothing because the board admits these variations. It is obvious that had the board been categorical in its conclusions it would have been open to a valid criticism, but that after it admits all the difficulties, it does reach a conclusion which it regards as fair, and it should be conclusive for those seeking not to destroy, but to get a valid expert judgment.

On pages 22 and 23 the writer tries to discredit the board's figures on tops by comparing costs and prices which he himself admits, on page 27, is unwarranted. He also assumes—because his argument needs it—that wool entering into fine tops would cost 50 cents per pound. He might have found, on pages 34 and 35 of the board's report, quotations which show that the very highest priced scoured wool sold in London in 1910 was at 50.7 cents, and that the average was about 45 cents—a difference at least sufficient to destroy his argument. In fact, the very best wool is not required to make the tops discussed by the writer.

On pages 23 and 24 the variations admitted by the board, which are inevitable because, in a complicated industry such as the worsted industry, such variations are unavoidable, are again used to discredit the board's figures. It would seem unnecessary to point out that this is to the credit of the board, and shows that its investigation covered all the factors which cause variation in the industry; but that in spite of this fact it finally reached a conclusion that shows the relative position of the industry in the United States and in England.

The board is attacked for furnishing incomplete yarn costs (p. 24), an attack based on the assumption that the board was expected to give costs on all grades and counts of yarn. This is obviously absurd. The board assumed not to give the costs by which rates could be fixed with mathematical precision on every count, but costs which show the relative position of the industry in the United States and in competing countries, and this is adequately done when accurate figures are given for the principal counts of yarn. The writer of the attack shows his ignorance of the industry in the United States when he accuses the board of not giving costs on the finer counts of yarn. A 2/60's yarn is undoubtedly a yarn of high count, usually made from fine Australian wool; and as for higher counts, they are made in such limited quantities in the United States that the board did not regard a comparison as pertinent.

A good example of the method of this attack is shown on page 25, when the writer makes a point of the fact that a clerical error crept into the mills and tenths of mills column of one of the board's tables. Any bona fide seeker of truth would have assumed that these were proofreaders' mistakes, since the correct figures occurred in two of the preceding tables. And it is also stated in the text of the report on page 650 that the figures are intended to be identical with those quoted on page 648.

On page 25 it is stated that—

> There is no statement as to whether the comparison is based upon mills which are running full time in both countries.

And the critic makes the statement in the face of the fact that in the board's report it prints, at the head of the table from which the figure was taken, "Mill running full." It would hardly seem necessary to point out that, if the English figures are "fairly comparable," as the board says, that they, too, are based on mills running full time.

The writer assumed to say that the board's figures "are largely not comparable," as admitted by the board (p. 25), and this statement is made deliberately in the face of the board's statement that they are "fairly comparable" (p. 650).

On 25 the board's figures are said not to be comparable, because the costs were figures on the basis of different qualities of materials in the competing countries. This would seem to be a deliberate misstatement, for there is nothing in connection with the board's table on page 650 to show that the costs are not based on the same quality of wool, and in the absence of any statement it would seem that a fair-minded man would assume that the figures are comparable.

On page 26 an attempt is made to discredit the cost figures of the board on 2/30's by comparing costs with prices. He takes the board's price quotations for 2/30's at 40 cents, and the cost of converting them at 7.24 cents, and assumes that the cost of yarn material is 32.76 cents, which he says is "far below the average scoured-wool price of Australian wool or fine wool of any kind." To one unacquainted with the technical phases of the industry the board might seem to be discredited. But it is a well-known fact in the trade that 2/30's are not made from fine or Australian wool, but from coarse wool. It is a comparatively heavy yarn and the cheaper wools are used in its production. Furthermore, the writer of the attack, who proves to his satisfaction that the yarn material in 2/30's could not cost as low as 32.76 cents, had on page 22 of his attack quoted the Tariff Board's figures for 30/60's tops (yarn material) at 25.4 cents—28.4 cents, which may fairly be regarded as the material from which 2/30's are made.

On page 27 the writer makes an elaborate calculation on 2/60's yarns to show that the board's costs and the prices do not agree. These deductions are based on two assumptions, both of which are unwarranted:

(1) That yarn and top prices are affected by exactly the same forces and fluctuate together, which is an assumption that no careful statistician would make.

Second. That 2/60's yarn is made from 60's super top. But it requires better tops than 60's super to make 2/60's yarn. Seldom does a manufacturer attempt to spin a top quality to its limit, because the loss in breakage is more than the gain in fine yarn. This fact alone, if it were desired to answer such puerile deduction, would wipe out the difference shown by the "expert." This fact destroys the argument of the "expert" in connection with his table 4 (p. 27). In every case the quality of top used for the yarn would be higher than he assumes, and the discrepancy which he makes so much of would be wiped out.

The part of the attack which deals with the interpretation of the board's report (pp. 33–65) is really a high compliment to the work of the board, for it used the figures of the board to prove to the satisfaction of the "expert" that the rates in H. R. 22195 are proven correct by the report of the board. Thus, after vociferous denunciations and repeated assertions that the figures of the board are not worthy of confidence, confidence is placed in them in order to show that the rates in the Democratic bill are adequately protective to American industry, since they equal the cost of production as found by the Tariff Board. It therefore is evident that the board, and even the economic theory of the President, have from the lips of their enemies perfect praise.

Throughout these pages (pp. 33–65) assumptions and additions are made to the board's figures in order to bolster up the case of the writer. Juggling with figures, however, is harmless, and the interesting thing is that they have been so carefully used. Occasionally there is a misstatement of fact, as to where it is assumed that the cost of growing wool in Australia is 5 cents per pound, when the board says that there is against wool in Australia "a net average charge of but a few cents per pound," and "materially below the average South American," which latter cost is given as "between 4 and 5 cents per pound." (See p. 11, vol. 1.) It is interesting to note that the attack is really an argument for free wool—in which the writer evidently believes—but for some reason the committee thought 20 per cent was necessary.

On page 9 the report refers to the glossary of Schedule K as a compilation containing material which was already available. If he means by this that the material was available in the sense that material is available for writing a history of the United States, he is right. But it would seem that as the research into the sources of American history is regarded as an original and valuable work, so the bringing together of the information regarding Schedule K and the arranging it by paragraphs of the tariff act should also be considered an original and valuable work. The writer of the attack seems to recognize its value by the number of times he uses it.

These guileless colleagues of mine, amiable gentlemen on the Ways and Means Committee, would not have signed that report if they had known the facts in regard to the Tariff Commission report, and then had read this report written for them before they signed it. None of them desires to attach his name to a deliberate lie, a falsehood. I acquit them. They were too guileless; they were too confiding. They were too terribly anxious to throw some doubt on this Tariff Board, but they did not act with their usual caution and prudence.

After the "expert" has denounced the report from "a" to "z" he finally winds up by asserting that the report is authority for a 20 per cent duty on wool, and according to the majority report that is a protective figure. And so he tries to bolster up the Democratic bill by that unwarranted statement.

The "expert" states in another place that the report authorizes free wool, and that it shows that free wool would do no damage to the industries of the United States, but would equalize the conditions here and in Australia. Then he says that the report shows that wool costs 5 cents a pound in Australia. That is another statement made out of whole cloth. There is no such statement in the report, and no such statement by which any man can fairly argue that it is in the report. I regret that my amiable friends on the other side have been inveigled into signing any such document without knowing what was in it and giving it respectability by signing it.

On page 43 of the committee's report occurs the following:

> The cost of production of wool in Ohio as given by the board is 19 cents, on the average.

This is not true. That figure refers only to the merino flocks of the Ohio region. The average is 15 cents. The report then goes on:

> Inquiries as to shrinkage show that this wool shrinks 46.62 per cent.

And a discussion of net scoured-pound costs follows, based upon that statement. The Tariff Board's report shows plainly that these 19-cent wools of the Ohio region shrink 60 per cent. This is only another evidence of the carelessness with which the board's work is discussed in the committee report.

On page 44 of the committee's report the comment is made that—

> There is nothing to prevent either the western or the Ohio growers from shifting to the crossbred flocks whose profitableness in the United States has been demonstrated to such an extent as to show no net charge against the wool.

No one having the slightest familiarity with flock husbandry in this country would be guilty of making such a statement. It has been demonstrated time and again that crossbred sheep will not thrive and can not be maintained profitably over large areas of the West, and that in the hilly Ohio River region the heavy-bodied crossbred sheep are not adapted to the peculiar conditions there obtaining. Speaking on this very point, the report of the Tariff Board points out, on page 550, that while it is important for the sheep farmers of these hill regions to seek, wherever possible, to produce fat lambs as a means of abating wool costs, there are difficulties, some of them serious, in the way; and some of these difficulties are then pointed out. The peculiar susceptibility of the crossbred sheep to parasitic diseases in the leading agricultural States is of itself a good reason why many of the farmers of this region can not adopt them and must adhere, as in the case of western ranchmen operating under harsh conditions, closely to the merino types.

Now this bill comes in the same as heretofore. In the former bill they had a 20 per cent duty on wool because of the "depleting and depleted" condition of the Treasury. We had a little kindergarten experience here, and I think that nobody that was here then will deny that I educated the chairman of the committee as to the condition of the Treasury and proved that instead of a deficit, as he alleged, we would probably have a surplus of $35,000,000 or $36,000,000 at the end of the fiscal year, June 30 last. I presume they have looked at it since and found that it is over $47,733,642.22 for the last fiscal year. Possibly they have looked into it enough to know that all the efforts at tariff revision, after all the falling off in trade because of their efforts to reduce the duties and destroy business in the country, we are only $10,000,000 behind what we were last year, taking into consideration the amount of revenue from the corporations that has been collected, and that we will have at least $37,000,000 this year.

Your excuse is knocked out and you have not even the "God's truth" of the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the caucus, to rely upon when he swore with that kind of an oath in the House that your caucus resolution was right and that the Treasury was "depleted or depleting" at the time when it was full and overflowing—one of the splendid results of the present tariff-revenue bill.

Well, you have brought in again the same bill, with a 20 per cent duty. Why did you do it? Did you depend on this "expert," Willis? Willis said it was protective. Have you got around to the protection idea? Where are your free-trade notions? Where are the demands and the shoutings for free wool? Why, have you not had cold shivers running through your audiences as you assured them that they were shivering to death because they wanted that great boon of free wool in order that they could have free clothing in the country?

What has become of your free-trade notions on wool? I know that you have passed a buncombe bill taking the tariff off from sugar, but sugar is not the necessity to every man and woman and child that wool is. They must have clothing in preference to candy. There are other articles of food as wholesome as sugar. But you took it off from sugar and put it on wool. You remember the words of your peerless leader accusing you of deception, another name for "perfidy and dishonor." Why did you do it? Did you do it because you could not help it—are you going over to the protection idea, or did you hope to put Taft in a hole? Was that your idea? The country does not care half as much about that as it does about testing your sincerity, about knowing what you believe and knowing whether you are honest or not and fit to be further intrusted with the Government of this country. It is a question whether you are honest; you are not going to put Taft in a hole. Well, here is a chance for you to get lower rates in Schedule K. We have introduced a bill here which is based on the Tariff Board's report, which any intelligent man in this House can understand, and taking that report and reading it you would see that we have endeavored to put on a rate of duty that makes up the difference between the cost at home and abroad.

It occurred to me three years ago when we were making the tariff bill. I had the hearings reopened and called in the experts to see if there was any way that we could arrive at the clean content in an ordinary cargo of wool. One witness said that we could do it within 1 or 2 per cent, and another, a Government expert, said that we could do it within a half or 1 per cent at the outside. I favored the duty on the clear content of the wool at that time. That gets rid of all the inequalities that makes it exactly even on everything we import that has wool in it. It is on the weight of the wool, whether it be in the fleece or whether it be in the tops or in the cloth. It makes no difference whether it is fleece to tops, tops to yarn, yarn to cloth, or cloth to clothing. There is no difficulty in getting at it. It is a matter of little cost to the Government and absolutely easy to determine.

Nearly a year ago I wrote a letter to the Tariff Board suggesting that they examine the question as to whether it was practical to put a tariff on the clean content of wool in the fleece, and asking them to make an examination of the subject and embody the result in their report. This they have done, and the report is unanswerable.

The minority of the committee examined carefully the report and came to the conclusion that 18 cents a pound on the clean content of wool in the grease fairly measured the difference in cost of foreign and domestic wools, taking the whole competing part of wool in each case into consideration. They therefore recommended the duty at 18 cents a pound on the clean content of wool as a basis.

The report then takes up the subject of wool in its various forms of manufacture. It goes into details, showing the waste upon each pound of the clean content of wool in turning wool in the grease into scoured wool, into tops, then into yarns, and then into cloths, and, finally, into clothing. The board found just how much this amounts to on the average, how much waste can be recovered and is useful for other purposes; and they present a statement showing exactly what weight of wool is required to produce a pound of each of the manufactured articles by adding the percentage of waste that is lost in the processes. From this it is very easy to fix the compensatory rates on all manufactured articles which will cover the duty at the clean content rate which is necessary for the compensatory duty on each class of manufactured articles. If you gentlemen will examine closely the compensatory duty in our bill, you will find a very large reduction from the rates under the present law, amounting in some instances to nearly 50 per cent. But we have gone further than that. We provide that this duty shall apply only to the weight of the wool and not to the weight of the cloth, as in the present law. If, for instance, cotton or other vegetable fiber is used, the weight of the wool actually used must be ascertained, and the duty levied on that only. The vegetable fiber is easily ascertained in given samples by the use of sulphuric acid, carbonization, and the removal of the carbon, a simple and easy process and very certain in its results.

The chairman says that we have put a higher rate of duty on the cheaper grades—on the poor man's clothing—than we have on the clothing of the rich. We asserted in the report that the duty was lower on the poor man's clothing, and I am ready to prove it now. There is no juggling with figures by us, and no juggling with figures can change it. The chairman in his speech presented a table purporting to show the equivalent ad valorem duties on my proposed bill, H. R. 22262.

In paragraph 20 of the proposed bill it is provided that on yarns valued at not more than 30 cents per pound the duty shall be 21½ cents on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 10 per cent ad valorem; on yarns valued at more than 30 cents per pound and not more than 50 cents per pound, the same specific rate and in addition 15 per cent ad valorem. But in the table presented by the chairman the last provisions are all falsely classed as on yarns worth over 30 cents per pound, which raises the duty from 15 per cent as rated in our bill to 25 per cent. This is a glaring falsification of the facts of which no expert should be guilty.

In the next subdivision the chairman raises the duty on yarns valued at more than 50 cents per pound and not more than 80 cents from 20 per cent ad valorem, as stated in the bill, to 25 per cent, while more glaring errors are made in his statement on cloths, blankets, and clothing. The statement is wholly unwarranted by the terms of the bill. Further than that, the statement nowhere indicates that the specific duties in the minority bill are on simply the wool content, but it is represented that they are on the total weight of the article.

In paragraph 20 of the bill proposed by us, in the first bracket, the yarn is valued at not over 30 cents per pound. Such pound of yarn consumes 1.2 pounds of tops. Such tops are worth 50 cents per pound. If nothing but wool were used, as indicated by the chairman, you would have 60 cents' worth of tops as the material for 30 cents' worth of yarn. Of course such a result is impossible. A pound of yarn is worth, say, 30 cents. The foreign cost is equal to 10 per cent, as provided for in this bracket. Therefore, of this 30 cents of value 3 cents at least is the cost of conversion, leaving 27 cents for the material. In order to get the cost of material within 27 cents cotton must be used, while waste and shoddy will not do it.

By consulting the report we find that the average price of shoddy in England, per pound, is 16 cents; noils, 21 cents; thread waste, 28 cents; garnetted waste, 39 cents; merino soft waste, 49 cents. These are average prices. It is evident that these can not be substituted to make 30-cent yarns without a loss, and recourse must be had to cotton to hold the thread together. Suppose half is cotton and half is wool, a moderate estimate. The duty on the wool content would be for one-half pound of wool 10¾ cents per pound. Ten and three-quarter cents is equal to 35 per cent ad valorem. This, plus 10 per cent, equals 45 per cent ad valorem. But in the last bracket on yarns, at 80 cents per pound, the all-wool specific duty, at 21½ cents, would be equal to an ad valorem of 27 per cent, plus 25 per cent, or a total ad valorem of 52 per cent.

A similar calculation on cloths shows that the average equivalent ad valorem under the first bracket is 50¾ per cent. In the Underwood bill it is 40 to 45 per cent. Under the last clause, by a similar calculation, the duty is 72 per cent.

Paragraph 22, blankets and flannels, by similar calculation the duty under the first bracket on flannels worth not over 40 cents per pound, the ad valorem is 39.6 per cent, and in the Underwood bill 30 to 35 per cent. In the last bracket the equivalent ad valorem is 77 per cent.

Representative GREEN of Iowa brought in a piece of goods here, valued not above 40 cents, under paragraph 21, clause 1, which was 81 per cent cotton or about one-fifth of which was wool. The duty on this one-fifth of a pound of wool would be 5 cents a pound, or an equivalent ad valorem of 12½ per cent, plus 30 per cent of ad valorem duty, would be 42½ per cent.

In paragraph 23, first clause, clothing valued at not over 40 cents per pound, at least one-half the weight consisting of linings, paddings, and so forth, is cotton. On such cheap goods—the value of a suit of this kind would not be over $3—the duty on one-half a pound of wool would be 12½, its equivalent ad valorem on 40 cents per pound would be 31 per cent, plus 35 per cent, would equal 66 per cent ad valorem. But if one-half the "woolen" goods were cotton, as almost invariably would be the case, the wool in a pound weight of the cloth would be one-quarter of a pound and the duty would be 6¼ cents.

The average ad valorem on 40 cents would then be 15.6 per cent plus 35 per cent, or 50.6 per cent, as the average equivalent ad valorem. Supposing that the linings as well as the cloth were all wool and the duty 26 cents a pound on the whole weight, under the last bracket. Twenty-six cents is 17 per cent of $1.50, which, added to 60 per cent ad valorem, would equal 77 per cent equivalent ad valorem. It is perfectly evident that this provision in the law, which allows duty only on the wool contained in the cloth, will result in an immense reduction of duty, the exact amount of which can not ascertained until the law is put into actual operation and the character of imports coming in under it are ascertained.

The board reports fully on the subject of the different materials entering into the total manufactures of goods, and they present a table by which it appears that nearly 14 per cent during the past year was of cotton. This was a lower average than for the previous years, but to take 14 per cent off the woolen duty prescribed by this bill and off from the calculation made by the chairman in his statement would result in an immense reduction of woolen duties.

The bill which the minority present lets in carpet wools absolutely free. I have heard some whispers of a "joker" in the carpet-wool duty, because the duty collected is 7 cents per pound. The duty under the present law on carpet wools valued at 12 cents a pound or less is 4 cents per pound, and on wools valued at over 12 cents a pound the duty is 7 cents per pound. This has restricted the importation of carpet wools, for the manufacture of carpets, valued at over 12 cents a pound, and has kept our manufacturers of carpets out of the market where the wools are worth 12 cents or over. The only necessity for any duty is that a small percentage, never estimated at over 5 per cent of such wools, are used in manufacturing clothing. These are wools of the higher grades and worth 12 cents or more per pound, because they have wool that can be used in the manufacture of goods as a part of the fleece. We provide that the duty shall be entirely removed, or paid as a drawback, when the wools have been manufactured into carpets, so that the result would be that carpet wools are entirely free unless actually used in the manufacture of clothing. We do this because carpet wools are not grown in the United States to any appreciable extent, and in accordance with the idea of protection there is no sense in keeping a duty upon them, as does Mr. UNDERWOOD in his bill.

Altogether our bill reduces the duties about 40 per cent, and makes large reductions all along the line in manufactured goods. I want to say to my Democratic friends, now honestly, between man and man, you have the opportunity of a lifetime. We will offer our bill as a substitute. That is opportunity No. 1, to vote for a bill which reduces the present duty on woolens 40 per cent, makes carpets free of duty. You have a chance to do that. I shall offer that as a substitute. There is no chance for any jokers in that bill. Everything appears on the surface. There are no compensatory duties that are multiplied. It is simply figured out according to the amount of scoured wool used in making the article. There is no excuse for you. You profess that you want to reduce this schedule. I am showing you how you can do it. Do not be obstinate, do not follow this man who was hired to destroy the Tariff Board and the Tariff Board's report. Do not be reckless and drive the sheep out of this country and shut up the mills. You have professed in a number of platforms that you would not do that, and even the chairman says that he is not going to harm any business interests by all his juggling with the tariff. Make him live up to his profession.

Vote for my motion and send this bill over to the Senate. The Senate will concur in it if you do. You can help us reform this schedule in less than 30 days. What drops of blood you have been sweating because the tariff revision was put off, as you state, almost a year. It is six months. You want to put it off for another year now. Do you dare take the responsibility? It is up to you. You are responsible. Vote for our bill, which is in accordance with the tariff report. That does not give any excessive duty on wool in any shape, raw or manufactured. It simply makes up the difference in the cost. The bill is worked out with infinite care. I know, because I was there. It is worked out according to the Tariff Board's report, which no man can gainsay, because it is fully fortified in every division of it. It simply follows out the facts which they have put upon the record. We have taken the costs as they have laid them down after this thorough care and investigation. Then, after the bill becomes a law, if the people do what you say they are going to do, you can rip things after the 4th of March, 1913. You know, you say you are going to have power, and I do not know but some of you believe it. It is a long road. If you win, you will then have a chance. This is not the end of tariff legislation, but this bill that I offer does reduce the rate; it reduces it 40 per cent.

According to your ideas it takes 40 per cent of burden off the shoulders of the people. We do not agree with you on that "burden," but that is your idea. What excuse is there for your not voting for my bill? You have no excuse for bringing in a bill for a 20 per cent duty on wool. The revenues do not need it. The revenue from wool and manufactures of wool last year was $28,982,552.58. To offset any loss of revenue on our bill, we shall have more than $37,000,000 surplus. We are all right.

Why do you not do it?' Why do you not vote for it? What excuse have you to offer why you should not do it? Get some credit from the country for passing good legislation. Good Lord, when you look over the record that you have made since you have been in power we know that you need some. Get some credit for it. Reform this wool schedule.

You can not criticize this bill as having excessive duties. Vote for it. Put it on the statute books and we will have lower duties on wool during the coming winter anyway, and then if the people are foolish enough to give you the power you can reduce the duties just as low as you want to; and the more you reduce them, the more you cut and slash, the more you hire your "experts" like Willis to write a report, the more bills of this kind you bring in, the sooner the country will turn you out and put us in and keep us there for another 20 years. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. KITCHIN rose. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for one hour.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, Abraham Lincoln once said:

I rejoice that I live to-day, because I am wiser than I was yesterday.

I do not know whether the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who has just taken his seat, and his colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee of this House rejoice that they live to-day to see the Democratic majority adopt a real, honest revision of the tariff downward, but I am pretty certain that they are a little wiser to-day than they were when they passed the Payne-Aldrich Act. I recall that, according to them, that act was the best tariff act that was ever put upon the statute books, and now the very author of that act comes in here after two years of its operation and tells the House and the country that it was so iniquitous, so unjust, so outrageous that he and his colleagues on the committee and in the House have brought in a bill correcting those iniquities and injustices. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I want this House and the country to understand that the Democratic majority here is not responsible for this continued agitation of the tariff. I do not know what place history will assign the distinguished occupant of the White House, but it must record him as the most persistent and conspicuous agitator of the tariff of any man in our country who ever touched public life. In his message to Congress on December 7, 1909, he used these words:

Nothing halts business and interferes with the course of prosperity so much as the threatened revision of the tariff.

The President who uttered in solemn proclamation these words has agitated and made the country and Congress agitate the tariff during every single session of Congress since he has been President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And his term, when it ends, by his calling two extra sessions, shall have had more sessions than that of any other President.

He had not been in office 30 days before he made his first call for an extra session to agitate tariff by repealing the Dingley Act, to "halt business and interfere with the course of the prosperity" of our country. In the next regular session he demanded a tariff commission to help him agitate tariff scientifically. Again, at the next session, he agitated tariff and reciprocity, to "halt business and interfere with the prosperity" of the country. In 30 days after its adjournment he called another extra session of the Congress, after the Democrats had secured control of the House, to renew his agitation of the tariff and reciprocity. Then, when we tried to help this President carry out the pledge he and we had made to the people in the campaign and give them an honest revision of the tariff downward, he vetoed every bill that we sent to him in consummation of that pledge. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In these veto messages he reminded us and the country that he was not done with agitation of the tariff and halting business; that he intended at the succeeding session—this session—to send in a message agitating, and directing Congress to agitate, the tariff again. And so he did. When we met in December in came his message agitating the tariff, "halting business," "interfering with prosperity." And now, when we, by the Underwood bill, attempt to fulfill the pledge that we made to the country, fulfill the pledge that the people understood Mr. Taft made in his campaign speeches in 1908, for an honest revision of Schedule K downward, not in the interest of the manufacturers, but in the interest of a failing Treasury and a consuming public, he and the Republican minority here are fighting the bill and propose to offer as a substitute a bill which they themselves confess is not in keeping with their promises, which my friend from Connecticut Mr. HILL, who wrote every line of it, practically admitted in the opening speech for the minority would not relieve the people of this country one penny, but it would take over $4,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury, which is now suffering by Republican extravagance a deficit of over $14,000,000, and put it in the pockets of the protected sheep barons and manufacturers of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Still, not satisfied with this persistent, senseless agitation of the tariff, he asks us to appropriate $60,000 more for his Tariff Board, so that at the next and last session of his term he can again agitate the tariff, "halt the business," and "interfere with the prosperity" of the country. Mr. Chairman, I challenge any man on this floor to point out one sentence, one line, one word in a single speech made by the Republicans on this floor in favor of their proposed substitute in which they declare that it will bring one penny of relief to the people of this country. If you will show to me, Mr. HILL, Mr. LONGWORTH, Mr. PAYNE, one single line in all of your speeches defending your bill, in which you give either the Treasury or the people, suffering under the extortions and iniquities of the Aldrich-Payne Act, the faintest hope that they will get one penny of relief, I will do the meanest thing I have ever done since I have been a Member of Congress, I will vote for your old sham revision bill. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.] Ah, but they say the Underwood bill is not in conformity with the findings of the Tariff Board. Whence and why this great cry for the Tariff Board. For more than 100 years tariff measures have been written, without a suggestion of the need of a Tariff Board. For 50 years you Republicans have written the tariff laws of the country, with never a complaint of the lack of information, with never a demand for a Tariff Board. You wrote the Morrill Act, the McKinley Act, the Dingley Act, increasing the duties with each successive act, all without the aid of a Tariff Board. With the advent of the Taft administration, pledged by campaign promises to a real, honest revision downward, you came in extra session in 1909, and without the aid of or demand for a Tariff Board put upon the statute books the Aldrich-Payne Act.

Mr. Chairman, when for nearly a half a century, decade after decade, and Congress after Congress, our opponents were piling higher and heavier the tariff taxes and burdens on the backs of the millions of American people they needed no Tariff Board, but when the free, patriotic electorate of our country, awakened to the iniquities and inequalities of the Aldrich-Payne Act and aroused against legislative robbery under the guise of protection, by the election of 1910 commissioned this Congress to reduce these taxes and remove these burdens, from that moment to this, from the throat of every standpat Republican and every tariff-enriched baron throughout the country, went up the cry of "Tariff Board! Tariff Board!" [Applause on the Democratic side.] They needed no Tariff Board to increase the tariff burdens, and we need none to remove them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Shall we wait, shall we make the people wait, for a board appointed by a President who declared the Aldrich-Payne Act the best tariff law ever enacted, to find facts to convince us that a tariff tax on the class of the woolen cloths, woolen underwear, woolen blankets, which more than four-fifths of our people buy and must have, ranging from 75 per cent to 100 per cent, is wrong and should be reduced?

Shall we wait, shall we make the people, in these hungry days of the high cost of living, wait until the President's board find facts to convince us that a tariff tax of 4 cents a pound on bacon and hams and 25 per cent on flour, kept on by the President and his party since 1909, at the demand of the big packers and flour mills is a cruel outrage? If the sham revision bill proposed by the minority for the pending measure is written, as its authors claim, "in exact accordance with the report of the Tariff Board," and should become a law, how long shall we make the people wait for this board to reverse itself and find facts to convince us that a tax of from 72 per cent to 95 per cent, which this substitute levies on the clothes, flannels, and blankets of the poor and needy, is unjust and inhuman?

Every man in this country knows that neither the President nor the Republican Party wanted a tariff board to give them information as to how to honestly revise the tariff downward in the interest of the consumer. Every man of sense knows that they wanted some board, some tribunal, that had the appearance of disinterested impartiality to stand as a buffer, as a shield, between them and their high prohibitive protection substitute.

Let me call the attention of the House and the country to a portion of the President's message of last August vetoing the wool bill:

I was elected to the Presidency as the candidate of a party which in its platform declared its aim and purpose to be to maintain a protective tariff by "the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries."

Why did you eliminate the guaranty of "reasonable profits" in your report? Why did you fail to refer to it in your speeches? You did not have the courage to proclaim it publicly in your report and speeches, but you had the cunning to secure it in your substitute bill. This, gentlemen, was the main point that the President emphasized in his message—the guaranty of "a reasonable profit" to the trusts and manufacturers. I read further:

I have always regarded this language as fixing the proper measure of protection at the ascertained difference between the cost of production at home and that abroad, and have construed the reference to the profit of American industries as intended, not to add a new element to the measure stated or to exclude from the cost of production abroad the element of a manufacturer's or producer's profit, but only to emphasize the importance of including in the American cost a manufacturer's or producer's profit reasonable according to the American standard.

Who fixes these standards? The Havemeyers, of the Sugar Trust; the Armours and the Swifts, of the Meat Trust; the Whitman and Woods, of the American Woolen Co.; the Garys, of the Steel Trust, fix the standard of the manufacturer's or producer's profits, reaching all the way from 20 and 30 and 50 and sometimes 100 per cent per annum.

Mr. Taft, by solemn message to Congress, pledges the trusts and manufacturers that as long as he is President no tariff bill shall become law that does not guarantee to them a profit in accordance with the standard fixed by them. This substitute bill makes the same guaranty.

If we must have a Tariff Board to help carry out the Republican platform and this last pledge of Mr. Taft, why not have a practical one—a board that knows what the American standard of profit is and how to maintain and guarantee by law that standard? Why not have a board composed of the Havemeyers, the Garys, the Armours, the Whitmans, and Woods. They would be the best and most practical experts to carry out the Republican platform under the President's direction. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, they tell us that they want a Tariff Board in order to take the tariff out of politics. Nobody ever heard the Republican Party talking about taking the tariff out of politics until the intelligence and patriotism of the American people in 1910 took it out of Congress [applause on the Democratic side] and determined to take it out of the White House in 1912. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I want to say to you gentlemen you will never take the tariff out of politics as long as the Republican Party is determined to serve the trusts and manufacturers and let them write the tariff laws of this country to enable them to plunder the American people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Never since 1816 has the tariff been taken out of politics except in 1846, when the Democracy of the Nation, here in this Capitol, had the patriotism and courage to enact, in the face of the prophecies of ruin and disaster made by the manufacturers, the Walker Act. In spite of the appeals and threats and bullyings of the special interests, whose agents had gathered here from every quarter of the country, it dared to write into the law the principle that a tariff tax should be levied only for the purpose of revenue for the Government with the least burden to the people. Under its beneficent operation the country prospered as never before or since. In the decade following manufacturing interests doubled and the wealth of the country more than doubled, marking the greatest increase in the history of our Government. The people were happy and contented. Tariff agitation ceased, and in less than 12 years there was not a protection tariff champion either in the Senate or in the House. Senator Clement Clay, of Alabama, in a speech in the Senate advocating repeal of the fishing bounties, made this observation:

The doctrine of protection is exploded and is without a party in the country or an advocate in either branch of Congress.

Gentlemen, we are not going to let you take the tariff out of politics until a law is again written upon the statute books that every dollar that is levied under the tariff shall be levied for the purposes of the Government only, and not a dollar shall be exacted from the people for the manufacturer's tribute. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The President says, "We must follow the Tariff Board." The Republican Party echoes. "We must follow the Tariff Board." Let me ask, When did the Tariff Board become sacred and infallible and inviolable? I charge that the President himself repudiates and spits upon the findings of his Tariff Board whenever it suits his purposes. He has discredited and repudiated it by his solemn act and deliberate declaration. Did not the Tariff Board report against free wood pulp and print paper, and declare that the difference between the cost here and the cost in Canada of print paper was $5 a ton? And did not the President come to a Republican Senate and a Democratic House last summer and demand that wood pulp and print paper be put upon the free list, in direct conflict with his Tariff Board's finding? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Did not this Tariff Board report that the difference between the price of grain products, especially wheat and barley, in America and in Canada was 10 cents a bushel? And did not the President ask you and us to repudiate that finding and to put grain on the free list? [Applause on the Democratic side.] He made a speech on July 4, in Indianapolis, after that report of the Tariff Board was published, after he had carefully read it, which speech was published as a Senate document, and in that speech he declared in the very face of the board's findings that there was no difference; that the prices of both our wheat and Canadian wheat were fixed alike by the markets of the world and were unaffected by the tariff? Candor compels me to say, however, that in my opinion the President was right and the board was wrong.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to enter into lengthy criticism of the Tariff Board's report on Schedule K, because I have not the time. I could stand here all the afternoon and show its absurdities and its inconsistencies. Yet the Tariff Board was not so much to blame. This board is the creature of the President. It acts under his direction. He did not order this board to investigate the relation of the tariff to prices, the relation of the tariff to the revenues of the Government, the relation of the tariff to the consuming public. He did not tell them to go out to the woolen mills and see what enormous profits they were making what dividends they were paying, how much watered stock they had issued, how much reduction of the tariff they could stand. He did not direct them to investigate labor conditions in the woolen mills and the relation of the tariff to such conditions. He confined them to the narrow, partisan limits of finding facts to justify Republican protection. He directed them, according to his message transmitting to Congress the report—to investigate industrial conditions and costs of production at home and abroad, with a view to determining to what extent existing tariff rates actually exemplify the protective-tariff principle, viz, that duties should be made adequate, and only adequate, to equalize the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad.

He had explained in his previous message, vetoing the woolen bill, that the "difference in cost" should include the manufacturer's profit according to the American standard.

He told them to go out and find facts that would justify the the Republican protective tariff, and they did as they were directed to do. They wrote a brief in favor of a standpat Republican protective tariff.

Now, let me show you some of the absurdities and inconsistencies in this report of the board. Remember that this Tariff Board was demanded by protectionists. It was created by protectionists. Its members were appointed by a protectionist, the President, who declared that the Aldrich-Payne Act was the best tariff bill ever enacted. Its members, or a majority at least, are high protectionists. The experts that it employs are most of them Republican protectionists, and one is a retired woolen manufacturer. This is the man whose name the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] would not give the other day.

He doubtless knew him, and knew, too, that a retired woolen manufacturer from Massachusetts, a high protectionist, was in the employ of this Tariff Board to help them investigate and make a report which should justify and "exemplify the protective principle." This is the manufacturer, no doubt, to whom the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT] referred when, during the speech of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], he asked—I am reading from the official reporter's notes:

Is it not a fact that in making these examinations the Government had two experts, one a practical manufacturer acquainted with the process of manufacture and the other a practical accountant?

The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] replied:

Absolutely.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

This nonpartisan Tariff Board, as President Taft had directed, sent out protectionist experts to find facts to sustain Republican protection on wool, and they did it with a vengeance. More than two-thirds of our annual production of wool is grown in the West. Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and Oregon are the great wool-producing States. From these States come the loudest clamorers for high protective tariff on wool. From the State of Wyoming hails Senator WARREN, who, as the late Senator Dolliver said, "is the greatest shepherd since Abraham." He is a sky-wall protectionist. Wyoming is the greatest wool-producing State in the Union. With a population about half as large as that of my district, she produces more wool annually than all the 13 Southern States, with the great States of Illinois, Indiana, and Iowa thrown in. The millionaire sheep barons of Wyoming want protection on wool, and they want it mighty bad and mighty high. A reason for maintaining the present high protection and an excuse to increase it, if possible, must be given by some disinterested, impartial tribunal. Now comes this "nonpartisan," infallible, President's Tariff Board and deliberately finds and solemnly proclaims, in the report, on page 330, that, according to its method of calculation, in Wyoming it costs 12.4 cents per pound to produce wool, while in the State of Washington it costs less than one-twentieth of a cent. Think of such an absurdity—that it costs over two hundred and forty times more to produce a pound of wool in the great wool-producing State of Wyoming than in the State of Washington.

It finds that it costs in the woolgrowing State of Idaho 17.3 cents per pound, while in Nevada only 4.1 cents. Four times more in Idaho than in Nevada and three hundred and forty times more than in Washington.

Let us take the other two great wool-producing States of the West, Montana and Oregon. In Montana the board finds that its costs twice as much to produce a pound of wool as in California, three times as much as in Nevada, and two hundred and sixty times as much as in Washington.

In Oregon they find that it costs two and a half times as much as in Nevada and two hundred times as much as in Washington.

O Mr. Chairman, how can the millionaire tariff mendicants of these four woolgrowing States survive without high protection? But what else does the President's nonpartisan, infallible board find? They report, pages 11 and 330, that in Wyoming, the largest wool-producing State in the Union, in the State of the world's biggest flockmasters, in the State where woolgrowing has for years been considered and lauded as a great money-making industry, the sheep barons, exclusive of the loss of the capital invested in lands for the industry, make on the capital invested in the sheep and wool industry a gross profit of only the pitiful sum of 4 per cent. Deducting the lost interest on capital invested in land, it would be less than 3 per cent.

In Montana, a State that stands second in wool production, they make, according to the report, exclusive of the loss of interest on capital invested in lands, only 5.6 per cent; in Oregon, 4.7 per cent; and in the State of Idaho, the State of Senator HEYBURN, the great tariff standpatter of the West, not counting the loss of interest on capital invested in land, the big shepherds made only eight-tenths of 1 per cent in these high days of Republican prosperity under the Aldrich-Payne Act. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why, gentlemen, there is not a man outside of the insane asylum who does not know—even a Republican ought to have sense enough to know—that these findings are ridiculous absurdities and that the Tariff Board was imposed upon by the big protection flockmasters of the West. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

What else? They find that in the 11 States of the West that produce two-thirds of the wool in the whole country, not deducting the loss of interest on capital invested in lands, the woolgrowers on the capital invested in the industry made, on a general average, only 6⅝ per cent gross profit. Gentlemen, these absurd findings and figures are enough to discredit, in the estimation of any intelligent man, the findings of this "nonpartisan" board.

You know, and I know, that under a protective tariff of 11 cents a pound on wool that they would make more in Oregon than 4 per cent, more in Idaho than eight-tenths of a cent, more in Wyoming than 4 per cent, more in Montana than 5 per cent, and more in the great West than 6.2 cents gross profits. And yet, in the face of these findings, you stand here and ask us to treat sacredly this Tariff Board report. Touch it not, handle it gently. There is not an honest man among you that believes there is one single word of truth in these calculations it makes. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Let me quote from page 11 of the report:

> In western United States the capitalization per head of sheep (exclusive of land) is $5.30, upon which a gross product of 6.2 per cent was realized during the 12 months under review.

And then adds:

> The interest rate in that region ranges from 8 to 10 per cent per annum.

Why, then, do not the big flock masters sell out, loan their money out at 8 to 10 per cent and thereby make, certainly in Wyoming, Montana, Oregon, and Idaho, from 100 to 200 per cent more profit than they are now making in the sheep and wool industry? Does the board wish us to believe that the sheep barons of the West, like the Warrens and the Smoots, are in the business only as philanthropists and patriots, serving the country and the people by maintaining, at a loss, a needed American industry? The truth is, Mr. Chairman, the big, influential tariff-begging shepherds of the West have imposed on that board just like the American Woolen Co., known as the Woolen Trust, and other representatives of the woolen association imposed upon it.

Let me call your attention further to the board's report. They say, on page 11, that in the United States the average cost of a pound of wool is 9½ cents; in South America, between 4 and 5 cents; and in Australia, the largest competitor we have, from which the largest portion of our high-grade wool comes, the very country they ought to have carefully investigated, they do not know, they could not find out, but believe it is "materially lower than in South America." They could not find out the cost of production in Australia—our greatest competitor—but they could find the cost in South America, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and Oregon. They leave it to my friend HILL and his colleagues on the committee to guess at it, so that they could put the tariff on wool just as high as the Woolgrowers' Association demand. To show another evidence of the board's ridiculous inconsistency, turn to page 343. Though on page 11 they state that the production of wool in South America costs from 4 to 5 cents per pound, and materially lower in Australia, more than 50 per cent lower than in the United States, on page 343 they say that "in Australia the average price per pound net to the grower is 18 cents," and "in South America 17 cents," while in the United States it is only 16 cents. And yet these gentlemen come in with their substitute and put a tariff of 18 cents per pound on the clean contents, which is over 9 cents per pound in the grease, to protect us against Australia and South America, when the Tariff Board report here shows that Australian wool ought to have 2 cents a pound and South American wool 1 cent a pound protection against us. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for just one question?

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman is right quick about it I will. Since he lives in Wyoming, in such a poor sheep and wool growing State, and where the flockmasters make so little money and are so impoverished, I am going to yield to him out of charity. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that no one believed the figures of the Tariff Board as to the returns in the Mountain States on sheep growing, and of course I did not want that statement to go unchallenged——

Mr. KITCHIN. Go ahead and ask your question.

Mr. MONDELL. Because I simply wanted to say that, so far as I am concerned—and I know something about it—I think those figures are substantially correct, and since this Democratic Congress came in we have not been making that much.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us see. I am going to show you either how credulous you are or with what little intelligence you represent the wool industry of Wyoming. As an honest man, do you believe that the board is right in finding that it costs in your State 12.4 cents a pound to produce wool and in the State of Washington it costs less than one-twentieth of 1 cent a pound, or 240 times as much in your State as in Washington? As an honest man, do you believe that? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand, but I have known something about the wool business in Wyoming for a great many years, and I have never believed that you could grow wool in Wyoming for less than about 15 to 16 cents a pound—that is, the class of wool that we grow.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then this Tariff Board again discredits the gentleman's intelligence on the subject of woolgrowing in his State, because they say that Wyoming raises it for 12.4 cents a pound. Evidently the gentleman does not know what he is talking about if the Tariff Board is correct. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

If any honest man outside the insane asylum will put his hand on his conscience and say, "I believe that the woolgrowers of the State of Washington can produce wool for less than one-twentieth of 1 cent a pound, while in the great wool-producing State of Wyoming it costs over 12 cents a pound," then I say that he ought either to be in the asylum or in the Republican Party. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman state on what page of the Tariff Board's report he finds that statement of one-twentieth of 1 cent a pound?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is in the table on page 330.

Both Mr. HILL and Mr. LONGWORTH said in their speeches a few days ago and Mr. PAYNE this morning said that the bill which they propose to offer as a substitute for the Underwood bill is drawn in exact accordance with the findings of the Tariff Board. I challenge each one of these gentlemen to look at the report from beginning to end and find upon any page a single inference, a single intimation that you are justified in putting 18 cents a pound on the clean contents of wool, or 19 cents a pound scoured. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I recall the other day that my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] during his speech said to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who was sitting in front of him, "I want your vote"—surely he does want the insurgent votes—"but I do not want your vote unless I tell you the truth. Read this quick, read it quick," and putting his finger on a certain page of the report asked Mr. NORRIS to read it as a justification for the 18 cents duty per pound.

Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not the slightest suggestion in that portion of the report he read that 18 cents was the proper rate. The Tariff Board was simply giving an illustration how to work out compensatory duties for the manufacturers, saying that, "for example," if you put a duty of 15 cents on scoured wool, the compensatory will be so much; if you put a duty of 16 cents a pound, it will be so much; and they ran up the illustrations to as high as 25 cents duty per pound, but they never recommended or suggested the rate you took.

They tell us and would have the consuming public to believe that they, by their proposed substitute, have reduced the tariff on the wools of classes 1 and 2, these being the finer grade wools, and given the sheep barons of the West less protection. Let no man be deceived by such assertions. I shall show you that this alleged reduction is only apparent and not real; that they provide in effect the same rate, the same protection which the Aldrich-Payne Act gives, and write into this bill the exact duty which the big wool interest demanded. Do my Republican friends know one Theodore Justice? Of course every Republican on the committee knows him. But for fear my Democratic colleagues and some Republicans in the House do not, I will introduce him. He is one of the rankest of high protectionists. For years he has been a star witness and adviser before the Republican Ways and Means Committee, representing the wool producing as well as the manufacturing interests. He appeared before the committee at its hearing in 1909 saying that he also "held a power of attorney to appear for the Woolgrowers' Association." He knows what the big shepherds want. He sent to each member of the Ways and Means Committee a statement, a copy of which I hold in my hands. It is dated December 22, 1911. He says:

> The President hints at an average duty of 20 cents a scoured pound on wools of the first and second class. This would, in fact, be an increase on the present duty rather than a decrease. * * * Growers would be delighted if the duty upon all wool could be fixed at 20 cents scoured, for then they would have more protection than they have at present.

He then adds and proves that, considering the shrinkage of the wools imported for the last five years under the operation of the Aldrich-Payne Act, the duty actually paid per pound "is only 19 cents scoured." This would delight the big flockmasters. This is the rate Theodore Justice favored. This is the rate the big wool interests demanded and this is the rate fixed by the Republican substitute bill. Every minority member of the committee is intelligent enough to know that this substitute makes no practical reduction; that, considering the shrinkage of the wool imported for the last five years, the 18 cents per pound on the clean contents and 19 cents per pound on the scoured carried in the substitute, is exactly the rate which the imported wool of these two classes for the last five years actually paid under the Aldrich-Payne Act. The Tariff Board, on page 382, plainly demonstrates this. And yet they persist in asserting to the House and the country that they by their bill reduce the tariff on wool and the protection to the woolgrowers.

They tell us that they have in their substitute put wool of class 3, under the Aldrich-Payne Act—designated now in the substitute as class 2—known as carpet wool, on the free list. But where and how? Certainly no such provision can be found in their bill. But they say that they have practically put it on the free list by providing that if the wool is made into carpets, rugs, druggets, and the like, the manufacturer shall be allowed a rebate of the duty paid. This is true. The bill does contain a rebate clause, which in its operation gives to the manufacturer free of duty the wool that goes into the making of carpets, rugs, druggets, and so forth.

Mr. Chairman, I desire here to expose as infamous a piece of deception, inequality, and injustice as was ever concealed in the innocent and unsuspecting language of a bill. We recall that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who is reputed to be the author of the substitute, in the opening speech in favor of it, holding it aloft, declared with great glee, "Here is one tariff bill that contains no joker," and with an air of triumph challenged any Democrat to find one in it. I accept the challenge and assert with absolute assurance that the very section which the gentleman and his colleagues on the committee claim and assert puts wool of class 3 practically on the free list, actually increases the tariff on the wool that goes into the poor man's cloths and blankets over the Aldrich-Payne Act 75 per cent. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Last year 96,000,000 pounds of this wool were imported, many million pounds more than of wool of classes 1 and 2.

The Aldrich-Payne Act provides that this wool, if valued not more than 12 cents per pound, shall pay a duty of 4 cents per pound. Most of the 96,000,000 pounds imported in 1911 were valued at less than 12 cents and was therefore dutiable at 4 cents per pound. This is known as carpet wool, but millions of pounds go into the making of cheap clothes and cheap blankets. Now, this substitute, proposed by the Republican minority of the committee, on page 4, section 8, actually increases the duty on this wool from 4 cents to 7 cents per pound; that is, 75 per cent—"the duty shall be 7 cents per pound," says the bill—the highest duty ever put upon this class of wool. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.] This so-called free-wool rebate clause, of which gentlemen seem so proud and boast so much, provides that if this wool is made into carpets, rugs, druggets, and so forth, for the rich and well to do the tariff of 4 cents per pound under the Payne Act is removed and no duty shall be paid; but if it is made into cheap cloths and cheap blankets which the poor must have and are only able to buy, a duty, increased from 4 cents over the Payne Act to 7 cents in the proposed substitute bill, must be paid. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Gentlemen, I challenge any Republican on the committee or in this House to give a single reason or excuse why any bill should contain such a miserable piece of deception and injustice as this. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You have increased the price of wool that goes into the poor man's cloths, blankets, and flannels from 4 cents to 7 cents and removed the duty of 4 cents on the wool which goes into the rich man's carpet, and neither by your report nor your speeches have you dared the slightest mention of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Somebody has imposed upon the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], who wrote this bill, and imposed upon the Republican members of the committee who indorsed and reported it.

No patriotic progressive Republican who really wants to give the people relief by giving them cheaper cloths, cheaper flannels, and cheaper blankets can afford to vote for this substitute. I will not discredit the integrity of either the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] or any other member of the committee who reported this substitute, by charging that they were the real authors of the bill, and especially that joker provision. If they knew of this joker and its effect and did not disclose it to the House, they have not enough integrity for honest men to follow, and if they reported the bill without detecting it, they are too ignorant for intelligent men to follow. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

That provision was inspired by some one in the interest of the millionaired sheep barons of the West, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, will do my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] like they did my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY], who put the joker in the lumber schedule of the tariff bill in 1909, they will have the gentleman coming in this afternoon and withdrawing this infamous joker. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] But they say that they have written their substitute in exact accordance with the Tariff Board's findings. I challenge any man on this floor to point out on what page of the Tariff Board's report, in all its 1,500 pages, is there a suggestion or intimation that the duty on wool of the third class should be increased. What else do they do by this joker provision? It loses, according to the purpose and statement of its authors, over $4,000,000 revenue to the Federal Treasury. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] and his colleagues boasted of the fact that the Government would no longer get revenue from this class of wool; that this wool was noncompetitive—it did not compete with our woolgrowers—that the tariff benefited none except the Government in securing revenue.

My friends, it has been my observation that nothing in this world makes a Republican madder than to see an honest dollar of taxes go where it properly belongs—into the Federal Treasury. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And nothing delights him more than to see it diverted from the Treasury and go where it does not belong—into the pocket of some tariff-fattened favorite. [Renewed applause on the Democratic side.] We know well enough why a rebate of duty was given; that is, free wool, if made into carpets. That was to help the carpet manufacturer and the rich who buy carpets. This is admitted by its authors. But why was the increase of 75 per cent made in the wools that went into the poor man's clothes and blankets? I will tell you. The sheep barons of the West demanded it, and up went the increase, ingeniously concealed in section 8 of the substitute, and reference to which was adroitly withheld in the report and speeches of its authors.

The National Association of Woolen Manufacturers held a big banquet in this city at the New Willard in February, 1911. The chairman of the Tariff Board, my distinguished friend, ex-Speaker CANNON, and about 30 stand-pat Representatives and Senators were present. Senator WARREN, of Wyoming, the greatest flockmaster of the world, the most distinguished representative of the Woolgrowers' Association, was one of the star speakers. He opposed, in behalf of the flockmasters of the West, any reduction of the tariff on wools of the third class. He declared that these wools were used to make cheap clothes and cheap blankets and thereby came into competition with the wool of Wyoming and other Western States. The big shepherds of the West demanded that these foreign wools, out of which clothes and blankets are made, should be taxed out of our markets. In obedience to that demand the Republican members of the committee make this outrageous increase of from 4 to 7 cents per pound, this increase of 75 per cent, to enable these millionaire sheep barons of Wyoming and the West to exact larger tribute from the millions of poor men and women and children in this country, who need and are only able to buy the cheaper clothes and underwear and blankets. And they have the audacity to propose such a bill in the face of the horrible, appalling conditions of the working people developed at the recent hearings before the Rules Committee in regard to the Lawrence strike. Hundreds of boys and girls who worked in the woolen mills at Lawrence were thrown out of employment by the strike and out on the charities of the world. A lady, a trained nurse, was sent to Lawrence by some institution of charity to take some of these children to New York so that they could be properly cared for during the strike. She gathered up 119 of these little, cold, emaciated waifs, operatives in the big protected woolen mills, and out of these 119 little boys and girls, in the rigors of a Massachusetts climate, in the midst of one of the bitterest winters ever experienced, only 4 had undergarments on and 115 had not a thread of underwear about their little freezing bodies. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

It was further testified that only 20 of them had overcoats and the outer cloths were almost in rags. And this under a Republican protective-tariff system in the city of Lawrence, the high citadel of protection and the great center of wool manufacturing. The hypocrisy of the old Republican plea that protection is written and maintained in the name and in behalf of the workingman is emphasized when we reflect that some of these boys and girls worked in mills that were daily manufacturing woolen underwear and clothes. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I denounce it as a crime against humanity to increase, as this substitute proposes to do, in the interest of the sheep kings of Wyoming and the West, by 75 per cent, the tariff tax on the very kind of wool millions of the poor must have. [Applause on the Democratic side.] What else does this substitute do? On cheap clothes, dress goods, flannels, underwear, and blankets which more than 80 per cent of our people use, on the clothes, flannels, and blankets which those poor children of Lawrence should have, it levies a tariff tax of from 75 to 97 per cent, while on the fine clothes, underwear, and blankets which are used by the minority Members who wrote and presented this substitute it levies a tax of only 41 to 65 per cent. Mr. Chairman, the people of all parties, aroused against the iniquities of Schedule K of the Aldrich-Payne Act, have demanded a real, honest revision downward, a revision that will give relief to the consuming public. How do the Republicans answer this demand? They bring in a bill which its authors admit will not increase importations one dollar nor reduce prices to the consumer one penny. By their own admission it is a sham revision, with which to fool the people and at the same time to satisfy the wool and woolen interests. Mr. Chairman, I venture the opinion that no fair-minded man can study this proposed substitute without reaching the same conclusion as I have, that it is a masterpiece of false pretense, injustice, and inequality. [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All general debate has closed on the bill. The Clerk will now read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the 1st day of January, 1913, the articles hereinafter enumerated, described, and provided for shall, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), be subjected to the duties hereinafter provided, and no others; that is to say:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 3 to 9 and insert:

"That the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 5, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of the paragraphs of Schedule K of section 1 of said act, from 360 to 395, inclusive of both, and inserting in place thereof the following:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a mere matter, in one sense, as to the form of the bill, but in other respects it goes to the merits of the proposition. When this bill was introduced under its old number at the special session of Congress last year I called the attention of gentlemen to the fact that as the bill was not, and did not purport to be, an amendment to the existing tariff law, if the bill were enacted it would repeal the maximum and minimum provisions of the law, as well as set aside the law relative to the treaty with Cuba. When the bill went into conference it was changed so that there was inserted in the bill in conference practically the provision which I have now offered.

When the metal-schedule bill was reported to the House at this session of Congress it was reported as an amendment to the existing tariff law and provided for striking out certain paragraphs in that law and inserting in lieu thereof the paragraphs in the bill. When the chemical-schedule bill was reported to the House it contained the same phraseology, and when the sugar-schedule bill was reported to the House it contained the same phraseology.

The amendment which I have offered is simply to provide that the provisions of this bill shall be in lieu of the provisions of the existing law, as an amendment to that law, by striking out the provisions in the law relating to Schedule K and inserting in lieu thereof the provisions of this bill. That would save the maximum and minimum provisions of the law. It would save the treaty with Cuba, and it would save various other administrative features in the Payne tariff law which are contained in this, and would conform with the proposition which the Ways and Means Committee have adopted in their recent bill, since I called their attention to the matter, when they reported this bill in the first instance.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the other administrative features of the Payne bill do not affect Schedule K. It was not necessary to make this bill an amendment to the Payne bill in order to bring into it the administrative features of the act, nor does the treaty with Cuba seriously affect this bill either way, as there are no wool imports from or exports to Cuba that amount to anything. For that reason the bill as originally written was written as an independent bill, and there is no reason to change it.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the debate on this paragraph do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the debate on this paragraph close. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON and Mr. SHARP rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, page 1, strike out the word "twenty," and insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, nearly a year ago, in the consideration of a bill identical with the one before us to-day, it was my pleasure and opportunity to offer an amendment exactly as I have offered this to-day.

I wish to say that it seems to me that that amendment was then, as now, justified. At that time, during the consideration of the bill in the House, no one seemed to know or could even hazard a guess as to what the Senate would do, but after much discussion and argument in that body and later between the conferees a bill was finally reported back which upon this item imposed a duty of 29 per cent.

It seemed to me that in a certain sense it was a rather puerile play, because it impressed me that neither side wanted to make a concession that would be above or below a certain figure, so they stood out for their opinions a little too punctiliously, and made it 29 instead of 30 or 35 per cent. But be that as it may, the duty finally agreed upon was substantially the same as this amendment that I have offered.

The bill went to the President, and for the reasons which he afterwards stated in his veto message, he disapproved of that bill. Since then the Tariff Board, the lack of a report from which seemed to be the obstacle in the way of the President's approval, has made its report, and while I have not read entirely that report, I am fairly familiar with its provisions as they relate to raw wool more especially, and I still am of the belief that a 30 per cent duty would be wiser, more equitable, and more just than a 20 per cent duty.

Indeed, it is a matter of regret to me that this proposed legislation, as it concerns the duty on raw wool, is necessarily so connected in the bill that the much needed reforms in the way of reductions on the manufactured goods included in this schedule, and I believe in the main justly provided for, can not be secured without being compelled to vote for the measure in its entirety upon its final passage in the House. However, this fact should not deter any Member, regardless of his party affiliations, from expressing his views upon any portion of the bill or endeavoring, by amendments, to correct any inequalities which in his judgment lie against the bill. It is because I believe that, in this particular duty as it applies to raw wool, a substantial gain can be made in the revenues of our Government, as well as a more just consideration given to our woolgrowers, I have made this amendment in good faith.

I listened with much interest to what the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] stated on the floor a while ago, and I observed that whereas much of his argument was based upon the fact, as he claims, that there is a trust, amounting to a monopoly, in the control of western wool, yet let me say for the Ohio woolgrowers that such is far from the fact. We have in Ohio to-day, I think, something like 4,000,000 or 4,500,000 sheep. They are divided into small flocks, averaging from 75 to 100, and I suppose there are from 40,000 to 50,000 sheepgrowers in the State.

I wish to say in their praise that I am in hearty accord with all that my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] said in his speech of last Saturday night as to the benefits that the Ohio woolgrowers have conferred upon that great industry in the United States, because they have placed their products at the very top of perfection and excellency; and I feel to-day that the woolgrowers of this country are engaged in an industry that is basic in its importance, not only as furnishing clothing for our people, but also food products; and in this latter capacity, as a food supply, it is in active competition with the so-called Beef Trust.

It seems to me from the point of revenue that this bill, in so far as this particular duty is concerned, unnecessarily results in a loss amounting to several millions of dollars annually.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. KENDALL. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes, but I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in 20 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can close debate at any time. As I understand it, there is no disposition to delay. I think the gentleman had better wait a while and let it run a little longer.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that this is the raw-wool proposition, and there will probably be more debate upon that than upon any other paragraph of the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in five minutes, and that the gentleman from Ohio have the five minutes he wants.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate close on this amendment at the end of five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHARP. My time is very limited.

Mr. TOWNER. My question is entirely a friendly one.

Mr. SHARP. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. TOWNER. I should like to know whether the gentleman would not consent that the figures be placed at 29 cents instead of 30?

Mr. SHARP. I am willing to consent to anything that will in a measure do justice to my constituents, whose interests I am trying to fairly represent here to-day.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman consent that his amendment read 29 cents instead of 30 cents?

Mr. SHARP. I am perfectly willing to have that.

Mr. MANN. We can not consent.

Mr. SHARP. I will cite the estimate made in the report of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee, which places the amount of imports for the ensuing year at practically $66,000,000 under a duty of 20 per cent.

In looking back over the amount of imports in the year 1910 I find that under the higher and existing tariff there were, in round figures, but $47,000,000 worth, and in 1911, $29,572,000 worth. It must follow, necessarily, that if the estimate in this tabulated statement here is correct, then in order to reach this great sum of $66,000,000, which is nearly 50 per cent higher than it was in 1910 under the Payne tariff law, we must get a very largely increased amount of our wool from other countries. If that is true, we must of necessity get a very much smaller supply from our own sheep raisers in this country. That proposition would seem to follow of necessity, else we would find that we must have in prospect the wearing of two suits of clothes where we now wear one. I can not but believe that the anticipated revenues to come from this source, as estimated in the report, are too high.

There is one other argument I wish briefly to present, and that is that our sheep raisers are not exporters of wool. We import all that we use in excess of our home production. Several planks in our Democratic national platform have, in substance, reiterated from time to time that we were in favor of free trade where a trust controls the manufactured articles or where the articles manufactured here are sold in foreign countries at a less price than they are sold at home. But it certainly is not begging the question and it is not in violation of that platform that I am advocating a duty still reducing the present rate by fully 30 per cent instead of a more radical reduction amounting to 55 to 60 per cent. It is my earnest hope that though denied in this House, yet by the time this bill comes back from the Senate we will have at least such a duty as equals that in the bill passed at the former session of this Congress. And I want, by way of prophecy, to say that it occurs to me now that the only thing that will prevent a substantial agreement between the conferees of the two Houses will be the question whether the duties shall be specific or ad valorem. I must confess I do not understand the practical working out of these two methods in accurately determining the dutiable status of raw wool sufficiently for me to decide which would be the best plan. It seems to me that both of them have holes in them, so to speak—both of them have defects—but as far as my examination of the subject has gone it appears to me that it might be more satisfactory to have a specific duty levied upon the pound of wool rather than an ad valorem.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP].

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. SHARP)—ayes 44, noes 56.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 10 to 13, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"1. All wools, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the two following classes:

"2. Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including Bagdad wool, China lamb's wool, Castel Branco, Adrianople skin wool or butcher's wool, and such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Aires, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, Egypt, Morocco, and elsewhere, and Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and all wools not hereinafter included in class 2, and also the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

"3. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camel's hair, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

"4. The standard samples of all wools, which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other customhouses of the United States when they may be needed.

"5. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of merino or English blood, from their present character, as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

"6. If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act, invoiced or entered as of class 2, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of class 2, shall contain any wool or hair subject to the rate of duty of class 1, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the rate of duty chargeable on wool of class 1; and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

"7. The duty on all wools and hair of class 1, if imported in the grease, shall be laid upon the basis of its clean content. The clean content shall be determined by scouring tests which shall be made according to regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The duty on all wools and hair of class 1 imported in the grease shall be 18 cents per pound on the clean content, as defined above. If imported scoured, the duty shall be 20 cents per pound.

"8. The duty on all wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, imported in their natural condition, shall be 7 cents per pound. If scoured, 19 cents per pound: Provided, That on consumption of wools of class 2, including camel's hair, in the manufacture of carpets, druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and portions of carpets or carpeting hereafter manufactured or produced in the United States in whole or in part from wools of class 2, including camel's hair, upon which duties have been paid, there shall be allowed to the manufacturer or producer of such articles a drawback equal in amount to the duties paid less 1 per cent of such duties on the amount of the wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, contained therein; such drawback shall be paid under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, in brief, is to substitute the language of the minority members of the committee down to and including paragraph 8, page 4, of the bill that they have framed, with the exception of one amendment on page 4, to wit, striking out the word "nineteen," in line 8, and substituting the word "twenty."

Mr. Chairman, I am gratified with the report of the Tariff Board upon the matters that I deem are of vital importance in connection with shaping a wool-tariff bill. Nearly a year ago in this House I offered an amendment to the bill, similar to the pending one, which was pending at that time, in which I sought to provide a tariff that would recognize scoured wool as the true basis for a duty; and also that would recognize the principle of a specific duty instead of that of an ad valorem duty.

It is a matter of great satisfaction to me that the Tariff Board, after very careful inquiry made by that board into the whole subject, has come out squarely in favor of both propositions—in favor of a duty on scoured wool, and in favor of a specific duty. The necessity for a specific duty is to give protection to our producers when protection may be needed. The ad valorem duty fails in that particular because it gives highest protection when it is not needed and denies protection when it is needed.

There is one modification, however, that I have made in this amendment from the amendment that I offered a year ago, and that is this: At that time I offered an amendment placing a duty of 25 cents per pound upon the scoured wool, and I have now used the language of the bill prepared by the minority members in placing 18 cents on the clean content, but 20 cents on a pound if imported scoured. In other words, I have reduced the amount in the amendment that I offered a year ago from 25 cents to between 5 and 7 cents per pound. At that time I recognized, as did others in this House, the necessity for a modification of Schedule K. At that time, even without waiting for the report of the Tariff Board, I was willing to help in framing a law that would meet the conditions. I went so far that I brought down on my own head criticism of those interested in the industry, but I believed I was right then, and I believe now I was right then.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENCH. With that earnest desire on my part, I voted for the amendment that I proposed. It is needless to say that it did not become a part of the bill as finally passed by this body. To further emphasize my earnestness in a desire to bring about a reasonable modification of Schedule K I voted with the majority Members of this body and helped send the Underwood bill to the Senate, hoping that in some way the two Houses, in considering that question, might get together upon a bill that would relieve the situation, correct the evils in the present law, and bring about a condition that would be satisfactory to the people of this country. We all know the result, that the bill as finally passed did not meet the Executive approval, and we are again considering the question, but with the additional light that the Tariff Board has furnished.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. WILLIS. What rates are provided for in the amendment offered by the gentleman?

Mr. FRENCH. The language of the bill introduced by the minority of the committee with the rate of 18 cents on the clean content and 20 cents a pound on the imported and scoured wool. I will say that the last figure is my own, raising the figures from 19, as in the minority bill, to 20 cents per pound.

Mr. WILLIS. And that is the only change?

Mr. FRENCH. That is the only change. This House approaches the subject with more opportunity for wisdom than it did a year ago. We have the report of the Tariff Board, which has given to this country more information and better information upon this question than was ever assembled by any body hitherto.

We are now able to consider the question upon that information which we have in our possession. I recognize that my amendment of a year ago was abundantly safe, so far as the wool producers were concerned, and now as the result of the study that the board has made I am willing to say that it was higher than probably the Tariff Board's report will sustain.

I want to suggest to the majority Members of this body that you are facing a condition that we all recognize should be relieved. You say that Schedule K is wrong. I say that it is wrong. You know what happened to the bill that was passed by this Congress a year ago. As I emphasized my earnestness then in joining with you to send your bill to the Senate, there to receive the consideration of that body, I want to ask the majority Members of this body if they are in deep earnestness and not playing politics to stand on the report of the Tariff Board, which board they supported in a preceding Congress, and send a bill to the Senate that the Senate will pass and the President will approve. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move a pro forma amendment to strike out the last word. In five minutes I can not in detail criticize the bill reported by the majority committee or the one recommended by the minority. Frankly, in my opinion neither proposition has received that attention which it ought to command and would command if it were supposed for a holy minute that legislation touching Schedule K were really going to be enacted.

Much has been said about the Tariff Board. A report from any source of knowledge is always apt. I believe, in this instance, the report to be a valuable one, being based on a careful investigation of the facts, and if I could have my way about it I would have the committee take into account these facts, together with all other information gained by diligent inquiry, and consider the same in framing a bill; but the report of the Tariff Board has been ignored.

I do not approve of the bill proposed by the majority. It was framed for purposes of political capital and without proper consideration. It was begotten in secrecy and delivered by force of a caucus. I think it will never prove a viable child, and I hope it will not. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] who reported this bill differs radically from myself. He is not in favor of the principle of protection. I am for protection for every American industry—protection high enough, broad enough, and upon so firm a foundation that it will really protect every American industry.

It was my fortune a few months ago to visit the Yazoo section of the Mississippi River. I studied with some interest the levees. They have been raising them higher and higher, and they have been strengthening the banks with mattresses, because when time of trial comes a great broad stretch of country would be damaged by the great flood unless the levees were high enough and strong enough to confine the water to the channel. Any levee that does not meet the attack of the high water is of no account, just as any tariff bill professing to be a protective measure that does not shut out the cheaper products of the world affords no protection. [Applause on the Republican side.] This bill is not a protective measure, and does not profess to be. Oh, yes; it may involve "incidental protection" or something of that kind to catch votes.

Much has been said about the small wage paid to the factory hand in this country. It is not as high as we all would wish it might be. It is enough to insure better labor conditions in the United States than exist anywhere else on earth—so good that a million of the Caucasian race, from across the water, come here annually to avail themselves of the wage scale of the United States.

[The time of Mr. CANNON having expired, by unanimous consent he was granted five minutes more.]

The fact of the tremendous immigration to our shores answers all the speeches which have been made in criticism of labor conditions. Some may say that labor is oppressed in this country; but I ask, Why, then, does labor come to this country? Gentlemen may talk about the distress at Fall River, at San Francisco, New York, or any other portion of the country. Distress is with us always and has been from the beginning, but, after investigation, I have no hesitation in saying that there is less distress among the 90,000,000 people in the United States, on farm and in factory, than anywhere else on God's footstool. [Applause on the Republican side.] Some may argue that under Democratic tariff legislation labor will get the same wages for making a particular product and will buy other products made by labor at a less cost. Mr. Chairman, the American people are intelligent. They know that that is the cheapest kind of demagoguery and misstatement. The laborer making a particular product for a good wage can not expect to sell his product to another laborer unless that laborer also receives a good wage. And I truly state that wages received and prices paid for products consumed in the United States make our citizenship more comfortable than elsewhere in the world. New York, the great Empire State, is the greatest in production in the United States and in population. I asked my friend here from New York [Mr. MALBY] what evidence they had there of the well-being of the multitude—those who live in the sweat of their faces. He tells me that there are $1,600,000,000 of the savings of the men who labor in the savings banks in New York and that there are nearly 3,000,000 depositors. [Applause on the Republican side.]

I am surprised to see gentlemen from the old North State and elsewhere south of Mason and Dixon's line opposing the protective principle. Thank God, under that policy of the Republican Party we have reached the stage that we have. In North Carolina, which furnishes us Representative KITCHIN, in Georgia, in South Carolina, and elsewhere throughout the South the quickening hand of protection is diversifying your industries. Oh, you weep crocodile tears about the duty on salt. Salt can be had at a dollar a barrel, which is less than you can transport it for 5 miles in a two-horse wagon. Duty on salt! Great Heavens! During the great contest for the Union there was a salt famine down South, and the cry was for salt, salt, salt. Yet God Almighty had deposited salt almost without limit in Louisiana and other sections of the southern country. You had never had but the one industry, however, and were hungry for salt. A new era arrived with the close of the Civil War. The American people in the South began to diversify their industries and are now beginning to reap the reward; but let me say to you that whatever becomes of this bill, whatever is the result of tariff agitation, if you could write your tariff policy on the statute books there would be insolvency and bankruptcy, and the people, having learned that kindergarten lesson, would come almost as one individual to demand the restoration of the policy of protection. Even Brother KITCHIN, if he should serve in Congress 20 years from now, and I should live to be 100 to serve with him—even he, with better-informed mind than he has now, I venture to say, would stand for the policy of protection. [Applause on the Republican side.]

One word more, Mr. Chairman, before the hammer falls. I shall vote for the motion to recommit the pending bill to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the bill suggested by the minority of that committee, for I am satisfied from a somewhat hurried examination of the two bills that the one suggested by the minority, from the standpoint of protection and the well-being of the country, is immeasurably superior to the pending measure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to go on record on this bill. I shall have no other, as I have a pair with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. If he were here, he would vote for the majority bill. I would vote against it. If he were here, he would vote against the motion to recommit and report the bill prepared by the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means on data supplied by the Tariff Board. I would vote for that motion to recommit and to substitute that bill, because I regard it as right.

I am not a new convert to a tariff board or a tariff commission. I introduced a bill in this House in 1906 providing for the establishment of such a board. I was in favor of it then, and I am in favor of it now. I was a protectionist then, and I am a protectionist now, and while I have a desire to maintain the standard of our living I shall continue to be a protectionist. The tariff provided for in the bill prepared by the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means on information supplied by the Tariff Board measures the difference between the cost of producing wool and woolens in the United States and in competing countries. That is the policy announced in 25 Republican State platforms in 1910. It is the policy announced unqualifiedly by the Republican State platform in my own State. It is a policy that the leader of the Republican Party, President Taft, stands for to-day. Men of all parties now look upon this way of making a tariff law when they are not looking at it from a political standpoint. Everyone knows that this is the only safe way to deal with a tariff schedule that involves a great industry. We have progressed from the trade and barter method of making a tariff law. Every leader and every believer in the Republican Party is now in favor of revising the tariff one schedule at a time on information furnished by a tariff commission.

Col. Roosevelt announced day before yesterday his firm belief in protection for all our industries and for revision on information that enables Congress to prepare a law that takes into account conditions of competition, and make it sure that none of our industries will suffer. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; Mr. MCGILLICUDDY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions (S. Res. 271):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. ROBERT LOVE TAYLOR, late Senator from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. TAYLOR.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect his remains be removed from Washington to Nashville, Tenn., for burial, in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy to the family of the deceased Senator.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator the Senate do now adjourn.

And that, in compliance with the foregoing, the Vice President had appointed as said committee Mr. LEA, Mr. BACON, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. BOURNE, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. PAGE, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. KERN.

THE WOOLEN SCHEDULE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How much time would the gentleman like?

Mr. GRAY. About 10 minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph close in 10 minutes and the gentleman be recognized for that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct my attention to this branch of the tariff question. I listened this morning to Mr. PAYNE'S explanation of the great importance of this Tariff Board. The men who revised the tariff upward under a pledge to the people to revise it downward are now before us with a substitute bill and posing as zealous reformers seeking the true facts and unbiased advisement as the basis of tariff legislation they tell us that a tariff board is absolutely necessary to obtain reliable data. Then, why did they turn a deaf ear to the appeals made for a tariff board to them in the Sixtieth Congress, and refused even to allow a bill reported for the consideration of the House? Why did they vote down a tariff-board plank at their Chicago convention in 1908 and expunge it from their platform? Why did they pass the Payne law and report it out of this House without one word, one sentence, or one line to provide for a tariff board if a tariff board is absolutely necessary to obtain reliable tariff data? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And why did they reject every amendment offered in the Senate to the Payne bill to provide power to investigate the tariff and authority to obtain reliable tariff data? Why did they reject the amendment offered in the Senate to the Payne bill to give this body the name and style of a tariff board instead of the meaningless term "such persons"? Why did they even object to calling it a tariff board? Why did they vote down this amendment? Why did they reject the amendment offered in the Senate to the Payne bill to make the members of this body independent appointees of the President instead of mere servile tools and dependent employees subject to the absolute dictation and control of one-man power? Why did they object to making this body an independent board? Why did they vote down this amendment if a tariff board is absolutely necessary to obtain reliable tariff data? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Why did they reject the amendment offered in the Senate to the Payne law in these words:

And such persons shall have power to examine witnesses under oath and to compel the production of books and papers.

Why did they object to the examination of witnesses under oath? Why did they object to the production of books or papers? Why did they object to proceeding with even the common formality to observe truth and to guard against error if they are seeking the true facts and unbiased tariff advisement?

And why did the House conferees, led by Mr. PAYNE himself, refuse to concur in the only amendments which the Senate permitted to go into the Payne bill and which might have been construed to give power to investigate the tariff or authority to obtain reliable tariff data? Why did the House conferees, led by Mr. PAYNE himself, refuse to concur in the amendment which the Senate permitted to go into this bill in these words:

Such persons shall have power to make thorough investigations and examinations into the production, commerce, and trade of the United States and foreign countries, and all conditions affecting the same.

Why did they object to any investigation or any examination into either production or commerce or trade of the United States or of any foreign nation or of any condition affecting the same? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why did the House conferees, led by Mr. PAYNE himself, move to strike out these words? Why did they vote to strike them out, and why did they strike them out? [Applause on the Democratic side.] And why did the House conferees, led by Mr. PAYNE himself, also refuse to concur in the amendment which the Senate had permitted to go into the Payne bill in these words:

And information which will be useful to Congress in tariff legislation.

Why did they object to obtaining any information useful in tariff legislation? And why did the House conferees, led by PAYNE himself, move to strike out these words? Why did they vote to strike them out, and why did they strike them out [applause on the Democratic side], if they are in good faith seeking the true facts and unbiased advisement as the basis of tariff legislation, and if a tariff board is absolutely necessary to obtain reliable data? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

And now, Mr. Chairman, they come before us with a body which they have refused even to allow called a tariff board or given a name expressive of the duties to be performed by a tariff commission, and the members of which they have refused to allow made the independent appointees of the President, to act as an independent board, instead of mere servile tools and dependent employees, subject to the absolute dictation and control of one-man power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the understanding was that debate on this paragraph should close in 10 minutes, and I ask the gentleman how much time he desires.

Mr. GRAY. I will close as soon as I answer the gentleman from New York in regard to this Tariff Board, and I do not believe it will take very long. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I will join in the request that the gentleman have five minutes additional.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. GRAY. Mr. Chairman, they come before us this morning with a body which they now call a Tariff Board, but which is without power to examine witnesses under oath, without power to compel the production of books or papers, without power to proceed with even the common formalities to observe truth or to guard against error, without power to make any investigation or any examination into either the production or trade or commerce of the United States or of any foreign nation, or of any condition affecting same, and without power to obtain any information useful in tariff legislation, and which they have affirmatively denied any of the duties of a Tariff Board to perform, and thus stripped of every vestige of power to investigate the tariff and every semblance of authority to obtain reliable tariff data, and they tell us on the floor of this House this morning that they are in good faith seeking the true facts and unbiased advisement as the basis of tariff legislation, and that their Tariff Board is absolutely necessary to obtain reliable tariff data.

And thus, stripped and denuded of all legal sanction, force, and vitality, the provision which finally became a law as a part of the Payne bill, and which, it is claimed, authorizes and empowers the appointment of a tariff commission to investigate and report upon the tariff, and under which over half a million dollars has been expended in securing the voluntary statements of interested parties, not under oath, is as follows:

To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of his duties imposed upon him by this section and the officers of the Government in the administration of the custom laws the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required.

And, too, it must be understood that this provision is a part of section 2 of the Payne law, which relates wholly and exclusively to the maximum and minimum tariff rates established by that section, and in which all and the only duty imposed upon the President and with which he is charged is the duty of enforcing such rates against foreign nations accordingly as such nations may be found discriminating against American exports, and in which section there is not a word, line, or sentence in any way pertaining to or even the slightest suggestion of a Tariff Board to obtain data to form the basis of tariff legislation, as all amendments to provide for such authority had been deliberately rejected, voted down, and stricken out.

But it has been insisted here that notwithstanding all this they made an effort to provide for a real tariff board in the last session of the last Congress. Why did they not make their effort to provide for a tariff board before they revised the tariff upward in the last Congress? Why did they not make their efforts to provide for a tariff board before the people had voted them out of power during the last Congress? Why did they only make their efforts to provide for a tariff board after they had revised the tariff upward and the work of revision was over, and when they had an object and a purpose to remove the tariff from the reach of the new House in order to keep it where they had placed it without any report from a tariff board, and without any so-called special expert advisement?

Now, Mr. Chairman, they tell up also that the President wants to be sufficiently advised before he signs tariff bills. Let them explain to the people why it is that the President was sufficiently advised to sign a bill to revise the tariff upward without any report from a tariff board, but he was not sufficiently advised to sign a bill to revise the tariff downward upon the same identical articles without waiting for a report from a tariff board. [Applause.] Let them explain to the people how it is that the President was sufficiently advised to sign a bill to raise the tariff and increase the cost of the necessaries of life to the people without a report from a tariff commission, but he was not sufficiently advised to sign a bill to lower the tariff and reduce the cost of the same necessaries of life to the people without waiting for a report from a tariff commission. [Applause.]

I thank you, gentlemen, for your applause. Let them explain to the people also how it is that the President was sufficiently advised to sign a bill to place farm products from Canada on the free list in exchange for Canada opening her market to the American manufacturers without waiting for a report from a Tariff Board, but he was not sufficiently advised to sign a bill to place farm implements and farmers' supplies on the free list from Canada, or any other country, for the benefit of the American farmers without waiting for a report from a Tariff Board.

And let them also explain how it is that a Tariff Board is not needed while these men hold power to control tariff legislation, but becomes indispensable the very moment that they are out of power and others are given control of tariff legislation. [Applause.] Let them explain to the people how it is that a Tariff Board is opposed when the tariff is to be revised upward, but imperatively demanded when it is to be revised downward. [Applause.] And also let them explain to the people how it is that there is sufficient and ample data at hand to revise the tariff upward, but a total want of facts to revise it downward again.

For 17 years these men have held the House, the Senate, and the Executive; for 17 years they have dominated the full legislative control of this Government; for 17 years they have contended that Congress was competent to pass upon tariff; for 17 years they have claimed that Congress was sufficiently advised and in possession of ample data for tariff revision; for 17 years they have held that the tariff was a fit subject for settlement in Congress; for 17 years they have frowned upon the Tariff Board experiment of 1882 as an unwarranted encroachment upon the power and jurisdiction of this House to initiate tariff legislation; for 17 years they have failed to recognize the now so-called great importance of a Tariff Board; for 17 years they have failed to recognize the now claimed great value of special expert tariff advisement. Now let them explain to the people how it is that they have come into the possession of more wisdom and tariff understanding the next day after they go out of power than they were able to acquire during all those 17 years; let them explain to the people how it is that they have groped their way in tariff darkness during all this time in which they held power only to come into this great flood of light the next day after they go out of power; let them explain to the people how it is that they have lived this life of shame and criminal ignorance only to be found kneeling about the altar of truth in the eleventh hour and on the very dawn of the day of judgment.

We have no report from any tariff board. We have no tariff board. We have no such legally constituted body. We have no board empowered to investigate the tariff. We have no board empowered to obtain reliable tariff data. We have no board empowered to examine witnesses under oath. We have no board empowered to compel the production of books or papers. We have no board empowered to proceed with even the common formalities to observe truth or to guard against error. We have no board empowered to make any investigation or any examination into either the production or commerce or trade of the United States, or of any foreign nation, or of any condition affecting the same. We have no board empowered to obtain any information useful in tariff legislation. All amendments providing for such power and authority were rejected, voted down, and struck out by the Senate Finance Committee, and the House conferees, led by PAYNE, and sustained by the House, the Senate, and the Executive.

All we have is a report of so-called facts from a few servile and dependent employees, subject to the will and direction of one-man power alone, prepared under the absolute dictation and control of the Executive only, and based upon the voluntary and ex-parte statements of the interested parties themselves, without even the sanctity of an oath to observe truth or to guard against error, and without any compulsory process to compel the production of books or papers for verification.

But they tell us that this board has discovered by its investigation that the woolen tariff is too high, and have recommended a reduction. The people had already found out for themselves that the wool tariff was too high, and had demanded a reduction. The Democratic caucus had already ascertained substantially the same facts, and had recommended substantially the same reduction upon a mere compromise and without an appropriation of over half a million of dollars to obtain the advice of interested parties.

This discovery that the woolen tariff is too high was made only after the people had declared their ultimatum for tariff revision, after a new House had been elected upon the issues of tariff reduction, after the revolt against the Payne law had threatened to dethrone the party in power, and after the necessity arose for a temporary change of base, in order to stay the tide of public opinion against the policy of high protection and to appease the wrath and indignation of the consuming public.

Gentlemen, I thank you for this generous extension of time you have given me to conclude my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the pro forma motion?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; I withdraw the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the second section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. On all noils, top waste, card waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, bur waste, thread waste, garnetted waste, shoddies, mungo, flocks, wool extract, carbonized wool, carbonized noils, and on all other wastes and on rags composed wholly or in part of wool, and not specially provided for in this act, the duty shall be 20 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all of lines 14 and 15, on page 1, and lines 1 to 5, inclusive, on page 2, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"10. On all top waste and slubbing waste, 20 cents per pound.
"11. Roving waste and ring waste, 16 cents per pound.
"12. Noils, carbonized, 16 cents per pound.
"13. Noils, not carbonized, 13 cents per pound.
"14. Garnetted waste, 13 cents per pound.
"15. Thread waste, yarn waste, and wool wastes not specified, 11½ cents per pound.
"16. Shoddy, mungo, and wool extract, 10 cents per pound.
"17. Woolen rags and flocks, 5 cents per pound.
"18. Combed wool or tops, made wholly or in part of wool, or camel's hair, 23 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 5 per cent ad valorem."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Idaho that we have passed page 1, and amendments to it are not in order.

Mr. FRENCH. The amendment is intended to apply to the last two lines in paragraph 1 on page 1.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the wrong print of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's print is evidently not the same as that which the Chair has.

Mr. FRENCH. Then I had the wrong print handed to me. The amendment would apply to lines 1 to 7, inclusive, on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of paragraph 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"10. On all top waste and slubbing waste, 20 cents per pound.
"11. Roving waste and ring waste, 16 cents per pound.
"12. Noils, carbonized, 16 cents per pound.
"13. Noils, not carbonized, 13 cents per pound.
"14. Garnetted waste, 13 cents per pound.
"15. Thread waste, yarn waste, and wool wastes not specified, 11½ cents per pound.
"16. Shoddy, mungo, and wool extract, 10 cents per pound.
"17. Woolen rags and flocks, 5 cents per pound.
"18. Combed wool or tops, made wholly or in part of wool, or camel's hair, 23 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 5 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, just a word in regard to this. The amendment as applied to this paragraph recognizes the principle that I suggested a little while ago, to wit, a duty upon the specific basis, and I have applied these figures to the particular items upon the report of the Tariff Board.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform us as to the lines and pages of the Payne bill which he introduced as an amendment?

Mr. FRENCH. They are not exactly the items mentioned in the Payne bill, but they are practically the same. They are raised 2 or 3 cents.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has changed the figures?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; slightly. In the change I would say that by comparing the figures I have suggested in the amendment with the existing law it will be noticed that I have scaled down the existing law something like from 33⅓ per cent to 50 per cent, and I think they are fairly the figures that may be used upon a study of the report of the Tariff Board.

Now, just a word upon the tariff commission in addition to what I have said. I believe firmly in a tariff commission, and I believe that the necessity for a tariff commission within the last several years is apparent as never before. Prior to that time the great law of competition adjusted between the producer and the consumer the question of price to the extent that very little attention needed to be paid to any particular tariff law so long as the duty was high enough to furnish protection, competition doing the rest. But with the organization of wealth as it has been going on for some years in this country, in many lines competition has become more and more nearly eliminated, and just to that extent and to meet that condition we have to-day a necessity for a tariff law that shall not recognize one whit of protection higher than the difference that exists between the cost of production in this country and in foreign countries.

I submit that the facts upon which a law of this kind can be framed are facts that can be ascertained best by a nonpartisan, not a bipartisan, commission; a nonpartisan commission that will know no politics but will place before the people of this country the facts upon which legislation can be based.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this bill illustrates the insincerity and the partisanship of the Democratic pretenses to revise the tariff. It is the same bill which they passed last year before the Tariff Board had investigated or reported on the wool schedule; and, by introducing it again without any changes, they apparently wish to emphasize and parade their contempt of the Tariff Board and to intimate that from their superficial investigation and their inner consciousness they can evolve a better bill than all the long and nonpartisan and thorough study of the Tariff Board can produce. They practically boast that knowledge of the facts is of no assistance to them in passing a bill. I think the certainty that none of their bills are likely to become law contributes largely to their jaunty confidence, and that if they had the full power and responsibility and knew that they were framing a statute and not simply a political platform their work would be different. They pretended originally to be in favor of a tariff board which should thoroughly investigate and report facts without partisanship, and so lay the basis for a scientific tariff. President Taft took up the project and earnestly pressed it upon Congress, and the last Republican Congress framed such a bill, and it was only defeated on the last day of the session by a Democratic filibuster. But the Republicans were able to provide in another bill for the present annual Tariff Board, and though less permanent than the tariff commission which President Taft advocated, it has for this year had the same power and scope. The President appointed to it men of such ability and character as to command the respect and confidence of everyone, and the extraordinary and unlooked-for result has been that so far the whole board, consisting of three Republicans and two Democrats, has been unanimous in its findings in every report. That of itself is something novel and remarkable in our tariff history and augurs well for the success of the system. When we have the facts agreed upon the difficulties in framing a scientific and satisfactory law ought to be easily overcome. And yet the Democratic Party absolutely ignores this situation, pushes to one side the full statement of facts which the Democrats as well as the Republicans on the Tariff Board have agreed to, and takes its stand again on the same bill which it prepared before the Tariff Board had made its investigation. This well illustrates those qualities of obstinacy and viciousness which the animal which symbolizes the Democratic Party represents. They insist on their bourbon prerogative of learning nothing and forgetting nothing.

I think the reports of the Tariff Board are of great value and should be the basis of tariff revision. The Republican Party, under the leadership of President Taft, has adopted this system, and the unanimous reports which we have so far received from the board are most encouraging. The wool bill adopted by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee is based upon the findings of the board, and while no tariff law upon such a complicated question can satisfy everyone, I think it is a wise solution of a most difficult problem, and I hope it will be substituted for the stale and partisan and temporizing measure offered by the Democratic majority.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

4. On yarns made wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho offers an amendment to section 3, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, by striking out lines 14 and 15 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"On yarns, made wholly or in part of wool, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty shall be 24 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 10 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 30 cents and not more than 50 cents per pound, 24 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 15 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 50 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 24 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 20 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 80 cents per pound, 24 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 25 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that I have proposed would harmonize the paragraph now under consideration with the paragraph as it would have existed had my previous amendments prevailed.

It reduces the present duty on yarns made wholly or in part of wool valued at not more than 30 cents per pound from 27½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein plus 35 per cent ad valorem to 24 cents per pound on the wool contained therein and in addition 10 per cent ad valorem; on yarns valued at more than 30 cents and not more than 50 cents per pound it reduces the present duty from 38½ cents per pound plus 40 per cent ad valorem to 24 cents plus 15 per cent ad valorem. On yarns valued at more than 50 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound it reduces the present duty from 38½ cents per pound plus 40 per cent ad valorem to 24 cents per pound plus 20 per cent ad valorem; and on yarns valued at more than 80 cents per pound it reduces the duty under the present law from 38½ cents per pound plus 40 per cent ad valorem to 24 cents per pound plus 25 per cent ad valorem.

This represents what I think is a fair deduction of rates that should be placed upon yarns of the various character that I have mentioned from a study of the findings of the Tariff Board.

Some Members may feel that these rates are too high and others may feel that they are too low, and that is a question to be determined by thrashing this matter out still further in the House and in the Senate, and this is what I want to help determine. For my part, as applied to the wool schedule or any other schedule, I desire to be governed by the facts shown by the findings of a tariff commission.

The people of this country are entitled to the right of purchasing all commodities at the lowest reasonable price consistent with the production of the commodity in this country.

The consumers do not ask more than this. They are willing that fair protection shall be given. They are willing that fair rates shall be maintained, and I believe that the people generally have confidence in the findings of the Tariff Board and will demand of this Congress that it enact such laws fixing such schedules as will hew to the line and retain no greater duty than that which is absolutely needed for the maintainance of any industry.

I said a year ago, and I repeat, that Schedule K should be modified at the earliest possible moment, and that this modification should be in the interest not only of the consumer but of those engaged in the wool industry.

I believed a year ago that the wish of the country should have been met, and that, upon the basis of the facts that we had at that time we should have prepared a wool tariff to take the place of Schedule K that would have been in closest harmony with the facts as they were known to the country.

Failing, however, to bring about the passage of such a law, I believe that it is the imperative duty of this Congress to enact a law that will take the place of Schedule K, that will give to the producer the protection to which he is deserving and which the people want him to have and which it is indicated by the Tariff Board's report he should have, but at the same time will remove the inequalities of the present law and in turn give to the consumer of this country the consideration to which he is entitled.

In other words, as applied to this schedule or any other, I believe in protection, but the kind of protection that not alone protects the producer, but as well the consumer.

I hope our Democratic friends will earnestly strive for tariff modification, and that they will not try to mislead the country by pretending to be in favor of tariff modification when they have it in their power to pass through this House a bill based upon the report of the Tariff Board that will correct the evils under the present law and that will meet the approval of the Senate and of the Chief Executive.

If our Democratic friends then want to go beyond that and set forth what they would do if in control of both branches of Congress and the Executive Office, that would be their privilege.

This first, however, is something they can accomplish, and I submit that to do so is a duty upon them no less than upon Republicans who are striving for tariff modification upon the basis of the Tariff Board's report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH], which is to strike out the provisions in the Underwood bill relating to yarns, and insert the language of the Payne bill relating to yarns with the figures increased so as to make the tariff rate considerably higher than is proposed in the substitute recommended by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, in my opinion ought not to prevail. I do not undertake to say that the minority report represents the sum of human wisdom; but under the circumstances, representing as it does a bill to carry out the recommendations of the Tariff Board, I think this side of the House ought to stand as nearly as possible by that, and not endeavor, by amendments proposed to this bill, to increase the rates over the rates contained in our own substitute bill. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. On cloths, knit fabrics, felts not woven, and all manufactures of every description made, by any process, wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this act, the duty shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to congratulate Congress and the country upon this the first opportunity in the history of Federal legislation to enact a tariff law formed strictly upon the commission method of collecting information respecting industrial conditions here and in foreign countries. The bill offered by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee is the first real business tariff measure that was ever submitted to Congress for consideration. It is framed in such a fashion that the duties shall only cover the difference in the cost of producing wool and woolen fabrics here and abroad, thereby affording adequate protection to American producers and prohibiting the increase of prices by monopolistic combinations to a point not justified by the cost of production at home. This is in strict conformity with the standard of protection fixed in the Republican national platform of 1908. The report submitted by the majority members of the Ways and Means Committee, in support of the bill they propose, declares that the people at the general election in 1910 repudiated the policy of protection and gave an unmistakable indorsement of the Democratic policy of tariff for revenue only. That interpretation of the result of the election in 1910 will not bear the test of historical analysis. The only time since the Civil War that the people of the United States at a general election abandoned the Republican tariff policy and accepted the policy of the Democratic Party was in 1892, and that abandonment was temporary only, for in 1896, by an unprecedented majority, the voters returned the Republican Party to power and gave its tariff policy an unqualified indorsement.

In 1908 the Republican Party in its national platform specifically reaffirmed the doctrine of protection and fixed the standard of duties to be imposed upon competitive commodities. The platform declared that the incoming administration should revise the tariff in accordance with that standard at a special session of Congress immediately following the inauguration of President Taft. No tariff board or commission had been provided to collect information respecting industrial conditions here and in foreign countries so that Congress might be able to measure the duties according to that standard with practical certainty.

President Taft had no discretion but to call Congress together in obedience to the pledge of the party which elected him to the Presidency and to recommend an immediate revision of the tariff schedules. Congress was compelled to undertake that work under the old method of tariff revision. It supplied itself with all the information that was available and enacted the Payne tariff law. That law was a disappointment to many people throughout the country, but it was impossible under the existing circumstances and with the material at hand to have made a tariff that would have satisfied the country. Ex-President Roosevelt, in a speech in the Northwest a few days ago, quoted from a speech he made in 1910 favoring the commission method of tariff revision. The quotation is as follows:

> As a means toward the attainment of the end in view we have as yet devised nothing in any way so effective as a tariff commission. There should be a commission of well-paid experts, men who should not represent any special interest or industry, who should be masters of their subjects, men of the very highest character, who should approach the matter with absolute disregard of every outside consideration.

If it had occurred to the mind of the distinguished ex-President as early as 1906 that a commission was necessary for the proper revision of the tariff, and if he had used his commanding influence toward securing the creation of such a commission, one would doubtless have been created, and Congress, when it met in special session in March, 1909, would have been supplied with trustworthy information showing the difference in the cost of production here and in other countries, and the Payne tariff would doubtless have been so framed as to have met with general approval. But the ex-President at no time during his service as Chief Magistrate of the Government made any official reference to or suggestion of the need of a tariff commission.

Let me say to gentlemen on the other side of the aisle that the defeat of the Republican Party at the general election in 1910 can not be interpreted to mean an indorsement of the Democratic tariff policy. Your party, gentlemen, was simply used as a scourge to chastise the Republican Party for what the people believed to be its failure to keep one of the most important pledges it made in the campaign of 1908. Gentlemen, your party is a most effective scourge. Following the election of a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress in 1892 the country was converted into a desolate industrial waste from ocean to ocean. Monuments to the unwisdom of your tariff policy were seen in every community throughout the land in smokeless chimneys and idle mills. During that administration you established equality of opportunity on the industrial graveyard basis. You created equal opportunities for all by destroying opportunities for all. Do not lay the flattering unction to your souls that the ballot in November, 1910, meant an indorsement of your tariff policy.

I read with considerable care the elaborate report of the Ways and Means Committee in behalf of the bill reported by the Democratic members of that committee and was greatly surprised to note the hypercritical character of the objections made to the report of the Tariff Board on the wool question. I have also read with much care the report of the Tariff Board, and I am impressed with the belief that that report is the most thorough and exhaustive document of the kind that has ever been submitted to Congress. The criticisms seem to be based upon the free-trade theory, following the doctrine of Adam Smith, John Stuart Mill, Bastiat, and other free-trade philosophers. The author of the report entered upon his work with a view of picking flaws in the report of the Tariff Board. It is urged that it is impossible to ascertain with exact certainty the cost of production of a given product in any country; that the cost of woolen fabrics is not exactly the same in any two mills, and that the cost varies in different seasons of the year. Every practical man knows that. There are differences in the cost of producing the same line of articles in the same country, depending upon the facilities, organization, location, and management of individual mills. There may also be differences in the cost of producing a given line of articles at different periods of time. But the making of a tariff is a practical question, and all Congress can attain is reasonable certainty in fixing duties to meet the differences in cost of production. The report itself discloses with practical certainty the differences in the cost of producing wools and woolens in this country and in foreign countries. It furnishes a reliable guide for making a business tariff. If Congress shall defer the enactment of laws until it can embody in them mathematical accuracy and absolute justice, it might as well close its doors and cease its endeavors. Absolute exactness in human affairs is an unattainable ideal.

The report of the committee deals in refinement of definition. It insists that the terms "cost" and "expense" are not synonymous; that "cost" means the degree of sacrifice one must make to produce a particular article, while "expense" means the amount of money he must pay for the purchase of the article. Farmer Jones owns a horse that he can sell in the market at any time for $150, and his friend Brown, in the city, is a dealer in farm implements, wagons, carriages, and so forth, and Jones desires a carriage and Brown wants a horse. The carriage Jones has his heart set upon is priced at $150. Instead of selling his horse for $150 in cash and buying the carriage from Brown with the money, Jones exchanges the horse for the carriage. That transaction would be a barter. Jones, in his college days, took a course in political economy under a learned professor, and he was taught the scientific difference between "cost" and "expense." The horse he traded to Brown he had raised from a colt. He reckoned the sacrifice he made in the way of time, care, and food for the animal and found that it amounted to $75. He congratulated himself upon the fact that he got a $150 carriage for $75 worth of sacrifice. But upon reflection it came to his mind that what he made on the carriage he lost on the horse, and that from a business standpoint there was no difference between cost and expense in that transaction, whatever science might say about it.

If a woolgrower raises a thousand bushels of oats on his farm with which to feed his sheep during the winter, and the oats should be worth 35 cents a bushel at the machine at threshing time, he could sell his crop for $350, and with that money buy other oats as he needed them to feed his sheep. In reckoning the cost of the wool clip the following year he would consider as a factor the $350 worth of oats which he fed the sheep, but if he fed the oats he raised himself scientific economists would say that he must not reckon the value of the oats in the market, but he must ascertain the sacrifice he made in producing them, and by that method it might turn out that the oats cost him only 20 cents a bushel, or $200 for the thousand bushels, in the way of sacrifice. That process would cheapen the cost of the wool by ignoring the market value of the oats fed to the sheep. The absurdity of that kind of refinement in practical affairs is easily apparent. Economic philosophers spend much time and energy wrangling with each other over definitions. It has taken generations to determine the definition of rent, and even now a landowner who leases his farm for $1,000 a year can not know, scientifically, how much, if any, rent he receives for the use of the land. He is apt to call it all rent, but the economist will demonstrate to him by some abstruse philosophy that the bulk of the returns he receives is income on his investment and not rent for the use of the land. Refinements of this character in practical matters are hardly worthy of consideration, however important they may be in science. When I read an article, intended for practical purposes, based upon the "law of diminishing returns," I give up in despair; yet that law is recognized as sound by all scientific economists. It is like the Malthusian law of population, it is scientifically sound but practically unimportant.

The report of the Tariff Board upon the woolen industry shows that it is not difficult to ascertain the difference in the cost of production of wools and woolens in this country and in foreign countries from a business standpoint. It discloses the average cost through a period of years of the bulk of wool grown and woolens produced in other countries that may invade our own markets if our tariffs are unduly low. It is a practical question, and is based altogether upon business principles. The report contains information that will enable Congress to act with business precision.

The bill proposed by the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee is identically the same as the bill that passed both Houses of Congress last summer and was vetoed by the President. If that bill should go through both Houses of Congress again it would doubtless meet the same fate at the hands of the President it met last summer. There are additional reasons now why the President should not approve the bill. When he vetoed it last summer the Tariff Board had not made its report on the wool schedule, but now the report is before Congress and has been for over three months, and the President now has irrefutable proof that the bill does not even approximately fix the duties on wools and woolens so as to cover the difference in cost of production here and in foreign countries.

The advocates of the Democratic measure do not pretend that it does, but they undertake to justify it by attacking the reliability of the report of the Tariff Board. The board is composed of able, upright, disinterested men, three of whom are Republicans and two of whom are Democrats. They all concur in the report. Gentlemen on the other side of the aisle know that the consideration of their bill is "love's labor lost." They know that if it goes to the President again he can not, in keeping with his pledge to the people, give it his sanction and approval. They know that if they insist on that measure it means no revision of the wool schedule at all. The bill submitted by the Republican members of the Committee on Ways and Means is made in faithful conformity to the report of the Tariff Board. The duties it imposes cover the difference in cost of production here and in foreign countries and no more. It will reasonably protect American producers and manufacturers of wools and woolens, and it will likewise protect American consumers by reducing the tariff to such a point that exorbitant prices can not be exacted. If the Republican bill should pass the two Houses of Congress, it would be approved by the President and would become a law. Every Member of this House knows that to a moral certainty. Every Member of this House knows that it is the only proposition for the revision of the wool schedule that may be enacted into law. That bill reduces the duties on wools and woolens on an average of over 40 per cent. Here, then, is an opportunity for Democratic Members of this body to do something for the relief of the people of the country. They have been talking long and lustily about the enormous burdens that are imposed upon the people by the high tariff on wool, and yet they persist in blindly adhering to an impossible measure, one which they know can not become a law. They refuse to join with the Republicans in support of a measure that will reduce the duty on wools and woolens more than 40 per cent on an average—a measure that will be approved by the President and become a law if it passes both branches of Congress. I gravely charge that if there is no reduction of the duties on wool and woolens during this Congress the responsibility will be with the Democratic majority in this body. They and they only will have to answer to the people for the failure of Congress to afford adequate relief from the unnecessarily high tariff on one of the great necessaries of life. Are the majority Members of this House acting in good faith and with an earnest desire to afford relief to the country in persisting in their support of a measure that they know will not become a law? Are the majority Members acting in good faith with the country in refusing to support a bill that will afford relief to the people and that will become a law if they give it their support?

The Tariff Board has also submitted a report on the cotton schedule, and that report is now before Congress. What will the majority side of the House do in relation to the cotton schedule? A cotton-revision bill was passed last summer and was vetoed by the President because of its heedless character and because there was no way of determining whether the duties provided in it covered the difference in cost of production here and abroad. The report is ready now, and it clearly shows that the duties on cotton fabrics should be substantially reduced. It shows that they are unnecessarily high. The President, in submitting the cotton report to Congress, calls particular attention to the fact that the duties on cotton fabrics should be substantially reduced, and he urges Congress to revise the cotton schedule without delay. Here is another opportunity for the majority Members of the House to show their good faith to the country by reporting and passing a bill for the revision of the cotton schedule in accordance with the report of the Tariff Board. A bill of that kind will be approved by the President if it passes the two Houses of Congress. Every Member of this body knows that. It is up to the Democratic majority of the House to determine whether there shall be a revision of the cotton schedule and a substantial reduction of the existing duties, or whether this session of Congress shall adjourn without taking any action thereon at all. They can not escape responsibility by captious criticism of the report of the Tariff Board. They can not escape responsibility by persisting in their support of a mongrel measure they know will never be enacted into law. When they turn their backs upon meritorious measures for the revision of the wool schedule and the cotton schedule upon business principles they assume responsibility for the failure of legislation. They can not deceive the people. The issue is squarely presented; they must face it.

I sincerely hope the Ways and Means Committee will report a cotton-tariff revision bill in harmony with the report of the Tariff Board, for I know it would become a law and afford relief to the country.

The Democratic national platform made at Denver, Colo., in 1908, contains this declaration:

We demand the immediate repeal of the tariff on wood pulp, print paper, lumber, timber, and logs and that those articles be placed on the free list.

No free-lumber bill has been reported by the Democratic majority in this Congress. They have reported and passed through the House bills for the revision of the metal schedule, the cotton schedule, the chemical schedule, and the wool schedule—measures which their platform did not specifically promise—but not a word has been said nor a thing been done by them toward the fulfillment of the emphatic declaration of their platform for free lumber. Let me ask gentlemen on the other side of the House when they intend to carry that promise into effect? Why has it been ignored thus far? Lumber is a universal necessity to civilized man. The Bureau of Corporations, in a report recently issued, shows that hundreds of millions of acres of the most valuable standing timber of the country have been purchased and are now owned by a few wealthy syndicates. Those syndicates do not convert the timber into lumber. They have secured a practical monopoly of one of nature's most beneficent gifts to man. They are holding the timber for the rise in price that must come and that has come from increasing demand for lumber. They sell stumpage to the millmen at prices which they fix themselves. They confer no benefit on society, but have made hundreds of millions of dollars in monopolizing tremendous areas of timberlands. They are the chief beneficiaries of the tariff on lumber. Did your party, gentlemen of the majority, speak in good faith when it declared unequivocally in favor of free timber, free lumber, and free logs? Did you mean it then and do you mean it still? If you were in good faith in that declaration, why have you not reported and passed a bill providing for free lumber? The majority of your side of the House come from the Southern States where there are extensive timber interests. Can this be the reason why you have made no effort to put lumber on the free list in fulfillment of your pledge? Is it possible that you have been inoculated with the virus of protection in so far as timber and lumber are concerned? Ninety per cent of the people of the United States would welcome with enthusiasm a law removing the duty from lumber in the hope that it would tend to cheapen the material out of which they build their homes and in the belief that it would promote the conservation of one of the most important of our natural resources.

I wonder what explanation the Democrats can make in the campaign this year for their complete repudiation of the specific and unqualified pledge they made to remove the duty from lumber. We on the Republican side can abide with confidence the judgment of the people upon the record of nonperformance made by the Democratic majority of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported, and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by this act and no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of calling attention to a very remarkable document which just came into my hands on yesterday, entitled "Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft. What each has done for the People of the United States." It is a document containing about 24 pages.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] desires to throw the afternoon open to a political debate, I shall not object.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman that I do not, and if objection is made, I will have to insist.

Mr. MANN. If objection would be made from that side of the House to political debate on this side, I do not intend that they shall commence it over there.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to assure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that what I wish to say is pertinent to the wool bill that is now under discussion. This is only preliminary. The document I hold in my hand is signed by the Roosevelt League of New York State, and the address is 1 Madison Avenue, New York City.

On page 20 of that document, under the alliterative head of "Taft's tariff tactics," I read what the author has to say with reference to the President of the United States and his attitude upon the tariff question, and especially his attitude upon the woolen schedule.

He says:

Although Mr. Taft's tariff policy does not relate to his promises to carry on the Roosevelt policies, it is mentioned here as illustrating his sympathy with the industrial powers and his lack of interest in relieving the burdens of the common citizen.

Mr. Taft's weakness in the tariff controversy has indefinitely postponed the settlement of that disturbing issue. (After the Payne-Aldrich bill was drawn under the dominating influence of the big interests, Mr. Taft took the stump in praise of that bill, and in defense of Aldrich, Tawney, and the other stand-pat leaders.)

When the Democrats came into power, largely as a result of the national indignation at the Payne-Aldrich tariff, they joined with the insurgent Republicans and passed an excellent bill reducing the tariff on wool (the La Follette-Underwood bill). Mr. Taft vetoed the bill on the ground that he desired Congress to wait before doing anything until a commission, appointed by himself, had reported. Seeing, therefore, that there was no hope of any real tariff reform during the session, Congress hastily passed several other tariff bills in order to put Mr. Taft and the standpatters on record. Had Mr. Taft had the intelligence and the courage to sign the wool bill, the tariff question would now be less full of uncertainty and we should be much nearer a condition of business confidence and security.

In addition to these faults of judgment in defending the Payne-Aldrich bill and in vetoing the wool bill, Mr. Taft has committed himself to the doctrine that the proper protection should be measured by the difference in cost of production plus a reasonable profit to the manufacturer, a doctrine which gives two profits to the manufacturer and very little promise of relief to the consumer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make any extended remarks on this remarkable statement. However, just a word——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, it would be interesting to know from our Republican friends whether they agree with this statement by the sponsors of the distinguished candidate for the Republican presidential nomination—whether they agree, for instance, that "Mr. Taft is in sympathy with the industrial powers and has a lack of interest in relieving the burdens of the common citizen." It would be interesting to know whether they agree with Mr. Roosevelt and his advisers in this campaign that "the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill was drawn under the dominating influence of the big interests." It would also be very interesting to know—and perhaps our Republican friends would be willing to say now—whether they indorse or admit the position taken by their former idol that "Mr. Taft has committed himself to the doctrine that the proper protection should be measured by the difference in cost of production plus a reasonable profit to the manufacturer—a doctrine which gives two profits to the manufacturer and very little promise of relief to the consumer."

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I will.

Mr. McCALL. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that Mr. Roosevelt is responsible for these views?

Mr. PEPPER. Well, I would hardly dare to say that he was not responsible.

Mr. McCALL. I understood the gentleman to say that he was responsible, that he said these were the views of the former President.

Mr. PEPPER. Is the gentleman from Massachusetts prepared to deny that Mr. Roosevelt is responsible for the circulation of this document?

Mr. McCALL. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. PEPPER. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that it is signed by the Roosevelt League, and is circulated quite generally by the men who are back of Mr. Roosevelt in his candidacy for the Presidency.

Mr. BUTLER. I would like to ask the gentleman who composes the Roosevelt League?

Mr. PEPPER. I have no doubt the gentleman would like to know who compose the Roosevelt League. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I am not prepared to say who compose the membership of it, but I assume that they are residents of the State of New York.

Mr. BUTLER. Is not this circular which is circulated an anonymous one?

Mr. PEPPER. It is signed by the Roosevelt League of New York, and I assume there is such a league up there.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PEPPER. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think that it is proper to insert by way of doxology "Bryan on Harmon." [Laughter on the Republican side.].

Mr. POU. Does not the gentleman from Iowa think that ex-President Roosevelt would repudiate the document if it did not receive his indorsement?

Mr. PEPPER. From what I know of the gentleman's characteristics I have no doubt he would.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I never saw one of these circulars. Where did the gentleman get it?

Mr. PEPPER. It came through the ordinary course of mail.

Mr. MANN. It must have been circulated among the Democrats only; not one has been sent to me.

Mr. PEPPER. I am surprised at that, because the gentleman from Illinois is mentioned in it.

Mr. MANN. I have not seen any copy of it on this side of the House, and I notice it comes from the gentleman's side.

Mr. PEPPER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that at the bottom of page 7 his name is mentioned as being a Taft leader in the House, and that he protested against the constitutionality of the bill to prevent corporations from contributing to national campaign funds that was passed. So I assume that the gentleman will be interested in reading the document.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken, I have not the slightest interest in reading any anonymous article about anything that I have done in the House, and I am not interested in reading even some articles that are not anonymous.

Mr. PEPPER. I do not know whether this is anonymous or not. But it is interesting and I commend it to the gentleman's attention.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GRAHAM, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to its final passage. And, pending that motion, I desire to say to the gentleman from New York that if he desires to offer his bill as a substitute instead of a motion to recommit I will consent that he may do it.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I will move to recommit later.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. PAYNE. I move to recommit the bill with instructions as follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PAYNE moves to recommit H. R. 22195 to the Committee on Ways and Means with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with an amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and substitute the following——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from New York if he desires the Clerk to read the substitute bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not insist upon it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We are all familiar with the bill, and I suggest that the gentleman from New York ask unanimous consent that the reading of it be dispensed with.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not like to ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of my own bill.

Mr. MANN. I think the bill or amendment ought to be read; it is not very long.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the substitute, as follows:

That the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out all of the paragraphs of Schedule K of section 1 of said act, from 360 to 395, inclusive of both, and inserting in place thereof the following:

"1. All wools, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the two following classes:

"2. Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including Bagdad wool, China lamb's wool, Castel Branco, Adrianople skin wool or butcher's wool, and such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Aires, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, Egypt, Morocco, and elsewhere, and Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and all wools not hereinafter included in class 2, and also the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

"3. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camel's hair, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

"4. The standard samples of all wools, which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other customhouses of the United States when they may be needed.

"5. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture or merino or English blood, from their present character, as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

"6. If any bale or package of wool or hair specified in this act, invoiced or entered as of class 2, or claimed by the importer to be dutiable as of class 2, shall contain any wool or hair subject to the rate of duty of class 1, the whole bale or package shall be subject to the rate of duty chargeable on wool of class 1; and if any bale or package be claimed by the importer to be shoddy, mungo, flocks, wool, hair, or other material of any class specified in this act, and such bale contain any admixture of any one or more of said materials, or of any other material, the whole bale or package shall be subject to duty at the highest rate imposed upon any article in said bale or package.

"7. The duty on all wools and hair of class 1, if imported in the grease, shall be laid upon the basis of its clean content. The clean content shall be determined by scouring tests which shall be made according to regulations which the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe. The duty on all wools and hair of class 1 imported in the grease shall be 18 cents per pound on the clean content, as defined above. If imported scoured, the duty shall be 19 cents per pound.

"8. The duty on all wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, imported in their natural condition, shall be 7 cents per pound. If scoured, 19 cents per pound: Provided, That on consumption of wools of class 2, including camel's hair, in the manufacture of carpets, druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and portions of carpets or carpeting hereafter manufactured or produced in the United States in whole or in part from wools of class 2, including camel's hair, upon which duties have been paid, there shall be allowed to the manufacturer or producer of such articles a drawback equal in amount to the duties paid less 1 per cent of such duties on the amount of the wools of class 2, including camel's hair of class 2, contained therein; such drawback shall be paid under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"9. The duty on wools on the skin shall be 2 cents less per pound than is imposed upon the clean content as provided for wools of class 1, and 1 cent less per pound than is imposed upon wools of class 2 imported in their natural condition, the quantity to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"10. Top waste and slubbing waste, 18 cents per pound.

"11. Roving waste and ring waste, 14 cents per pound.

"12. Noils, carbonized, 14 cents per pound.

"13. Noils, not carbonized, 11 cents per pound.

"14. Garnetted waste, 11 cents per pound.

"15. Thread waste, yarn waste, and wool wastes not specified, 9½ cents per pound.

"16. Shoddy, mungo, and wool extract, 8 cents per pound.

"17. Woolen rags and flocks, 2 cents per pound.

"18. Combed wool or tops, made wholly or in part of wool, or camel's hair, 20 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 5 per cent ad valorem.

"19. Wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, but less advanced than yarn, not specially provided for in this section, 20 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 8 per cent ad valorem.

"20. On yarns, made wholly or in part of wool, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, the duty shall be 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 10 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 30 cents and not more than 50 cents per pound, 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 15 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 50 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 20 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 80 cents per pound, 21½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 25 per cent ad valorem.

"21. On cloths, knit fabrics, flannels, felts, and all fabrics of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this section, valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, the duty shall be 25 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 30 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 60 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 60 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 40 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 80 cents and not more than $1 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 45 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than $1 and not more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 50 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 55 per cent ad valorem.

"22. On blankets and flannels for underwear composed wholly or in part of wool, valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, the duty shall be 23½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 20 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 50 cents per pound, 23½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 25 per cent ad valorem.

"Valued at more than 50 cents per pound, 23½ cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 30 per cent ad valorem.

"Provided, That on blankets over 3 yards in length the same duties shall be paid as on cloths.

"23. On ready-made clothing and articles of wearing apparel, knitted or woven, of every description, made up or manufactured wholly or in part and composed wholly or in part of wool, the rate of duty shall be as follows:

"If valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, the duty shall be 25 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than 40 cents and not more than 60 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 40 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than 60 cents and not more than 80 cents per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 45 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than 80 cents and not more than $1 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 50 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than $1 and not more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 55 per cent ad valorem.

"If valued at more than $1.50 per pound, 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 60 per cent ad valorem.

"24. On all manufactures of every description made wholly or in part of wool, not specially provided for in this section, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 50 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That if the component material of chief value in such manufactures is wood, paper, rubber, or any of the baser metals, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 35 per cent ad valorem, and if the component material of chief value in such manufactures is silk, fur, precious or semiprecious stones, or gold, silver, or platinum, the duty shall be 26 cents per pound on the wool contained therein, and in addition thereto 55 per cent ad valorem.

"25. On hand-made Aubusson, Axminster, Oriental, and similar carpets and rugs, made wholly or in part of wool, the rate of duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem; on all other carpets of every description, druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and portions of carpets or carpeting, made wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

"26. Whenever, in any schedule of this act, the word 'wool' is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other animal, whether manufactured by the woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process.

"27. The foregoing paragraphs, providing the rates of duty herein for manufactures of wool, shall take effect on the 1st day of January, 1913."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 2, 1912.

The Senate met at 2 o'clock p. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATORS FROM ARIZONA AND NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the admission of the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico as States in the Union having been accomplished in appropriate and constitutional form, and the representatives of such States duly and regularly chosen for membership in this body now being present, I take pleasure in presenting the credentials of the Senator elect from New Mexico, Mr. FALL, and announce his presence in the Chamber and his readiness to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The Secretary read the credentials of ALBERT BACON FALL, chosen by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico a Senator from that State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections having advised the Chair that that committee has passed upon the credentials, without objection the credentials will be referred directly to the Secretary of the Senate for the files of the Senate.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I desire to present the credentials of Mr. CATRON, Senator elect from New Mexico. I will state that the Senator elect is in the Chamber and ready to qualify.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Secretary read the credentials of THOMAS BENTON CATRON, chosen by the Legislature of the State of New Mexico a Senator from that State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the same course will be followed as in the case of Senator elect FALL.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I present the certificate of election of Hon. MARCUS A. SMITH, a Senator elect from the State of Arizona. The Senator elect is present in the Chamber and ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Secretary read the credentials of MARCUS A. SMITH, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Arizona a Senator from that State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the same course will be followed as in the case of Senator elect CATRON.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I present the credentials of HENRY F. ASHURST, a Senator elect from the State of Arizona, and ask that they be read and placed on file. The Senator elect is present in the Chamber and ready to take the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The Secretary read the credentials of HENRY F. ASHURST, chosen by the Legislature of the State of Arizona a Senator from that State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the same order will be made as in the case of Senator elect SMITH. The Senators being present in the Senate Chamber, they will present themselves at the desk to take the constitutional oath of office.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CATRON, Mr. FALL, and Mr. SMITH advanced to the Vice President's desk, escorted by Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. WARREN, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, and Mr. SHIVELY, respectively, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

TERMS OF NEW SENATORS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I send to the desk a resolution, for which I ask immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont presents a resolution, for which immediate consideration is requested. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 274), as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to ascertain the classes to which the Senators from the States of Arizona and New Mexico shall be assigned, in conformity with the resolution of the Senate of the 14th of May, 1789, and as the Constitution requires.

Resolved, That the Secretary put two papers of equal size in each of two separate ballot boxes, and in each instance one of such papers shall be numbered 1 and the other shall be a blank. The Senators from the State of Arizona shall proceed to draw the papers from one of such ballot boxes, and the Senators from the State of New Mexico shall proceed to draw the papers from the other ballot box, proceeding to draw in the alphabetical order of their names. The Senators who draw papers numbered 1 shall be assigned to the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1917. That the Secretary then put into one ballot box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered 2 and the other shall be numbered 3. The two Senators who in the first instance drew blank ballots shall, in the alphabetical order of their names, each draw one paper from said ballot box, and the Senator who shall draw the paper numbered 2 shall be assigned to the class of Senators whose term of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1913, and the Senator who shall draw the paper numbered 3 shall be assigned to the class of Senators whose term of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1915.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BAILEY. If I understand the resolution, it makes it possible that the two Senators from one of the States might both draw the six-year terms.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. WARREN, and others. Oh, no.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I did not understand it. It would obviously be improper that the Senators from the same State might each draw a six-year term.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution expressly provides against that very thing.

Mr. SHIVELY. That can not be done under the terms of the resolution.

Mr. BAILEY. I did not hear the resolution read fully.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas desire to have the resolution read again?

Mr. BAILEY. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the resolution is agreed to. The Secretary will proceed to execute the order. The Senators elect will present themselves at the Secretary's desk.

Mr. ASHURST, Mr. CATRON, Mr. FALL, and Mr. SMITH advanced to the Secretary's desk and drew papers from the boxes, pursuant to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair makes the following announcement: Mr. ASHURST, of Arizona, and Mr. CATRON, of New Mexico, having drawn papers numbered 1, are, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate, entitled to be classed with Senators whose term of service will expire March 3, 1917.

Mr. FALL, of New Mexico, having drawn a paper numbered 2, is entitled to be classed with those Senators whose term of service will expire March 3, 1913.

And Mr. SMITH, of Arizona, having drawn a paper numbered 3, is entitled to be classed with those Senators whose term of service will expire March 3, 1915.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS (H. DOC. NO. 667).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of useless papers, books, and so forth, on the files of the Department of Commerce and Labor which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historical interest. The communication and accompanying paper will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. The Chair appoints as the committee on the part of the Senate the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM]. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives of the appointment of the committee on the part of the Senate.

THE FAUNA OF BRITISH INDIA (S. DOC. NO. 478).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, under separate cover, for use in the library of the Senate, a copy of the work entitled "The Fauna of British India," which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying volume, referred to the Committee on the Library.

MOTOR AND OTHER VEHICLES IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, certain information relative to the number of carriages, motor vehicles, etc., owned and operated by the Government and used by the Navy Department, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. No. 483).

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, certain information relative to the number of carriages, motor vehicles, etc., owned and operated by the Government and used by the Post Office Department, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. No. 482).

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, certain information relative to the number of carriages, motor vehicles, etc., owned and operated by the Government and used by that institution, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. No. 481).

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Public Printer, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, certain information relative to the number of carriages, motor vehicles, etc., owned and operated by the Government and used by the Printing Office, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. No. 480).

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 22195) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) granting a service pension to certain defined veterans of the Civil War and the War with Mexico; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and has appointed Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. SULLOWAY managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the death of Hon. ROBERT LOVE TAYLOR, late a Senator from the State of Tennessee.

LETTER OF CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS—PENSION SYSTEM.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to make a correction in the RECORD. In the RECORD of March 22, page 3762, I notice in a speech purporting to have been delivered in the House of Representatives a long extract from a newspaper reflecting very severely on Charles Francis Adams, who is a distinguished citizen of my State. I think if that is to appear in the RECORD it is only fair in justice to Mr. Adams that his statement in regard to what is there said by the newspaper quoted should be also printed in the RECORD.

I will not trouble the Senate to read it, but ask that the letter may be printed as a part of what I have just said.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor is entered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

1701 MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., March 6, 1912.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR LODGE: In a recent publication over my own name, entitled "The Civil War Pension Lack of System," I took occasion to say that it might not unsafely be asserted that "if any Member of Congress—or indeed citizen in private life of sufficient prominence to excite remark at all—ventures on a criticism, much more an analysis, of the pension roll he may with tolerable certainty count on a response in no way dissimilar to that visited on Secretary MacVeagh" because of a recent utterance of his to the effect that the pension roll had lost its patriotic aspects and now become a political list. "Nor need he hope for either fairness of treatment or moderation of speech. He may, on the contrary, rest assured that the denunciation will be personal, abusive, and mendacious—that usually experienced from the sturdy and persistent mendicant to whom alms are denied."

This observation I found forcibly recalled in looking over the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Friday, February 23, and Saturday, February 24, in which I found pension matters under discussion, while I myself became, so to speak, somewhat of a storm center.

That either the people of the United States or their Representatives in either body of Congress take any particular interest in me now or in my record 50 years ago is hardly supposable, and discussion of the one or the other is, I apprehend, little better than so much waste of time. None the less under existing pension conditions it seems not improbable I may again come to the fore in congressional discussion, and in the early future, as recently, my record may be subjected to criticism more or less acrimonious.

I wish, therefore, as briefly as may be to put in your hands certain facts as respects that record for such use, should occasion arise, as may commend itself to your judgment.

In the allegations in the issue of the RECORD referred to (p. 2492) I find errors, serious, but not unusual, both of statement and of inference, and little else than error. For instance, on the strength of a speech made in the House of Representatives several years ago by Gen. ISAAC R. SHERWOOD, of Ohio, the present chairman of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions, it is stated that in June, 1863, about half of the squadron under my command in a Cavalry engagement at Aldie, Va., was "captured, but with no fatalities." This is a fair example of erroneous assertion under the circumstances to be expected. The squadron then under my command (96 men) sustained on that occasion some 30 casualties, 10 of which, if I recollect right, proved fatal. The graves of those men are now to be seen at Aldie.

It was next asserted that in the spring of 1864, when "bloody trouble" was threatening, I secured a leave of absence and went to Europe. This statement, in addition to being malicious, is simply silly. At the time named—the winter, not spring, of 1863–64, largely through my exertions and influence my entire command—three years' men whose term was drawing to a close—reenlisted for an additional three years. I at the time took and since have taken no little pride in having brought that result about. In consideration of so doing, under general orders then existing, a long furlough—30 or 60 days—was given the command as a unit. I took the men home and then availed myself of the leave we all enjoyed to pay a hurried visit to my family, then, as you know, in the public service in Europe. I had not then seen the members of it for nearly three years, nor myself had a day's leave of absence for over two years. Returning at the end of my leave, I was again in command long before the "bloody work" referred to began.

It is next alleged that I later commanded a regiment of colored cavalry. This is true; but that this organization was engaged in no battles, sustained no fatalities, etc., is quite as erroneous as the statement in respect to my command at Aldie. I was colonel of that regiment during the closing months only of the war, and I assumed its command greatly to my own prejudice and purely from a sense of obligation. I had previously been connected with the Army of the Potomac. On leaving that army to assume charge of the regiment referred to, I received from its commander, Gen. George G. Meade, a personal letter, specifically referring to various services I had rendered, and expressing his warm appreciation thereof. This letter is, I presume, now among my papers, but the 50-year accumulation is large and I fear I would have difficulty in putting my hands upon it. It was a letter, however, the tenor of which the recipient was not likely to forget. Shortly after Gen. A. A. Humphrey, then Chief of Staff of the Army of the Potomac, was assigned to the command of the Second Army Corps, in place of Gen. Hancock, relieved because of wounds and disability. The Union Army contained no better soldier nor one who sustained a higher reputation for fighting capacity than Gen. Humphrey. He was considered also by no means a poor judge of men. On assuming command of his corps he offered me the most prominent and acceptable position on its staff—that of corps inspector general—and I declined with great regret, because of the responsibility I thought I had assumed in connection with the colored regiment referred to. Perhaps it may not be out of place for me to say that I have since seen reason to question the wisdom of the choice I then made. Nevertheless, in making it I may at least claim I was actuated by a sense of obligation only.

Finally, I have seen it elsewhere asserted that it is a matter calling for explanation that my name appears so rarely in the records of the Civil War. Yet the explanation is obvious. Throughout that war I was a regimental officer. Never in high command, I did not serve for a single day upon the staff. It is altogether unusual for the names of regimental officers to figure largely in general orders. When they do, moreover, it is generally considered indicative of a certain capacity for self-advertisement. This I have not got, and so I shared the common fate. For instance, I imagine that if the record of Gen. SHERWOOD were looked up in the Civil War annals few mentions of his name would be found. I question whether more would be found of him than have been found of me. It has not been my custom either during the war or since to sound my own trumpet or to advertise my somewhat inconspicuous services, however at the time severe. I sincerely wish they had been more considerable.

On the other hand, of the 50 or more officers, with the names and families of very many of whom you are acquainted, who were commissioned in the regiment in which I began my service and continued it until the war was drawing to a close, very, very few—not more, I think, than 1 in 10—served longer than I, none served more assiduously, and not a single one attained a higher rank than was attained by me or received larger recognition for service done.

Finally, I have seen it asserted that the regiment I commanded toward the close of the war was conspicuous for its lack of discipline and that I was placed under arrest because thereof. Those who advanced this charge failed, however, and characteristically failed, to observe that the regiment in question had just entered the field; that many of those in it had come from a state of slavery in Richmond and Virginia, and that, naturally, returning there after the fall of Richmond, they had been somewhat difficult to control. The first notice I had of any irregularity was an order to consider myself under arrest, and I was released therefrom a few days later as the outcome of a most casual further inquiry. It has also been asserted that Col. Samuel R. Chamberlain, an excellent officer and a warm personal friend of mine, had been placed in command of the regiment to bring it into a proper state of discipline and order. This, again, is entirely incorrect. I was reinstated in my command when the order for my release from arrest was issued, and remained in command until invalided and sent home. Nor was another complaint as to defective discipline received. Col. Chamberlain then, and only then, succeeded me in command, and at a considerable interval. Prior to that he was not connected with the regiment in any way. Every statement made in this connection has been inaccurate, ignorant, and malicious.

I feel that some apology is due for thus referring to matters 50 years old and personal to myself. I make the reference, however, for an obvious reason. The purpose of my critics is to draw attention from a criticism of the present pension system as crude, corrupting, indiscriminate, most costly, and altogether scandalous—in a word, as a notoriously discreditable body of legislation—by an acrimonious attack on one who ventures to criticize it or call for a halt in it. In what I have said I have confined myself to criticism of the general pension system, or, rather, lack of system, and carefully avoided controversy over individual cases. I propose to continue so to do. Nevertheless, my own experience illustrates the fact that the present "general pension legislation staff" in Washington is well advised, thoroughly organized, and altogether unscrupulous. All this is, however, matter of common notoriety; but, further, I will add that if during the Civil War the advance on the Confederacy had been as well organized, as skillfully engineered, and at once as dashing and as sustained as the pension onslaught on the National Treasury has since been the conflict would have been shortened by at least one-half, or by two years. Nothing could have stood in its path.

Finally, as to myself. It yet remains to be seen what other mare's nests in connection with my military record may be unearthed as the result of further nosing, invention, and misrepresentation by the gallant and vigilant contingent of mud-slinging mendicants assigned to that task; so I will merely close by saying that what I did, be it less or more, in three and a half years of consecutive military service, terminating nearly 50 years ago, was then done from patriotic and disinterested motives. I did what I felt it incumbent on me to do, and I did it as well as I knew how, not without sacrifice. I wish I had been able to do it better and in a more conspicuous way, provided always that way was in no respect sensational. As a result, however, I am free to say, neither Congress nor the country now owes me anything, either in the way of recognition or in money. Throughout the war I received all that was promised me, and at its close I was honored with a brevet. On the score of any service rendered by me receipts in full were then exchanged. Those receipts I now consider binding, and the closest possible examination of the pension roll will neither now nor hereafter disclose my name upon it.

I remain, etc.,

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS,
Colonel and Brevet Brigadier General, 1865.

Mr. LIPPITT (for Mr. WETMORE) presented a resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
In General Assembly, January Session, A. D. 1912.

Resolution recommending to Congress the passage of H. R. 21420, providing for the establishment of a naval base on Narragansett Bay, in the State of Rhode Island, now pending before Congress.

Whereas there has been introduced in the House of Representatives of the United States by Representative GEORGE F. O'SHAUNESSY House bill 21420, providing for the establishment of a naval base on Narragansett Bay, in the State of Rhode Island; and

Whereas both efficiency and economy requires the abolition of the naval establishments along the North Atlantic coast and the construction of a naval base, including a navy yard and dry docks near Newport, on Narragansett Bay, in the State of Rhode Island: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island heartily approves the provisions of said bill, and respectfully requests its Senators and Representatives in Congress to urge the passage of said bill, and the secretary of state is hereby instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Rhode Island.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, March 29, 1912.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution approved by his excellency the governor on the 26th day of March, A. D. 1912.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State aforesaid the date first above written.

[SEAL.] J. FRED PARKER,
Secretary of State.

Mr. ROOT. I present a petition from the New York Produce Exchange, praying for the enactment of legislation to authorize the President, in certain cases, to increase the duties on products of certain countries or their dependencies imported into the United States. I ask that the petition be read and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the petition was read and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Petition to the United States Senate:

Whereas negotiations are now in progress in Ottawa, in the Dominion of Canada, between the representatives of the Dominion of Canada and the representatives of various islands composing part of what is commonly known as the British West Indies, for the purpose of concluding certain trade agreements between the Governments who are parties to said negotiations, whereby said British West Indies shall accord a preferential rate of duty on flour imported by them from the Dominion of Canada, as a result of which flour imported from the United States into the British West Indies will be discriminated against in favor of such Canadian flour; and

Whereas the millers and flour exporters of the United States have for many years engaged in the business of manufacturing and exporting to the British West Indies large quantities of flour, which exports from the United States during the past year attained an aggregate value of upwards of $2,000,000, and the millers of the United States have invested large amounts of capital in the construction and equipment of flour mills and other accommodations for the manufacture of such export flour, and have for many years and do now employ many hundreds of employees in the conduct of the business of manufacturing and exporting such flour; and

Whereas the said contemplated trade agreements between Canada and the British West Indies, by discriminating against the importation of flour into the West Indies from the United States in favor of the importation of Canadian flour, would render it impossible for the manufacturers and exporters of flour in the United States successfully to compete in the British West Indies with the manufacturers and exporters of flour in the Dominion of Canada, and would thereby injure the said investments of American capital and throw out of employment many employees of the flour mills and flour exporters of the United States; and

Whereas a bill commonly known as the sugar bill (H. R. 21213) has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the United States Senate; and

Whereas said bill, as the same was passed by the House of Representatives, will greatly inure to the benefit of the British West Indies by permitting the free introduction of sugar in various forms from the British West Indies into the United States; and

Whereas the New York Produce Exchange has appointed a committee composed of Messrs. George A. Zabriskie, William Harris Douglass, Walter L. Lascelles, Edward F. Siney, and P. H. Holt for the purpose of representing the interests of the New York Produce Exchange in the premises and for the purpose of taking such action as it may seem fit to preserve the interests of those individuals, firms, and corporations of the United States which are engaged in the manufacture and exportation of flour to the British West Indies: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the undersigned, as such committee of the New York Produce Exchange, That the Senate of the United States be, and it hereby is, respectfully petitioned and urged to amend the said sugar bill, so that when the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any of the British West Indies or other Government or country imposes charges or exactions or grants preferential duties which discriminate or result in discrimination against the export and sale in such country of like products from the United States, he shall issue a proclamation to that effect, and thereafter the same duties shall be levied by the United States upon the articles mentioned in said sugar bill as are now provided by the present tariff laws.

GEO. A. ZABRISKIE,
WM. HARRIS DOUGLASS,
WALTER L. LASCELLES,
EDWARD F. SINEY,
As a Committee of the New York Produce Exchange.

UNITED STATES V. THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3607) to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to certain organizations or persons in the suit of the United States against The American Tobacco Co. and others, to submit an adverse report (No. 545) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, action on the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire that the bill just reported may go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be placed on the calendar, together with the adverse report.

Mr. CUMMINS. In connection with the majority report, I desire to submit the views of certain members of the Judiciary Committee in opposition to that report, and ask that both the report and the views of the minority may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report (Rept. No. 545 and part 2) is as follows:

UNITED STATES V. THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following adverse report, to accompany S. 3607.

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred Senate bill 3607, entitled "A bill to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to certain organizations or persons in the suit of the United States against American Tobacco Co. and others," after full consideration thereof report the same adversely with a recommendation that it be not passed.

This bill relates to a suit brought by the United States through the district attorney, acting under the direction of the Attorney General, against the American Tobacco Co. and others, in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, to prevent and restrain violations of the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, approved July 2, 1890.

Upon final hearing judgment was rendered for the complainant, and upon appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States this judgment was reversed May 29, 1911. The case was remanded to the circuit court to proceed in conformity with the opinion and mandate of the Supreme Court. The decision of the Supreme Court held the American Tobacco Co. to be an illegal combination in violation of the statute, and declared:

"Second. That the court below, in order to give effective force to our decree in this regard, be directed to hear the parties by evidence or otherwise, as it may be deemed proper, for the purpose of ascertaining and determining upon some plan or method of dissolving the combination and of re-creating, out of the elements now composing it, a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law.

"Third. That for the accomplishment of these purposes, taking into view the difficulty of the situation, a period of six months is allowed from the receipt of our mandate, with leave, however, in the event, in the judgment of the court below, the necessities of the situation require, to extend such period to a further time not to exceed 60 days.

"Fourth. That in the event, before the expiration of the period thus fixed, a condition of disintegration in harmony with the law is not brought about, either as the consequence of the action of the court in determining an issue on the subject or in accepting a plan agreed upon, it shall be the duty of the court, either by way of an injunction restraining the movement of the products of the combination in the channels of interstate or foreign commerce or by the appointment of a receiver, to give effect to the requirements of the statute.

"Pending the bringing about of the result just stated, each and all of the defendants, individuals as well as corporations, should be restrained from doing any act which might further extend or enlarge the power of the combination, by any means or device whatsoever. In view of the considerations we have stated we leave the matter to the court below to work out a compliance with the law without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property. (221 U. S., 187–189.)"

On the 16th of November, 1911, the circuit court, after hearing the parties as directed by the Supreme Court, rendered a final judgment decreeing that a plan of disintegration of the defendant company which had been presented, discussed, and modified, was a plan which, taken with the injunctive provisions included in the decree, would dissolve the illegal combination and would re-create out of the elements composing it a new condition honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law and without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property. The decree then proceeded with a long series of injunctions adapted to the prevention of monopoly or restraint of trade under the new conditions which would be created by the approved plan. This decree was concurred in by all four judges of the circuit court. A copy is appended hereto. Upon the hearing under the mandate of the Supreme Court certain associations interested in the tobacco business and the attorney generals of certain States applied for leave to intervene in the suit. Their application was denied by the circuit court, but leave to be heard without being parties to the suit was granted and availed of. The applicants for leave to intervene then applied to the Supreme Court of the United States for a mandamus to require the circuit court to permit their intervention, and this application was denied by the Supreme Court.

The Attorney General, considering that the decree of the circuit court was in accordance with the mandate and was effective to accomplish the object of dissolving the corporation and creating a new condition which would be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law, determined not to appeal, and no appeal was taken from the decree. The time to appeal expired January 15, 1912.

The pending bill proposes to give to the same parties who applied to the courts to be allowed to intervene—

"The right to intervene and appeal from the said decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York approving the said plan of reorganization or re-creation to the Supreme Court of the United States, with the same force and effect as though they, or those of them who seek to exercise the right hereby given, had been parties to said suit."

In the opinion of your committee this is not within the power of Congress.

1. So far as any rights which existed at the time of the final decree of November 16, 1911, or which have existed at any time heretofore are concerned, it is not competent for Congress to reverse the action of the courts and direct them to enter an order allowing an intervention which they had already denied.

2. So far as the assertion of any such existing rights is concerned, such a direction from Congress would be an attempt also to reverse previous decisions of the Supreme Court holding that State attorneys general and private persons could not be parties to such a suit under the antitrust act. (Minnesota v. Northern Securities Co., 194 U. S., 48, 70–72.) The applicants for intervention thus not only were not parties to the suit, but they could not lawfully be parties. The judgment was not a judgment for or against them, it did not bind them or affect any rights of theirs, except of course as every citizen of the United States has a political interest as a citizen represented by the Government of his country in whatever litigation that Government may engage in.

The sole legal rights of individuals under the antitrust act are contained in the seventh section of the act, which provides:

"Any person who shall be injured in his business or property by any other person or corporation by reason of anything forbidden or declared to be unlawful by this act, may sue therefor in any circuit court of the United States in the district in which the defendant resides or is found, without respect to the amount in controversy, and shall recover threefold the damages by him sustained and the costs of suit, including a reasonable attorney's fee."

This individual right under the antitrust act was not in any way affected by the judgment of the circuit court.

3. The only way in which the proposed bill could be effective would then be by conferring a new right, a right which did not exist before. What is the right which the bill proposes to confer upon these applicants? It is the right to invoke the action of the Supreme Court of the United States to set aside, change, modify, add to, or take away from a judgment between third parties, a judgment to which the applicants were not parties, rendered in a suit to which they were not and could not have been parties, which did not bind them or determine any legal right of theirs. This would be the creation of a new right of action which did not exist before.

4. The proceeding upon this right would present a different case or controversy from that which was before the circuit court. Chief Justice Marshall said, in the case of Osborne v. Bank of the United States (9 Wheat., 819), speaking of the judicial power of the United States:

"That power is capable of acting only when the subject is submitted to it by a party who asserts his rights in the form prescribed by law. It then becomes a case, and the Constitution declares that the judicial power shall extend to all cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States."

And in Muskrat v. United States (219 U. S., 346), the Supreme Court said:

"Judicial power, as we have seen, is the right to determine actual controversy arising between adverse litigants duly instituted in courts of proper jurisdiction."

The case or controversy which would be presented to the Supreme Court by the applicants under the authority of this bill would be a case or controversy in which they assert their rights against the parties to the former suit or some of the parties to the former suit, and assert rights which had no legal existence at the time the former suit was decided.

5. Under the bill this assertion of right by the applicants would be addressed in the first instance to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is the action of that court which is to be invoked. The proceeding would not be in any sense an appeal from the judgment, no matter what the bill may call it. An appeal is an application for a review of a judgment by some party to the judgment, some one whose legal rights were in controversy or are determined by the judgment. An application by a stranger to a judgment to have it set aside in whole or in part is not an appeal. It is an independent proceeding.

It follows that the proceeding which this bill proposes to authorize, and under which these applicants would invoke the action of the Supreme Court to set aside the judgment to which they were strangers, would clearly call for the exercise not of appellate, but of original jurisdiction by the Supreme Court.

6. It is well settled that Congress can not confer original jurisdiction upon the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court of the United States says, in Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. v. Interstate Commerce Commission (215 U. S., 216, 224):

"It has long been the established doctrine, and we believe now assented to by all who have examined the subject, that the original jurisdiction of this court is confined to the cases specified in the Constitution, and that Congress can not enlarge it."

7. As the decree of the circuit court of November 16, 1911, fixed February 28, 1912, as the limit of time within which the defendants were required to comply with the plan of disintegration, it appears that the defendants in the suit had no option but to proceed to execute the decree by disposing of what seems to have been the greater part of the property of the combination. On the 22d of January the Attorney General, by the invitation of your committee, appeared before the committee and furnished a statement of what had been done up to that time. A copy of this statement is annexed to this report. It is to be presumed that before the time expired the process of divesting the defendant corporations of their property in accordance with the decree was completed. There can be no doubt that this disposition of the property was effective. Even if there had been no decree the defendants in the suit were at liberty to dispose of their property at any time, and a conveyance would have given good title. The grantees would have been subject to the provisions of the antitrust law, but the question whether they were complying with those provisions could have been raised only in a suit to which they were parties. The same consequence ensues upon the conveyance of property by the defandants under the decree. No proceedings in the case of the United States against the American Tobacco Co. et al. could reach or affect the new corporation or new parties in interest who have come into possession of the property of the old American Tobacco Co. except as they can be reached by new proceedings under the antitrust law or by proceedings under the very broad and drastic injunctive provisions of the existing decree, based upon the validity of the decree.

It would seem, therefore, that even if Congress had power to enact such a law as is proposed its action would be ineffective as applied to an executed decree.

In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York. The United States of America, plaintiff, v. The American Tobacco Co. and others, defendants.

DECREE.

Appeals having been taken by the plaintiff and certain defendants in this cause from the decree entered by this court on the 15th day of December, 1908, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed said decree and issued its mandate filed herein on the 30th day of June, 1911, by which the said cause was remanded to this court with directions to enter a decree in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to take such further steps as might be necessary to fully carry out said directions. By the said opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States this court was directed to "hear the parties by evidence or otherwise as it may deem proper, for the purpose of ascertaining and determining upon some plan or method of dissolving the combination, and of re-creating out of the elements now composing it a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with, and not repugnant to, the law, but without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property." And this cause having come on to be finally heard pursuant to the order or decree of this court, made and entered herein on August 3, 1911, on the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States as aforesaid, the American Tobacco Co. and the other defendants herein (except United Cigar Stores Co., the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.), and R. P. Richardson, jr., & Co. (Inc.) filed in this court on October 16, 1911, a petition proposing and embodying a plan or method of dissolving the combination, and of re-creating out of the elements now composing it a new condition in harmony with and not repugnant to the law. Due notice was given to the parties hereto that the hearing on the said petition would be had on October 30, 1911, in room 124 of the Federal Building, in New York City; and thereafter, to wit, on the 19th day of October, 1911, the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.) filed a petition.

At the time and place aforesaid the plaintiff filed answers to the said petitions embodying proposed modifications of and additions to the plan proposed in said petition of the American Tobacco Co. and other defendants. The parties having been heard by counsel and certain of the modifications of said plan included in the answer of the plaintiff not being opposed by the proponents of said plan and others of said modifications included in said answer having been disposed of by this court in its opinions delivered after said hearing;

Now, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that all the defendants—except Welford C. Reed, who died before the final hearing—heretofore became parties to and engaged in the combination assailed in the pleadings, which "in and of itself, as well as each and all of the elements composing it, whether corporate or individual, whether considered collectively or separately," is "in restraint of trade and an attempt to monopolize, and a monopolization within the first and second sections of the antitrust act," and which should be dissolved and a new condition brought about in harmony with and not repugnant to the law, either as a consequence of the action of this court in determining an issue or in accepting a plan agreed upon.

And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plan as modified by the consent of the parties or through the action of this court as aforesaid is as follows, to wit:

A.

DISSOLUTION OF AMSTERDAM SUPPLY CO.

Amsterdam Supply Co. is a company engaged in the business of purchasing for a commission or brokerage supplies, other than leaf tobacco, its principal customers being defendant corporations herein. It has $235,000 at par of stock, all held in varying amounts by certain corporation defendants, one or the other of your petitioners, and a surplus of $127,058.74.

It is proposed that Amsterdam Supply Co. be dissolved, converting its assets into cash and distributing them to its stockholders.

B.

ABROGATION OF FOREIGN RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

Under the contracts of September 27, 1902, the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.) and certain of its directors agreed not to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling tobacco in the United States; the American Tobacco Co. and American Cigar Co. and certain of their directors agreed not to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling tobacco in Great Britain and Ireland; and the American Tobacco Co., American Cigar Co., and the Imperial Tobacco Co. agreed not to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling tobacco in countries other than Great Britain and Ireland and the United States. Under the provisions of these contracts British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) was organized and took over the export businesses of the American Tobacco Co. and the Imperial Tobacco Co., with factories, materials, and supplies.

It is proposed that the covenants herein just described, as well as all covenants restricting the right of any company or individual in the combination to buy, manufacture, or sell tobacco or its products be rescinded by the affirmative action of the respective parties thereto who are parties to this suit, except such of said covenants, whether or not contained in the contracts of September 27, 1902, as (a) relate wholly to business in foreign countries and are covenants the benefit whereof has been assigned or transferred to other parties; or (b) are covenants exclusively between foreign corporations and relating wholly to business in or between foreign countries; and that the said contracts of September 27, 1902, be altogether terminated so far as they impose any obligations upon any of the parties thereto to furnish or to refrain from furnishing manufactured tobaccos to any party, each company to treat as its own, but only to the extent provided for in said contracts, all brands and trade-marks which by said contracts it was given the right to manufacture and sell, the said rights having been perpetual and constituting in effect a conveyance of the brands and trade-marks used for the countries in which they were so used by each of said companies as aforesaid.

C.

ABROGATION OF DOMESTIC RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

It is proposed that covenants given by vendor corporations, partnerships, or individuals, or by stockholders of vendor corporations, to vendee corporations defendants herein, not to engage in the tobacco business or any other business in any way embraced in the combination be terminated so that all such covenantors shall be at liberty to engage in the business of buying, manufacturing, and dealing in tobacco and its products just as if such covenants had not been made.

D.

DISINTEGRATION OF ACCESSORY COMPANIES.

(1) The Conley Foil Co.—The Conley Foil Co. has a capital stock of $825,000 at par, all of one class, of which the American Tobacco Co. owns $495,000 at par, the balance being held by persons not defendants nor connected with defendants. It is engaged in the business of manufacturing tin foil, a product used largely by tobacco manufacturers, but having other uses as well. The Conley Foil Co. has a plant in New York City, and it owns all the stock and bonds of the Johnston Tin

Foil & Metal Co., which has a plant in St. Louis. The value of the output for the year 1910 of the Conley Foil Co. was $1,780,526.85, with a net profit of $273,299.82, and the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. had an output for the year 1910 of the value of $676,520.05 and net profits of $66,255.16. On December 31, 1910, the Conley Foil Co. had tangible assets (excluding its securities of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co.) of $1,215,321, and the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. had assets of the value of $379,802.11. The Conley Foil Co. has a surplus exceeding the value of the securities of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co.

It is proposed that the Conley Foil Co. cancel the bonds of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. held by it—to wit, $100,000 par value—and distribute to its stockholders its holdings of stock of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co., to wit, 3,000 shares, all of one class.

The American Tobacco Co., being a stockholder of the Conley Foil Co., will participate in this distribution and will, in turn, distribute its dividend, as well as its stock in the Conley Foil Co., to its common-stock holders as hereinafter set forth.

(2) MacAndrews & Forbes Co.—MacAndrews & Forbes Co. is a company having a common capital stock of $3,000,000 at par, of which the American Tobacco Co. owns $2,112,900 at par, the balance being held by persons not defendants nor connected with defendants (except less than 3½ per cent of the common stock held by R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.), and $3,758,300 at par of 6 per cent nonvoting preferred stock, of which the American Tobacco Co. holds $750,000 at par, the balance being held by persons not defendants nor connected with defendants. It is engaged in the production of licorice paste, with two plants, one at Camden, N. J., and the other at Baltimore, Md. It had tangible assets December 31, 1910, of the value of $5,683,824.89 (including $2,118,448.36 licorice root, with plants for its collection in foreign countries), and its sales for the year 1910 were of the value of $4,427,023.44. MacAndrews & Forbes Co. succeeded to the business of MacAndrews & Forbes, a partnership, who were pioneers in this country in the production of licorice paste, and who had for many years before any acquisitions of other business, and before they had any connection with the other defendants herein, more than 50 per cent of all the licorice-paste business of the United States.

It is proposed that a new corporation be organized, called the J. S. Young Co., and that it shall acquire the Baltimore plant of MacAndrews & Forbes Co., with the assets used therein and in connection therewith, of a total value of $1,000,000, and the brands of licorice paste manufactured in said Baltimore plant; that it issue in payment therefor, with the good will connected therewith, $1,000,000 at par of 7 per cent preferred nonvoting stock, and $1,000,000 at par of common stock; that MacAndrews & Forbes Co. distribute the common stock of the J. S. Young Co. as a dividend to its common-stock holders, charging the amount thereof to its surplus account; that MacAndrews & Forbes Co. offer to its preferred-stock holders proportionately to exchange the 7 per cent preferred stock of the J. S. Young Co. at par for their preferred stock of MacAndrews & Forbes Co.; that so far as the preferred stock of MacAndrews & Forbes Co. is thus exchanged it be retired; that so far as this preferred stock of the J. S. Young Co. is not forthwith thus exchanged, MacAndrews & Forbes Co. be enjoined from using it to exercise, or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise, influence or control over the J. S. Young Co.; and with the further provision that on or before January 1, 1915, the whole of this preferred stock of the J. S. Young Co. not theretofore taken out of the treasury of MacAndrews & Forbes Co. by exchange as aforesaid be disposed of by MacAndrews & Forbes Co.

This would give to MacAndrews & Forbes Co. a licorice business, including Spanish licorice and powdered goods, of the net selling value, based upon the year 1910, of $2,514,184.64, of which $2,214,127.51 arise from sales of one brand, to wit, the old "Ship" brand. The J. S. Young Co., upon the basis of the business for the year 1910, would have an output of the net selling value of $1,201,109.86.

The American Tobacco Co., being a holder of the common stock of MacAndrews & Forbes Co., will participate in the distribution above provided, and will in turn distribute its dividend, as well as its stock in MacAndrews & Forbes Co., to its common stockholders as hereinafter set forth.

(3) American Snuff Co.—American Snuff Co. is a manufacturer of snuff. It holds all of the stock of De Voe Snuff Co., to wit, $50,000 at par, and one-half, to wit, $26,000 at par, of the stock of National Snuff Co. It owns no other interest in any company manufacturing or selling snuff.

It is proposed that there be organized two new snuff companies, one to be called the George W. Helme Co. and the other Weyman-Bruton Co., and that American Snuff Co. convey to these two companies, respectively, factories, with the brands manufactured in them, as follows: To the George W. Helme Co. the factories at Helmetta, N. J., and Yorklyn, Del., except factory No. 5; to Weyman-Bruton Co. the factories at Chicago and Nashville, also all the stock of De Voe Snuff Co., and the one-half of the stock of National Snuff Co. held by American Snuff Co. Based upon the business for the year 1910 and the assets at the end of the year, with proper provision for leaf, materials, cash, and book accounts for the two vendee companies, this would leave the three companies equipped as follows:

Manufacturing tangible assets:
American Snuff Co	[1] $5,075,969.72
George W. Helme Co	4,909,000.40
Weyman-Bruton Co	3,691,588.20
Sales value during 1910:
American Snuff Co	5,520,422.15
George W. Helme Co	4,494,556.66
Weyman-Bruton Co	4,297,486.71
Net income:
American Snuff Co	[1] 1,591,280.49
George W. Helme Co	1,259,280.89
Weyman-Bruton Co	1,293,759.39

Each of these vendee corporations will pay for the property and business conveyed to it by the issue of $4,000,000 at par of 7 per cent voting preferred stock and $4,000,000 at par of common stock. American Snuff Co. will thus receive the $16,000,000 at par of these stocks into its treasury and will distribute to its common stockholders, as a dividend, the common stock, aggregating $8,000,000, to be charged to its surplus account. American Snuff Co. will offer to its preferred stockholders proportionately to exchange these 7 per cent preferred stocks of the George W. Helme Co. and the Weyman-Bruton Co. for their preferred stock of American Snuff Co. at par. So much of the preferred stock of American Snuff Co. as is thus exchanged will be retired. As to so much of the preferred stocks of the George W. Helme Co. and the Weyman-Bruton Co. as is not forthwith thus exchanged, American Snuff Co. to be enjoined from voting it or using it to exercise or otherwise exercising, or attempting to exercise, influence or control over the George W. Helme Co. or the Weyman-Bruton Co.; and on or before January 1, 1915, all of these preferred stocks of the George W. Heime Co. and the Weyman-Bruton Co. not theretofore taken out of the treasury of American Snuff Co. by exchange as aforesaid to be disposed of by American Snuff Co.

The American Tobacco Co., being a holder of the common stock of American Snuff Co., will participate in the distribution above provided and will, in turn, distribute its dividend, as well as its stock in American Snuff Co., including that to be acquired from P. Lorillard Co., to its common stockholders, as hereinafter set forth.

(4) American Stogie Co.—American Stogie Co. is a corporation whose only asset is all of the issued stock of Union-American Cigar Co., which latter company has cigar factories located at Pittsburgh, Allegheny, Lancaster, and Newark. Its total production, based upon business for the year 1910, is only 1.58 per cent of the entire production of cigars in the United States in volume, and, as these petitioners believe, about the same percentage in value. American Stogie Co. has $976,000 at par of 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock, of which American Cigar Co. owns $40,000 at par, and none of the other defendants own any; it has $10,879,000 at par of common stock, of which American Cigar Co. owns $7,303,775 at par, and none of the other defendants own any. There are accumulated and unpaid dividends on the preferred stock to the amount of $399,000, as of December 31, 1910.

It is proposed that American Stogie Co. dissolve, with leave granted to the trustees in dissolution to either convert the assets into cash and distribute them among the stockholders according to their rights or to effect such reorganization as they may be able to effect: Provided, That in either event there shall be a separation into at least two different ownerships of the factories and businesses now owned and operated by Union-American Cigar Co. If the dissolution is followed by a conversion of the assets of American Stogie Co. into cash, American Cigar Co. will take such cash as it may receive into its treasury; if it receives upon such dissolution securites of cigar manufacturing concerns, it will distribute such as a dividend to its common stockholders, to be charged to its surplus, as hereinafter set forth.

(5) American Cigar Co.—American Cigar Co. is a manufacturer of cigars. It has various factories of its own, and it owns all or a part of the stock of several companies engaged in the manufacture of cigars, all of which companies have been organized by it and which have received from it conveyances of part of its business, operating in this way as separate corporations for trade purposes. Among these companies is Federal Cigar Co.

American Cigar Co. also owns a part of the stock of Habana Tobacco Co., which controls factories manufacturing cigars in Habana; and a part of the stock of Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of cigars and cigarettes in Porto Rico; and half of the stock of Porto Rican Leaf Tobacco Co., engaged in growing tobacco in Porto Rico. American Cigar Co. itself uses large quantities of Porto Rican grown leaf. Neither American Cigar Co. nor any of the companies in which it is interested, except Habana Tobacco Co. and Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., is engaged in the manufacture of cigars outside of the United States.

American Cigar Co., including with its production the production of companies of which it owns in whole or in part the stock, has, in volume, based on the business for the year 1910, 13.36 per cent of the cigar business of the United States, and in value, as your petitioners believe, substantially the same percentage. Habana Tobacco Co. has, directly or indirectly, control of 24.06 per cent of the total production of cigars in Cuba; 46 per cent of the total exportation of cigars from Cuba to all countries of the world, including the United States; and 38.15 per cent of the total exportation of cigars from Cuba to the United States.

It is proposed that American Cigar Co. dispose of properties belonging to it and thus disintegrate its business, as follows:

(a) That it sell to the American Tobacco Co. for cash its stock, being all thereof of Federal Cigar Co., at a fair price, to wit, $3,965,616.05.

(b) That it sell to the American Tobacco Co., for cash, the stock it owns of Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., to wit, $657,600 at par, at a fair price, to wit, $350 per share, or $2,301,600.

(c) That American Cigar Co. dispose of any interest in American Stogie Co. by receiving cash proceeds of its stock in dissolution thereof, if American Stogie Co. upon dissolution converts its assets into cash; or by distributing as a dividend to its common-stock holders out of its surplus the securities which it receives upon the dissolution of American Stogie Co., if it receives such.

All stocks thus to be acquired by the American Tobacco Co. from American Cigar Co. are to be disposed of by the American Tobacco Co. as hereinafter set out.

E.

DISTRIBUTION BY THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. OF STOCKS OWNED OR TO BE ACQUIRED BY IT.

(1) Immediate distribution of stocks.—The American Tobacco Co. will buy from P. Lorillard Co., for cash at par, the 11,247 shares of the preferred stock of American Snuff Co. held by P. Lorillard Co., and will receive, as the sole common stockholder of P. Lorillard Co., and by way of dividends 34,594 shares of the common stock of American Snuff Co. held by P. Lorillard Co.

The American Tobacco Co. will distribute among its common stockholders by way of dividends, and to be charged to its surplus, all of its securities of the following-described classes, whether now owned by it or bought by it from American Cigar Co., as hereinbefore set forth, or bought by it from P. Lorillard Co., as just hereinabefore set forth, or received by it by way of dividends from any of the accessory companies defendant, as hereinbefore set forth, to wit:

American Snuff Co. common stock.
American Snuff Co. preferred stock.

[1] American Snuff Co. holds securities not connected with the snuff business, to wit, stock and bonds of the American Tobacco Co., preferred stock of American Cigar Co., aggregating in book value $2,530,216.69, upon which American Snuff Co. received in interest and dividends during the year 1910 $176,680. It is proposed that American Snuff Co. sell or otherwise dispose of these securities within three years, and that in the meantime they be held under an injunction, as is provided in this paragraph with respect to securities of the George W. Helme Co. and Weyman-Bruton Co., to be temporarily held by it. It also owns, all, to wit, $100,000 at par, of the stock of Garrett Real Estate Co., which will be dissolved and liquidated.

George W. Helme Co. common stock.
Weyman-Bruton Co. common stock.
MacAndrews & Forbes Co. common stock.
J. S. Young Co. common stock.
The Conley Foil Co. stock.
The Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. stock.
R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. stock.
Corporation of United Cigar Stores stock.
British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) ordinary shares.
Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co. stock.
American Stogie Co. stock (or what is received by way of dividends from American Cigar Co. upon dissolution of American Stogie Co.).

Including the amount to be paid to American Cigar Co. and P. Lorillard Co. for such of these securities as are to be acquired by the American Tobacco Co. from them, respectively, and excluding those to be acquired by way of dividends, and which, therefore, do not affect the surplus of the American Tobacco Co., never having been set upon its books, these securities had a book value as of December 31, 1910, of $35,011,865.03. The earning capacity of all the above securities thus to be distributed, based upon the results of the year 1910, is $9,860,410.76, though not all thereof was distributed as dividends.

(2) Deferred disposition of stocks.—The American Tobacco Co. will sell or otherwise dispose of, or distribute by way of dividends to its common stockholders out of its surplus at the time existing, before January 1, 1915, all of its holdings of the following securities:

British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.), nonvoting preference shares.
The Imperial Tobacco Co., of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.), ordinary shares.
Corporation of United Cigars Stores bonds.
MacAndrews & Forbes Co. nonvoting preferred stock.

During the time these securities are left in the treasury of the American Tobacco Co., the American Tobacco Co. to be enjoined from voting any thereof that under the terms thereof might be voted, or using any thereof to exercise, or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise, influence, or control over the said companies which issued the said securities, respectively, and from gaining possesion of any of the said companies by buying in at a foreclosure had under any of the securities for any default with respect thereto or otherwise.

F.

SALE BY THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. OF MANUFACTURING ASSETS AND BUSINESS TO COMPANIES TO BE FORMED.

(1) There will be organized a new corporation called Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., and a new corporation called P. Lorillard Co., and the American Tobacco Co. will sell, assign, and convey to these two companies factories, plants, brands, and businesses, and capital stocks of tobacco-manufacturing corporations, as follows:

To Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.:

Liggett & Myers branch of the American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of plug tobacco at St. Louis, with the brands connected therewith.

Spaulding & Merrick, a company of which the American Tobacco Co. owns and has always owned all the stock, engaged in Chicago in the manufacture of fine-cut tobacco and smoking tobacco.

Allen & Ginter branch of the American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes at Richmond, Va., and the brands connected therewith. (This does not include the brand "Sweet Caporal," made partly there and partly at New York.)

Chicago branch of the American Tobacco Co., a factory at Chicago engaged in the manufacture of smoking tobacco, with the brands connected therewith.

Catlin branch of the American Tobacco Co., a factory at St. Louis engaged in the manufacture of smoking tobacco, with the brands connected therewith.

Nall & Williams Tobacco Co., a company of which the American Tobacco Co. owns all the stock, engaged in the manufacture of plug and smoking tobacco at Louisville, Ky.

The John Bollman Co., a company engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes at San Francisco. Of this corporation the American Tobacco Co. owns 90 per cent of the stock, which it is proposed to turn over to the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

Pinkerton Tobacco Co., a corporation engaged in the manufacture of scrap tobacco (a kind of smoking tobacco) at Toledo, Ohio. Of this corporation the American Tobacco Co. owns 77½ per cent of the stock, which it is proposed to turn over to the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

W. R. Irby branch of the American Tobacco Co. at New Orleans, engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes and smoking tobacco, the principal brands being "Home Run" and "King Bee."

The Duke-Durham branch of the American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes and smoking tobacco at Durham, N. C.; principal cigarette brands, "Piedmont" and "American Beauty"; principal smoking tobacco brand, "Duke's Mixture."

Two little cigar factories, located the one at Philadelphia and the other at Baltimore, branches of the American Tobacco Co.; principal brand, "Recruits."

To P. Lorillard Co.:

All the rights of the American Tobacco Co. in the present P. Lorillard Co., to wit: All the common stock and $1,596,100 at par out of a total issue of $2,000,000 of 8 per cent preferred stock. It is contemplated that as a part of these reorganizations the Lorillard Co., as at present constituted, be wound up and the new company be organized, taking over assets of the P. Lorillard Co.

S. Anargyros, a company engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes, in which the American Tobacco Co. owns all the stock and of which it has always owned all the stock.

Luhrman & Wilbern Tobacco Co., a company engaged in the manufacture of scrap tobacco (a kind of smoking tobacco), of which the American Tobacco Co. owns, and has for many years owned, all the stock.

Philadelphia branch B at Philadelphia, Wilmington branch B at Wilmington, Penn Street branch at Brooklyn, Danville branch B at Danville, and Ellis branch B at Baltimore, branches of the American Tobacco Co. manufacturing little cigars, the principal brand being "Beteween the Acts."

Federal Cigar Co., a company all of whose stock is and has always been owned by American Cigar Co., but which, as hereinbefore provided, is to be purchased for cash by the American Tobacco Co.

each of these conveyances to include proper and adequate storage houses, leaf tobacco and other materials and supplies, provision for book accounts, including in each case a ratable proportion of the cash held by the American Tobacco Co. on December 31, 1910, so that each of the new corporations will be fully equipped for the conduct of the business of manufacturing and dealing in tobacco.

(2) Resources and capitalization of companies and provisions for exchanging and retiring securities of American Tobacco Co.—The American Tobacco Co. has securities issued and outstanding as follows:

6 per cent bonds	$52,882,650
4 per cent bonds (including outstanding 4 per cent bonds of Consolidated Tobacco Co.)	51,354,100
6 per cent preferred stock	78,689,100
Common stock	40,242,000

The American Tobacco Co., in October, 1904, immediately after the merger, had an outstanding issue of its own 4 per cent bonds and the Consolidated Tobacco Co. 4 per cent bonds which it assumed, amounting to $78,689,100, but it has purchased on the market and retired $27,335,000 at par of these 4 per cent bonds, charging the amount thus expended to surplus.

The 6 per cent bonds and 4 per cent bonds aforesaid are what are ordinarily known as debenture bonds, and are issued under a trust indenture which imposes a general charge on the property, income, and earnings of the company in favor, first, of the 6 per cent bonds, and, second, of the 4 per cent bonds. The American Tobacco Co., after the reduction of the surplus through the acquisition by it of 4 per cent bonds as aforesaid, had on December 31, 1910, a surplus of $61,119,991.63, which will be increased by the surplus earnings of the current year. The distribution of securities herein provided for to be forthwith made would diminish the said surplus by $35,011,865.03, the book value of securities to be so distributed. This book value is less than actual value, but in view of the fact that none of the assets of the American Tobacco Co. are overvalued, the advance of the book value of the securities to be distributed as hereinbefore set forth to their actual value would operate at the same time to increase the surplus of the company, and so its surplus, after such distribution, would remain just the same as though the advance to actual value had not been made on the books of the company.

The properties to be conveyed to the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., based upon conditions as of December 31, 1910, the last completed year, including in such conveyances the proper and proportionate storage houses, leaf tobacco, supplies and materials, and cash, but without anything for value of brands, trade-marks, formulæ, recipes, and good will, but including stocks of companies, are of the value of $30,607,261.96 to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and $28,091,748.86 to P. Lorillard Co. So far as these conditions shall be changed before the day of the conveyance, any deficiency is to be made good in cash, so that these two companies will have said amounts in tangible assets, as aforesaid, useful, and such as have been used, in the manufacture of the brands to be conveyed to them, respectively, and cash. The American Tobacco Co. will be left with tangible assets, including stocks of companies employed in manufacturing tobacco and its products, cash, and bills and accounts receivable, of the value of $53,408,498.94 as of December 31, 1910. The profits earned during the year 1910 on the brands and businesses to be conveyed by the American Tobacco Co. to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. amounted to $7,468,172.02, and the profits on the brands and businesses to be conveyed by the American Tobacco Co. to P. Lorillard Co. amounted to $5,264,729.38.

It is proposed that the value of the brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ and good will to be sold to each of these companies be determined by their earning capacity, based upon the results for the year 1910, so that each shall have an earning capacity of 11.02 per cent per annum upon its total property, including both tangible property and brand value and good will. Upon this basis the consideration to be paid by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. will be $30,607,261.96, value of tangle assets as above stated, and $36,840,237.04, value of brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will, making a total of $67,447,499; and the consideration to be paid by the P. Lorillard Co. will be $28,091,748.86, value of tangible assets as above stated, and $19,460,752.14, value of brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will, making a total of $47,552,501. The brands, trade-marks, recipes, farmulæ, and good will of the American Tobacco Co. on December 31, 1910, were of the book value of $101,324,964.07. The payments for brand value, etc., to the American Tobacco Co. to be made by Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., as aforesaid, makes an aggregate of $56,300,989.18, and would thus leave the book value of brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will retained by the American Tobacco Co. at $45,023,974.89, which, added to the $53,408,498.94 of tangible manufacturing assets to be retained by the American Tobacco Co., will make the total book value of manufacturing property to be retained by that company $98,432,473.83, upon which its earnings, based upon the results for the year 1910, would be $11,369,809.82, or 11.55 per cent.

The Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and the P. Lorillard Co. would pay for these conveyances, therefore, the aggregate as aforesaid, to wit:

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co	$67,447,499
P. Lorillard Co	47,552,501
Aggregating	115,000,000

or each with its earnings on the business for the year 1910 so capitalized that said earnings represent 11.02 per cent upon the capital.

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. will issue securities to cover such capitalization in the aggregate as follows: To an amount equal to one-half of the outstanding 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Company; that is, $26,441,325 at par in 7 per cent bonds; to an amount equal to one-half of the outstanding 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., that is, $25,677,050 at par in 5 per cent bonds; to an amount equal to one-third of the outstanding preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co., that is, $26,229,700 at par, in 7 per cent cumulative voting preferred stock; which, upon liquidation of the company, shall be paid at par with accrued unpaid dividends before any amount shall be paid to common stock, with balance of assets distributable ratably to the common stock; and the balance of said $115,000,000, that is, $36,651,925 in common stock; the 7 per cent bonds and the 5 per cent bonds to mature at the time fixed, respectively, for the maturity of the 6 per cent bonds and the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. now outstanding, and to be issued under an indenture of substantially like tenor and terms with the present indenture of the American Tobacco Co. under which its 6 per cent bonds and 4 per cent bonds were issued, the 7 per cent bonds to have priority in charge over the 5 per cent bonds in the same way that the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. have priority of charge over the 4 per cent bonds.

Thus the capitalization of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. will be as follows:

	Liggett & Myers.	Lorillard.	Total.
7 per cent bonds	$15,507,837	$10,933,488	$26,441,325
5 per cent bonds	15,059,589	10,617,461	25,677,050
7 per cent preferred stock	15,383,719	10,845,981	26,229,700
Common stock	21,496,354	15,155,571	36,651,925
	67,447,499	47,552,501	115,000,000

All of these securities of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and the P. Lorillard Co. to be turned over to the American Tobacco Co. in payment of the purchase price for the factories, plants, brands, and businesses and capital stocks of tobacco manufacturing corporations so to be conveyed to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., respectively, as hereinbefore set out.

These securities will be disposed of by the American Tobacco Co. as follows:

The common stock will be offered for cash at par to the holders of the common stock of the American Tobacco Co. in proportion to their holdings, and any not purchased by the person thus entitled thereto shall be sold to persons other than the individual defendants, to the end that such offer of common stock of the two new companies to the common stockholders of the American Tobacco Co. shall not be used by the individual defendants to increase their ownership therein beyond the proportion of their holdings of the common stock of the American Tobacco Co.

To each holder of the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., an offer shall be made to acquire his bonds for cancellation, and to give in exchange therefor, as to one-half thereof, new 7 per cent bonds of Liggett & Meyers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. at par, and in payment for the other half thereof, cash at the rate of $120 and accrued interest for each $100 face value of the bonds.

To each holder of the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., an offer shall be made to acquire his bonds for cancellation, and to give in exchange therefor, as to one-half thereof, new 5 per cent bonds of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. at par, and, in payment for the other half thereof, cash at the rate of $96 and accrued interest for each $100 face value of the bonds.

To each holder of the preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co., an offer shall be made to acquire one-third of his stock for cancellation in exchange for an equal amount at par of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.

On account of the larger capitalization of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. as compared with the P. Lorillard Co., each class of the new securities will issue in the proportion of 58.65 per cent thereof of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. securities and 41.35 per cent thereof of P. Lorillard Co. securities. The stocks will be issued in shares of $100, and coupon bonds in denominations of $1,000, and registered bonds in larger denominations, and in denominations of $100 and $50, and in actual issue fractions will be eliminated.

The common stocks of the two companies aforesaid are to be sold as above set out prior to March 1, 1912, with three years to be allowed for the retirement of the bonds and preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co., as above set out. Pending such, the said 7 per cent bonds, 5 per cent bonds, and 7 per cent preferred stocks of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and the P. Lorillard Co., together with an amount in cash, or in securities owned by the American Tobacco Co., at their book value, or partly in cash and partly in such securities, equal to the amounts required if all such sales and exchanges are made, will be deposited with the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, the trustee in the indenture under which the 6 per cent bonds and the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. are issued, as the agency to effect the purchase and exchange. Such deposit will be made not to secure nor create a trust fund for the bonds, but for the purpose of sequestrating and taking from the control of the American Tobacco Co. the securities and cash so deposited. During the time of such deposit the securities shall be in the name of as well as in the custody of said trust company, with any voting rights attaching thereto, but the American Tobacco Co. shall receive from the trust company all dividends and interest collected by it on account of such securities; and the American Tobacco Co. shall have the right at any time and from time to time to sell, at such price as it may determine, and direct the delivery of any of such securities (except the securities of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.), the consideration therefor to go into the hands of said trust company, or to withdraw any of such securities (except the securities of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.) for the purpose of distribution among its common stockholders if its surplus at the time permits, or to substitute other securities of like book value for the securities so deposited (except as to the securities of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.), or to alter the relative proportion of cash and securities, it being the intent of this provision that there shall be sequestrated from the control of the American Tobacco Co. all the securities of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. and an additional amount of cash or other securities equal, upon the purchase basis aforesaid, to the value of the 4 per cent bonds and the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. at the time outstanding. At the end of the three years if there are any of such securities of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. or P. Lorillard Co. in the hands of such trust company undisposed of by such exchange as aforesaid, then the American Tobacco Co. shall apply to this court for an order as to the disposition thereof. Nothing contained in this provision and nothing done under this provision shall be construed as providing for the creation of, or as creating, any lien or security on anything deposited with the trust company in favor of the 6 per cent bonds or the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. outstanding or otherwise.

G.

VOTING RIGHTS TO PREFERRED STOCK.

By proper amendment of the certificate of incorporation of the American Tobacco Co. the preferred stock will be given full voting rights.

H.

CERTAIN INCIDENTAL PROVISIONS.

(1) P. Lorillard Co. is a New Jersey company with $3,000,000 of common stock, all of which is owned by the American Tobacco Co., and $2,000,000 of 8 per cent preferred stock. Of this preferred stock the American Tobacco Co. holds $1,596,100 at par, and there is held by others $403,900 at par. Under the laws of New Jersey the present P. Lorillard Co. may be dissolved by the holders of two-thirds of the outstanding stock, and upon such dissolution the preferred stock is entitled to be paid at par, the balance of the assets going to the common stock. In view of the fact, however, that the preferred stock of the present P. Lorillard Co. is an 8 per cent preferred stock with abundant assets and earnings to make the principal and income secure, it is deemed fair to the holders of this outstanding $403,900 of preferred stock that they be given an opportunity to take, at their option, either cash at par, which they are legally entitled to, or the 7 per cent preferred stock of the proposed new P. Lorillard Co. As the preferred stock of the new P. Lorillard Co. is to be a 7 per cent preferred stock, the holders of said $403,900 of said present preferred stock will be offered stock of the new company at the rate of $114.25 for each share. It is therefore proposed that the new P. Lorillard Co. provide for an additional amount of preferred stock sufficient to take care of $403,900 preferred stock on that basis, to wit, $114.25 in new 7 per cent preferred stock for each $100 of said stock, amounting to $461,600 at par of preferred stock in addition to that set out hereinbefore. In view of the fact that in the statements hereinbefore made as to earnings of the P. Lorillard Co. there is included only such part of the earnings of the present P. Lorillard Co. as accrued to the proportion of its stock held by the American Tobacco Co., this increase of preferred stock would increase proportionately the profits of the P. Lorillard Co., and does not derange any of the figures hereinbefore given or given in any of the exhibits hereto and hereinafter referred to.

(2) American Snuff Co. manufactures and sells a brand of snuff called "Garrett," which has a large sale in the southern and southwestern sections of the country. Originally this brand was manufactured at Yorklyn, Del., and in part packed in Philadelphia. Several years ago American Snuff Co. determined, on account of freight-rate conditions, to manufacture this brand at Clarksville, Tenn., and to pack it at Memphis, Tenn., and that the factories at Yorklyn, Del., should be given up to the manufacture of other brands. It has yet, though, been unable to produce in Clarksville, Tenn., goods similar to the goods heretofore and now made by it at Yorklyn, Del., although the experiment is still in progress, and with hope of success. Under the plan hereinbefore outlined the brand "Garrett" snuff is allotted to American Snuff Co., and the factories other than one factory at Yorklyn, Del., are allotted to George W. Helme Co. Your petitioners pray that in the approval and adoption by this court of this plant, American Snuff Co. and George W. Helme Co. be permitted to manufacture brands the one for the other, for a period not exceeding one year from March 1, 1912, each company paying to the other as consideration for such manufacture the cost thereof plus 5 per cent; the necessity of paying 5 per cent above cost is sufficient inducement to each company to manufacture its own goods as soon as American Snuff Co. is able to manufacture factory, thus leaving the Yorklyn factories, other than No. 5, for the "Garrett" snuff of the requisite character and kind in its Clarksville manufacture by the George W. Helme Co. of its own brands.

This court, having heard the parties as directed by the Supreme Court of the United States, it is further ascertained and determined, and—

Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plan hereinabove set forth is a plan or method which, taken with the injunctive provisions hereinafter set forth, will dissolve the combination heretofore adjudged to be illegal in this cause, and will re-create out of the elements now composing it a new condition which will be honestly in harmony with, and not repugnant to, the law, and without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said plan as hereinabove set forth be, and it is hereby, approved by this court, and the defendants herein are respectively directed to proceed forthwith to carry the same into effect.

The necessities of the situation, in the judgment of this court, requiring the extension of the period for carrying into execution said plan to a further time not to exceed 60 days from December 30, 1911,

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants be allowed until February 28, 1912, to carry said plan into execution.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants, their officers, directors, servants, agents, and employees be, and they are hereby, severally enjoined and restrained as follows:

From continuing or carrying into further effect the combination adjudged illegal in this cause and from entering into or forming any like combination or conspiracy the effect of which is or will be to restrain commerce in tobacco or its products or in articles used in connection with the manufacture and trade in tobacco and its products among the States or in the Territories or with foreign nations, or to prolong the unlawful monopoly of such commerce obtained and possessed by the defendants, as adjudged herein in violation of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, either—

1. By causing the conveyance of the factories, plants, brands, or business of any of the 14 corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed, to wit, the American Tobacco Co., Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., P. Lorillard Co., American Snuff Co., George W. Helme Co., Weyman-Bruton Co., R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.), Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., Mac Andrews & Forbes Co., J. S. Young Co., the Conley Foil Co., the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co., and the United Cigar Stores Co., to any other of said corporations, by placing the stocks of any one or more of said corporations in the hands of voting trustees or controlling the voting power of such stocks by any similar device; or

2. By making any express or implied agreement or arrangement together or one with another like those adjudged illegal in this cause relative to the control or management of any of said 14 corporations or the price or terms of purchase or of sale of tobacco or any of its products or the supplies or other products dealt with in connection with the tobacco business, or relative to the purchase, sale, transportation, or manufacture of tobacco or its products, or supplies or other products dealt with as aforesaid, by any of the parties hereto, which will have a like effect in restraint of commerce among the States, in the Territories, and with foreign nations to that of the combination the operation of which is enjoined in this cause; or by making any agreement or arrangement of any kind with any other of such corporations under which trade or business is apportioned between such corporations in respect either to customers or localities.

3. By any of said 14 corporations retaining or employing the same clerical organization, or keeping the same office or offices, as any other of said corporations.

4. By any of said 14 corporations retaining or holding capital stock in any other corporation any part of whose stock is also retained and held by any other of said corporations; provided, however, that this prohibition shall not apply to the holding by the Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co. and American Cigar Co. of stock in Porto Rican Leaf Tobacco Co., nor shall it apply to the holding of stock of the National Snuff Co. (Ltd.) by Weyman-Bruton Co. and British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.).

5. By any of said 14 corporations doing business directly or indirectly under any other than its own corporate name or the name of a subsidiary corporation controlled by it; provided, however, that in case of a subsidiary corporation the controlling corporation shall cause the products of such subsidiary corporation which are sold in the United States and bear the name of the manufacturer to bear also a statement indicating the fact of such control.

6. By any of said 14 corporations refusing to sell to any jobber any brand of any tobacco product manufactured by it except upon condition that such jobber shall purchase from the vendor some other brand or product also manufactured and sold by it; provided, however, that this prohibition shall not be construed to apply to what are known as "combination orders" under which some brand or product may be offered to a jobber or dealer at a reduced price on condition that he purchase a given quantity of some other brand or product.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that during a period of 5 years from the date hereof, each of said 14 corporations hereinbefore named, its officers, directors, agents, servants, and employees, are hereby enjoined and restrained as follows:

1. None of the said 14 corporations shall have any officer or director who is also an officer or director in any other of said corporations.

2. None of said 14 corporations shall retain or employ the same agent or agents for the purchase in the United States of tobacco leaf or other raw material, or for the sale in the United States of tobacco or other products, as that of any other of said corporations.

3. None of said 14 corporations shall directly or indirectly acquire any stock in any other of said corporations or purchase or acquire any of the factories, plants, brands, or business of any other of said corporations, or make loans or otherwise extend financial aid to any other of said corporations.

The provisions of this decree shall apply only to trade and commerce in or between the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) and the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.) shall not act as agent for each other, nor employ a common agent, for the purchase of leaf tobacco in the United States, and neither of said 2 companies shall unite with any of the said 14 corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed, in the employment of a common agent for the purchase of tobacco leaf in the United States.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that each of the 29 individual defendants in this suit be enjoined and restrained from at any time within three years from the date of this decree acquiring, owning, or holding, directly or indirectly, any stock or any legal or equitable interest in any stock in any one of said 14 corporations, except British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.), in excess of the amount to which he will is entitled under the provisions of the plan when the same shall have been carried out as proposed as the present owner of the amount of stocks in said several companies shown by the affidavits of said several defendants filed herein on the 16th day of November, 1911; provided, however, that any of said defendants may, notwithstanding this prohibition, acquire from any other or others of said defendants, or in case of death from their estates, any of the stock held by such other defendant or defendants in any of said corporations.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the new companies whose organization is provided for in the plan hereinabove set forth, to wit, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., P. Lorillard Co., George W. Helme Co., Weyman-Bruton Co., and J. S. Young Co., shall, after their formation and by appropriate proceeding, be made parties defendant to this cause and subject to the provisions of this decree and bound by the injunctions herein granted.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that any party hereto may make application to the court for such orders and directions as may be necessary or proper in relation to the carrying out of said plan and the provisions of this decree.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the costs of this action shall be paid by the defendants other than R. P. Richardson, Jr., & Co. (Inc.), as to whom the suit has heretofore been dismissed, and the payment by the defendant the American Tobacco Co. of the reasonable costs and counsel fees of the committees organized for the protection of the 6 per cent bonds, 4 per cent bonds, and preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co., is hereby approved.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants the American Tobacco Co., MacAndrews & Forbes Co., American Snuff Co., and each of them, and their and each of their officers, directors, servants, agents, and employees, be severally enjoined and restrained as in said plan set forth from voting stocks, exercising influence or control over other companies or gaining possession of other companies through the use of securities temporarily held by them, respectively, under said plan in each and every case in which it is provided in and by the said plan that any of said three last-named defendants shall be so enjoined.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that such books and papers of the defendants the American Tobacco Co. and S. Anargyros, or either of them, as relate to the suit of the Ludington Cigarette Machine Co. v. S. Anargyros and the American Tobacco Co., or the subject matter thereof or any part thereof, be preserved by the said defendants, respectively, until after the accounting, if any shall take place in said suit, and said suit be finally determined and ended.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that jurisdiction of this cause is retained by this court for the purpose of making such other and further orders and decrees, if any, as may become necessary for carrying out the mandate of the Supreme Court.

STATEMENT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

As soon as it was practicable after November 16, 1911, the date of the decree in the case of United States of America against the American Tobacco Co. and others, the defendants affected by the decree began, following the directions of the court, to put into operation the plan of disintegration provided for in the decree. The five new companies provided for in the said decree, to wit, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., P. Lorillard Co., George W. Helme Co., Weyman-Bruton Co., and J. S. Young Co. were duly chartered and organized, elected directors and officers. After the organization of these new companies, each of them made offers to acquire businesses, properties, etc., as provided in said decree, and the offers were accepted. The offers made by Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. were to the American Tobacco Co.; the offers made by George W. Helme Co. and Weyman-Bruton Co. were to the American Snuff Co.; and the offer made by J. S. Young Co. was to MacAndrews & Forbes Co. Each of these offers and acceptances provided for issuing of securities of the vendee company as provided in said decree, all to be as of December 1, 1911, the vendor company receiving the securities as of that date so as to receive interest or dividends on the bonds or stock representing the purchase price from that date, and the vendee companies to take the businesses with the profits accruing from that date. All real estate conveyances were promptly made and recorded; assignments of trade-marks duly executed; division of leaf tobacco and other materials and supplies made; cash in large part turned over to the vendee companies; and since December 1, 1911, the vendee companies have been operating on their own account—Liggett & Myers with its offices in St. Louis, P. Lorillard Co. with its offices in Jersey City, and J. S. Young Co. with its offices in Baltimore. American Snuff Co. is proceeding to open its main offices in Memphis, Tenn., but the actual removal of offices has not yet occurred.

Each of the vendee corporations, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., by proper resolution authorized their transfer agents and the trustee under the trust indenture securing the bonds to deliver these to the treasurer of the American Tobacco Co. or his written nominees—the vendee companies at the time delivering to the transfer agent and trustee properly signed certificates of stock and bonds in blank—and the treasurer of the American Tobacco Co. under this power of nomination directed the transfer agent and trustee to honor requisitions from time to time made by the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, the agency for transfer and issuance of securities appointed by the decree. Under this method there had gone out, up to the close of business January 19, $21,438,000 of the common stock of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. out of a total issue of $21,496,400, and $15,116,000 of the common stock of P. Lorillard Co. out of a total issue of $15,155,600. All of the money received by the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York for this common stock, to wit, $36,554,000, has been used in the payment, under the said decree, for cancellation of the bonds of the American Tobacco Co., and additional money has been supplied by the American Tobacco Co. to said Guaranty Trust Co.

Under the said decree each holder of the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. may turn in his bonds to the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York and thereupon receive cash at the rate of $120 for one half thereof and new 7 per cent bonds of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. for the other half thereof. Each holder of the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., including some outstanding 4 per cent bonds of Consolidated Tobacco Co., may turn in his bonds to Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, receiving as to one half thereof cash at the rate of $96 and for the other half new 5 per cent bonds of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. And each holder of the preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co. may turn in his stock, receiving for one-third thereof new 7 per cent preferred stock of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. and as to the other two-thirds new certificates of stock of the American Tobacco Co., which show on their face that they are not entitled to participate in any further exchange and that the holders have voting rights.

The Guaranty Trust Co. had at the close of business January 19 taken in from the holders thereof for cancellation, in accordance with said decree, and either paid in cash or delivered new securities therefor, as follows: $41,561,000 of the 6 per cent bonds, out of $52,882,650 theretofore outstanding; $38,823,650 of 4 per cent bonds (including outstanding 4 per cent bonds of Consolidated Tobacco Co.), out of $51,354,100 theretofore outstanding; $43,181,700 of 6 per cent preferred stock, out of $78,689,100 theretofore outstanding. All of these new securities and cash have been delivered and paid to the many hundreds of individuals entitled thereto under the said decree, the common stock of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. having been delivered, as aforesaid, to at least 1,200 different people, and presumably the bonds and preferred stock of an even larger number.

American Snuff Co. received the securities of George W. Helme Co. and Weyman-Bruton Co., to wit: $4,000,000 of 7 per cent preferred stock and $4,000,000 of common stock of each company, and MacAndrews & Forbes Co. received all of the securities of J. S. Young Co., to wit: $1,000,000 of preferred stock and $1,000,000 of common stock. Each of these companies, under the decree aforesaid, was to distribute the common stocks received by it to its own common-stock holders. All of this common stock has been actually distributed.

The Conley Foil Co., under the decree, was to distribute the stock it held in the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. among its stockholders, and it has done so. It has also canceled the bonds of the Johnston Co. which it held.

The American Tobacco Co., under the said decree, was to distribute among its common-stock holders the stocks heretofore held by it in American Snuff Co., Corporation of United Cigar Stores, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) ordinary shares, the Conley Foil Co., MacAndrews & Forbes Co., and Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co.; and the stocks received by it as a common-stock holder of American Snuff Co. in Weyman-Bruton Co. and George W. Helme Co.; and the common stock received by it as a stockholder of MacAndrews & Forbes Co. in J. S. Young Co.; and the stock received by it as a stockholder of the Conley Foil Co. in the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. It has entirely completed this distribution among more than 1,200 stockholders of the American Tobacco Co., and many sales of the distributed stocks have been made on the market by those who received the same on distribution.

The certificate of incorporation of the American Tobacco Co. has been amended and full voting rights given to the holders of the preferred stock.

All domestic covenants, referred to in the decree, have been released by proper instruments, and such instruments have been duly filed in the court.

All of the defendant companies, including the new companies, are in active business life and competition, each with its own buying and selling organizations, each with a license to do business in every State in which it is engaged in business, and each receiving orders and billing goods.

The only things that have not been wholly accomplished is the disintegration of American Stogie Co., which is now in progress, the resolution of dissolution having been adopted by the stockholders and the business now being in the hands of trustees in liquidation; final adjustments between Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., L. Lorillard Co., and the American Tobacco Co., with final checking of tentative invoices of leaf tobacco, materials, and supplies, and cash to be furnished to them; and making the exchange by American Snuff Co. of the preferred stocks received by it from Weyman-Bruton Co. and George W. Helme Co. in reduction of its own stock, and the exchange to be effected by MacAndrews & Forbes Co. of the preferred stock of J. S. Young Co. received by it in reduction of its own stock. As to these exchanges of preferred stock, they have not been completed because of lack of time, but the offer to the holders of preferred stock of American Snuff Co. has been printed and is to be issued Monday. MacAndrews & Forbes Co. has only a few holders of its preferred stock, most of them resident in England, and letters have already been written them making the offer of exchange.

Among the properties turned over by the American Tobacco Co. to P. Lorillard Co. was all of the common stock and three-fourths of the preferred stock of the old P. Lorillard Co. The old P. Lorillard Co. has been dissolved in accordance with New Jersey law and its physical properties turned over to the new P. Lorillard Co., formed in accordance with the decree.

As part of the process of dividing the manufacturing properties of the American Tobacco Co. between itself and Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. the holders of a majority of the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. and the holders of a majority of the 4 per cent bonds of that company have each executed and delivered instruments approving the plan of reorganization and modifying, as such majorities were authorized to do, by the indenture securing said bonds, the rights of the bondholders in so far as they might be affected by the carrying out of said plan.

To sum up what has thus far been wholly accomplished:

(a) The entire distribution of stocks by the American Tobacco Co. as a dividend to its common-stock holders under the provision of the plan has been completed. This covers not only the stocks held in the treasury of the company at the time of the decree, but also the stocks which it has received into its treasury through the process of disintegration of accessory companies and the distribution of their stocks, in which the American Tobacco Co. participated.

The stocks thus distributed have been largely dealt in on the market in the city of New York and very many transactions therein have been reported. Between the 11th of December and the 19th of January over 184,000 shares of stock of British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) have been reported in the financial papers to have been sold. This stock was never dealt in. Between the date of the decree (Nov. 16) and January 19 between 17,000 and 18,000 shares of the stocks of Corporation United Cigar Stores have been reported by the financial papers as being sold on the market in New York City. Prior to this time dealings in this stock were so rare as to be almost unknown.

We are informed that the stock transfer books of United Cigar Stores Co. show that prior to the distribution the total number of stockholders was 250, which has increased in consequence of the distribution, so that on January 19, 1912, there were 1,170 stockholders. The number of shares distributed by the American Co. was 60,000 shares. Since the date of the decree 36,636 shares have been transferred of record by stockholders, including stockholders who received their stock upon the distribution by the American Tobacco Co. We are also credibly informed that a large number of the individual defendants have parted with their entire holdings of their stock of United Cigar Stores. The detailed statement upon which this information is based, received by us from officials of the Corporation United Cigar Stores, is annexed hereto, marked "Exhibit A."

(b) Each of the accessory companies, with the exception of the stogie company, has actually been disintegrated as provided in the decree; new companies having been created, to which properties have been conveyed, in consideration of the issue of securities by the vendee companies, and the securities so issued by the vendee companies have, excepting only the preferred stocks of the snuff company and MacAndrews & Forbes Co., reached the hands of and are now held by their ultimate holders, to wit, the public.

(c) Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. have been organized, have acquired the properties conveyed to them by the American Co., and have been in separate operation since December 1. Properties conveyed to them were paid for by the issue by them of all the securities called for by the plan, which securities were taken into the treasury of the American Tobacco Co. and thence placed with the Guaranty Trust Co., the agency for exchange.

The total authorized common stock of Liggett & Myers and Lorillard was	$36,652,000
Of this the common stockholders of the American Co. have purchased and paid for at par	36,554,000
Leaving still to be paid only	98,000

Many thousand shares of Liggett & Myers and Lorillard common stocks have been sold on the market since the date of the decree.

The preferred stocks of Liggett & Myers and Lorillard were turned over to the Guaranty Trust Co. as the agency for exchange, to be by it exchanged for one-third of the former preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co. More than one-half of these preferred stocks of the new companies have been exchanged at par for an equal amount of the preferred stock of the old company, which latter has been canceled.

The total amount of the preferred stock of the American Co. outstanding at the date of the decree was	$78,689,100
Of which there has been surrendered for the exchange above mentioned	43,181,700
Leaving now outstanding of old preferred stock only	35,507,400
The total amount of 6 per cent and 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. outstanding at the date of the decree was	104,436,750
Of this there have been actually retired and canceled through payment of one-half in cash and exchange of the other half for new 7 per cent and 5 per cent bonds of the new companies	80,384,650
Leaving now outstanding only	24,052,100
The total amount of 5 per cent and 7 per cent bonds issued by the new companies, all of which were placed with Guaranty Trust Co. for purposes of exchange, was	52,218,375
Of this amount there have been actually delivered to the holders of old 4 per cent and 6 per cent bonds in exchange therefor	40,192,375
Leaving still in the hands of Guaranty Trust Co. still subject to further exchange only	12,026,000

The $40,000,000 of 5 per cent and 7 per cent bonds of the new companies so delivered to the holders of the 4 per cent and 6 per cent bonds of the American Co. have been largely dealt in on the market since the date of the decree. The transactions in these bonds have been constant and large, and the financial papers report sales in them since the decree of an aggregate amount of more than $18,000,000.

EXHIBIT A.

Corporation of United Cigar Stores.

Number of stockholders prior to distribution by American Tobacco Co. of stock held by it in Corporation of United Cigar Stores, Dec. 14, 1911	250
Number of stockholders of record Jan. 19, 1912	1,170
Number of shares of stock distributed by American Tobacco Co.	60,000
Number of shares of stock transferred of record by stockholders, including those who received stock on distribution by American Tobacco Co	36,636

Of the 29 individual defendants named in the "bill," the records show that 12 have already disposed of their entire holdings of stock of Corporation of United Cigar Stores and that a large part of the stock held by the remainder of the individual defendants has already been transferred.

[Senate Report No. 545, part 2, Sixty-Second Congress, second session.]

VIEWS OF SENATORS WILLIAM E. BORAH, CHARLES A. CULBERSON, KNUTE NELSON, NORRIS BROWN, AND ALBERT B. CUMMINS.

The undersigned Senators, a minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, beg leave to submit to the Senate their views upon S. 3607, being a bill to give the right of appeal to certain organizations and persons in the suit of the United States against the American Tobacco Co. and others.

The purpose of the bill under consideration is to give to certain tobacco-trade associations and to the attorneys general of certain States and to the State of Wisconsin the right to intervene in the suit of the United States v. The American Tobacco Co. and others, lately pending in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York; and having so intervened to appeal from the decree entered therein on the 16th day of November, 1911, to the Supreme Court of the United States; or, to state it somewhat more generally and broadly, the object of the bill is to secure a review by the Supreme Court of the decree of the court below approving a plan for the reorganization of the business of the American Tobacco Co.

In order to make it clearly apparent that the public interest imperatively requires that the reorganization decree entered by the lower court ought to be reviewed by the Supreme Court it will be necessary to recite briefly the history of what has been done.

The suit was originally instituted in the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New York under section 4 of the act commonly known as the antitrust law. There were 67 corporations and 29 individuals made defendants. The corporations were the American Tobacco Co. and such other corporations as were under the control of the American Tobacco Co., which corporations had not only restrained but had monopolized, substantially, the trade in which they were engaged.

The individual defendants were the officers and the chief stockholders of the American Tobacco Co. Without referring to the character of the decree which the circuit court rendered originally, it is sufficient to say that from it the United States appealed, and upon the appeal the Supreme Court announced its decision in an opinion which has now become famous in the judicial literature of the subject.

The decree of the court below was reversed and the combination was denounced not only as a whole but in all its parts and practices. The vice of the combination consisted in the destruction of competition and the consequent establishment of a monopoly. The injury to the public welfare was inflicted by the control which the stockholders of the American Tobacco Co. exerted, through the corporation, over all the subsidiary or incidental corporations.

After considering the case with the greatest care and finding the most flagrant violations of the law, the Supreme Court proceeded to the consideration of the remedy that should be awarded. To the end that the Senate may have a full understanding of just what the Supreme Court said and did in this respect we quote that part of the opinion and mandate:

"Under these circumstances, taking into mind the complexity of the situation in all its aspects and giving weight to the many-sided considerations which must control our judgment, we think, so far as the permanent relief to be awarded is concerned, we should decree as follows:

"First. That the combination in and of itself, as well as each and all of the elements composing it, whether corporate or individual, whether considered collectively or separately, be decreed to be in restraint of trade and an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization within the first and second sections of the antitrust act.

"Second. That the court below, in order to give effective force to our decree in this regard, be directed to hear the parties, by evidence or otherwise, as it may be deemed proper, for the purpose of ascertaining and determining upon some plan or method of dissolving the combination and of re-creating, out of the elements now composing it, a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law.

"Third. That for the accomplishment of these purposes, taking into view the difficulty of the situation, a period of six months is allowed from the receipt of our mandate, with leave, however, in the event, in the judgment of the court below, the necessities of the situation require, to extend such period to a further time not to exceed 60 days.

"Fourth. That in the event, before the expiration of the period thus fixed, the condition of disintegration in harmony with the law is not brought out, either as a consequence of the action of the court in determining an issue of the subject or in accepting a plan agreed upon, it shall be the duty of the court, either by way of an injunction restraining the movement of the products of the combination in the channels of interstate or foreign commerce, or by the appointment of a receiver, to give effect to the requirements of the statute."

The case was thus returned to the circuit court for further proceedings carrying out the directions above given.

After several months of negotiation between the parties and the court, and after public argument, the circuit court on the 16th day of November, 1911, entered a decree approving and apparently adjudicating the plan of reorganization. We attach to this report a copy of the decree and also of the opinions of the four circuit court judges then comprising the circuit court.

The decree itself, together with the opinion of the Supreme Court (United States v. The American Tobacco Co. et al., 221 U. S., 106), will furnish all the facts that are material in determining whether the interests of the people require that the things ordered and adjudged by the circuit court shall be subjected to the scrutiny and the power of the Supreme Court.

We will presently point out some of the obvious errors found in the decree and plan of reorganization, but before doing so, we suggest that the Attorney General representing the United States, being satisfied with the adjudication of the lower court did not appeal, and he publicly declared that he would not appeal, at the same time entering upon a defense of the decree and his refusal to seek a review in the Supreme Court.

Under the law the time for appeal in such cases is limited to 60 days, a time that elapsed about the middle of January of the present year. The Judiciary Committee invited the Attorney General to come before it and explain his reasons for refusing to appeal. This he did, and there reannounced the position which he had theretofore given to the public.

It is not our intent to go at length into the plan of reorganization. A more appropriate time for the details of the matter will come when the report of the majority of the committee and these views of the minority are under discussion before the Senate. It is enough to point out that, with the exception of whatever influence the preferred stockholders of these corporations may exert, and this we believe to be negligible, the whole business formerly under the control technically of the corporation known as the American Tobacco Co. is now under the control of the same persons who then controlled the American Tobacco Co., and in the same proportions. Some of the corporations which were found to be violating the law were left without any change, but the 14 corporations, among which was distributed the property of the American Tobacco Co. and the property of the subsidiary corporations, were left under the control of the stockholders of the American Tobacco Co. and their proportionate holdings in the new companies were the same as their holdings in the original company. It is difficult to be patient with the argument that through any such circumlocution the competition which was destroyed by the crimes of these defendants was restored by this extraordinary performance.

The independent tobacco manufacturers and dealers are unanimous in asserting that the grip of monopoly instead of being weakened has been strengthened. This assertion is sustained by the fact that since the decree the stock of both the old company and the new corporations has commanded a higher price in the market than the stock of the old company ever reached before. The plight of these independents challenges our consideration, but the people as a whole are the chief sufferers. The principal reason for the review we seek is the high necessity that the legislative branch of the Government shall know definitely whether the outcome of the American Tobacco Co. prosecution is the real outcome of the antitrust law; whether the decree which we have mentioned is all that this law will do in the way of relief against the suppression of competition and the annihilation of competitors in the commerce of the country. If the decree is to be accepted as the full and final expression of the law, then it is manifest that Congress must amend it so that it will accomplish its purpose more effectually.

As important as the considerations which we have already mentioned are, there is another which is thought to be of still greater consequence. The circuit court has apparently adjudged that certain corporations enumerated in the decree, and which are a part of the plan of reorganization, have received a judicial approval of a character which we think is beyond the power of a court to confer. There seems to be no escape from the conclusion that the circuit court has endeavored to adjudicate and legalize the organization of these corporations, their relations to each other and the public, and give them an immunity hitherto unknown to judicial procedure. We can not believe that under our system of government a court can, in advance, do for corporations, their stockholders and bondholders, what the circuit court in New York has attempted to do for the corporations which have taken their place in the business world as parts of the plan of reorganization. We are not willing that this new venture on the part of this court shall pass unchallenged.

After carefully reflecting upon the facts and history of the case, of which we have given but a mere outline, we are firmly of the opinion that the public interest requires that there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, and we are further of the opinion that the Congress has the constitutional power to enact such legislation as will provide for such appeal.

It has been suggested that instead of endeavoring to bring in new parties and give them the right to appeal that we should direct the Attorney General to take an appeal on behalf of the United States and enlarge the time for appeal in order to make the direction effective. The members of the committee who join in this report are of the opinion that it is within the power of Congress to so direct the Attorney General and to so enlarge the time for the appeal. Inasmuch, however, as there was no amendment of that kind offered in the committee, the Senators who sign the body of this report do not commit themselves for or against such an amendment if offered in the Senate.

Certain formal amendments were made in the committee, the principal one being to strike out the preamble. This made necessary some changes in the body of the bill, in order that definite descriptions might take the place of references to parts of the preamble. We append hereto the bill as amended in the committee, so that when printed the amendments may be made to appear in the ordinary way.

Respectfully submitted.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS.

We believe the decree of the circuit court should be passed upon and reviewed by the Supreme Court, and that the Attorney General should be directed to take the necessary appeal, and that the time for appeal should be extended for such purpose. We further believe that we have the power to extend the time and to so direct the Attorney General.

[In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York. United States of America v The American Tobacco Co. and others.]

OPINIONS OF THE COURT AND DECREE.

Before Lacombe, Coxe, Ward, and Noyes, circuit judges.

The United States v. The American Tobacco Co. and others.

OPINION OF CIRCUIT JUDGE LACOMBE.

In compliance with the directions of the Supreme Court we have heard the parties upon a plan proposed by the American Tobacco Co. for "dissolving the combination and for re-creating out of the elements now composing it a new condition which shall honestly be in harmony with and not repugnant to the law." The proposed plan was filed two weeks before this hearing, at which not only the parties but any persons interested who might wish to express their views as friends of the court were given opportunity so to do.

While the plan is correctly described as the proposed plan of the American Tobacco Co., since that corporation and the other defendants offer to carry it out, it should be remembered that in its present form the plan is the fruit of much discussion. For upward of two months successive conferences, in the presence of two or more members of the court, were had between the Attorney General and the counsel and representatives of the Tobacco Co. Objections of the Attorney General were followed by modifications of the plan, some of its most drastic provisions being inserted in order to meet or avoid his criticisms. When a point was reached where such adjustment of differences ceased to be practicable, a time was fixed for a hearing before the whole court upon the matters remaining in dispute. It was in the course of these conferences that a very material reduction of the holdings of the American Tobacco Co. was brought about. According to the plan as originally proposed it was to retain in its treasury, in addition to its working capital, sufficient to pay the outstanding bonds when they matured, about $104,000,000. To this the Attorney General at once objected, insisting that the possession of this enormous amount of money over and above its capital invested in the tobacco business was fraught with possibilities of evil use, that it would be a standing menace to all competitors and could not be tolerated. While not fully conceding the justice of this criticism, counsel for defendants promptly stated that they would undertake to eliminate it.

After discussion of two different methods of so doing, which themselves presented other difficulties, defendants at the last conference submitted the present scheme, whereby half of the outstanding bonds would be bought up (and canceled) at a price in excess of their present value, thus insuring a willing surrender of them by present holders, and for the other half securities of the new companies would be offered on a basis of exchange which would insure acceptance of the offer. Since the plan was filed the market reports have given quotations of such bonds of the new companies "if and when." While such reports are possibly not competent evidence in the trial of a cause, they seem to indicate that if the present plan be approved a very brief period will suffice for the disappearance of substantially all the old bonds and the elimination from the treasury of the American Co. of the money or securities required to make them good at maturity. Thus the menace of holding an enormous amount of money, additional to what is legitimately used in the business of the American Co., will disappear. Upon the hearing committees representing a majority of the holders of both issues of bonds appeared and requested the court to approve the plan. Out of the entire two issues, amounting to over $100,000,000, one holder only of ten 4 per cent bonds appeared to object on the ground that the terms offered for sale and exchange were not satisfactory to him. Inasmuch as he is under no obligation to accept the offer if it does not please him, and the security for his bonds, if the plan be carried out, will be ample, no modification of the plan is necessary to protect him or others similarly situated. A committee representing a majority of the preferred-stock holders also asked that the proposed plan be approved.

The plan contains very many provisions, necessarily so because of the intricate nature of the combination of corporations about to be disrupted. It would unreasonably extend this opinion to undertake to epitomize these provisions. An admirably clear summary of them has been filed by the proponents and may be considered as in the nature of a recital to this opinion. Besides distributing among its common-stock holders a large amount of the stock it now holds in other companies, the American Tobacco Co. will be split into three companies, which, with a fourth set free of control by the American Co. through such distribution of stock, will divide between themselves the property now owned and the business now done by the American Co. Each of these four companies will thus have a business which, in every branch of it, will fall materially below a percentage sufficient to control. There are similar disruptions among the accessory companies, for the details of which the plan or the summary may be consulted.

Some of those who have been heard in opposition insist that no plan is practicable; that in conformity with the statute as construed by the Supreme Court the only thing for this court to do is to seize the property through receivership and proceed to sell it. This proposition need not be discussed. Evidently the Supreme Court believed some plan was practicable, or it would not have directed this court to inquire into the matter.

Upon the hearing other plans for dissolving and re-creating were submitted, plans not merely suggesting modifications of the one proposed, but differing widely from it in form and scope. One of them calls for a division into upward of 60 different companies. Others for a distribution of properties by specific allotments, as in the case of a partition of real estate. No time need be given to a consideration of any of these, since there is no suggestion that the defendants will adopt them. On the contrary, counsel for the defendants expressly stated on the argument that they would not undertake to carry them out. Presumably they think they might better take their chances at receiver's sale. This court has neither authority nor power to carry out and enforce any plan of readjustment without the cooperation of the owners of the property, the holders of these stocks and bonds. It would be a sheer waste of time, therefore, to consider any plan radically different from the one now before us. If we find this plan would not create the condition defined in the opinion of the Supreme Court, or if such modifications as we may require as a condition of giving our approval are not accepted by defendants, we must obey the mandate of that court, must seize the property and sell it at public auction, in appropriate and convenient lots, applying the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the debts, including the mortgages, or of such dividend thereon as the proceeds may allow, turning over the surplus, if any, to the owners of the equity.

The main objection to the proposed plan, an objection found in every document filed by those who were given permission to be heard and which seemed to be principally relied on by those who spoke, is what is referred to as "common-stock holding." For instance, under the plan two new companies, "Lorillard" and "Liggett & Myers," will be formed out of the American, which will itself, thus reduced in size, continue in existence. The same individuals, the present 1,800 or more common-stock holders of the American, will hold the entire common stock of each of the other two companies. A similar condition will exist with some, at least, of the other companies. It is contended that, although under such circumstances there may be potential competition, no real competition can exist. With this argument or the reply to it, it seems to me this court is not concerned. In two recent cases (the Northern Securities and the Standard Oil) the Supreme Court found a combination of corporations to have offended against the antitrust act. As a result of such finding there was a disintegration of the combination. In each case the disintegration left the stock of the separate entities into which the group was split in the hands of the same body of individual stockholders. Since there was no disapproval of this method of disintegration indicated in either opinion, it would seem that the question whether or no common-stock holding is "repugnant to the law"—that is, repugnant to the antitrust act—has been settled for this court by controlling authority.

It is true that the Supreme Court did not enter into any discussion of this question of "common ownership," but its existence in both cases was so plainly manifest that it is difficult to understand how the court could have approved of the new arrangement unless it was satisfied that such arrangement did not contain the same vice as the old one which they held must be terminated. If this be so, discussion here of the question whether or not common ownership is within the prohibition of the statute would seem to be academic. This also seems to be the view of the Government, which does not discuss common-stock holding.

The next objection presented by those, not parties, who have been heard is directed to the size of the companies. As an illustration, it appears from the statistics submitted that of the total smoking-tobacco business of the country four companies will have the following percentages: American, 33.08; Liggett & Myers, 20.05; Lorillard, 22.82; Reynolds, 2.66. It is insisted that these large companies should be still further disintegrated. The plan is further criticized because each of these companies is described as "completely equipped for the conduct of a large tobacco business," whereas existing independent concerns are none of them so equipped; and it is argued that there can be no effective competition until the several concerns which are to carry forward the business of the trust are put into the same condition as to size and equipment as now prevails among existing independent concerns. It is further contended that no company engaged in the plug-tobacco business should be allowed to take over any cigarette or cigar business; that a company taking a cigarette business should not take over any smoking-tobacco, plug, or cigar business, and so on. That there should be a rearrangement of factories and brands, an intricate subject which is fully discussed in a report from the Bureau of Corporations filed at the hearing. Manifestly, the minuter the fragments into which the old combination is split and the more they are prohibited from conducting business as other companies are free to conduct it, the less will be their ability to compete with such other companies. This whole line of argument deals with the economics of the tobacco business. No doubt the novel problem presented to this court is connected with questions of economics as well as with questions of law. But this is a court of law, not a commerce commission, and the legal side of the proposition would seem to be the controlling one. The true way to state the problem, as I understand it, is this: Assume that a group of corporations engaged in some business which comes within the domain of interstate commerce is charged before the Supreme Court with violation of the antitrust act. Assume that they are organized as the companies provided for in this plan will be, that they are similarly capitalized, that the business they do is similar in amount and similarly distributed, that their stock is similarly held, with the natural temptation to cooperate with such common-stock holding may be calculated to induce, but are also curbed and restrained from yielding to such temptation as these companies will be by the injunction which will accompany our approval of this plan—a permanent injunction binding all defendants in this suit and their privies, and all new companies created under the plan and their privies. Would the Supreme Court hold that the condition thus presented was "repugnant to the law"; that is, repugnant to the antitrust statute? A long and careful study of the last two deliverances of that court (in the Standard Oil case and in this case) has convinced me that its answer to that question would be in the negative. I may be wrong in interpretation of its deliverances—if so, it will not be for the first time—but since such is my conviction there would seem to be no necessity for discussing, on its economic side, a question already settled by controlling authority.

Leaving for the moment the objections and suggestions of persons not parties, those of the Attorney General may be next considered. He does not attack the general features of the proposed plan, with its division of the business controlled by the old company among 14 companies, nor does he contend that "common-stock holding" is in and by itself an infraction of the antitrust statute. His suggested modifications are directed mainly toward providing such safeguards for the future that the 14 companies may not so conduct their operations as to violate the provisions of the statute. He requests that the following conditions to any approval of the plan submitted be imposed. Presumably the more convenient way to impose most of such restrictions would be by injunctive provisions incorporated in the final decree.

1. That during a period of not less than five years no one of the corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed shall have any officer or director who is also an officer or director in any other of such corporations. This suggestion is approved.

2. That the plan be so modified that the principal company shall dispose of and, when the disintegration is complete, shall not retain any of the stocks of any of the accessory companies, and each of the accessory companies shall dispose of all of the stocks held by it of the principal and of each of the other accessary companies held by it.

The general proposition here advanced is sound and is approved, but the last clause seems to be already provided for and there is probably an exception or two necessary to be made in the first clause, by reason of the rights of outstanding stockholders not connected with the American Tobacco Co. Counsel can probably agree as to a phraseology which will conform more especially to the facts.

3. That no one of the corporations among which the property and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed shall, during the same period, retain or employ the same agency for the purchase of tobacco leaf or other raw material, or for the sale of tobacco or other products, as that of any other of such corporations.

There should be a change of phraseology in this and some of the other requests. It is not entirely clear whether the prohibition is directed to all the 14 companies or only to a part of them; it should apply to all. After the words "agency for the purchase" there should be added the words "in the United States." This request, with such modifications is approved, and counsel may agree on a phraseology which will cover any possible exceptions arising from the allotments in the plan.

4. That no one of the corporations among which the property and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed shall retain or employ the same clerical or other organization, or occupy the same office or offices as any other of the said corporations.

This is approved, with modifications similar to those indicated as to the request next above.

5. That no one of the corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed shall retain and hold capital stock in any other corporation, any part of whose stock is also retained and held by any of the other of the corporations among which such properties and businesses are to be distributed, or shall purchase or acquire any stock in any other of such corporations.

This is approved, but should contain an exception, upon which it is understood counsel are in accord, in the single case of the Porto Rican Leaf Tobacco Co. Counsel may agree upon the phraseology to be inserted in the decree.

6. That no one of the corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed shall, during a period of five years, directly or indirectly, acquire any stock in any one of the others of said corporations, or purchase or acquire the property or business, or both, of any other of said corporations.

With a change of phraseology which will make this applicable to all the 14 companies this request is approved. A similar request is found among those submitted by other objectors, with an additional clause forbidding any 1 of these 14 companies "from making loans or otherwise extending credit to any of the others." This suggestion is a proper one, and may be embodied in the Attorney General's request.

7. To the end that the 29 individual defendants in this suit shall not increase their control over any of the corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed, pursuant to the plan, that such defendants be severally enjoined from, at any time within five years from the date of the decree, acquiring, directly or indirectly, the legal or equitable ownership of any amount of stock in any one of said corporations in addition to the amounts which they will respectively hold if and when the plan shall have been carried out as proposed.

This is approved, but the phraseology should be modified, as already indicated.

Upon the argument the Attorney General stated that he would be willing to substitute "three years" for "five years." Such change seems desirable; it would probable result in a more rapid distribution of present holdings. There should also be a proviso excepting from the operation of this prohibition any and all sales and purchases by these 29 individuals inter sese, the phraseology of which counsel may agree upon.

It may not be a wise public policy to make it easy for foreigners to take over the control of the British American Co., with its large and growing business in foreign countries, notably in South Africa and the Far East, now in American hands. That is what would probably happen if the 29 defendants be prohibited from increasing their holdings of that stock. We do not undertake to determine this question of public policy, which is one for the consideration of the executive branch of the Government. It is sufficient to say that a further exception of the shares of that company from the operation of this paragraph would not, in our opinion, make the plan repugnant to the law.

8. That the preferred stock of the American Cigar Co., aggregating in book value $2,530,216.69, held by the American Snuff Co., and the stock and bonds of American Tobacco Co., held by the American Snuff Co., referred to on page 11 of the plan (see decree, p. 43 hereof), be sold or otherwise disposed of within one year instead of three years, as proposed in the plan, with leave to defendants to apply to the court to extend such period for not more than two years.

There seems to be no good reason for modifying the plan in this particular.

9. That in the distribution of the properties and businesses now held in the combination pursuant to the plan of disintegration, no corporation shall be allowed to acquire property, tangible or intangible, which would invest it with as much as 40 per cent in volume or in value of any particular line of the tobacco business.

This is substantially what the plan now provides. The few instances in which the 40 per cent limitation is exceeded result from inherent difficulties of distribution, which it seems impracticable to eliminate. These instances are so few and the excess in each instance so small as to be fairly negligible. The request is denied.

10. That the stock of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., provided to be in accordance with the plan, be deposited with the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, as the agent or depository of this court in this cause, for the purposes specified in the plan, and that at the end of the period designated the court make an order for their further disposition. That in the meantime no voting right with respect to such stock shall be exercised, except as the court may from time to time order.

All of this is already sufficiently provided for in the plan.

11. That all covenants in any way restricting the right of any company or individual in the combination to buy, manufacture, or sell tobacco or its products should be rescinded by the affirmative action of the respective parties thereto who are parties to this suit.

This is approved, except that there should be a proviso excepting certain foreign business, the phraseology of which counsel may agree upon.

12. That the action proposed in subdivision C of the plan on page 6 (see decree, p. 38 hereof) terminating certain covenants be amplified so as to include like action with respect to all covenants not only concerning the tobacco business, but any other business which is in any way embraced in the combination.

This is approved. We understand the proposed plan as so providing in spirit if not in letter.

13. That all contracts or covenants between the American Tobacco Co., or any other companies in the combination, and the British-American Tobacco Co., giving to the latter company the exclusive right to manufacture or sell brands belonging to any of the companies in the combination be rescinded or otherwise terminated.

The brands thus sold passed to the purchaser for a valuable consideration under an executed contract. The request is denied.

The fourteenth request deals with the United Cigar Co., a subject which will be treated separately infra.

The Attorney General further asks for a comprehensive injunction to be incorporated in the final decree providing:

"That the defendants named in the petition, their respective officers, directors, agents, servants, and employees, be forever enjoined and prohibited from continuing or carrying into further effect the combination adjudged illegal by the Supreme Court, and from entering into or forming any like combination or conspiracy, the effect of which is or will be to restrain commerce in tobacco or its products or in articles used in connection with the manufacture and trade in tobacco and its products, among the States or in the Territories or with foreign nations, or to prolong the unlawful monopoly of such commerce obtained and possessed by the defendants, as adjudged herein in violation of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, either—

"1. By causing the conveyance of the physical property and business of any of the corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed to any other of said corporations; by placing the stocks or any one or more of said corporations in the hands of voting trustees or controlling the voting power of such stocks by any similar device; or

"2. By making any express or implied agreement or arrangements together or one with another like those adjudged illegal by the Supreme Court in this cause relative to the control or management of any of said corporations, or the price or terms of purchase, or of sale, of tobacco or any of its products, or the supplies of other product dealt with in connection with the tobacco business, or relative to the purchase, sale, transportation, or manufacture of tobacco, or its product or supplies or other product dealt with as aforesaid, by any of the parties hereto, which will have a like effect in restraint of commerce among the States, in the Territories, and with foreign nations to that of the combination the operation of which is enjoined in this cause; or by making any agreement or arrangement of any kind with any other of such corporations under which trade or business is apportioned between such corporations, in respect either to customers or localities; or by any of such corporations doing business directly or indirectly, under any other than their own corporate respective names; by refusing to sell to any jobber any brands of any tobacco product manufactured by it except upon condition that such jobber shall purchase from the vender some other brand or product also manufactured and sold by it; or

"3. By the British-American Co. and the Imperial Co. employing a common agent for the purchase of leaf tobacco in the United States, or by either of said two companies uniting with any of the corporations among which the properties and business now in the combination are to be distributed, in the employment of a common agent for the purchase of tobacco leaf."

The clause in the latter part of subdivision 2 as to each company doing business under its own corporate name should be more specific, especially in view of the requests of other objectors that tobacco products should be sold only under the name of the owner. There should be nothing in the decree destroying the value of a brand or altering the classification of products in the records of the Internal-Revenue Bureau. Counsel may agree upon a modified phraseology to avoid any such difficulty, leaving the 14 companies to pursue all ordinary methods prevailing in the tobacco business.

The clause as to refusing to sell to any jobber should be reconstructed so as not to prohibit any of the 14 companies from methods of business which are open to and practiced by all their competitors. Counsel may agree to a phraseology which will formulate this expression of opinion.

Clause 3 should be amended by adding the words "within the United States."

With these modifications, the entire section providing for injunctions is approved.

Returning, now, to the requests of the various other objectors, we find that nearly all of them are covered by those of the Attorney General or have been already disposed of by the discussion of the general features of the plan. Among those not so disposed of are noted requests that the 14 companies be enjoined—

A. From giving away or selling at or below the cost of manufacture and distribution any of its products; from giving rebates, allowances, or other special inducements to purchasers or users; and from refusing to sell to any jobber any special brand he may require.

The record in this case shows that these are the common methods of the tobacco business, practiced by all alike. It is only by giving away samples or by offering on favorable terms, irrespective of cost, that new brands of tobacco products can be introduced or old brands extended into new territory. All other companies are free to employ these methods, which are obnoxious to no statute, and there is no reason why the 14 companies should be forbidden to do so. This request is denied.

B. From espionage on the business of any competitor, from bribery of employees of such competitors, and from obtaining information from any United States revenue official.

Why any one individual or corporation engaged in this business may not acquire such information as he or it can legitimately obtain from private or public sources as to the business of a competitor we fail to see. When illegitimate methods are proved they may be dealt with. This request is denied.

C. That every independent or other person interested should, in the event of any alleged violation of the injunction, have liberty to apply to the court for protection and for such action as may appear to be appropriate.

The result of such a provision would be to overwhelm the court with a multitude of applications, mainly frivolous. Anyone who feels aggrieved should take his complaint to the Attorney General, who will winnow the wheat from the chaff. If he finds substance in any allegation he can bring it before the court. This request is denied.

D. It is requested that the majority stock of the Lippfert Scales Co., now owned by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., be sold, "with an injunction against any present stockholder in the Reynolds Co., in the American Co., or any of the allied companies, from purchasing at such sale." A similar request for a sale, under like restrictions, is made as to the stock of five other companies now owned by the American Tobacco Co.

This request is denied for reasons set forth infra in discussing the disposition of the stock of the United Cigar Stores Co.

E. The attorney general of the State of New York suggests that the proposed plan may violate the antimonopoly laws of this State. He does not indicate in what respect it will do so.

We think it unnecessary to make any investigation on the line suggested. Our approval of this plan will not secure to these 14 companies immunity for violation of the laws of this or of any other State.

Referring next to the defendant, the Imperial Tobacco Co., the Attorney General asks that the plan shall include provisions terminating all executory contracts or agreements between the Imperial Tobacco Co., on the one hand, and the American Tobacco Co. and the British-American Tobacco Co. and each and every of the corporations parties defendant hereto, on the other; and also a provision enjoining the said American Tobacco Co. from uniting with the British-American Co. in the employment of a common agent for the purchase of leaf tobacco in the United States and from uniting with any of the corporations among which the properties and business now in the combination are to be distributed, in the employment of a common agent for the purchase of leaf tobacco or any of the products of tobacco.

These provisions, of course, should be restricted to such as affect trade or commerce between the States or between the United States and foreign countries. We understand that the proposed plan in substance so provides; but if there be any doubt as to its doing so, counsel may agree on the form of amendments which will insert these provisions.

The disposition of the United Cigar Stores Co. has been discussed by most of the objectors. Those who represent the independents insist that it shall be split up into separate concerns, "preferably 10."

It is not one of the so-called accessory companies, and the Supreme Court has not directed that it be disintegrated. Upon the trial much testimony was taken as to this company, and the question whether or not it was a combination obnoxious to the provisions of the antitrust act was carefully examined. We reached the conclusion unanimously that it was not. A succinct statement of our reasons for reaching that conclusion will be found in Judge Coxe's opinion (164 F. R., 700).

We therefore dismissed the bill as to that company. The Supreme Court, however, held that we erred in so doing, solely because the American Tobacco Co. had bought and held two-thirds of its capital stock which brought it into the general combination. Under the proposed plan all this stock held by the American Tobacco Co. is to be distributed to its own common-stock holders, and the sole ground upon which the Supreme Court reversed this court is thus removed. The situation will then stand, as to all other grounds, as it did before and we see no reason to change the opinion expressed on the original hearing. No new evidence is offered, except to the fact that it has, in the interim, largely increased the number of its stores. Such increase, however, leaves it in control of less than 4 per cent of the entire business in which it is engaged. The request to disintegrate it is denied.

The Attorney General does not ask that it be disintegrated. He has, however, argued at length and with much earnestness that the continued growth of this enterprise affects the small retail dealer, who is without capital to compete with it and applies to the Government to protect him. There may come a time when the growth of this company or the methods by which such growth is stimulated may bring it within the prohibition of the statute. But that time has not yet come, and the only request the Attorney General, in response to appeals for aid, has formulated is this:

That the stock of the United Cigar Stores Co. be sold and distributed to parties other than the 29 individual defendants or others of the common stockholders of the American Tobacco Co., to the end that the corporation be entirely separated from any connection with the corporations to which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed.

We have no power to grant any such request. The antitrust act carefully enumerates the penalties for a violation of its provisions—fines, imprisonment, injunction against continuing to transact interstate business, treble damages to all persons injured by any unlawful combination, seizure and forfeiture of property in course of interstate transportation. These are certainly ample to enforce obedience. By confiscation of property in transit and injunction against continuance in interstate business an offender may be put out of active existence into a state of paralysis as helpless as dissolution. It might be said that to these penalties the Supreme Court has added another, a qualified confiscation of property not in transit by receivership and forced sale.

Nowhere, however, is there any authority for the proposition that this court may seize the property of private persons, who may have offended against the statute and sell it under conditions which would preclude the holder of the title or the owner of the equity from bidding at the sale so as to compel the purchaser to pay a reasonable price for it, or from buying it himself if no one else will pay full value for it. That is confiscation; none the less so because the proceeds of such a sale, after paying outstanding debts and expenses, are to be turned over to the owner. Until Congress shall expressly give such power to this court, or until some obscure language in its grant of power shall be construed by the Supreme Court as in effect conveying such power, this court is not prepared to assume that it possesses any such authority. The request is denied.

The Ludington Cigarette Machine Co., which has a decree for an accounting against the Anargyros Co., has applied for relief. The stock of the last-named company is by the plan to be transferred to P. Lorillard Co. The Ludington Co. asks for the insertion of a provision which will secure it against any resulting difficulty on such accounting.

Provision should be made in carrying out the plan for keeping intact the books and records of the American Tobacco Co., its present constituents, and branches, so that they shall be available and subject to examination to the same extent as at present in suits for accounting and other existing litigation.

The Attorney General further requests that there should be reserved to the Government the right at any time within five years from date of entry to apply to the court for other and further relief upon a showing that, as a matter of fact, such plan has not resulted in creating a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law.

It is not apparent that this court has the power so to do. Had it not been for the mandate of the Supreme Court it might be questioned whether a circuit court of the United States had any jurisdiction to recreate a new group of corporations out of the elements into which a preexisting group of corporations had been split or to formulate a plan or method according to which individuals, natural or corporate, were to be invited to invest money and embark in business. All such questions are, of course, resolved for us by the decision of the court of last resort. But neither in its mandate nor in its opinion is there any warrant for the conclusion that this court is to prescribe the temporary terms of a modus vivendi, with power to reassemble five years hence—ourselves or our successors and survivors—and modify those terms, while in the interim by purchase or exchange of these bonds upward of $100,000,000 worth of property shall have changed hands irrevocably. The only function assigned to us is to consider any proposed plan—which responsible parties engaged to carry out—and approve or reject it. In the event of rejection the only alternative is injunction, receivership, and sale. The time limit fixed in the mandate, six months and possibly two more, precludes any other construction of its terms.

Circuit Judge Ward concurs.

OPINION OF CIRCUIT JUDGE COXE.

I approve of the proposed plan, not because I think it perfect, but because it is the best plan attainable. Perfection is impossible. The condition existing before the illegal combination was formed can not be restored; it has gone beyond the hope of recall. The plan, which we have sanctioned eliminates the objectionable features prohibited by the antitrust act and permits no unreasonable or unlawful restraint of trade. In short, were the various corporations which the plan authorizes organized for the first time to-day they would not be within the letter or the mischief of the statute. We have endeavored, while punishing the guilty defendants—corporations and individuals—to remember that the rights of many innocent bondholders and shareholders are at stake and should be protected as far as is consistent with a complete compliance with the requirements of the law. The plan disintegrates the combination, destroys the monopoly, and liberates trade, but it accomplishes all this without a wanton destruction of property.

I have been impressed with the evident intention of counsel representing the various defendants to accept without reservation the result of the litigation and faithfully to carry out the plan, not only in letter but in spirit as well. Many suggestions have been advanced by counsel representing persons not parties to the suit which from an economic or ethical viewpoint are important. When, however, it is remembered that we are acting only under the command of the Supreme Court, limited as to scope and time, it will be seen how powerless we are to make conditions favorable to the so-called "independents" when we can exact no reciprocal obligations from them. We are to ascertain and determine upon "some plan or method of dissolving the combination and of recreating out of the elements now composing it a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law." This we can do, and when it is done our commission ends. The consideration which has the greatest weight with me is that no one has proposed a better plan, the only alternative offered being the appointment of a receiver—a receiver for corporations solvent and prosperous. I agree with the Attorney General that such a calamity should be avoided, except as a last resort. It is impossible to forecast the disaster which would follow such a step. It would wreck a flourishing business upon which an army of employees are depending for a livelihood, it would unsettle trade, and it would punish with equal severity the innocent and the guilty. More than this, I am by no means convinced that it would not produce the very evil which this action was instituted to destroy. A receiver can dispose of the property in his hands only by a judicial sale to the highest bidder, who will take title sanctioned by a decree of the court creating the receivership. In the present case the men best equipped to make this bid are the very men who now control the condemned corporations. It is surely possible, if not probable, that the property might thus come under their control with a title which will render them immune from further prosecution. For these reasons, thus briefly stated, I think that the plan, with the amendments directed by this court, should be adopted.

OPINION OF CIRCUIT JUDGE NOYES (CONCURRING).

The Supreme Court of the United States, after finding the illegality of this combination, placed the duty upon this court of hearing the parties "for the purpose of ascertaining and determining upon some plan or method of dissolving the combination and of recreating out of the elements now composing it a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with and not repugnant to the law."

And the Supreme Court added these words:

"In view of the considerations which we have stated, we leave the matter to the court below to work out a compliance with the law without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property."

By these directions this court is required to enter into the examination of questions economical as well as legal, and to depart from the function of determining existing controversies to the decision of the legality of future proposed action. The duty imposed is extraordinary because the Supreme Court in imposing it was dealing with an extraordinary situation.

The question was as to the relief to be afforded. A decree forbidding corporate stockholding would have been inadequate, because the combination was largely based upon property ownership. Original conditions could not be restored. Immediate extreme measures would have inflicted irreparable injury upon innocent interests. It was necessary to provide a method for determining in advance whether a proposed plan of disintegration would harmonize with the law, and hence the direction to this court.

The magnitude and varied nature of the assets of the combination, the extent of its liabilities, the ramifications of its business, and the complexity of its affairs would make our duty difficult if we were required merely to apply rules of dissolution and re-creation prescribed by the Supreme Court. But from the very intricacy of the case there are no rules. We are left without guide to turn a condition in violation of the law into a condition honestly in harmony with it. The only measure of the extent of rehabilitation required is the object to be attained. The evils found to exist alone indicate the measures required to meet them.

If, then, we approach the performance of our duty without an appreciation of the complexity of the problem and of the difficulties under which the formulators of any plan must labor, we will not go far. If we are not satisfied with a substantial compliance with the law; if we strain after the ideal and put aside the practicable, it will be easy to bring on a receivership with its attendant losses to innocent investors. But that result was what the Supreme Court was solicitous of avoiding, and I think it intended that we should recognize the problem presented to us as a very practical one to be disposed of in a practical way. Moreover, in the performance of our duty we owe much to the Attorney General, who, while always insisting upon the rights of the public, and by such insistence bringing the plan into its present shape, has, nevertheless—as it has seemed to me—felt that he, too, owed a duty to protect innocent interests and not to cause ruin and disaster by forcing extreme measures which might, even from the public point of view, in the end produce no better results than those at hand, and possibly infinitely worse.

Taking up the plan, we know at the outset that it is an honest one. It has been built up almost in our presence, and whatever question there may be as to its merits there is none of the good faith of its authors nor of the ability and conscientiousness with which they have performed their tasks.

The present combination has vast capitalization and assets. The corporations of the plan will have large capitalization and assets. Whether that is an objection should be considered.

The Supreme Court did not condemn the combination on account of the great amount of property which it had acquired. Indeed, it must now be accepted that magnitude of business in and of itself does not constitute unlawful monopoly, at least up to the point where economy of production and management are thereby promoted. There must be something more—some unlawful or oppressive act or purpose in acquiring the business or after its acquisition—to come within the condemnation of the statute. But it can not be denied that there is an enormous inherent and collateral power incident to the holding by a single corporation of vast assets which no group of individuals, although having similar possessions, could obtain. There is such a potentiality of monopolization that a court in striving to bring about a condition in harmony with the law should hesitate to approve the existence of a producing corporation having vast assets not necessary for the work of production. Consequently, when it appeared in the formulation of this plan that the American Tobacco Co. was to receive from the other corporations over $100,000,000 in cash and securities which it was required to hold to meet its indebtedness, but which it did not need in its business, the plan, notwithstanding many valuable features, seemed unacceptable. But, meeting the objections of the Attorney General, a way was found, as shown in the plan, of appropriating those funds to the payment of debts so that the readjusted American Co.—still the largest of all—will possess some one hundred millions of property—mostly working assets and brand values—as compared with the three hundred millions it formerly held. In view of modern commercial conditions, I think that the court should make no objection to the mere size of the corporations of the plan.

Taking up the question, then, whether the plan gives effect to the statute, the answer, as we have seen, depends upon whether it remedies the conditions found to violate the statute, and it is necessary to turn to the decision of the Supreme Court to find out those conditions.

Without examining the decision in detail, it is sufficient here to say that the court found broadly the combination to be in restraint of trade within the first section, and an attempt to monopolize and a monopolization within the second section, of the statute. In particular, the court found among the bases for its conclusions (a) covenants of vendors and others binding themselves for long periods not to compete with the combination; (b) the absorption of the control of corporations supplying the elements essential to the manufacture of tobacco products and other corporate stock holding; (c) the existence of controlling "power in the hands of the few"; (d) the obtaining of control of the tobacco trade by wrongful and oppressive acts, agreements, and arrangements.

Obviously the evil of restrictive covenants must be met by the termination of such covenants, and that is accomplished by the plan. It provides for the abrogation of all covenants made by vendor corporations, partnerships, or individuals not to engage in the tobacco business and for the termination of foreign restrictive covenants.

The evil of controlling the production of the elements essential to tobacco manufacture must be met by requiring the tobacco-manufacturing corporations to be disconnected from the production of such elements. This seems to be fairly accomplished by the plan. The shares held by the combination in the corporation manufacturing tin foil and the voting shares held in the corporation manufacturing licorice are to be distributed. When that is done none of the tobacco-manufacturing companies of the plan will have any legal domination over the production of those essentials. So the evil of corporate stock holding is met by divesting the American Co. of any interest in the snuff business, in the retail cigar business, and of its shares in other important corporations.

The evils pointed out by the Supreme Court growing out of the existence of power in the hands of a few to control the combination must be met by the destruction of such power. This power had its basis in the holding of a majority of the voting shares of the American Co. by the individual defendants in this suit. It is proposed to destroy this power by giving the preferred stock of the American Co., which has heretofore had no voting rights, full voting power, by creating voting rights in the preferred shares of other corporations and by so distributing shares that, in the language of the petition—

"No small group of men, nor even the 29 individual defendants in the aggregate, will own the control of any of the principal, accessory, or subsidiary companies defendant, and the control of the American Tobacco Co. itself and of the new companies to be formed will be vested in a body of more than 6,000 stockholders."

In addition to these provisions this court, at the instance of the Attorney General, will guard against the acquisition by the defendants of control in the future by enjoining them from increasing their aggregate share holdings.

With this additional provision I think the requirement that power of control be taken out of the hands of the individual defendants sufficiently met. It is true that, while shorn of legal control, they will own substantial minority interests in the different corporations, and that in the practical workings of the affairs of a corporation a minority interest, through the inaction of the majority, may often control it. But the control of a corporation lies in the majority of its shares, and if we see that the legal control of these corporations is placed in other hands than those of the defendants, I think that we go far enough. In my opinion we are not called upon to guard against the possible failure of the majority to exercise its power.

The next inquiry is whether the plan fairly meets the evil of obtaining control of the tobacco trade by oppressive tactics as well as the broad conclusion of illegality. And my opinion is that it does in case, but only in case, the state of monopoly found to exist is ended by a division of business and a state of reasonably competitive conditions established.

This is the state of monopoly which now exists: The American Co., either directly or through its ownership of stock in other corporations, controls the manufacture of 75 per cent of the smoking tobacco manufactured in the United States; 80 per cent of the plug tobacco; 79 per cent of the fine cut; 80 per cent of the cigarettes; 13 per cent of the cigars; 90 per cent of the snuff; and 93 per cent of the little cigars.

Broadly speaking, the proposed plan of disintegration is to divide the tobacco business among four corporations, no one of which is to have a controlling interest therein. When the disintegration is accomplished the business will be so distributed that no company will have substantially over 40 per cent in volume or value of any particular line. Furthermore, I am satisfied that there is to be a fair distribution of brands as well as of business.

Without examining the details of the plan, it is enough to say that careful study of it has convinced me that in so far as the distribution of business is concerned, sufficient has been done to end the state of monopoly and to establish reasonable competitive conditions. If practicable, it might have been more desirable to divide the business into a greater number of parts. But as the plan stands it can not, in my opinion, be said that any one of the corporations will have such preponderating influence in the tobacco industry as to give it power to control the market either as manufacturer, seller, or purchaser. The possibility of future acts of oppression is to be guarded against by a comprehensive injunction.

This brings us to the final question, which is whether the fact of common-stock holding is a material objection to the plan.

Obviously common ownership in the shares of the various corporations can not well be avoided. Each stockholder of the American Co. has an undivided interest in its property remaining after the payment of its debts. When its assets are distributed among stockholders, each is entitled to his proportionate share. When such distribution takes the shape of corporate shares, the necessary result is a common ownership of stock in different corporations. I am not convinced that in the absence of statutory authority any division by valuation and allotment could be effected, and if legally possible it is evident that the complicated conditions which would necessarily arise in carrying it out would render it impracticable within the time prescribed by the Supreme Court for the disintegration of this combination.

The objection to mutual stock holding is not that competition is eliminated in principle. Potential competition necessarily exists. The same conditions do not continue indefinitely. Stockholders die and estates are divided. Differences of opinion upon values lead to sales and exchanges. Potential competition with an open market must fairly end in real competition. But the objection is to present and not future conditions, and from an economic point of view I have always thought it entitled to serious consideration. Manifest difficulties must attend the establishment of real competition between different corporations having the same body of stockholders. In the case of small corporations having few stockholders who directly participate in their management they would be perhaps insuperable. They would decrease in proportion to the increase in the size of the corporations and the separation of the stockholders from the active management of their affairs until, as I view it, in the case of the disintegration of a corporation having vast assets and a very large number of scattered stockholders they would be so minimized as hardly to warrant consideration even from an economic standpoint.

That which has made me pause in the present case is the concentrated common-stock holding of the individual defendants, but after careful consideration I have reached the conclusion that the objection should not operate to prevent the acceptance of the plan, but should call for most rigorous measures of injunctive relief to keep the various corporations apart, independent and free from connections or arrangements to prevent competition. In reaching this conclusion I am influenced by the proposition stated at the outset, that we should take care that we do not by seeking the ideal reject the practicable and put in peril innocent property interests, and I am controlled, as I view it, by the decisions of the Supreme Court in the Northern Securities and Standard Oil cases. It is impossible for me to read those decisions without being convinced that the Supreme Court in remanding this case to us did not intend that we should reject a plan upon the ground of pro rata distribution. I am also influenced, if not controlled, by the position taken by the Attorney General, the representative of the party plaintiff in the cause.

So, taking the plan as a whole, with the essential measure of injunctive relief proposed by the Attorney General, I think that it meets the principal evils pointed out in the opinion of the Supreme Court; that it brings about a condition fairly in harmony with the law, and that it is the duty of this court to approve it as the best solution possible under all the circumstances of a very difficult practical problem.

In conclusion: The extent to which it has been necessary to tear apart this combination and force it into new forms, with the attendant burdens, ought to demonstrate that the Federal antitrust statute is a drastic statute which accomplishes effective results; which, so long as it stands on the statute books, must be obeyed, and which can not be disobeyed without incurring far-reaching penalties. And, on the other hand, the successful reconstruction of this organization should teach that the effect of enforcing this statute against industrial combinations is not to destroy, but to reconstruct; not to demolish, but to re-create in accordance with the conditions which the Congress has declared shall exist among the people of the United States.

I concur in the opinion of Judge Lacombe and fully approve his deposition of the subjects not considered in this opinion.

[In the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.]

The United States of America, plaintiff, against The American Tobacco Co. and others, defendants.

DECREE.

Appeals having been taken by the plaintiff and certain defendants in this cause from the decree entered by this court on the 15th day of December, 1908, the Supreme Court of the United States reversed said decree and issued its mandate filed herein on the 30th day of June, 1911, by which the said cause was remanded to this court with directions to enter a decree in conformity with the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, and to take such further steps as might be necessary to fully carry out said directions. By the said opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States this court was directed to "hear the parties by evidence or otherwise as it may deem proper, for the purpose of ascertaining and determining upon some plan or method of dissolving the combination, and of re-creating out of the elements now composing it a new condition which shall be honestly in harmony with, and not repugnant to, the law, but without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property." And this cause having come on to be finally heard pursuant to the order or decree of this court, made and entered herein on August 3, 1911, on the mandate of the Supreme Court of the United States as aforesaid, the American Tobacco Co. and the other defendants herein, except United Cigar Stores Co., the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.), and R. P. Richardson, jr., & Co. (Inc.), filed in this court on October 16, 1911, a petition proposing and embodying a plan or method of dissolving the combination, and of re-creating out of the elements now composing it a new condition in harmony with, and not repugnant to, the law. Due notice was given to the parties hereto that the hearing on the said petition would be had on October 30, 1911, in room 124 of the Federal Building, in New York City; and thereafter, to wit, on the 19th day of October, 1911, the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.), filed a petition.

At the time and place aforesaid, the plaintiff filed answers to the said petitions, embodying proposed modifications of and additions to the plan proposed in said petition of the American Tobacco Co. and other defendants. The parties having been heard by counsel, and certain of the modifications of said plan included in the answer of the plaintiff not being opposed by the proponents of said plan, and others of said modifications included in said answer having been disposed of by this court in its opinions delivered after said hearing.

Now, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that all the defendants—except Welford C. Reed, who died before the final hearing—heretofore became parties to and engaged in the combination assailed in the pleadings, which "in and of itself, as well as each and all of the elements composing it, whether corporate or individual, whether considered collectively or separately," is "in restraint of trade and an attempt to monopolize, and a monopolization within the first and second sections of the antitrust act," and which should be dissolved and a new condition brought about in harmony with and not repugnant to the law, either as a consequence of the action of this court in determining an issue or in accepting a plan agreed upon.

And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plan as modified by the consent of the parties, or through the action of this court as aforesaid, is as follows, to wit:

A.

DISSOLUTION OF AMSTERDAM SUPPLY CO.

Amsterdam Supply Co. is a company engaged in the business of purchasing for a commission or brokerage supplies other than leaf tobacco, its principal customers being defendant corporation herein. It has $235,000 at par of stock, all held in varying amounts by certain corporation defendants, one or the other of your petitioners, and a surplus of $127,058.74.

It is proposed that Amsterdam Supply Co. be dissolved, converting its assests into cash and distributing them to its stockholders.

B.

ABROGATION OF FOREIGN RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

Under the contracts of September 27, 1902, the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland (Ltd.) and certain of its directors agreed not to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling tobacco in the United States, the American Tobacco Co. and American Cigar Co. and certain of their directors agreed not to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling tobacco in Great Britain and Ireland; and the American Tobacco Co., American Cigar Co., and the Imperial Tobacco Co. agreed not to engage in the business of manufacturing or selling tobacco in countries other than Great Britain and Ireland and the United States. Under the provisions of these contracts the British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) was organized and took over the export businesses of the American Tobacco Co. and the Imperial Tobacco., with factories, materials, and supplies.

It is proposed that the covenants herein just described, as well as all covenants restricting the right of any company or individual in the combination to buy, manufacture, or sell tobacco or its products, be rescinded by the affirmative action of the respective parties thereto who are parties to this suit, except such of said covenants, whether or not contained in the contracts of September 27, 1902, as (a) relate wholly to business in foreign countries and are covenants the benefit whereof has been assigned or transferred to other parties; or (b) are covenants exclusively between foreign corporations and relating wholly to business in or between foreign countries; and that the said contracts of September 27, 1902, be altogether terminated so far as they impose any obligations upon any of the parties thereto to furnish or to refrain from furnishing manufactured tobaccos to any party, each company to treat as its own, but only to the extent provided for in said contracts, all brands and trade-marks which by said contracts it was given the right to manufacture and sell, the said rights having been perpetual and constituting in effect a conveyance of the brands and trade-marks used for the countries in which they were so used by each of said companies as aforesaid.

C.

ABROGATION OF DOMESTIC RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

It is proposed that covenants given by vendor corporations, partnerships, or individuals, or by stockholders of vendor corporations, to vendee corporations defendants herein, not to engage in the tobacco business or any other business in any way embraced in the combination, be terminated so that all such covenanters shall be at liberty to engage in the business of buying, manufacturing, and dealing in tobacco and its products just as if such covenants had not been made.

D.

DISINTEGRATION OF ACCESSORY COMPANIES.

(1) The Conley Foil Co.—The Conley Foil Co. has a capital stock of $825,000 at par, all of one class, of which the American Tobacco Co. owns $495,000 at par, the balance being held by persons not defendants nor connected with defendants. It is engaged in the business of manufacturing tin foil, a product used largely by tobacco manufacturers, but having other uses as well. The Conley Foil Co. has a plant in New York City, and it owns all the stock and bonds of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co., which has a plant in St. Louis. The value of the output for the year 1910 of the Conley Foil Co. was $1,780,526.85, with a net profit of $273,299.82, and the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. had an output for the year 1910 of the value of $676,520.05 and net profits of $66,255.16. On December 31, 1910, the Conley Foil Co. had tangible assets (excluding its securities of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co.) of $1,215,321, and the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. had assets of the value of $379,802.11. The Conley Foil Co. has a surplus exceeding the value of the securities of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co.

It is proposed that the Conley Foil Co. cancel the bonds of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. held by it, to wit, $100,000 per value, and distribute to its stockholders its holdings of stock of the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co., to wit, 3,000 shares, all of one class.

The American Tobacco Co., being a stockholder of the Conley Foil Co., will participate in this distribution, and will in turn distribute its dividend, as well as its stock in the Conley Foil Co., to its common-stock holders as hereinafter set forth.

(2) MacAndrews & Forbes Co.—MacAndrews & Forbes Co. is a company having a common capital stock of $3,000,000 at par, of which the American Tobacco Co. owns $2,112,900 at par, the balance being held by persons not defendants nor connected with defendants (except less than 3¼ per cent of the common stock held by R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.), and $3,758,300 at par of 6 per cent nonvoting preferred stock, of which the American Tobacco Co. holds $750,000 at par, the balance being held by persons not defendants nor connected with defendants. It is engaged in the production of licorice paste, with two plants—one at Camden, N. J., and the other at Baltimore, Md. It had tangible assets, December 31, 1910, of the value of $5,683,824.89 (including $2,118,448.36 licorice root, with plants for its collection in foreign countries), and its sales for the year 1910 were of the value of $4,427,023.44. MacAndrews & Forbes Co. succeeded to the business of MacAndrews & Forbes, a partnership, who were pioneers in this country in the production of licorice paste, and who had, for many years before any acquisitions of other business and before they had any connection with the other defendants herein, more than 50 per cent of all the licorice-paste business of the United States.

It is proposed that a new corporation be organized, called the J. S. Young Co., and that it shall acquire the Baltimore plant of MacAndrews & Forbes Co., with the assets used therein and in connection therewith, of a total value of $1,000,000, and the brands of licorice paste manufactured in said Baltimore plant; that it issue in payment therefor, with the good will connected therewith, $1,000,000 at par of 7 per cent preferred nonvoting stock and $1,000,000 at par of common stock; that MacAndrews & Forbes Co. distribute the common stock of the J. S. Young Co. as a dividend to its common-stock holders, charging the amount thereof to its surplus account; that MacAndrews & Forbes Co. offer to its preferred-stock holders proportionately to exchange the 7 per cent preferred stock of the J. S. Young Co. at par for their preferred stock of MacAndrews & Forbes Co.; that so far as the preferred stock of MacAndrews & Forbes Co. is thus exchanged, it be retired; that so far as this preferred stock of the J. S. Young Co. is not forthwith thus exchanged, MacAndrews & Forbes Co. be enjoined from using it to exercise, or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise, influence or control over the J. S. Young Co.; and with the further provision that on or before January 1, 1905, the whole of this preferred stock of the J. S. Young Co., not theretofore taken out of the treasury of MacAndrews & Forbes Co. by exchange as aforesaid, be disposed of by MacAndrews & Forbes Co.

This would give to MacAndrews & Forbes Co. a licorice business, including Spanish licorice and powdered goods, of the net selling value, based upon the year 1910, of $2,514,184.64, of which $2,214,127.51 arise from sales of one brand, to wit, the old "Ship" brand. The J. S. Young Co., upon the basis of the business for the year 1910, would have an output of the net selling value of $1,201,109.86.

The American Tobacco Co., being a holder of the common stock of MacAndrews & Forbes Co., will participate in the distribution above provided and will in turn distribute its dividend, as well as its stock in MacAndrews & Forbes Co., to its common-stock holders as hereinafter set forth.

(3) American Snuff Co.—American Snuff Co. is a manufacturer of snuff. It holds all of the stock of De Voe Snuff Co., to wit, $50,000 at par; and one-half, to wit, $26,000 at par, of the stock of National Snuff Co. It owns no other interest in any company manufacturing or selling snuff.

It is proposed that there be organized two new snuff companies, one to be called the George W. Helme Co. and the other Weyman-Bruton Co., and that American Snuff Co. convey to these two companies, respectively, factories, with the brands manufactured in them, as follows: To the George W. Helme Co. the factories at Helmetta, N. J., and Yorklyn, Del., except factory No. 5; to Weyman-Bruton Co. the factories at Chicago and Nashville, also all the stock of De Voe Snuff Co. and the one-half of the stock of National Snuff Co. held by American Snuff Co. Based upon the business for the year 1910 and the assets at the end of the year, with proper provision for leaf, materials, cash and book accounts for the two vendee companies, this would leave the three companies equipped as follows.

Manufacturing tangible assets.

American Snuff Co.	[1] $5, 075, 969. 72
George W. Helme Co.	4, 909, 000. 40
Weyman-Bruton Co.	3, 691, 588. 20

Sales value during 1910.

American Snuff Co.	$5, 520, 422. 15
George W. Helme Co.	4, 494, 556. 66
Weyman-Bruton Co.	4, 297, 486. 71

Net income.

American Snuff Co.	[1] $1, 591, 280. 49
George W. Helme Co.	1, 259, 280. 98
Weyman-Bruton Co.	1, 293, 759. 39

Each of these vendee corporations will pay for the property and business conveyed to it by the issue of $4,000,000 at par of 7 per cent voting preferred stock and $4,000,000 at par of common stock. American Snuff Co. will thus receive the $16,000,000 at par of these stocks into its treasury, and will distribute to its common-stock holders, as a dividend, the common stock, aggregating $8,000,000, to be charged to its surplus account. American Snuff Co. will offer to its preferred-stock holders proportionately to exchange these 7 per cent preferred stocks of the George W. Helme Co. and the Weyman-Bruton Co. for their preferred stock of American Snuff Co. at par. So much of the preferred stock of American Snuff Co. as is thus exchanged will be retired. As to so much of the preferred stocks of the George W. Helme Co. and the Weyman-Bruton Co. as is not forthwith thus exchanged, American Snuff Co. to be enjoined from voting it, or using it to exercise, or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise, influence or control over the George W. Helme Co. or the Weyman-Bruton Co.; and on or before January 1, 1915, all of these preferred stocks of the George W. Helme Co. and the Weyman-Bruton Co. not theretofore taken out of the treasury of American Snuff Co. by exchange as aforesaid to be disposed of by American Snuff Co.

The American Tobacco Co., being a holder of the common stock of American Snuff Co., will participate in the distribution above provided, and will, in turn, distribute its dividends as well as its stock in American Snuff Co., including that to be acquired from P. Lorillard Co., to its common-stock holders as hereinafter set forth.

(4) American Stogie Co.—American Stogie Co. is a corporation whose only asset is all of the issued stock of Union-American Cigar Co., which latter company has cigar factories located at Pittsburgh, Allegheny, Lancaster, and Newark. Its total production, based upon business for the year 1910, is only 1.58 per cent of the entire production of cigars in the United States in volume, and, as these petitioners believe, about the same percentage in value. American Stogie Co. has $976,000 at par of 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock, of which American Cigar Co. owns $40,000 at par, and none of the other defendants own any; it has $10,879,000 at par of common stock, of which American Cigar Co. owns $7,303,775 at par, and none of the other defendants own any. There are accumulated and unpaid dividends on the preferred stock to the amount of $399,000 as of December 31, 1910.

It is proposed that American Stogie Co. dissolve, with leave granted to the trustees in dissolution to either convert the assets into cash, and distribute them among the stockholders according to their rights, or to effect such reorganization as they may be able to effect, provided that in either event there shall be a separation into at least two different ownerships of the factories and businesses now owned and operated by Union-American Cigar Co. If the dissolution is followed by a conversion of the assets of American Stogie Co. into cash, American Cigar Co. will take such cash as it may receive into its treasury; if it receives upon such dissolution securities of cigar-manufacturing concerns, it will distribute such as a dividend to its common-stock holders, to be charged to its surplus as hereinafter set forth.

(5) American Cigar Co.—American Cigar Co. is a manufacturer of cigars. It has various factories of its own, and it owns all or a part of the stock of several companies engaged in the manufacture of cigars, all of which companies have been organized by it and which have received from it conveyances of part of its business, operating in this way as separate corporations for trade purposes. Among these companies is Federal Cigar Co.

American Cigar Co. also owns a part of the stock of Havana Tobacco Co., which controls factories manufacturing cigars in Havana; and a part of the stock of Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of cigars and cigarettes in Porto Rico; and half of the stock of Porto Rican Leaf Tobacco Co., engaged in growing tobacco in Porto Rico. American Cigar Co. itself uses large quantities of Porto Rican grown leaf. Neither American Cigar Co. nor any of the companies in which it is interested, except Havana Tobacco Co. and Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., is engaged in the manufacture of cigars outside of the United States.

American Cigar Co., including with its production the production of companies of which it owns in whole or in part the stock, has, in volume, based on the business for the year 1910, 13.36 per cent of the cigar business of the United States, and in value, as your petitioners believe, substantially the same percentage. Havana Tobacco Co. has, directly or indirectly, control of 24.06 per cent of the total production of cigars in Cuba, 46 per cent of the total exportation of cigars from Cuba to all countries of the world, including the United States, and 38.15 per cent of the total exportation of cigars from Cuba to the United States.

It is proposed that American Cigar Co. dispose of properties belonging to it, and thus disintegrate its business, as follows:

(a) That it sell to the American Tobacco Co. for cash its stock, being all thereof, of Federal Cigar Co., at a fair price, to wit, $3,965,616.05.

(b) That it sell to the American Tobacco Co. for cash the stock it owns of Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., to wit, $657,600 at par, at a fair price, to wit, $350 per share, or $2,301,600.

(c) That American Cigar Co. dispose of any interest in American Stogie Co. by receiving cash proceeds of its stock in dissolution thereof, if American Stogie Co. upon dissolution converts its assets into cash; or by distributing as a dividend to its common-stock holders out of its surplus the securities which it receives upon the dissolution of American Stogie Co., if it receives such.

All stocks thus to be acquired by the American Tobacco Co. from American Cigar Co. are to be disposed of by the American Tobacco Co. as hereinafter set out.

E.

DISTRIBUTION BY THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. OF STOCKS OWNED OR TO BE ACQUIRED BY IT.

(1) Immediate distribution of stocks.—The American Tobacco Co. will buy from P. Lorillard Co., for cash at par, the 11,247 shares of the preferred stock of American Snuff Co. held by P. Lorillard Co., and will receive, as the sole common-stock holder of P. Lorillard Co. and by way of dividends, 34,594 shares of the common stock of American Snuff Co. held by P. Lorillard Co.

The American Tobacco Co. will distribute among its common-stock holders by way of dividends, and to be charged to its surplus, all of its securities of the following-described classes, whether now owned by it or bought by it from American Cigar Co., as hereinbefore set forth, or bought by it from P. Lorillard Co., as just hereinbefore set forth, or received by it by way of dividends from any of the accessory companies defendant, as hereinbefore set forth, to wit: American Snuff Co. common stock; American Snuff Co. preferred stock; George W. Helme Co. common stock; Weyman-Bruton Co. common stock; MacAndrews & Forbes Co. common stock; J. S. Young Co. common stock; the Conley Foil Co. stock; the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co. stock; R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. stock; Corporation of United Cigar Stores stock; British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) ordinary shares; Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co. stock; American Stogie Co. stock (or what is received by way of dividends from American Cigar Co. upon dissolution of American Stogie Co.).

Including the amount to be paid to American Cigar Co. and P. Lorillard Co. for such of these securities as are to be acquired by the American Tobacco Co. from them, respectively, and excluding those to be acquired by way of dividends, and which therefore do not affect the surplus of the American Tobacco Co., never having been set up on its books, these securities had a book value as of December 31, 1910, of $35,011,865.03. The earning capacity of all the above securities thus to be distributed, based upon the results of the year 1910, is $9,860,410.76, though not all thereof was distributed as dividends.

(2) Deferred disposition of stocks.—The American Tobacco Co. will sell or otherwise dispose of, or distribute by way of dividends to its common-stock holders out of its surplus at the time existing, before January 1, 1915, all of its holdings of the following securities: British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) nonvoting preference shares; the Imperial Tobacco Co. (of Great Britain and Ireland) (Ltd.) ordinary shares; Corporation of United Cigar Stores bonds; MacAndrews & Forbes Co. nonvoting preferred stock.

During the time these securities are left in the treasury of the American Tobacco Co. the American Tobacco Co. to be enjoined from voting any thereof that under the terms thereof might be voted, or using any thereof to exercise, or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise, influence or control over the said companies which issued the said securities, respectively, and from gaining possession of any of the said companies by buying in at a foreclosure had under any of the securities for any default with respect thereto or otherwise.

F.

SALE BY THE AMERICAN TOBACCO CO. OF MANUFACTURING ASSETS AND BUSINESS TO COMPANIES TO BE FORMED.

(1) There will be organized a new corporation called Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and a new corporation called P. Lorillard Co., and the American Tobacco Co. will sell, assign, and convey to these two companies factories, plants, brands, and businesses and capital stocks of tobacco-manufacturing corporations, as follows:

TO LIGGETT & MYERS TOBACCO CO.

Liggett & Myers branch of the American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of plug tobacco at St. Louis, with the brands connected therewith.

[1] American Snuff Co. holds securities not connected with the snuff business, to wit: Stock and bonds of the American Tobacco Co., preferred stock of American Cigar Co., aggregating in book value $2,530,216.69, upon which American Snuff Co. received in interest and dividends during the year 1910 $176,680. It is proposed that American Snuff Co. sell or otherwise dispose of these securities within three years, and that in the meantime they be held under an injunction as is provided in this paragraph with respect to securities of the George W. Helme Co. and Weyman-Bruton Co. to be temporarily held by it. It also owns all, to wit, $100,000 at par, of the stock of Garrett Real Estate Co., which will be dissolved and liquidated.

Spaulding & Merrick, a company of which the American Tobacco Co. owns and has always owned all the stock, engaged in Chicago in the manufacture of fine-cut tobacco and smoking tobacco.

Allen & Ginter branch of the American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes at Richmond, Va., and the brands connected therewith (this does not include the brand "Sweet Caporal," made partly there and partly at New York).

Chicago branch of the American Tobacco Co., a factory at Chicago engaged in the manufacture of smoking tobacco, with the brands connected therewith.

Catlin branch of the American Tobacco Co., a factory at St. Louis engaged in the manufacture of smoking tobacco, with the brands connected therewith.

Nall & Williams Tobacco Co., a company of which the American Tobacco Co. owns all the stock, engaged in the manufacture of plug and smoking tobacco at Louisville, Ky.

The John Bollman Co., a company engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes at San Francisco; of this corporation the American Tobacco Co. owns 90 per cent of the stock, which it is proposed to turn over to the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

Pinkerton Tobacco Co., a corporation engaged in the manufacture of scrap tobacco (a kind of smoking tobacco) at Toledo, Ohio; of this corporation the American Tobacco Co. owns 77½ per cent of the stock, which it is proposed to turn over to the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

W. R. Irby branch of the American Tobacco Co. at New Orleans, engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes and smoking tobacco, the principal brands being "Home Run" and "King Bee."

The Duke-Durham branch of the American Tobacco Co., engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes and smoking tobacco at Durham, N. C.; principal cigarette brands, "Piedmont" and "American Beauty"; principal smoking tobacco brand, "Duke's Mixture."

Two little cigar factories located, the one at Philadelphia and the other at Baltimore, branches of the American Tobacco Co.; principal brand, "Recruits."

TO P. LORILLARD CO.

All the rights of the American Tobacco Co. in the present P. Lorillard Co., to wit: All the common stock and $1,596,100 at par out of a total issue of $2,000,000 of 8 per cent preferred stock; it is contemplated that as a part of these reorganizations the Lorillard Co., as at present constituted, be wound up and the new company be organized, taking over assets of the P. Lorillard Co.

S. Anargyros, a company engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes, in which the American Tobacco Co. owns all the stock, and of which it has always owned all the stock.

Luhrman & Wilbern Tobacco Co., a company engaged in the manufacture of scrap tobacco (a kind of smoking tobacco), of which the American Tobacco Co. owns and has for many years owned all the stock.

Philadelphia branch B, at Philadelphia; Wilmington branch B, at Wilmington; Penn Street branch at Brooklyn; Danville branch B, at Danville; and Ellis branch B, at Baltimore, branches of the American Tobacco Co., manufacturing little cigars, the principal brand being "Between the Acts."

Federal Cigar Co., a company all of whose stock is, and has always been, owned by American Cigar Co., but which, as hereinbefore provided, is to be purchased for cash by the American Tobacco Co.

Each of these conveyances to include proper and adequate storage houses, leaf tobacco, and other materials and supplies, provision for book accounts, including in each case a ratable proportion of the cash held by the American Tobacco Co. on December 31, 1910, so that each of the new corporations will be fully equipped for the conduct of the business of manufacturing and dealing in tobacco.

(2) Resources and capitalization of companies and provisions for exchanging and retiring securities of American Tobacco Co.—The American Tobacco Co. has securities issued and outstanding as follows:

6 per cent bonds	$52,882,650
4 per cent bonds (including outstanding 4 per cent bonds of Consolidated Tobacco Co.)	51,354,100
6 per cent preferred stock	78,689,100
Common stock	40,242,400

The American Tobacco Co. in October, 1904, immediately after the merger, had an outstanding issue of its own 4 per cent bonds and the Consolidated Tobacco Co. 4 per cent bonds which it assumed, amounting to $78,689,100, but it has purchased on the market and retired $27,355,000 at par of these 4 per cent bonds, charging the amount thus expended to surplus. The 6 per cent bonds and 4 per cent bonds aforesaid are what are ordinarily known as debenture bonds, and are issued under a trust indenture which imposes a general charge on the property, income, and earnings of the company in favor, first, of the 6 per cent bonds, and, second, of the 4 per cent bonds. The American Tobacco Co. after the reduction of the surplus through the acquisition by it of 4 per cent bonds as aforesaid, had on December 31, 1910, a surplus of $61,119,991.63, which will be increased by the surplus earnings of the current year. The distribution of securities herein provided for to be forthwith made, would diminish the said surplus by $35,011,865.03, the book value of securities to be so distributed. This book value is less than actual value, but in view of the fact that none of the assets of the American Tobacco Co. are overvalued, the advance of the book value of the securities to be distributed as hereinbefore set forth to their actual value, would operate at the same time to increase the surplus of the company, and so its surplus, after such distribution, would remain just the same as though the advance to actual value had not been made on the books of the company.

The properties to be conveyed to the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., based upon conditions as of December 31, 1910, the last completed year, including in such conveyances the proper and proportionate storage houses, leaf tobacco, supplies and materials, and cash, but without anything for value of brands, trade-marks, formulæ, recipes, and good will, but including stocks of companies, are of the value of $30,607,261.96 to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and $28,091,748.86 to P. Lorillard Co. So far as these conditions shall be changed before the day of the conveyance, any deficiency is to be made good in cash, so that these two companies will have said amounts in tangible assets as aforesaid, useful, and such as have been used, in the manufacture of the brands to be conveyed to them, respectively, and cash. The American Tobacco Co. will be left with tangible assets, including stocks of companies employed in manufacturing tobacco and its products, cash and bills and accounts receivable of the value of $53,408,498.94 as of December 31, 1910. The profits earned during the year 1910 on the brands and businesses to be conveyed by the American Tobacco Co. to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. amounted to $7,468,172.02, and the profits on the brands and business to be conveyed by the American Tobacco Co. to P. Lorillard Co. amounted to $5,264,729.38.

It is proposed that the value of the brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will to be sold to each of these companies be determined by their earning capacity, based upon the results for the year 1910, so that each shall have an earning capacity of 11.02 per cent per annum upon its total property, including both tangible property and brand value and good will. Upon this basis the consideration to be paid by the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. will be $30,607,261.96, value of tangible assets as above stated, and $36,840,237.04, value of brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will, making a total of $67,447,499; and the consideration to be paid by the P. Lorillard Co. will be $28,091,748.86, value of tangible assets as above stated, and $19,460,752.14, value of brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will, making a total of $47,552,501. The brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will of the American Tobacco Co. on December 31, 1910, were of the book value of $101,324,964.07. The payments for brand value, etc., to the American Tobacco Co. to be made by Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., as aforesaid, makes an aggregate of $56,300,989.18, and would thus leave the book value of brands, trade-marks, recipes, formulæ, and good will retained by the American Tobacco Co. at $45,023,974.89, which, added to the $53,408,498.94 of tangible manufacturing assets to be retained by the American Tobacco Co., will make the total book value of manufacturing property to be retained by that company $98,432,473.83, upon which its earnings, based upon the results for the year 1910, would be $11,369,809.82, or 11.55 per cent.

The Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and the P. Lorillard Co. would pay for these conveyances, therefore, the aggregate as aforesaid, to wit:

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co	$67,447,499
P. Lorillard Co	47,552,501
Aggregating	115,000,000

or each with its earnings on the business for the year 1910 so capitalized that said earnings represent 11.02 per cent upon the capital.

Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. will issue securities to cover such capitalization in the aggregate as follows: To an amount equal to one-half of the outstanding 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., that is, $26,441,325 at par in 7 per cent bonds; to an amount equal to one-half of the outstanding 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., that is, $25,677,050 at par in 5 per cent bonds; to an amount equal to one-third of the outstanding preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co., that is, $26,229,700 at par in 7 per cent cumulative voting preferred stock, which, upon liquidation of the company, shall be paid at par with accrued unpaid dividends before any amount shall be paid to common stock, with balance of assets distributable ratably to the common stock, and the balance of said $115,000,000, that is, $36,651,925 in common stock. The 7 per cent bonds and the 5 per cent bonds to mature at the time fixed, respectively, for the maturity of the 6 per cent bonds and the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. now outstanding and to be issued under an indenture of substantially like tenor and terms with the present indenture of the American Tobacco Co. under which its 6 per cent bonds and 4 per cent bonds were issued. The 7 per cent bonds to have priority in charge over the 5 per cent bonds in the same way that the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. have priority of charge over the 4 per cent bonds. Thus the capitalization of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. will be as follows:

	Liggett & Myers.	Lorillard.	Total.
7 per cent bonds	$15,507,837	$10,933,488	$26,441,325
5 per cent bonds	15,059,589	10,617,461	25,677,050
7 per cent preferred stock	15,383,719	10,845,981	26,229,700
Common stock	21,496,354	15,155,571	36,651,925
Total	67,447,499	47,552,501	115,000,000

All of these securities of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and the P. Lorillard Co. to be turned over to the American Tobacco Co. in payment of the purchase price for the factories, plants, brands, and businesses and capital stocks of tobacco manufacturing corporations so to be conveyed to Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., respectively, as hereinbefore set out.

These securities will be disposed of by the American Tobacco Co. as follows:

The common stock will be offered for cash at par to the holders of the common stock of the American Tobacco Co. in proportion to their holdings, and any not purchased by the person thus entitled thereto shall be sold to persons other than the individual defendants, to the end that such offer of common stock of the two new companies to the common-stock holders of the American Tobacco Co. shall not be used by the individual defendants to increase their ownership therein beyond the proportion of their holdings of the common stock of the American Tobacco Co.

To each holder of the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. an offer shall be made to acquire his bonds for cancellation and to give in exchange therefor, as to one-half thereof, new 7 per cent bonds of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. at par, and in payment for the other half thereof cash at the rate of $120 and accrued interest for each $100 face value of the bonds.

To each holder of the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. an offer shall be made to acquire his bonds for cancellation, and to give in exchange therefor, as to one-half thereof, new 5 per cent bonds of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co. at par, and in payment for the other half thereof cash at the rate of $96 and accrued interest for each $100 face value of the bonds.

To each holder of the preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co. an offer shall be made to acquire one-third of his stock for cancellation in exchange for an equal amount at par of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.

On account of the larger capitalization of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., as compared with the P. Lorillard Co., each class of the new securities will issue in the proportion of 58.65 per cent thereof of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. securities and 41.35 per cent thereof of P. Lorillard Co. securities. The stocks will be issued in shares of $100, and coupon bonds in denominations of $1,000 and registered bonds in larger denominations, and in denominations of $100 and $50, and in actual issue fractions will be eliminated.

The common stocks of the two companies aforesaid are to be sold as above set out prior to March 1, 1912, with three years to be allowed for the retirement of the bonds and preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co., as above set out. Pending such, the said 7 per cent bonds, 5 per cent bonds, and 7 per cent preferred stocks of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and the P. Lorillard Co., together with an amount in cash, or in securities owned by the American Tobacco Co., at their book value, or partly in cash and partly in such securities, equal to the amounts required if all such sales and exchanges are made, will be deposited with the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York, the trustee in the indenture under which the 6 per cent bonds and the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. are issued, as the agency to effect the purchase and exchange. Such deposit will be made, not to secure nor create a trust fund for the bonds, but for the purpose of sequestrating and taking from the control of the American Tobacco Co. the securities and cash so deposited. During the time of such deposit the securities shall be in the name of, as well as in the custody of, said trust company, with any voting rights attaching thereto, but the American Tobacco Co. shall receive from the trust company all dividends and interest collected by it on account of such securities; and the American Tobacco Co. shall have the right at any time and from time to time to sell, at such price as it may determine, and direct the delivery of any of such securities (except the securities of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.), the consideration therefor to go into the hands of said trust company; or to withdraw any of such securities (except the securities of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.) for the purpose of distribution among its common-stock holders, if its surplus at the time permits; or to substitute other securities of like book value for the securities so deposited (except as to the securities of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co.); or to alter the relative proportion of cash and securities, it being the intent of this provision that there shall be sequestrated from the control of the American Tobacco Co. all the securities of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. and P. Lorillard Co., and an additional amount of cash or other securities equal, upon the purchase basis aforesaid, to the value of the 4 per cent bonds and the 6 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co. at the time outstanding. At the end of the three years, if there are any of such securities of the Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. or P. Lorillard Co. in the hands of such trust company undisposed of by such exchange as aforesaid, then the American Tobacco Co. shall apply to this court for an order as to the disposition thereof. Nothing contained in this provision, and nothing done under this provision, shall be construed as providing for the creation of, or as creating, any lien or security on anything deposited with the trust company in favor of the 6 per cent bonds or the 4 per cent bonds of the American Tobacco Co., outstanding or otherwise.

G.

VOTING RIGHTS TO PREFERRED STOCK.

By proper amendment of the certificate of incorporation of the American Tobacco Co. the preferred stock will be given full voting rights.

H.

CERTAIN INCIDENTAL PROVISIONS.

(1) P. Lorillard Co. is a New Jersey company with $3,000,000 of common stock, all of which is owned by the American Tobacco Co., and $2,000,000 of 8 per cent preferred stock. Of this preferred stock the American Tobacco Co. holds $1,596,100 at par, and there is held by others $403,900 at par. Under the laws of New Jersey the present P. Lorillard Co. may be dissolved by the holders of two-thirds of the outstanding stock, and upon such dissolution the preferred stock is entitled to be paid at par, the balance of the assets going to the common stock. In view of the fact, however, that the preferred stock of the present P. Lorillard Co. is an 8 per cent preferred stock, with abundant assets and earnings to make the principal and income secure, it is deemed fair to the holders of this outstanding $403,900 of preferred stock that they be given an opportunity to take, at their option, either cash at par, which they are legally entitled to, or the 7 per cent preferred stock of the proposed new P. Lorillard Co. As the preferred stock of the new P. Lorillard Co. is to be a 7 per cent preferred stock, the holders of said $403,900 of said present preferred stock will be offered stock of the new company at the rate of $114.25 for each share. It is therefore proposed that the new P. Lorillard Co. provide for an additional amount of preferred stock sufficient to take care of $403,900 preferred stock on that basis, to wit, $114.25 in new 7 per cent preferred stock for each $100 of said stock, amounting to $461,600 at par of preferred stock in addition to that set out hereinbefore. In view of the fact that in the statements hereinbefore made as to earnings of the P. Lorillard Co. there is included only such part of the earnings of the present P. Lorillard Co. as accrued to the proportion of its stock held by the American Tobacco Co., this increase of preferred stock would increase proportionately the profits of the P. Lorillard Co., and does not derange any of the figures hereinbefore given or given in any of the exhibits hereto and hereinafter referred to.

(2) American Snuff Co. manufactures and sells a brand of snuff called "Garrett," which has a large sale in the southern and southwestern sections of the country. Originally this brand was manufactured at Yorklyn, Del., and in part packed in Philadelphia. Several years ago American Snuff Co. determined, on account of freight-rate conditions, to manufacture this brand at Clarksville, Tenn., and to pack it at Memphis, Tenn., and that the factories at Yorklyn, Del., should be given up to the manufacture of other brands. It has yet, though, been unable to produce in Clarksville, Tenn., goods similar to the goods heretofore and now made by it at Yorklyn, Del., although the experiment is still in progress, and with hope of success. Under the plan hereinbefore outlined the brand "Garrett" snuff is allotted to American Snuff Co. and the factories other than one factory at Yorklyn, Del., are allotted to George W. Helme Co. Your petitioners pray that, in the approval and adoption by this court of this plan, American Snuff Co. and George W. Helme Co. be permitted to manufacture brands the one for the other for a period not exceeding one year from March 1, 1912, each company paying to the other as consideration for such manufacture the cost thereof plus 5 per cent. The necessity of paying 5 per cent above cost is sufficient inducement to each company to manufacture its own goods as soon as American Snuff Co. is able to manufacture "Garrett" snuff of the requisite character and kind in its Clarksville factory, thus leaving the Yorklyn factories, other than No. 5, for the manufacture by the George W. Helme Co. of its own brands.

This court having heard the parties, as directed by the Supreme Court of the United States, it is further ascertained and determined and ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said plan hereinbefore set forth is a plan or method which, taken with the injunctive provisions hereinafter set forth, will dissolve the combination heretofore adjudged to be illegal in this cause and will re-create out of the elements now composing it a new condition which will be honestly in harmony with, and not repugnant to, the law, and without unnecessary injury to the public or the rights of private property.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said plan as hereinabove set forth be, and it is hereby, approved by this court, and the defendants herein are, respectively, directed to proceed forthwith to carry the same into effect.

The necessities of the situation, in the judgment of this court, require the extension of the period for carrying into execution said plan to a further time, not to exceed 60 days, from December 30, 1911.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants be allowed until February 28, 1912, to carry said plan into execution.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants, their officers, directors, servants, agents, and employees, be, and they are hereby, severally enjoined and restrained as follows:

From continuing or carrying into further effect the combination adjudged illegal in this cause, and from entering into or forming any like combination or conspiracy, the effect of which is or will be to restrain commerce in tobacco or its products or in articles used in connection with the manufacture and trade in tobacco and its products among the States or in the Territories or with foreign nations, or to prolong the unlawful monopoly of such commerce obtained and possessed by the defendants as adjudged herein in violation of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1890, either:

1. By causing the conveyance of the factories, plants, brands, or business of any of the 14 corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed, to wit, the American Tobacco Co., Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., P. Lorillard Co., American Snuff Co., George W. Helme Co., Weyman-Bruton Co., R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.), Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co., Mac Andrews & Forbes Co., J. S. Young Co., the Conley Foil Co., the Johnston Tin Foil & Metal Co., and United Cigar Stores Co., to any other of said corporations, by placing the stocks of any one or more of said corporations in the hands of voting trustees or controlling the voting power of such stocks by any similar device; or

2. By making any express or implied agreement or arrangement together or one with another like those adjudged illegal in this cause relative to the control or management of any of said 14 corporations, or the price or terms of purchase or of sale of tobacco or any of its products or the supplies or other products dealt with in connection with the tobacco business, or relative to the purchase, sale, transportation, or manufacture of tobacco or its products or supplies or other products dealt with as aforesaid by any of the parties hereto which will have a like effect in restraint of commerce among the States, in the Territories, and with foreign nations to that of the combination, the operation of which is enjoined in this cause, or by making any agreement or arrangement of any kind with any other of such corporations under which trade or business is apportioned between such corporations in respect either to customers or localities.

3. By any of said 14 corporations retaining or employing the same clerical organization, or keeping the same office or offices, as any other of said corporations.

4. By any of said 14 corporations retaining or holding capital stock in any other corporation any part of whose stock is also retained and held by any other of said corporations: Provided, however, That this prohibition shall not apply to the holding by the Porto Rican-American Tobacco Co. and American Cigar Co. of stock in Porto Rican Leaf Tobacco Co., nor shall it apply to the holding of stock of the National Snuff Co. (Ltd.), by Weyman-Bruton Co. and British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.).

5. By any of said 14 corporations doing business directly or indirectly under any other than its own corporate name or the name of a subsidiary corporation controlled by it: Provided, however, That in case of a subsidiary corporation the controlling corporation shall cause the products of such subsidiary corporation which are sold in the United States and bear the name of the manufacturer, to bear also a statement indicating the fact of such control.

6. By any of said 14 corporations refusing to sell to any jobber any brand of any tobacco product manufactured by it except upon condition that such jobber shall purchase from the vendor some other brand or product also manufactured and sold by it: Provided, however, That this prohibition shall not be construed to apply to what are known as "combination orders" under which some brand or product may be offered to a jobber or dealer at a reduced price on condition that he purchase a given quantity of some other brand or product.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that during a period of five years from the date hereof, each of said 14 corporations hereinbefore named, its officers, directors, agents, servants, and employees, are hereby enjoined and restrained as follows:

1. None of the said 14 corporations shall have any officer or director who is also an officer or director in any other of said corporations.

2. None of said 14 corporations shall retain or employ the same agent or agents for the purchase in the United States of tobacco leaf or other raw material, or for the sale in the United States of tobacco or other products, as that of any other of said corporations.

3. None of said 14 corporations shall directly or indirectly acquire any stock in any other of said corporations, or purchase or acquire any of the factories, plants, brands, or business of any other of said corporations, or make loans or otherwise extend financial aid to any other of said corporations.

The provisions of this decree shall apply only to trade and commerce in or between the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia, and trade and commerce between the United States and foreign nations.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.) and the Imperial Tobacco Co. (of Great Britain and Ireland, Ltd.) shall not act as agent for each other nor employ a common agent, for the purchase of leaf tobacco in the United States, and neither of said two companies shall unite with any of the said 14 corporations among which the properties and businesses now in the combination are to be distributed, in the employment of a common agent for the purchase of tobacco leaf in the United States.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that each of the 29 individual defendants in this suit be enjoined and restrained from at any time within three years from the date of this decree, acquiring, owning, or holding, directly or indirectly, any stock, or any legal or equitable interest in any stock in any one of said 14 corporations, except British-American Tobacco Co. (Ltd.), in excess of the amount to which he will be entitled under the provisions of the plan when the same shall have been carried out as proposed as the present owner of the amount of stocks in said several companies shown by the affidavits of said several defendants filed herein on the 16th day of November, 1911: Provided, however, That any of said defendants may, notwithstanding this prohibition, acquire from any other or others of said defendants, or in case of death from their estates, any of the stock held by such other defendant or defendants in any of said corporations.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the new companies whose organization is provided for in the plan hereinabove set forth, to wit: Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co., P. Lorillard Co., George W. Helme Co., Weyman-Bruton Co., and J. S. Young Co., shall, after their formation and by appropriate proceeding, be made parties defendant to this cause and subject to the provisions of this decree and bound by the injunctions herein granted.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that any party hereto may make application to the court for such orders and directions as may be necessary or proper in relation to the carrying out of said plan, and the provisions of this decree.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the costs of this action shall be paid by the defendants other than R. P. Richardson, jr., & Co. (Inc.), as to whom the suit has heretofore been dismissed, and the payment by the defendant, the American Tobacco Co., of the reasonable costs and counsel fees of the committees organized for the protection of the 6 per cent bonds, 4 per cent bonds, and preferred stock of the American Tobacco Co. is hereby approved.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the defendants, the American Tobacco Co., MacAndrews & Forbes Co., American Snuff Co., and each of them and their and each of their officers, directors, servants, agents, and employees, be severally enjoined and restrained, as in said plan set forth, from voting stocks, exercising influence or control over other companies or gaining possession of other companies through the use of securities temporarily held by them, respectively, under said plan in each and every case in which it is provided in and by the said plan that any of said three last-named defendants shall be so enjoined.

It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that such books and papers of the defendants, the American Tobacco Co. and S. Anargyros, or either of them, as relate to the suit of the Ludington Cigarette Machine Co. v. S. Anargyros and the American Tobacco Co., or the subject matter thereof or any part thereof, be preserved by the said defendants, respectively, until after the accounting, if any shall take place in said suit, and said suit be finally determined and ended.

It is further ordered adjudged, and decreed that jurisdiction of this cause is retained by this court for the purpose of making such other and further orders and decrees, if any, as may become necessary for carrying out the mandate of the Supreme Court.

[S. 3607, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

A BILL To give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States to certain organizations or persons in the suit of the United States v. American Tobacco Co. et al.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the National Cigar Leaf Tobacco Association, the Cigar Manufacturers' Association of America, the Independent Tobacco Salesmen's Association of America, the Leaf Tobacco Board of Trade of the City of New York, or any tobacco board of trade named or referred to in the written request entitled in the said suit and presented to the said circuit court on the 18th day of October, 1911; the attorneys general of the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, New York, and Kentucky, and the State of Wisconsin, or either of said organizations or attorneys general, or the said State of Wisconsin, shall have the right to intervene in the suit entitled "United States v. The American Tobacco Co. et al., approving the plan of reorganization or recreation to the Supreme Court of the United States, with the same force and effect as though they, or those of them who seek to exercise the right hereby given, had been parties to said suit, and upon such appeal they shall have in the public interest all the rights and privileges and be governed by all the procedure that the United States would have had or would be required to observe if it had taken an appeal from said decree, the intent being to hereby confer upon the Supreme Court of the United States that jurisdiction over the said decree of the District Court, formerly the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York, upon the appeal sought to be taken by said organizations or said attorneys general, or the said State of Wisconsin, or either of them, that it would have had if the United States had taken the proper proceedings for such an appeal.

SEC. 2. That all provisions of the law now existing or which were in existence at the time of the entry of the said decree fixing the time within which an appeal from the said decree shall be taken and perfected, and within which any other procedure in connection with such appeal shall be initiated, shall apply to the right of appeal hereby given: Provided, however, That the said respective times shall, for the purpose of such appeal, be deemed to begin with the day of the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That this act shall take effect immediately.

UNVEILING OF STATUE OF BARON VON STEUBEN.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred House concurrent resolution No. 39, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the concurrent resolution passed August 21, 1911, providing for the printing of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Washington, December 7, 1910, be amended by adding the following sentence after the last word thereof: "There shall be included in the same volume, as herein provided for, the proceedings relating to the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Berlin, September 2, 1911; and this document shall be compiled and printed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing."

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, caused by the resignation of James B. Angell, of Michigan, be filled by the appointment of Charles W. Fairbanks, of Indiana.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the accompanying letter from the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION,
Washington, U. S. A., March 27, 1912.

The Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
Vice President of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that a vacancy exists in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, caused by the resignation of Dr. James B. Angell, a citizen of Michigan, who was appointed under joint resolution of Congress approved February 9, 1911.

Very respectfully, yours, CHARLES D. WALCOTT.
Secretary.

SENATOR FROM ILLINOIS (S. DOC. NO. 484).

Mr. DILLINGHAM submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 273) which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hearings held before the committee of the Senate to investigate the election of WILLIAM LORIMER as a Senator from the State of Illinois, together with the Digest Index, be printed as a Senate document.

LAND AT MAGDALENA BAY.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 272) which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President is respectfully requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate any information in possession of the Government relating to the purchase of land at Magdalena Bay by the Japanese Government or by a Japanese company.

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 275) which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, directed to submit to the Senate as early as practicable an estimate of the cost of construction of new roads or changes in the present roads in the Yellowstone National Park in order to permit of the use of automobiles and motor cycles therein without interfering with the present mode of travel in vehicles drawn by horses or other animals.

EMPLOYEES OF COMMON CARRIERS.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, authorized to have printed for its use 5,000 copies of the hearings held March 26 before the subcommittees of the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives relative to the bills to provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental injuries resulting in disability or death to employees of common carriers, etc.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS (S. DOC. NO. 488).

Mr. GRONNA. For the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] I present the argument of Fred S. Caldwell, former State enforcement attorney of Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Okla., in favor of the Kenyon and McCumber bills relating to the interstate shipments of intoxicating liquors. The argument is taken from hearings held before the Committee on the Judiciary. I move that it be printed as a Senate document.

The motion was agreed to.

OSAGE INDIAN LANDS (S. DOC. NO. 487).

Mr. OWEN. I present resolutions adopted by members of the Osage tribal council of the Osage Indians of Oklahoma relative to the right to grant leases for mining purposes on certain Osage Indian lands. I move that the resolutions be printed as a document for the information of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

IOWA INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA (S. DOC. NO. 486).

Mr. OWEN. I present the petition of members of the Iowa Tribe of Indians in Oklahoma relative to the payment for certain Indian reservation lands ceded to the United States by the treaty with these Indians. I move that the memorial be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PROTECTION OF LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI (H. DOC. NO. 662).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I am advised by the Secretary of War, whose report I transmit herewith, that the flood in the Mississippi Valley, by reason of the rise in all of the rivers tributary to the Mississippi and Missouri at nearly the same time, is likely in the lower part of the valley—that is, Missouri, Kentucky, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana—to reach a higher point along the levees than it has ever reached within recent memory, and that there is very grave danger that the levees may give way under this unusual pressure and that great damage may be done to property in the States mentioned, requiring, unless prompt action is taken, great future outlay in preserving the proper navigation of the streams.

These levees contribute not only to the safety of the adjoining agricultural lands and settlements, but are also a part of the great governmental projects for the maintenance of navigation in the lower waters of the Mississippi.

It seems proper, therefore, that the Government should take immediate action to make the loss impending as little as possible. In view of the character of the emergency and the safeguards surrounding expenditures made under the Corps of Engineers, I have no hesitation in asking for an appropriation of $500,000 as recommended by the Secretary of War.

I urgently recommend an immediate appropriation, so that no time may be lost in taking the necessary steps to prevent what but for governmental action may be a loss not only of many millions, but of lives as well.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 2, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think the message should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hesitated whether or not it should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations or to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. I think it should go to the Committee on Appropriations, not only in itself, but I am informed there is danger in the upper country along the Missouri, and that other matters of this kind will be presented perhaps to-day or to-morrow. Therefore I suggest that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, reference will be changed, and the message will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

APPRAISAL OF UNALLOTTED INDIAN LANDS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands.

Mr. GAMBLE. I move that the Senate nonconcur in the amendment of the House of Representatives, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice President appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. STONE conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 22195. An act to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED PARCEL POST (S. DOC. NO. 485).

Mr. BAILEY. I ask unanimous consent that a letter written by the Hon. JOSEPH T. JOHNSON to Mr. D. A. Davis, of Laurens, S. C., on the 22d of March, shall be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor is entered.

Mr. BAILEY. I make this request on behalf of my good friend the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I am personally opposed to the parcel post, to which this letter refers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not for the purpose of objection, but for the purpose of information, can the Senator state the general subject of this letter?

Mr. BAILEY. It relates to the parcel post. I have just stated that I presented it on behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], though personally I am unalterably opposed to the proposition.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, do I understand that it is an argument in favor of the parcel post?

Mr. BAILEY. I have not read the communication. It is a letter written by a Member of the House of Representatives from a South Carolina district to one of his constituents. The senior Senator from that State deems it worthy of distribution. Being called home, he left a note requesting that I have it printed as a public document and send copies of it to him at his home, in order that he might distribute them among his constituents.

Mr. HEYBURN. While I would be loath to interpose an objection, I regret——

Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator will be too loath to do it in this case.

Mr. HEYBURN. I regret the electioneering for a parcel post through the medium of a public document. In the first place, I am so strongly opposed to a parcel-post law that if anyone is to advocate it, I should like not only not to have that advocacy made free by the Government, but to have it pay an entrance fee. I think that strongly on the subject.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho is not more earnestly opposed to that proposition than I am. I am looking forward myself to the time when the post office will be the most important place in all the towns and villages, and even in the smaller cities. They now have a savings bank there. When they have the parcel post they will have the express company. When the present Postmaster General succeeds in buying the telegraph lines, we will have a telegraph office there, and all of that combined with the post office will make it the most important place in many communities.

I am opposed to the whole system, but I am not afraid to have such arguments as can be made in its behalf printed and distributed, especially when it is done at the request of a Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not going to raise an objection; but this is an appropriate time to say that there is a method now being adopted of sending out forms all over this country, with the request that those to whom they are sent will copy them in their own handwriting for the purpose of deceiving Members of Congress.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, this is not a case of that kind.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suppose there is not a mail in which every Senator does not receive a number of them. They evidently emanate from one source or from a combination intended to promote this enterprise of a parcel post.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I think more than half of the people of this country are in favor of doing anything at this time that will extend the activities of the Government. I hardly think it is necessary now for a special interest to move them. In this age of "uplift" and distrust of each other, breeding, I must believe, at last a distrust of ourselves, people lean on the Government. The Senator and the rest of us who oppose that tendency, however, instead of objecting to the arguments in favor of it, ought to occupy ourselves with making arguments against it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate, I should like to say a word regarding this matter that will counter the evident plan that is being carried out for the purpose of creating an unrighteous and an unfair sentiment.

As the Senator from Texas well says, the people—that is, some of them, the ones that we hear make a noise—seem to be in favor of anything as an excuse for making the noise. Of course, the great majority of the people are not giving any attention to this matter and are not favoring it. It would work such a radical change in the whole social system of our Government as is not comprehended by those who are saying, "Oh, yes; give us the parcel post; give us this and that." They think they want something; they have the spirit of restlessness and discontent that I think is perhaps due to bad example, and the result is that we are being importuned every day to do something that we ought not to do. We can not reach all of those people, but I sincerely trust that the conservative wisdom of the country will reach them and that we will not do those things.

They are talking about abolishing the village and small-town element of our civilization by putting it out of business; that is, by making it unprofitable for the people in the towns and villages to do business. They would have everything brought to their doors; they would stay there in the solitude of their solitude; and they would never learn anything except what they read—if they do read them—in the papers brought to them at the expense of the people who do not want such a system or scheme of government. They would have their vegetables brought to them; they would not be acquainted with anybody in the county except themselves, and we would return to that isolated condition of social life that is the very opposite of civilization and advancement. Why, half the education of the American people has been obtained by the casual coming together at the country store and the post office in the ordinary walks of life.

You get to know how men look in that way. Under this proposed system you would not know how a man appeared who lived 5 miles away from you, because you never would have any occasion to see him. Some of these people will vote by letter, I suppose, and pretty soon they will have some system devised by which a man will not know anybody else.

That is the bane of this foolish direct primary—I do not know why I should hesitate to mention it, but that is the bane of it. Nobody knows what the candidate looks like. Some one comes around with a petition for him. It is not like the men selected who are chosen by selected men coming together in an open convention, where the exigencies of the occasion call upon men to get up and state themselves, and be looked at and heard and known something about, and considered as to their fitness for nomination for the position. Many a time we have all known men that we never heard of before to come to the front for the first time in a convention. Some occasion impelled them to arise, and they exhibited an unexpected knowledge of affairs and a fitness for the confidence of their fellow men. We have seen them, and we have heard them here—men who started in a little or a big convention.

Now, this is along the same line. If you want to send the districts outside of the big cities back into the wilderness, just establish such a ridiculous system as this, so that every man will have to send to Chicago or some other central place for his daily bread by and by. Nobody will support stores for the purpose of trading off eggs for sugar. The result is that we will have none of the small, beautiful centers that we call villages and towns, and we will have two or three big trading points at which commerce will seek to supply the whole body of the American people.

When the question comes before the Senate for responsible action (which I hope it never will, although I should like to have a chance to be in at the killing of it) I will probably ask the patience of the Senate for further remarks.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON FISHERIES.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution 252, authorizing the Committee on Fisheries to conduct hearings, employ stenographers, and so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the morning business over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is finished. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that I will not object to it, but I hope we will devote a little time to the consideration of bills on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 252) was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Fisheries or any subcommittee thereof is hereby authorized, during the Sixty-second Congress, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ stenographers from time to time, to report such hearings as may be had during the present session of Congress in connection with any subject that may be pending before said committee, and to have the testimony and proceedings of such hearings printed for the use of the committee. The expense of such hearings shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and said committee and subcommittees thereof may sit during the session of the Senate.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar is in order under Rule VIII. The Secretary will report the first bill on the calendar.

The bill (S. 2518) to provide for raising the Volunteer forces of the United States in time of actual or threatened war was announced as first in order on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate concurrent resolution 4, instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask that it may go over.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will go over.

The bill (S. 290) to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The resolution (S. Res. 176) requesting the President to make certain inquiries of the Governments of Great Britain and France touching the arbitration of justiciable controversies or disputes was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States was announced as next in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The bill (S. 1505) for the relief of certain officers on the retired list of the United States Navy was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION OF ACT OF EMANCIPATION.

Mr. BRADLEY. I ask for the consideration at this time of Senate bill 180.

Mr. GALLINGER. That has just been reached.

The bill (S. 180) providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Industrial Expositions with amendments.

The first amendment was, after the enacting clause, to strike out all down to and including line 10 and to insert:

That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the Semicentennial American Emancipation Exposition Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Georgia, has made provision for an exposition to be held during the year 1913, to illustrate the history, progress, and present condition of the Negro race, and to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of emancipation by President Lincoln, on the 1st day of January, 1863, and that the said corporation has raised and secured money or property to the amount of not less than $50,000 for the purposes of such exposition, the President is authorized and respectfully requested to make proclamation of the time and place and purpose of such exposition and celebration and of such other information in relation thereto as he may deem expedient.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bill calls for an appropriation. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. BRADLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Nebraska.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 3, beginning with section 3, to strike out the remainder of the bill and to insert in lieu of section 3 the following:

SEC. 3. That the location, plan and scope, designs for buildings, provisions for public health and comfort, and rules for the conduct of the business and affairs of the exposition shall be subject to the approval and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall exercise supervision over the exposition through such representatives of the department as he shall designate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the entire bill been read? The amendments seem to have been read as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that the entire bill has been read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was listening, but heard only the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair simply goes by what the Secretary informs him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Do the amendments take the place of the original bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the amendments have been read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I heard the amendments read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to have the parts proposed to be stricken out read?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No. Will the amendments take the place of the original bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. They have all been read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The amendments will take the place of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. All those have been read.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is nothing left of the bill but the amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is all, except section 2.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to have some one in charge of the bill explain any benefit that is to be derived in consideration of the appropriation of $250,000. I think we have reached a point where people are not disposed to vote money for participation in any exhibition or celebration unless there is some very direct and unquestioned benefit to be derived from it. Here, apparently, there is a disposition to pass a bill involving an appropriation of $250,000 without a word said as to what is to be the benefit from the bill.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I will try to explain the purpose and object of this bill. In all the appropriations that have been made by Congress for different expositions in this country, there has never been anything asked by or given for the negro race. The object of this bill is to enable them by an exposition to celebrate the semicentennial of their freedom, one of the most notable events in history, to call their people together, to assemble their inventions, their products of field and shop, to show to the United States and the world the progress they have made, thereby inspiring their race with more activity, earnestness, ambition, and desire to be valuable citizens.

Since the negroes were freed they have increased from 4,000,000 to 10,000,000 in population. They own to-day, notwithstanding they were freed without any property, more than $600,000,000. They have 135 private high schools. They have 30,000 teachers; 82 banks; 500 newspapers and periodicals. They have decreased in illiteracy 47 per cent. They have 1,500 lawyers, 2,500 physicians, several thousand ministers, some of whom are among the ablest men in the United States. They have 149 wholesale houses, 9,098 retail merchants, and 1,186 manufactories. Among them are scientists, poets, authors, musicians, artists, and inventors, and they have 2,000,000 children in the schools.

The object of this bill is to give them a chance to call prominently to the attention of the people of this Nation what they have accomplished and to show their progress, to encourage their people to the accomplishment of greater things, and to show the white people the extent of their improvement in order that they may better merit their help and sympathy.

Mr. President, it seems to me when we consider the fact that these people for so many years bent their backs in bondage in unrequited toil in order to make fortunes for others; that they were denied every right of manhood, every opportunity of education; that during the Civil War, notwithstanding their freedom was at stake, in the whole southern country not one of them ever committed an outrage, although they were left in charge of the wives and children of the Confederate soldiers who were fighting to continue them in slavery, now that they are citizens of the United States it is our duty to lift them up, to help them, to strengthen them, to encourage them, to make them better citizens, and to make them of more value, force, and virtue in this great Republic.

This is but a pittance, and it is conditioned upon their raising among themselves $50,000 before they can enjoy the appropriation. I do not think that the spirit of economy should be such as to prevent the passage of any bill which has for its purpose the betterment of humanity, the betterment of our country, and the improvement of its citizens. I hope the bill may pass.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have never seen an appropriation which in its terms is more loosely or recklessly drawn than this particular bill appears to be for the use of the money of the people. It is proposed to give, apparently without any restrictions, without any qualifications, $250,000 to any corporation formed with a capital of $50,000 for the purpose of holding a celebration.

I want to say in the first place, Mr. President, that I have taken the position that I believe is justified by public opinion in this country, that the country has expended enough money in expositions, that a great deal of it has been done recklessly, and that the purpose of the exposition as originally designed has been run in the ground. I took a position against the appropriation of any money for the Panama Exposition, and I intend to stand by it. I intend to take a strong position against the appropriation of a quarter of a million dollars proposed in this bill if for no other reason than because the bill utterly fails to provide any safeguards at all to see that there is any benefit derived from the expenditure of the money.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Senator if he can inform the Senate what the appropriation of the Government was for an exposition held in his own State a little while ago?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can. Would the Senator like to hear it?

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to know it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Congress appropriated $100,000 for the Trans-Mississippi Exposition, to be held in Omaha, but that money was not turned over to the Trans-Mississippi Exposition Co. That money was used by the Government of the United States itself in the erection of a Government building, in the installation of Government exhibits for the purpose of educating the people in the Middle West into the various functions of the Government of the United States. There was exhibited there, for instance, to those people the life-saving apparatus of the Government of the United States, something that the people upon the coast are familiar with, but something the people in the interior of the country, of course, can rarely see and is seen only by those who travel extensively. This bill, however, proposes bodily, as I understand it, to take $250,000 out of the Treasury of the United States and turn it over to a company with $50,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think he is mistaken about that. Section 2 of the bill specifically provides that this money shall be "expended under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and upon vouchers to be approved by him."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator tell the Senate and tell the people what the money is to be expended for?

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the bill states that specifically.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is it?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is to enable these people who were held in slavery more than 100 years and who have been making such progress since they were emancipated to make an exhibit of their products and of their prosperity.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is proposed, then, to have this money expended by the Government of the United States?

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely. That is what section 2 provides.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ROOT. May I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the third section of the bill, in connection with the second section, to which the Senator from New Hampshire has called his attention? This money is to be expended under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and upon vouchers to be approved by him, under section 2, and section 3 provides—

> That the location, plan, and scope, designs for buildings, provisions for public health and comfort, and rules for the conduct of the business and affairs of the exposition shall be subject to the approval and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall exercise supervision over the exposition through such representatives of the department as he shall designate.

Under the third section I am sure the Senator will find it difficult to present appropriations of money which are more carefully guarded as to expenditure than these appropriations, which follow the appropriations of millions upon millions of dollars made by Congress for expositions to be attended by the white race, for the benefit of the white race, and from which these 9,000,000 citizens of the United States have been practically excluded. Now we are for the first time asked to allow, under these careful safeguards, the expenditure of $250,000 for a portion of our people who comprise one-tenth of the number of the citizens of the United States.

Mr. President, the whole trend of social development is toward the separation of the two races in the affairs of life. It is not enough that the blacks be excluded from participation with the whites. If that is to be, it should also be accompanied by encouragement of the blacks to work out their own salvation among themselves. Thrift, industry, energy, ambition, the acquisition of learning, of education, of the useful arts, and of all that goes to make good citizenship by the blacks among themselves should be encouraged. This is the first step proposed to be taken by the Government of the United States to help these people, who are excluded from ordinary association in the social affairs of our country, to help themselves to become useful, law-abiding, thrifty, industrious, self-supporting citizens.

Mr. President, as was said by the representatives of that race who came before the committee which reported this bill, it will put heart into the colored people to show them what their fellow negroes have been able to do by being thrifty and industrious; it will encourage them to be good citizens, to strive to build up homes, to educate their children for useful lives. I can conceive of no more graceful, no more appropriate, no more sensible act than for the people of the United States to help these poor blacks to celebrate the emancipation proclamation which half a century ago accomplished their liberation and was the most significant single act that ever happened in the history of the world as bearing upon the fortunes of a race; to help them celebrate the anniversary of that proclamation by showing to the white people of the country what are the pathways along which they can be helped, and by showing to each other what have been the rewards of a useful and industrious life on their own part.

We have done little enough, sir, for these people. We have done much in pushing them away, in saying, "You shall not go here or there or do this or that." We have done very little to help them do what is necessary to make them less of a burden to us and more of a satisfaction to the people of their own race.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nebraska will not press his opposition to this bill. The last place from which I looked to see objection to this little aid to the blacks was from the soil where the Kansas-Nebraska conflict raged at the time when I first heard the echoes of the strife and controversy of the great world. This is to enable the people for whom the Kansas-Nebraska settlers sacrificed and fought to celebrate the great act of freedom which was the consummation of the sacrifices and the heroism of the people of Kansas and Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am really obliged to the Senator from New York for his contribution to the occasion, but it in nowise answers my objection. I do not yield to the Senator from New York in my desire to promote the development, the prosperity, and the welfare of the colored race. I am frank to say that on the soil of Nebraska, which the Senator is kind enough to mention, the colored man is probably doing as well in a material and in an intellectual sense as he is doing in the State of New York, which the Senator in part represents; but I am morally certain that very few, if any, colored men from my State would be able to visit a far-away exposition on the Atlantic coast; and I am positive that they would gain no material benefit by such an excursion.

I am very suspicious, moreover, that there is a design behind the attempt to appropriate $250,000 for the alleged benefit of the colored race, and that a large part of that appropriation would be used, as a large part of other appropriations for so-called participation in expositions has been used in the past, for the payment of salaries, the incurring of expenses, and perhaps the erection of buildings which would be of no sort of benefit to the persons in whose name and for whose pretended benefit the appropriation is sought from Congress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Nebraska has stated—I am not familiar with this bill—that this exposition was to be held on the Atlantic coast. Is it so provided in the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not sure that it is fixed even to that extent, although the exposition corporation is located in Georgia, and I assume that the exposition would be held there, and probably if it were to benefit the largest number of colored people, it would be held in the South, where a majority of the colored people are found.

Mr. LODGE. I thought, as I heard the bill read, that the question of the place for holding the exposition was to be left to the decision of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor or the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is quite likely——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Can the Senator tell me whether the charter settles that question?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. I am not familiar with the bill. I was asking for information.

Mr. BRADLEY. The charter does not settle it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have not read the bill.

Mr. BRADLEY. The bill does not designate any place for the holding of the exposition.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SHIVELY. Section 3 of the bill clearly leaves the selection of the place for the holding of the exposition to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

Mr. LODGE. Then, it can hardly be said that it is to be located on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, wherever the exposition is to be held it must, from the very nature of the case, be largely local. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is well aware that the average colored man will not be able to travel any considerable distance to attend this exposition; and, if he were able to do so, he would receive no particular benefit by spending his money in that way. The most practical teachers of the colored race, those who attempt in the most practical way to benefit them, do not attempt to do so in this manner. They attempt to do it in the way of that training and that education which fits them for the practical life in which they must engage if they would be successful, happy, and worthy citizens.

The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from New York must know that of late so-called expositions, held for various purposes, have degenerated largely into amusement enterprises, charging admission at the gate, and that nine-tenths of those who visit those expositions go to the "midway" and spend their time upon the "midway," in the side shows and circus performances. That has been true practically of every exposition held in the United States since the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, which was really the only educational exposition for which the money of the United States has been appropriated.

I am against this appropriation, just as I would be against any appropriation of the people's money for the purpose of holding an exposition, whether for white people or for black people. Moreover, Mr. President, I am against this measure for the reason that it is a most reckless attempt to take $250,000 out of the Treasury and allow it to be expended as the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may hold to be fit. It is practically turning over to him a quarter of a million dollars. We know that the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is one of those Cabinet officers who are already overwhelmed with duties. His connection with that money will be simply to turn it over to those who are already preparing to get hold of it, and the result will be simply a waste of $250,000 of the people's money, and the colored man will not be benefited one iota. I can hardly conceive that the Senator from New York can sincerely believe that there is to be a great uplift of the colored race in this country by taking $250,000 out of the Treasury for the purpose of holding an exposition. Can anyone here deny the fact that every exposition held on American soil in recent years has degenerated into a mere amusement enterprise?

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I deny that that is true of the Pan American Exposition at Buffalo in my State. The Senator from Nebraska may assert it regarding the exposition at Omaha in his State, and I can not deny it, for I do not know; but I infer from the fact that after having one exposition at Omaha the people of Nebraska proceeded to have another, they considered the first one to be beneficial.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, Mr. President, I am not disposed to disparage the exposition held at Omaha. The Trans-Mississippi Exposition held at Omaha, I believe, was equal in its educational features to any other exposition recently held.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nebraska why, if he considers that the Trans-Mississippi Exposition held at Omaha for white people was beneficial in its educational influences, he is unwilling to have the same kind of benefit given to the black people?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer the Senator from New York by saying that the Trans-Mississippi Exposition held in Omaha was not held for white people alone, but was held for all the people, including blacks as well as whites. I reprehend and condemn the purpose of this bill in another respect, the very one named by the Senator from New York. It is an attempt to distinguish between the whites and the blacks, the very thing that he has condemned and denounced. It involves the idea of separating the two races. Why label an exposition for the blacks only? Why label it for their benefit alone? They participate just as the whites do in any exposition held; they have the same opportunity to visit the art galleries and the various buildings, and to study the objects exhibited in the exposition; and they have the same opportunity to exhibit in those expositions that the white people have; so that there is no need to set them aside as "goats," with the idea that they must go off by themselves and have their exposition.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he would close the schools at Tuskegee, at Hampton, and the Howard University because they take only blacks among their pupils? If he would not, why does he oppose the educational influence of an exposition for blacks?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator finished his question?

Mr. ROOT. I have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would rather appropriate the $250,000 to build an educational institution, to endow a college, than to appropriate it for the purpose of holding what inevitably will degenerate into an amusement enterprise, into an enterprise in which a number of the favored few of the corporation or of the Government will draw large salaries, in which the commissioners will draw large salaries out of the Treasury, and in which favored contractors will receive their share in the construction of buildings. I would rather use $250,000, if it is desired to do something for the colored man, for the purpose of endowing a school to teach the colored man.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. ROOT. I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether he is now stating the experience which he had with the Omaha exposition?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have no hesitation at all in meeting that issue. We undertook the Omaha exposition for a material purpose. At that time Omaha was in a serious condition of depression. I joined the business men of Omaha who undertook to establish an exposition there for the material good of that section of the country. It was a success; it enabled our people to come together in cooperation, and we made of the exposition a great success.

We not only made an exposition which returned 92 cents on the dollar to the stockholders, but we made an exposition which restored our city to prosperity. We did not do it for the purpose of educating the people; we did not do it for the mere purpose, stated in this bill, of conferring a great benefit upon a class of people; but we entered into it as a business proposition. It was a success as a business proposition; but I want to state to the Senator from New York that it was like every other exposition of recent years, in that it degenerated into a mere amusement proposition. The art gallery was deserted, and the "midway," with all its side shows, was crowded. What is true of the Omaha exposition is true of every exposition recently held in the United States, and my experience with that exposition is one which has led me to stand opposed to any appropriation of the people's money for the purpose of promoting an exposition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was interested in the Senator's statement that the Omaha exposition was held for material purposes. There seems to have been a business depression in Omaha, and they had an exposition to enable the people to get out of that unfortunate business condition. In reading the most excellent report on the pending bill, presented by the distinguished Senator from New York, I find that this exposition is for a very different purpose; that it is for an educational and a religious purpose, which I think quite as important as holding an exposition for material purposes.

The Senator says that the Omaha exposition was open to the blacks as well as the whites. I will ask the Senator if there was any black man on the board of directors or on any committee connected with the Omaha exposition, or were they invited to make exhibits——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. When the Senator has finished his question, I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am pretty nearly through—or were they invited to make exhibits at all?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a sort of compound question that the Senator is asking, and I shall have to take my time in answering it.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can answer it in sections if he chooses.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer it in sections.

The Senator starts out with the proposition that this exposition differs from the Omaha exposition in that the prospectus of the proposed colored exposition declares its purpose to be an educational one. Our prospectus in Omaha set forth the same thing. We sought a lofty pedestal upon which to place our exposition. It was to be a great educational enterprise. But I repeat what I said; it largely degenerated into an amusement—an entertainment. All of these expositions travel that course, and this one will travel that course. The buildings for exhibits will be not only lacking in exhibits but lacking in spectators, and the midway will be crowded. The amusement field will get into the foreground; and the money appropriated here, instead of going for the benefit of the class for whose benefit it is intended, will go to pay salaries and to construct useless buildings.

Now I will answer the Senator's other question. He asks whether there were any colored men upon the board of directors of the Omaha exposition. There were no colored men upon the board of directors. I do not recall whether or not there were any colored men who made exhibits; but I know there were colored men who went to the grounds. I was one of the directors who insisted that the evening charge and some of the day charges should be only half price, in order that people of that class should have the benefit of the exposition.

I am sure any exposition held anywhere, for any purpose, will have its fair proportion of colored attendants. This idea of attempting to set apart a particular exposition to be held by the colored people for their benefit, to exhibit their progress, while it may be theoretically a lovely idea, will degenerate just as all the other exposition ideas have degenerated; and I, for one, object to the expenditure of public money for this purpose.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he does not think it would be more useful to the colored race to enable them to exhibit the fruits of their industry and progress for the encouragement of each other than it is to lower the entrance fee to a white exposition in order that they may come into the midway?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the Senator finished his question?

Mr. ROOT. I have finished.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would be an admirable thing if the colored people could encourage each other—and they are encouraging each other. I want to say to the Senator from New York that every time a colored man makes an honest success in life, finds himself in an honest and useful occupation, and meets that share of success which many of them are meeting, he is the best exhibit that his brothers can have. He points the way. Industry with the colored man will win, as industry with the white man will win; and it will win, I suppose, in New York as it has been winning in Nebraska.

The Senator from New York must realize that there is nothing the colored man can exhibit at an exposition in Georgia or anywhere else that he can not exhibit in his everyday life. The best exhibit the colored man can make is the exhibit the successful colored men are making. I am glad to say they are making such progress that the truth is that the colored race has progressed in the few years it has had emancipation probably faster than any other race has ever progressed after its emancipation. But it has not made that progress as the result of expositions. It has made it as the result of having an open field, an opportunity; it has made it as the result of industry; it has made it as the result of sacrifice; it has made it as the white man has made his success in life—by encouraging those virtues and adhering to those precepts which mean success.

I can not conceive that the Senator from New York is sincere in his idea that the colored man is to be benefited by an exposition when he knows that if he is benefited at all he can be benefited only by adhering to those precepts in life which bring success and merit success.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to suggest to the honored Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that it may not be beyond the realm of hope that the white race may benefit somewhat by an exposition of the colored man's achievements, products, and genius. I want to say to the Senator that while there are many colored people who are too poor to go to such an exposition, there are hundreds and thousands of them that are prosperous. Indeed, no people in the history of the world have risen from bondage to such a glorious height in 50 years under more discouraging circumstances. In the last decade and a half the colored people of this country have acquired and own in their own right, unencumbered, more land than is embraced in the entire Kingdom of Holland and the entire Kingdom of Belgium combined. They have made a tremendous record in creditable achievements. All the professions are honored by them; every vocation is enjoyed by them; and wherever they have had a fair chance they have shown adaptability and earnestness in caring for themselves in the struggle of life.

The white people should be proud of their record in a half century of freedom, and the colored people should be proud of themselves. If this exposition will disclose to the white people the genius and the strength and the progress of the colored race and make them more self-reliant, it will have done a genuine service to mankind.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think what the Senator says is undoubtedly true. But he prefaced his proposition with an "if;" and that is just the sticking point. If the exposition would do that, I should be for it. But because I know the exposition will not do it, I am against it. I am against the promiscuous appropriation of money, raised from the people by taxation, for enterprises of this sort; and I want to say to the Senator from New York that in my opinion the hard-head colored men of this country will not approve the appropriation of this amount of money for this purpose.

Mr. ROOT. The Senator from Nebraska has expressed a doubt of my sincerity in asserting that the exposition will be beneficial to the colored people. I hope he does not really entertain that doubt. I can assure him that if he had heard the colored men who came before the Committee on Industrial Expositions even his hard heart would have been stirred with sympathy for their condition and with a strong desire to do something to help them. One of them said this exposition would be an object lesson "in bringing forward such an exhibit to inspire and encourage our own people who at times feel a little as though life was scarcely worth living."

Mr. President, my heart has many a time ached as I have considered men with colored blood in their veins against whom all the avenues or all the ends that are held here by men are closed. Never in my life have I been more sincere in the recognition of a duty or in an earnest hope than I am in pressing upon the Members of the Senate that they shall avail themselves of this opportunity to lift a little the cloud that hangs over these people and give them some glimpse of hope for ambition and for progress that may make their lives worth living under the hard conditions that surround them.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Industrial Expositions, and was present at the meeting at which this grant was urged. My impressions at the commencement of the hearing were similar to those made upon the mind of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. But as the hearing progressed, the representatives of the colored race conducted themselves with such modesty, and were so distinguished in clearness, conciseness, and dignity of statement regarding this organization, that I concluded to vote for the measure. There were three Members of the minority party present at that meeting—the late lamented Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Taylor], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER], and myself; and my recollection is that there was no dissent.

There is hardly any Senator upon this floor who is more radical than myself upon the race question. I believe we should preserve this country for the white man and for the white race. I would by law bar out from immigration all save those of the white race, without invidiously referring to any other race. If I had the power, I would write in the Constitution to-morrow a provision confining the franchise to people of the white race, without taking the privilege from those of a different race who now have it, but confining the exclusion to the future. I do not believe two races differing in color can live upon the same soil without the one being subservient or subordinate to the other. I believe race intolerance alone will keep the two races from mingling; and I regard amalgamation as the greatest curse that could afflict a country. I believe race intolerance will ultimately end in race conflict, and I would save our country the dreadful problems of the future.

But there seems to be no disposition to legislate upon this great question in so comprehensive a way as in the future gradually to lead to an aided emigration of this race to the land of their origin, under conditions of assistance by this country that will make the way easy. So we must struggle with this problem as best we may to-day, only realizing that more serious problems are in the future for those who shall succeed us.

But no reflecting man can fail to observe that the constant tendency is toward race separation in this country, and it is a desirable tendency. The negroes are separating themselves more and more from the whites in separate localities, in separate communities. Ultimately they will probably control, so far as population is concerned, large areas of the fairest portion of our country, as they are now controlling, so far as population is concerned, the richest part of our country, the great black belt of Louisiana and of Mississippi.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me to go along without interruption, I shall close in a few minutes.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was going——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator asks not to be interrupted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I prefer not to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the leaders of the negro race are prominent in this movement. They are establishing such institutions as Tuskegee. We have already the Hampton Institute, the workings of which I had the opportunity of seeing last year. They are proceeding now upon lines of industrial education—the training of the hand and not simply the training of the head. They are realizing that that is the best kind of training they can receive, and they are showing the advantage of it every day in the progress which they have made.

Without realizing it, we were absolutely inhuman to the negroes when, at the close of the war, we gave them the suffrage as a matter of self-protection. The right to vote did not protect them. It simply gave them the power to oppress, in the South, the superior race, and produced a reaction which again has put them in subjection. We erred in our whole method of education, being of the impression that the best thing to do was to train their heads rather than their hands, and we substituted no material or practical training whatever for the training which the blacks had been receiving upon the plantation in all the industrial and mechanic arts. We allowed the South after the war to sustain the whole burthen of training a race for whose slavery the whole country, North as well as South, was responsible.

We have blundered in our treatment of them, and they have blundered out of the difficulties in which our mistaken humanity involved them. Led by people of their own race, they are now advancing in all the industrial arts, and their leaders are inculcating in them a certain pride of race itself.

I was glad to hear a prominent black man at Hampton declare that he believed in his race, that he was proud of his race, and that he would not object to entire race separation in this country and the assignment of the negro race to specified parts of a town or a community, provided that the people of that locality were treated as fairly in public matters as the white portion. That pride of race, if it develops, will make them a stronger and more vigorous race, and I trust it will lead them into such dissatisfaction with the subservient position which they now occupy and which they will continue to occupy throughout all time in this country that they themselves will head a movement for a return to their own soil, which to-day opens up more opportunities for immigration than almost any other part of the world. It is a country in which enterprise of every kind is now being developed, and if the whites can migrate to Africa, why should it be regarded as a misfortune that the blacks should migrate there?

Mr. President, I was impressed by the appearance of the black men who appeared before us, by the clearness of their statements, by the dignity of their expressions. I am sure that if the men who appeared before us have control of this exposition, it will be an exposition worthy of the development which that race has shown at Hampton and at Tuskegee. While I entertain the views that I do regarding the presence of the blacks upon American soil, I feel it is our highest duty to aid them in the lines of development which they have selected for themselves, and therefore I shall vote for this bill with the greatest satisfaction.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in past years I have opposed many of these examples of exposition industry as they have been presented to the Congress of the United States. I thought that industry was carried to great extremes. It seemed to me it had degenerated, under the guise of a celebration of this or that event, into land speculations or efforts to promote the prosperity of some particular locality. I have opposed such appropriations of the public money many times. It was neither a grateful nor a pleasant task.

I confess, Mr. President, that I have been a little surprised at the opposition developed to this not large appropriation for this purpose. The Senator from Nebraska seems to overlook the fact that the emancipation of the slaves 50 years ago was rather a remarkable event. In fact, I think it may be said without exaggeration that it was one of the great events of the nineteenth century. It ranks with the emancipation of the serfs in Russia and the unification of Italy, and forms a very important part of our own history.

The people who were emancipated under the proclamation of Abraham Lincoln were the Negroes of this country. They had not come here voluntarily. They were a forced immigration. We were all responsible for their presence here, North and South alike. Finally, in the agony of war, they were set free. It was a very great event. Fifty years afterwards it is proposed that there shall be a celebration, and that the people thus set free shall have an opportunity, and be aided by the Government in that opportunity, to show to the white race that set them free from slavery what they have done with their freedom. I think it will be good for them. I think it will help them in the right way along the paths which have been followed at Tuskegee and Hampton. But I think also, Mr. President, that it will be a good thing for the white people of the United States to have an opportunity to learn what progress the Negroes have made under freedom.

I am willing for one to vote for this not excessive appropriation to celebrate the act of emancipation, if nothing else. I am very glad that the celebration of that great act should take the form of an exposition furnished with exhibits by the people who were emancipated, for the benefit and the instruction of all the people of the United States.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I will not undertake at this late hour to enter into a discussion of the negro problem. I will say this, however, that I do not believe that there will be a conflict of races in this country. Certainly one of the ways to prevent any conflict is for the superior race to extend a helping hand to the inferior race and show they are willing to do them justice.

I am not at all alarmed about the supremacy of the negro over the white man. If one-tenth of our population, composed of negroes, can overcome us or surpass us in any respect, it will be our own fault, and we should not complain.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] said that the exposition in Omaha was for educational purposes, but I am sure that those who heard his remarks will conclude that it failed in its purpose.

All his talk about the negro having an equal chance in that exposition is ridiculous. What chance had the negro to take his comparatively few articles there to contend with the white man? Every officer in the exposition was a white man. The negro was literally left out of the concern. If the exposition held in Omaha finally turned entirely into a Midway Plaisance, or whatever you might call it, as the Senator says, that does not argue that other expositions will do the same.

Mr. President, I wish to read a very short extract from what one of the men said who came before this committee while this bill was being heard:

> First of all we see in it an opportunity to emphasize the real value of our splendid form of government. You will pardon me for adverting to personal experience, but when I think of my birthplace in a log cabin between two mountains in the State of Tennessee and of the opportunity of appearing before such an august body as this I feel that that is one of the great things in the minds of my race in their desire in a practical, tangible way to show to the civilized world the great opportunity afforded every American citizen, regardless of previous condition or creed. Secondly, there would be the object lesson in bringing forward such an exhibit to inspire and encourage our own people, who at times feel a little as though life was scarcely worth living. They are not even informed as a mass of the material progress that has been made by the race in the short period of time in which we have been practically relying upon our own resources. That is No. 2.
> Then it comes to you as a desire of the various religious organizations of this country, and we feel that the Christian Church is possibly the greatest asset and the most practical and clear demonstration of the possibilities of the race. We have to-day, as Bishop Arnett was wont to say, sufficient seating capacity in the churches to give every negro in the United States a comfortable pew in a church, and we come asking this opportunity of showing to the world that we live in a land where, if a man will put forth the proper endeavor, he may rise, and then we come asking that we shall have an opportunity to show to those of our own race who may be somewhat discouraged and despondent that there is light ahead, and to that end I simply appear representing the moral side of this question and from a ministerial point of view.

As the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] said, the conduct of the men who appeared before that committee was dignified, modest, and proper, and not only so, but they demonstrated that they were men of rare intelligence.

Mr. President, it seems to me as though this is a very small favor asked by the negro. I was glad to see that on that the committee were unanimously in favor of the bill.

We do not want to close the door of hope against these people. Let us give them a chance to show to the world what they have done; whether or not they merit the freedom that came to them through years of agony and blood and toil. Let us do something to encourage them. If we want fairness and good fellowship, let the great white race be fair and just to the colored race, which labors under so many disadavantages.

But the Senator from Nebraska seems to fear that the negroes can not pay their way to the exposition, and in his imagination he thought it was going to be held on the Atlantic coast. No wonder, for there have been so many expositions in that direction; but this exposition is to be in the South. It will be held there for the purpose of showing to the negroes of the South, in the States in which they were held in bondage, exactly their opportunities and their chances of betterment as well as their material advancement.

We should remember, Mr. President, that the negroes have been faithful to this country; that they have made wonderful progress; and we should not forget that upon the field of battle they have stood side by side with the whites and preserved their lives more than once; and that their feats of bravery have found most complimentary mention throughout the civilized world.

I plead for this humble and unfortunate race. I plead for simple justice. I plead they may be extended this little help. I plead they may be given more light; they be permitted to show what they are and what they have done.

I do not fear that the time will ever come when they will be in the way of the white man. This can not be expected, on account of their past history, their bondage, and their lack of education; but, instead of crushing them to the earth, I would reach out and take them by the hand and say, "Come up here, higher into the atmosphere of freedom; come up higher on the plane of equality before the law; come up into the highway of progress; come up higher in the standard of citizenship, and show to the people of the world what you have done, and you will merit the confidence and respect of all."

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not know that I would say to them, "Come up here." I would say, "There is an open opportunity guaranteed to you by the Constitution of the United States, and the law undertakes to protect you in taking advantage of that opportunity."

There is too much patronage in this Government. We have heard much Jack Horner talk here in the last month. I am not referring to any particular Senator, but it is always, "I am giving you something, I am doing something for you," and then he "puts in his thumb," and he "takes out a plum," and he says, "What a good boy am I." Let us speak to the American citizen on the basis of their rights under the law, and when we have done that we owe them nothing more; we have completed our duty as the dispensers of law.

Mr. President, of course this is not giving these people anything, because they are a part of the people of the United States on exactly an even political status with everybody else. I say on an equal political status. I have no patience with the talk of social equality. No man can be my social equal or that of any other Senator without my consent or his. Men establish their grade of equality by their conduct and the demands that they are able to make good; that is all. I do not care what a man's color is, if he can establish to my satisfaction that he is my superior, he and I will walk off in opposite directions.

Mr. President, there is no such question involved in this one-tenth of the people of the United States who own one-tenth of its revenues. They are entitled to the voice of a tenth of the people in the disposition of them. So they want to hold an exposition.

It is not new. I have known little cities scattered around over the United States who would form a committee for the public good and send a delegation down to Congress, and we have given them hundreds of thousands, and in some cases millions, of dollars, some of which they never repaid, and we have given it to them at the expense of these negroes as well as our own expense. The losses have fallen upon them as well as upon those of our own Caucasian race.

So there is no question of patronage, no question of giving them this, any more than there is a question of giving to any community of our own white race the benefits of the operation of the Government in connection with such things as expositions are intended to develop. We want to know—the white people of the country want to know—what these negroes have accomplished. We ought to want to know it, unless we are cowards. We ought to be willing to face any problem of that kind in this country. I want to know it. I want to know how much land they own; I want to know what advance they have made in the attainment of artistic or socialistic workmanship. I want to know it, and I want to estimate the price that stands opposite to it.

They were entitled to freedom before the war, in my judgment, and they were entitled to it when they got it. No man has the right to hold another in slavery. Is there a man in this Chamber who dares to assert his belief in the right to hold another human being in slavery in this hour?

It was a great act. It was a great act for the Caucasian race. It was a majority of the people of the United States who said, We will throw off this disgrace among the nations of the earth, and it was a majority that was brave enough and true enough to the principles of our Government to make good this statement. Are we going to apologize for it to-day? Are we going to shrink back from an acknowledgment of it? I think not. We will celebrate the vindication of the spirit of freedom upon which rests the declaration of our forefathers in the making of the Constitution of the United States.

These people have rights in this Chamber, however they may be considered outside of it. There is not a man in this Chamber who has not held up his hand and sworn before his God that he would maintain that charter of rights. There is no race question in this Chamber under the conscience of Senators. I would give the negro no more than he is entitled to under the law, and I would be ashamed to pilfer from him something that he is entitled to. I would regard the man who would deprive him of a constitutional right as I would regard one who thieved from him in his tangible property.

It is duty here with Senators, right, justice under the law, without any attempt to either evade or violate the law. That is all they are asking here. They are asking that they may be granted the privileges that have been granted to other citizens out of the Treasury of the United States. They have the right to hold the exposition, and if they were to see fit to furnish the financial aid necessary, who could object to it? They have not asked for anything like the sums of money that we have freely granted on other occasions.

Now, let us stand up here and treat this question fairly. I am glad to know that the report of the committee was a unanimous one; it reflects credit upon the fairness of the members of this great body, no matter from whence they come or what community they may represent.

These people have not all been idle. Whether the average standard for industry is equal to that of our race I do not know. There never will come a time when the races will be amalgamated, or where the line will be lost sight of. It is not necessary that it should, and it is anything but desirable that it should.

Now, Mr. President, it was my intention to make only a few remarks that would leave the RECORD to show I was not absent on this occasion. I want in closing to call attention to the next to the last words ever pronounced by Mr. Lincoln, and I am going to hark back to-day on the argument that was made in the Senate in behalf of a man who followed the wrong flag. I did not have it with me on that occasion, but it fits this occasion. Next to the last public utterance of President Lincoln, on the 17th of March, 1865, the question had been put up to him as to the status of this race of people, and he said:

> There are but few aspects of this great war on which I have not already expressed my views by speaking or writing. There is one—

I want this to be heard because it is probably the most typical thing in print of Abraham Lincoln—

> There is one—the recent effort of "our erring brethren"— > sometimes so called, to employ the slaves in their armies.

In quotation—

Now, that was broken. I am going to read it again unbroken into the RECORD. President Lincoln said:

> There are but few aspects of this great war on which I have not already expressed my views by speaking or writing. There is one—the recent effort of "our erring brethren," sometimes so called, to employ the slaves in their armies. The great question with them has been, "Will the negro fight for them?" They ought to know better than we, and doubtless do know better than we. I may incidentally remark that having in my life heard many arguments—or strings of words meant to pass for arguments—intended to show that the negro ought to be a slave. If he shall now really fight to keep himself a slave, it will be a far better argument why he should remain a slave than I have ever before heard. He perhaps ought to be a slave if he desires it ardently enough to fight for it. Or if one out of four will, for his own freedom, fight to keep the other three in slavery, he ought to be a slave for his selfish meanness. I have always thought that all men should be free; but if any should be slaves it should be, first, those who desire it for themselves, and, secondly, those who desire it for others. Whenever I hear anyone arguing for slavery I feel a strong impulse to see it tried on him personally.

That fits a case we had before us on a former occasion and expresses a characteristic sentiment in a characteristic way of one of the two greatest men whose names have adorned American history. Washington was the other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee recommends that the preamble to the bill be stricken out. Without objection, the committee recommendation is concurred in.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the committee be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, consent is granted.

The report is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 311, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

SEMICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF ACT OF EMANCIPATION.

Mr. ROOT, from the Committee on Industrial Expositions, submitted the following report, to accompany S. 180:

The Committee on Industrial Expositions recommends the passage of Senate bill 180, entitled "A bill providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes," with the following amendments:

Strike out the preamble and the first section of the bill and insert the following:

"That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the Semicentennial American Emancipation Exposition Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Georgia, has made provision for an exposition to be held during the year 1913, to illustrate the history, progress, and present condition of the Negro race, and to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the proclamation of emancipation by President Lincoln, on the 1st day of January, 1863, and that the said corporation has raised and secured money or property to the amount of not less than $50,000 for the purposes of such exposition, the President is authorized and respectfully requested to make proclamation of the time and place and purpose of such exposition and celebration, and of such other information in relation thereto as he may deem expedient."

Strike out sections 3, 4, and 5 and insert the following:

"SEC. 3. That the location, plan and scope, designs for buildings, provisions for public health and comfort, and rules for the conduct of the business and affairs of the exposition shall be subject to the approval and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall exercise supervision over the exposition through such representatives of the department as he shall designate."

The bill proposes that the fiftieth anniversary of the emancipation of the Negro race in the United States by President Lincoln's proclamation shall be celebrated by an exposition to show the progress of the race during their first half century of freedom.

The committee think that such an exposition will be of value by encouraging the negroes in the country toward thrift, industry, and effort to become more useful citizens; that it will be instructive to all the people of the country by pointing out the ways in which they can most practically and usefully help the negroes of the country to improve their condition.

That it will be a sensible and appropriate way of celebrating the event which was of vital importance to millions of Americans. That having in view the relative amounts of expenditures by the National Government for the improvement of the Negro race as compared with expenditures for purposes from which that race has but little benefit, the request for an appropriation is reasonable and should be granted.

The proceedings in a hearing before the committee upon the bill were brief and instructive, and a transcript thereof is appended as a part of this report.

HEARING BEFORE THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITIONS ON S. 180, PROVIDING FOR THE CELEBRATION OF THE SEMICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY OF THE ACT OF EMANCIPATION, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES.

SENATE OFFICE BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., February 2, 1912.

The committee met at 11.05 a. m.

Present: Senators ROOT (chairman), JONES, CRANE, STEPHENSON, GRONNA, WORKS, TAYLOR, PAYNTER, and NEWLANDS. Senator BRADLEY, of Kentucky, also appeared; also the clerk, Mr. Phillips B. Robinson.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. Some constituents of Senator BRADLEY, of Kentucky, desire to be heard, I believe, upon the bill introduced by him (S. 180), entitled "A bill providing for the celebration of the semicentennial anniversary of the act of emancipation, and for other purposes."

Senator BRADLEY. This bill was originally introduced by Senator Depew. After he went out of the Senate it was reintroduced by me, and I understand that this preamble is objectionable to some Senators. It is a very beautiful assortment of language, well handled, and well put together; but I want to suggest to the committee that the preamble might be stricken from this bill in order to relieve any criticism of that sort.

The object of this bill is to make an appropriation to enable the negroes of the United States to celebrate the fiftieth year of their emancipation—the anniversary—by an exposition. In the latter part of the bill I want to call attention to the fact that on page 5 it is suggested that the words "one hundred" should be stricken out and "fifty" inserted, so as to make it at least 50,000 instead of 100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. On what line?

Senator BRADLEY. The first line on page 5. And I suggest also that the preamble should be stricken out. Now, I want to say to the committee that while I am here I can speak to you at any time; but we have some very distinguished negroes here to-day who are leaders of their race, some of whom are intimately known to me to be men of high character, and they would like to make a short statement. It has already been explained by the chairman that the statements must necessarily be short. I now suggest that Mr. Wright, the president of a large industrial school in Georgia, be heard.

STATEMENT OF MR. R. R. WRIGHT, SR., OF SAVANNAH, GA., PRESIDENT EMANCIPATION EXPOSITION COMMITTEE.

The CHAIRMAN. We will be very glad to hear from Mr. Wright.

Senator BRADLEY. I will get you to state, Mr. Wright, right now, what position you hold, if any.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am president of the State College of Georgia and am also president of this organization that is promoting this semicentennial exposition. I have been for a number of years president of our State fair in Georgia. We have held a State fair there for the last six years on which we have expended something like $100,000 gathered out of the colored people. This fair has brought together the farmers and the mechanics and the industrial workers from all over the State of Georgia and has elicited from the best people—white people as well as colored people—the very best sentiment. The fair has been held at Macon, Ga., and the mayor of that city has very heartily indorsed it and other officials there have indorsed it. The governor of the State of Georgia has done so also, and it has brought about a very pleasant feeling between the white people of the State of Georgia and the colored people.

We began it during the administration of Gov. SMITH, and at that time there seemed to be a very bitter feeling existing in that State; but the pleasant feeling that was brought about by this fair has allayed a great deal of that bitterness and has brought out the very best feeling toward the colored people. They have shown their hand, so to speak, and the colored people and the white people have, I think, mutually more respect for each other because of this fair.

We have thought, therefore, that a fair of this kind would be that which would bring out for the colored people of the United States and the white people of the United States a greater respect for each other because it will bring together these evidences of their progress during the past 50 years.

I talked with Senator SMITH yesterday with regard to this matter, and he had some objections, but he finally agreed that those objections would be dropped and he would vote for the bill if the bill came out. I also talked with Senator BACON, who also had some objections to the preamble, and he agreed that if the preamble were changed he himself would support it. Thus I think that a movement like this ought to bring about a very strong feeling of respect and one that will be helpful in the whole country.

Of course this is the first time the colored people have ever asked anything of this sort. Since 1876 there has been spent in the United States for fairs perhaps $25,000,000. The colored people, of course, have had no opportunity for expositions of this kind. The small amount we ask for at this time is 1 per cent possibly of that amount and about 2½ cents for each colored person of this country. We simply come to ask that you take this under consideration and help us get before the country; help us show that we are striving our best to develop the resources of this country; and help us to gain the hearty good will of all the people of the country. I shall not detain you any longer, and I simply want to ask that Mr. R. R. Wright, jr., of Philadelphia, may now make a short statement with reference to other matters connected with this question. I thank you, Mr. Chairman.

STATEMENT OF MR. R. R. WRIGHT, JR., OF PHILADELPHIA, EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN RECORDER OF PHILADELPHIA.

Senator BRADLEY. What is your business; what position do you hold, if any, Mr. Wright?

Mr. WRIGHT. I am the editor of the Christian Recorder, which is the official organ of the A. M. E. Church, which is the largest and oldest organization of the colored people of this country, having about 800,000 members scattered over every State in the United States and some in South Africa, West Africa, and South America.

I was asked to say a word about the progress of the colored people in having an exposition such as we hope to have. The question naturally arises, What is there to exhibit? Has there been any substantial progress among the colored people of the country? It has been my opportunity to examine into the history of colored people under the auspices of the Carnegie Institution of Washington and the University of Pennsylvania and the Bureau of Commerce and Labor, and one thing which has struck me very forcibly has been the progress of these people in various lines of endeavor.

There has first been a great progress in the growth of the population and the number of negroes. Fifty years ago there were about four million and a half colored people in the country. To-day there are more than 9,000,000. By the census of 1910 there were between 9,000,000 and 10,000,000 colored people who are scattered over all the States of the Union, chiefly in the lower Southern States.

Now, 50 years ago these people were largely illiterate. The best estimate of their illiteracy is about 96 per cent. Slowly that has been cut down until to-day it is reckoned at less than 40 per cent. The census of 1900 gave it at 45½ per cent. Within 50 years the illiteracy of the people has been cut down to less than half.

This has been done chiefly by the growth of the public-school system. Fifty years ago there was practically no public-school system. There are to-day more than 2,000,000 colored children in the public schools and these are taught by colored teachers who have developed within the last 50 years. There are some 30,000 colored teachers who teach the colored children. There have also developed during these years a number of colored schools manned and controlled by colored people, and of the higher and secondary schools there are about 100. The colored people have contributed during these 50 years to these schools something over $6,000,000 besides the amount which they have contributed in taxes. The best information with regard to the contributions of colored people in taxes shows that they have given something like $45,000,000 of their earnings in the form of taxes to these schools; but the real thing which we are all interested in is the material development—the development in industry.

The development of industry has been along two particular lines; one the increase in the number and the diversification of the industries. Take the farming industry. There were, in 1900, 1,300,000 who were returned as farm laborers. There are as many farm laborers to-day as there were in 1860; but they have developed also a large number of other industries. About 1,000,000 of the farms in the country, by the census of 1910, were under the control of colored farmers, and about 200,000 of these farms are owned by these colored people, as against practically no farms owned 50 years ago.

There has also been developed during these years a number of new avenues; for instance, take the professions. There were in 1900 something like 42,000 negroes in professions. They represented physicians, lawyers, teachers, clergymen, journalists, engineers, literary people, artists, and others. This is a new line and one which is very little known among the colored people of our country.

There has also developed in these 40 years a home-owning negro. It was my privilege to study for the State department in Pennsylvania home owning in that State, and to my surprise and to the surprise of the head of the bureau of industrial statistics, without covering half of the State, we received the names of nearly 4,000 negro property holders as against three thousand and some odd returned in 1900 for the whole State, and the estimate of property in Pennsylvania is something like $15,000,000. Now, we have only in Pennsylvania and Georgia and Arkansas and Virginia, I think, and possibly North Carolina, definite statistics as to home owning; but the census has given to us over 343,000 negroes who own their homes. That was known. Now, this has been an entirely new development during these 50 years. It is understood that in 1860 there were very few people who owned homes. Now there are possibly 500,000. In 1900 there were 343,000 who owned their homes. We think there is something in this line to show.

Then there are other lines; for instance, in literary pursuits. That is a new line. In our Congressional Library here there are registered upward of 500 names of colored people who are authors and have copyrighted books. In the Patent Office there are patents of 300 colored people. Some most valuable patents have been granted to colored men, connected with the telephone system, and the railway system, the telegraph system, and very many other things which are of value in the development of our country. The inventions of colored men have never been brought out. I think that only one or two studies of inventions have been made. I think this would show an amount of progress which would well warrant a small appropriation to the colored people.

The music of colored people would offer an excellent exhibit; a great deal of the popular music of to-day one hears hummed on the streets and sung at popular banquets is written by negroes. The University of Pennsylvania, when I was a student there, employed two negroes to write the music for what was called the Mask and Whig Club; and much of their music was written by two men, both born in the South. The development in this line has been such if brought together would not only inspire respect in the colored people for themselves, but I think would also have the approbation of all friends of the colored race. I am glad to have the opportunity of laying these few things before you.

Senator BRADLEY. Do you know what the total value of the property owned by the negroes in the United States is?

Mr. WRIGHT. No, sir. There have been estimates from $600,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. I think it is nearer $1,000,000,000 than $600,000,000, but there have never been any definite figures made. After the report of the Bureau of Statistics came out, in Pennsylvania we discovered that a great number of large property holders were omitted. A similar investigation was made in Philadelphia, and after it was published a negro who had nearly $6,000,000 worth of property was overlooked. It is most difficult to get hold of the property values of colored people, because very few of the States keep records as to color.

Senator BRADLEY. Now, at this exposition, if held, you would have exhibits from the farms and from the factories, and so on, all over the country?

Mr. WRIGHT. I would say that there would be such. There have already grown up spontaneously among negroes State fairs. These have been held in Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky, and in South Carolina known to myself, the exhibits being of the farm products chiefly and the products of the women in domestic arts, sewing, cooking, and so on. These have been uniformly successful.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Wright, to what extent has the development of the mechanic arts gone?

Mr. WRIGHT. In mechanic arts the colored people have held their own.

The CHAIRMAN. Some of them have become, I suppose, carpenters and masons, and so forth.

Mr. WRIGHT. Of the 140 divisions of labor given by the census the negroes were in every one. They are not only carpenters and joiners, bricklayers, but in fact they are employed in every line of industrial activity. There are bankers—

Senator BRADLEY. Have you any manufacturers?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will give you the figures from the 1900 statistics: 1,186 manufacturers, 82 bankers and brokers, 9,098 retail merchants, 149 wholesale merchants, 150 officials in banks. Now, in lines of manufacturing, for instance, to give some concrete illustrations, take a line unknown to colored people 50 years ago—the printing business. In 1896, I think it was, in Nashville, Tenn., there was started a small printing business. I visited it last year, when there were 120 employees. They make a book; they take the sheet and turn it out bound in cloth or leather, as the case may be. There are a number of these printing establishments over the country. In Ohio there is a large buggy manufactory that employs a large number of colored people, and only colored people are employed. There are hosiery factories and tobacco factories and various other manufacturing industries among colored people scattered over the country.

Senator BRADLEY. How many newspapers have you in the United States?

Mr. WRIGHT. There are about 200. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, in his operations for the schools to which he gave contributions, had a large number of negro mechanics. I do not know that you have ever been in that beautiful library at Bryn Mawr College—the Rockefeller Library. The inside work there was all done by colored men. The Virginia Institute, at Virginia, work and all the underground conduit work at the University of Chicago was done by the same colored men, some of whom are contracting now in Philadelphia and are personally known to me. An exhibit of that kind could be secured which would be, I am sure, an eye opener, not only to those who are not in close touch with this problem but to those who study it.

The CHAIRMAN. As to the particular terms of this bill, Senator BRADLEY stated it was introduced originally by Senator Depew. How far are the specific terms of the bill the result of consideration and study?

Mr. WRIGHT. The chairman and president of the State fair and of the association can answer that question better than I can.

I wish to say that the incorporation was submitted to Judge Charlton, of Savannah, Ga., who is judge of the superior court there, and he was asked to go over the terms we were using in regard to this; and this is the term he agreed upon, "The American Emancipation Exposition Co.," as the name. Now, there was an objection made to the word "emancipation." Otherwise there has been no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Wright, this corporation has been organized; it is an existing corporation?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And the name is "The Semicentennial American Emancipation Exposition Co." ?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir. We took in all the best features and gave a term that seemed to be less objectionable than any other term. Of course, it could be called by a shorter term; simply "Semicentennial Exposition."

The CHAIRMAN. Some of the language of the bill is a little unusual for the purposes of legislation. I suppose that what you really want is the appropriation in aid of an exposition to illustrate the progress of your race?

Mr. WRIGHT. Decidedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Since emancipation?

Mr. WRIGHT. Decidedly; yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. And these particular forms of provisions are not essential?

Mr. WRIGHT. Not at all; not in the slightest.

The CHAIRMAN. Senator CRANE informs me that he has a constituent who would like to be heard.

STATEMENT OF DR. WILLIAM EDWIN B. DU BOIS, PH. D., OF ATLANTA, GA., EDITOR OF THE CRISIS MAGAZINE.

Dr. DU BOIS. I wanted to say a word to the committee about the kind of exposition we would like to have. I think a committee like this must be a little chary of expositions, because they have grown so enormous in size and they cost so much money. It has been in our minds that we could organize an exposition in this case upon a lot of new lines, distinctly educational, for the people of the United States, both for the colored people and for the white people. As a center of those exhibits it has been thought we should have a section devoted to a scheme which should be the same exhibits, something on the order of the child welfare that the committee of women have been doing—or tuberculosis, and so on—that this main scheme should try to show the condition of the colored people throughout the United States. For instance, it should have something of the African background, and in this department, and in all departments, we could make use of all the different things that can be shown to illustrate the concrete things and spiritual things which affect the colored people. For instance, maps and charts and models and mechanical figures of various sizes, and marble, pictures, and, perhaps, phonographs could be shown.

I presume most of you know that in nearly all of the great countries of the world there is an African exhibit. The African museums in London, Paris, and Berlin are sources in each of those cities of great educational value, and there is very little information of that sort in the United States. Something might be done to get together the things which show the wonderful mechanical genius of certain African tribes, especially their work in iron and in cloth. Then, in the second place, the question of the development of the negro race throughout the world, and the distribution of the negroes in the United States could be shown by relief maps with groups of figures showing this distribution, and movable figures, perhaps, showing the migration. Then the question of the physique of the negro could be shown. Very little has been done in this country to show what is the typical negro physique. A great deal could be done by photographs and by plaster casts. Then the question of health and disease could be covered. My idea is that this exhibit should be a truthful exhibit. It should not be simply a thing that would be exaggerated in any way. It should be a real picture so far as possible of the condition of the negro people so that not only would it show the progress but also the dangers and the diseases to which they are liable.

Then the question of occupation could be covered. Of course, that would be one of the most interesting parts of the exhibit. This could be shown perhaps by mechanical figures of correct relative size showing the occupations of the negroes and the value of their services in a relative manner in all the different departments in which the negro takes a considerable part.

Then the matter of education has been spoken of. We could have models and charts showing illiteracy, and conditions in cities, and photographs of institutions and especially photographs and models showing the work of the graduates of institutions as the work of the institution filters down to the actual mass of the people. In no department has the negro shown more genius for modern organization than in his churches, and the models of churches and of the work in churches be shown. The younger Mr. Wright here is a representative of one of the great churches, and there is a great publishing house, as he says, in Nashville, Tenn., and there are several other organizations. That work could be shown and a person could grasp it and it would show the tremendous development that has taken place in that line.

Then in the matter of civics—I suppose most of you would be surprised to know the number of negro towns and quarters throughout the United States more or less organized as independent entities. Exhibits could be had showing those towns and the workings of those towns which would be of great interest. Then there would be of course charts and diagrams and models showing the organized life, the business life, the social life, the work of social uplift among the Negro people. There are orphan asylums and there are a good number of hospitals and homes. The family life, the interior of the homes could be shown. And then the question of art, which has been mentioned. Negro music could be shown and photographs of art and other work, and a collection of negro books. There are something like 200 weekly newspapers. And finally statistics of crimes and of delinquencies could be shown. In this way it seems to me we might build up a comparatively small central exhibit and then around that could come the various voluntary exhibits which are always sent to expositions of this sort. Then there could be congresses held in connection with it—congresses on agriculture and on industry, on education, on health, on music.

There should be, of course, awards and medals. Then there might be a historical pageant. I have been looking up the history of the negro, and it is interesting, indeed, to know what a continuous history would show in connection with the development of the negro from the time of the Egyptian civilization down through the negro kingdoms in the Sudan and the migration of the Buntu tribes from North Africa to South Africa; and, as you know, the negro has been connected with almost every event in American history. Then, finally, our idea is that this central exhibit could be kept or established as a permanent exhibit and placed in a permanent museum. Perhaps from time to time it might be moved from place to place where people who wanted to could obtain exact information concerning the negro in a definite form.

With these ideas it seems to me that we could have an exposition which would not be costly—and we are not asking for very much money—that would be educational, and something that we could pay for with the amount of money that we got from the Government and which we could raise among ourselves.

Senator BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask now that you hear the Rev. Dr. Ross for a few minutes, and that will be all, I believe.

STATEMENT OF REV. I. N. ROSS, PASTOR METROPOLITAN AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. ROSS. As a plain African Methodist preacher I simply come to emphasize the moral of this whole situation as we see it. First of all we see in it an opportunity to emphasize the real value of our splendid form of government. You will pardon me for adverting to personal experience, but when I think of my birthplace in a log cabin between two mountains in the State of Tennessee and of the opportunity of appearing before such an august body as this I feel that that is one of the great things in the minds of my race in their desire in a practical, tangible way to show to the civilized world the great opportunity afforded every American citizen, regardless of previous condition or creed. Secondly, there would be the object lesson in bringing forward such an exhibit to inspire and encourage our own people, who at times feel a little as though life was scarcely worth living. They are not even informed as a mass of the material progress that has been made by the race in the short period of time in which we have been practically relying upon our own resources. That is No. 2.

Then it comes to you as a desire of the various religious organizations of this country, and we feel that the Christian church is possibly the greatest asset and the most practical and clear demonstration of the possibilities of the race. We have to-day, as Bishop Arnett was wont to say, sufficient seating capacity in the churches to give every negro in the United States a comfortable pew in a church, and we come asking this opportunity of showing to the world that we live in a land where, if a man will put forth the proper endeavor, he may rise, and then we come asking that we shall have an opportunity to show to those of our own race who may be somewhat discouraged and despondent that there is light ahead, and to that end I simply appear representing the moral side of this question and from a ministerial point of view, and I thank you for the opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that all?

Senator BRADLEY. Yes; that is all.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, may I thank the committee very heartily for your kindness in granting us such a long time to make our plea?

The CHAIRMAN. We are very glad to have heard you, Mr. Wright, and we have been very much interested in the statements you have made to-day.

Thereupon (at 11.50 o'clock a. m.) the committee went into executive session.

AMENDMENT OF PRINTING LAWS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4239) to amend, revise, and codify the laws relating to the public printing and binding and the distribution of Government publications.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Printing with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill has not been read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to dispensing with the formal reading? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be read for amendment, the committee amendments first to be considered, if there be no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not this is the first reading of the bill for amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the first reading for amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the formal reading having been dispensed with by unanimous consent. The bill is now being read for the presentation of amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not understand—my attention perhaps was distracted—that there was unanimous consent to dispense with the formal reading. I think the Secretary perhaps has inadvertently omitted to read some of the bill, and inasmuch as there are amendments to be offered, I think all of the bill should be read. I have some amendments to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair should have stated that the Secretary was simply reading the bill for committee amendments.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the bill is being read for the purpose of offering amendments, that makes it necessary that the bill should be carefully read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill in full. The Chair did not mean to misstate the facts, but misunderstood the situation.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill, at page 7, section 6, paragraph 5. The first amendment of the Committee on Printing was, on page 9, section 6, paragraph 9, before the word "court," to strike out "district" and insert "circuit," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 6. PAR. 9. In case of the default of any contractor to furnish paper, as provided in this section, he and his sureties shall be responsible for any increase of cost to the Government in procuring a supply of such paper which may be consequent upon such default. The Public Printer shall report every such default, with a full statement of all the facts in the case, to the Attorney General, who shall prosecute the defaulting contractor and his sureties upon their bond in the district court of the United States in the district in which such defaulting contractors reside or such suretyship is undertaken.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, section 18, paragraph 1, line 10, after the word "buildings," to insert "and equipment," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 18. PAR 1. There shall be appointed by the Public Printer a superintendent of buildings and equipment, who must possess a practical knowledge of mechanical, civil, and electrical engineering, and who shall receive a compensation of $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, section 18, paragraph 2, line 14, after the word "buildings," to insert "and equipment," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 18. Par. 2. The superintendent of buildings and equipment shall have direct charge of the Government Printing Office buildings and the power plant, and the maintenance and repair of the same, and general charge of all machinery and equipment in and pertaining to the Government Printing Office. He shall perform such other duties as may be required of him by the Public Printer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, section 20, paragraph 1, line 11, after the words "compensation of," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand seven hundred and fifty," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 20. PAR. 1. There shall be appointed by the Public Printer a foreman of binding, who shall be a practical bookbinder, and who shall receive a compensation of $2,750 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, section 23, paragraph 1, line 16, after the word "buildings," to insert "and equipment," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 23. Par. 1. The inspector for the Joint Committee on Printing, the foreman of printing, and the foreman of presswork shall constitute a board to examine and report in writing to the Public Printer on all paper, machinery, equipment, material, and supplies, except bindery machinery and bindery material other than paper, delivered under contract, or by purchase or otherwise, at the Government Printing Office: Provided, That the superintendent of buildings and equipment shall join with said board of inspection in approving all machinery, equipment, and building supplies before the same shall be recommended for acceptance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, section 24, paragraph 1, line 6, after the word "buildings," to insert "and equipment," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 24. PAR. 1. The inspector for the Joint Committee on Printing, the foreman of presswork, and the superintendent of buildings and equipment shall constitute a board of condemnation, which, on request of the Public Printer, shall ascertain the condition of presses and other machinery, equipment, and material in the Government Printing Office when there is reason to believe that the same is no longer serviceable to the Government, and report its findings in writing to the Public Printer. Should machinery, equipment, or material be found to be unserviceable by the said board of condemnation, the same shall, when approved by the Joint Committee on Printing, be condemned and sold for cash to the highest bidder, after due advertising: Provided, That should any member of the board of condemnation be absent or unable to serve the Joint Committee on Printing shall designate a person to fill the vacancy until such absence or disability shall cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, section 46, paragraph 4, line 8, after the words "Executive Office," to insert "two copies"; in the same line, before the words "to the Library," to strike out "and"; and in line 9, before the word "copies," to strike out "each, two" and insert "three," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 46. PAR. 4. Of the Senate and House documents and reports, excepting reports on private bills and simple and concurrent resolutions, there shall be distributed, unbound, as follows: To the Executive Office, 2 copies; to the Library of Congress, 3 copies; to the Department of State, 20 copies; to each foreign embassy and legation to the United States the Government of which extends a like courtesy to the American embassy or legation thereto, 1 copy, to be supplied by the superintendent of documents upon requisition of the Secretary of State; to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands at Manila, 3 copies; to the Government Printing Office, for official use, 5 copies; to the office of the superintendent of documents, 2 copies; to the Pan American Union, 2 copies; to each executive department, independent office, and establishment of the Government, upon requisition of the head thereof, 1 copy for each bureau or division therein, and the heads of the executive departments, independent offices, and establishments of the Government shall cause daily examination to be made of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the purpose of noting the publication of documents and reports of interest to their respective department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, and shall cause an immediate requisition to be sent to the Public Printer for the number of copies required for official use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, section 48, line 19, before the word "sets," to strike out "four" and insert "five"; in line 21, after the word "Congress," to strike out "two for the Senate and two for the House" and insert "two, each, for the Senate and House, respectively, and one for the Library of Congress"; and on page 49, line 1, after the words "in the," to insert "Library of Congress and," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 48. The Public Printer shall bind five sets of Senate and House bills and simple, concurrent, and joint resolutions of each Congress, two, each, for the Senate and House, respectively, and one for the Library of Congress, to be furnished him from the files of the Senate and House document rooms, the volumes when bound to be kept in the Library of Congress and document room of each House for reference.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator having charge of the bill whether or not on page 50, section 49, paragraph 4, in lines 16 and 17, the words "Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to bills, resolutions, or committee reports" would prevent the printing of committee reports on the order of the chairman of a committee as we are in the habit of doing now?

Mr. SMOOT. It will not, Mr. President. The section provides as to committee hearings that 1,000 copies may be printed just as is provided in the existing law.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is as to hearings, but I do not see the purpose in referring to committee reports. In most of the committees we are in the habit of having our reports printed before they are given out.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the case where the Secretary of the Senate orders it, and this provision does not apply to that.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; the chairman of the committee now orders the printing.

Mr. SMOOT. But it is done through the Secretary of the Senate, and always has been.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the Secretary could not prevent the chairman of the committee having it done.

Mr. SMOOT. No; but that has always been done through the Secretary. He can do it under this bill just the same as under the present law.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will reserve the right to call attention to it later. It would be a very great inconvenience if the chairmen of committees were prevented from ordering the printing of reports.

Mr. SMOOT. It would; but I will say to the Senator that under the bill that can be done just as it can be done under the present provisions of law.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, on page 67, section 65, paragraph 1, line 24, before the word "copies," to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read:

Librarian of Congress, three copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 68, paragraph 4, page 75, line 3, after the word "direct," to insert:

To the press galleries of the Senate and the House, respectively, two copies each of the daily RECORD and one copy each of the bound RECORD.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 68, paragraph 4, page 75, line 8, after the words "daily RECORD," to insert:

To the undersecretary of state for external affairs of Canada, in exchange for a copy of the Parliamentary Hansard, one copy of the daily RECORD and one copy of the bound RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to withdraw that amendment and will offer one to-morrow morning to take its place.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, the Secretary has read down to line 14 on page 75, if I am not mistaken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. I send to the desk certain amendments and offer them at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho offers the amendments, which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

On page 75, line 15, strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "two."

In line 16, the same page, strike out the word "four" and insert the word "one."

In line 17, same page, strike out the words "one dollar and a half" and insert the words "50 cents," so that the paragraph shall read:

The superintendent of documents is authorized to furnish to subscribers the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at $2 for the long session and $1 for the short session, or 50 cents per month, payable in advance.

After the word "advance," in lines 17 and 18, page 75, insert the following:

The Postmaster General is hereby authorized and directed to make, on or before the 1st of July, 1912, such rules and regulations as will enable all postmasters in the United States to receive popular subscriptions for the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the aforesaid terms per year, and report all such subscriptions and account for and pay the amount received therefor to the Public Printer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to have these amendments go over and be considered to-morrow. I do not wish to discuss them at this time, but would prefer to have them passed over for the present.

Mr. HEYBURN. After the amendments are in the RECORD they may go over, so far as I am concerned, until to-morrow. I want to get them in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will go over until to-morrow, and be considered pending then, or when the bill is next taken up.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section 68, paragraph 4, page 82, line 16, after the word "that," to strike out "the same shall be printed uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, and that," so as to read:

(36) Annual Report of the Bureau of American Ethnology with its accompanying papers: Provided, That not to exceed 3,500 copies are authorized to be printed for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 68, paragraph 4, page 83, after line 10, to insert:

(40) Publications of the Bureau of Mines, as provided for in section 71 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have a number of committee amendments which I expect to offer to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill has not been concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the reading of the bill concluded, and reserve the right on behalf of the committee to present amendments to the bill to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator desires that the reading of the bill shall be concluded?

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the Secretary continue the reading of the bill. The amendments reported by the committee in print may be agreed to now; but there are some other amendments that I desire to offer to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Printing was, in section 71, page 90, line 22, after the word "year," to insert:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to print Public Health Reports and Bulletins and extracts therefrom in such numbers as he may deem for the best interest of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 71, page 93, line 9, after the words "Nautical Almanac," to strike out "and of the papers" and insert "extracts therefrom, and papers"; in line 11, after the word "thousand," to strike out "copies" and insert "500 copies of each"; and in line 13, after the word "distribution," to strike out "and sale"; so as to read:

(8) American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac, extracts therefrom, and papers supplementary thereto: Provided, That not to exceed 1,500 copies of each are authorized to be printed for distribution by the Navy Department: Provided further, That the American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac shall be published for the third calendar year in advance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 71, page 97, line 6, after the word "edition," to insert "of the annual report of the director, not to exceed 4,000 copies shall be printed," so as to read:

(11) Publications of the Bureau of Mines: Provided, That said publications shall be published in such editions as may be recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, but not to exceed 10,000 copies for the first edition; of the annual report of the director, not to exceed 4,000 copies shall be printed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 72, paragraph 1, page 100, line 16, after the word "Government," to strike out "except substitute employees of the postal service or temporary employees of the Government whose appointment is for a period of less than six months," and insert "except as otherwise provided in this section"; and on page 101, after line 4, to insert: Provided, That the Official Register shall not include the names of temporary employees of the Government whose appointment is for a period of less than six months, nor shall it contain the names of those persons heretofore published in Volume II, relating to the postal service, namely, postmasters, assistant postmasters, clerks in post offices, city and rural carriers, employees of the sea post service, employees of the Railway Mail Service, employees of the mail messenger service, and mail contractors," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 72. PAR. 1. The Director of the Census shall cause to be edited, indexed, and published, on or before the first Monday of December in each year in which a new Congress is to assemble, an official register of the United States, which shall contain a full and complete list of all officers, agents, clerks, and other employees of the Government (except as otherwise provided in this section), whose salaries or compensation are paid from the Treasury of the United States, including military and naval officers of the United States, cadets, midshipmen, bank examiners, receivers of national banks, and attorneys for receivers, clerks employed by such examiners and receivers, or any person connected with the work of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency in Washington or elsewhere, whose salary or compensation is paid from the Treasury of the United States or assessed against or collected from existing or failed banks under their supervision or control: Provided, That the Official Register shall not include the names of temporary employees of the Government whose appointment is for a period of less than six months, nor shall it contain the names of those persons heretofore published in Volume II, relating to the postal service, namely, postmasters, assistant postmasters, clerks in post offices, city and rural carriers, employees of the sea post service, employees of the Railway Mail Service, employees of the mail messenger service, and mail contractors.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 72, paragraph 4, page 103, line 6, before the word "copies," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 72. PAR. 4. Of the Official Register there shall be printed and bound a sufficient number of copies for the following distribution to be made by the superintendent of documents: To the President of the United States, 4 copies, 1 copy of which shall be for the library of the Executive Office; to the Vice President, each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, 2 copies, to be delivered to the document room of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively; to the Secretary and the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and the Clerk and the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives, 1 copy each; to the library of the Senate and House of Representatives, not to exceed 10 copies each; to the Department of State, not to exceed 100 copies; to the Treasury Department, not to exceed 150 copies; to the War Department, not to exceed 50 copies; to the Navy Department, not to exceed 20 copies; to the Department of Justice, not to exceed 30 copies; to the Department of the Interior, not to exceed 200 copies; to the Post Office Department, not to exceed 100 copies; to the Department of Agriculture, not to exceed 25 copies; to the Department of Commerce and Labor, not to exceed 150 copies; to the Smithsonian Institution, 4 copies; to the Government Printing Office, 4 copies; to the Interstate Commerce Commission, 2 copies; to the Civil Service Commission, 4 copies; to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, 1 copy each; to the Public Library of the District of Columbia, 2 copies; to the Pan American Union, 2 copies.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 73, page 103, line 16, after the words "Supreme Court," to strike out "and the digests of the reports of the Supreme Court" and insert "the Federal Reporter, and digests thereof"; in line 19, after the word "under," to strike out "section 683 of the Revised Statutes and the acts amendatory thereof" and insert "sections 227 and 229, respectively, of the judiciary act, approved March 3, 1911"; in line 25, after the words "by the," to strike out "Secretary of the Interior" and insert "Attorney General"; and on page 104, line 2, after the word "courts," to insert "and digests thereof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 73. The superintendent of documents shall hereafter distribute the reports of the Supreme Court, the Federal Reporter, and digests thereof, to such officials as are entitled to receive them under sections 227 and 229, respectively, of the judiciary act approved March 3, 1911, and the superintendent of documents shall exercise all the functions heretofore exercised by the Attorney General in the distribution of said reports and digests: Provided, That the reports of United States courts and digests thereof shall not be distributed under section 65 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 80, paragraph 1, page 111, line 13, after the words "Weather Bureau," to insert: "and one in the Geological Survey: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held to apply to the printing and distribution of orders, circulars, and blank forms for the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps: Provided further, That any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government may sell or make free distribution of its publications in accordance with the provisions of this act, unless otherwise provided by law," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 80. PAR. 1. There shall be established in the office, and under the immediate control of the head of every executive department, independent office, and establishment of the Government, a division of publications: Provided, That there shall be a division of publications in the Weather Bureau, and one in the Geological Survey: Provided further, That nothing in this section shall be held to apply to the printing and distribution of orders, circulars, and blank forms for the Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps: Provided further, That any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government may sell or make free distribution of its publications in accordance with the provisions of this act, unless otherwise provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 80, paragraph 2, page 111, line 24, after the words "Weather Bureau," to insert "and Geological Survey"; so as to read:

SEC. 80. PAR. 2. All printing and binding and the distribution of publications for every executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government and for the Weather Bureau and the Geological Survey shall be centralized in its respective division of publications.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 84, page 114, line 19, after the word "contract," to insert "for a period not exceeding four years"; in line 21, after the word "by," to strike out "his own or other departments," and insert "any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government"; so as to read:

SEC. 84. The Postmaster General shall contract, for a period not exceeding four years, for all envelopes, stamped or otherwise, designed for sale to the public, or for use by any executive department, independent office, or establishment of the Government, and may contract for them to be plain or with such printed matter as may be prescribed by the department making requisition therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 115, after line 4, to strike out:

SEC. 85. Hereafter all bonds, notes, and checks shall be printed from intaglio plates on presses of such style and character as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That should the Secretary of the Treasury decide to print bonds, notes, and checks on other presses than hand-roller presses, not more than one-fifth of the total number of hand-roller presses now employed in printing such bonds, notes, and checks shall be displaced in any one fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask that the bill may be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, that will be done.

FIVE CIVILIZED TRIBES.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4948) to amend an act approved May 27, 1908, entitled "An act for the removal of restrictions from part of the lands of allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and for other purposes," to report it without amendment. I submit a report (No. 548) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the bill is reported unanimously by the committee?

Mr. OWEN. Yes; it is a unanimous report from the committee. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] reserved the right to raise a question with regard to it, provided there was no report from the Interior Department with regard to the case of Harris v. Gale, which was passed on by the District Court for the Eastern District of Oklahoma.

The purpose of the bill I will explain to the Senate. Congress in the act of 1908 provided, in section 9:

That the death of any allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes shall operate to remove all restrictions from the alienation of said allottee's land: Provided, That no conveyance of any interest of any full-blood Indian heir in such land shall be valid unless approved by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of such deceased allottee.

The previous act of 1906, two years before, had allowed full-blood heirs to sell their land with the approval of the Secretary. The act of 1908 leaves it "subject to the approval of the probate court." The Federal court in Oklahoma and the State Supreme Court of Oklahoma have held that the act of Congress of 1908, the last act, intended to make no discrimination as to whether an allottee died prior to May 27, 1908, or subsequent to that time. The question has been settled in the case of Harris v. Gale, before Judge Campbell's court. In the report there is an extract from Judge Campbell's report as follows:

There being no conceivable reason why Congress should have intended to distinguish between conveyances by full-blood heirs of inherited lands made subsequent to the act of May 27, 1908, where the ancestor died prior to that date and where the ancestor died subsequent to that date, and the language of the act itself not so clearly evincing such an intention as to preclude the contrary construction, it is decided that by the said act any full-blood Indian heir of any deceased allottee of the Five Civilized Tribes is authorized to convey any interest in the lands inherited by him from such deceased allottee upon approval thereof by the court having jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate of such deceased allottee, whether such death occurred before or after May 27, 1908, and the approval of such conveyance by the Secretary of the Interior is not required. Of course, in cases where such heir is a minor, the procedure to secure the necessary order and approval of the court must be as in cases of other minors.

There was an opinion of an Attorney General some time ago which was at variance with the decision of the courts. The purpose of this bill is to remove the possibility of a cloud because of that opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], before leaving the Chamber, asked if there was going to be any business outside of the consideration of the printing bill, and I told him I knew of none. He said that if not he had some pressing business at his office that he would like to attend to, and he would leave. I will ask the Senator——

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to its going over, if the Senator thinks that course would be better.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say that if the Senator has no objection, on that account and that only, I will ask that it go over.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to its going over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DU PONT. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will withhold his motion for a minute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

JOHN T. HAINES.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 4778) to correct the military record of John T. Haines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John T. Haines, deceased, who was a captain in the Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry, and who was nominated by the President for appointment as major of Cavalry to rank from the 3d day of March, 1911, said nomination being confirmed by the Senate after the death of said Haines, which occurred after his nomination, shall hereafter be held and considered to have become a major of Cavalry in the service of the United States on the 3d day of March, 1911, and to have held that office until the date of his death; and the President is hereby authorized to issue a commission as major of Cavalry in the name of John T. Haines with rank to date from March 3, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator to explain the bill.

Mr. DU PONT. I can do so best by reading the report, which I will proceed to do, if that will be agreeable to the Senator from Utah:

Capt. John T. Haines, Eleventh Cavalry, became entitled to promotion to the grade of major from March 3, 1911, as the result of the provisions of the Army appropriation act approved that date; he passed the prescribed examination for promotion April 6, 1911; was nominated to the Senate by the President on May 4, 1911, for the promotion, and the nomination was confirmed by the Senate May 15, 1911. In the meantime his death occurred May 11, 1911.

In view of the facts as above stated, Capt. Haines having served as a captain through the years necessary to secure his majority, and his failure of confirmation as a major being due to the delay of the Senate to act upon his nomination, your committee reports the bill favorably, with the recommendation that it be passed.

Indorsement of the Secretary of War on this bill is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 3, 1912.

Respectfully returned to the chairman Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate, inviting attention to the inclosed statement of The Adjutant General with reference to the case of Capt. John T. Haines. It is recommended that this bill receive favorable consideration.

H. L. STIMSON, Secretary of War.

Mr. SMOOT. That is sufficient. I withdraw the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LLOYD L. R. KREBS.

Mr. DU PONT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1337) authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Lloyd L. R. Krebs, late a captain in the Medical Corps of the United States Army, a major in the Medical Corps on the retired list, and increasing the retired list by one for the purposes of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a pretty serious matter, increasing the retired list by a special act. In glancing at the report, I find it says:

Capt. Krebs failed in his examination for promotion. He did not make the required general average in his professional examination, and his general efficiency, as established by his work in the Army, was very unsatisfactory.

Mr. DU PONT. At the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I will let the bill go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware withdraws his request.

ESTATE OF T. B. COWAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. GALLINGER. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON].

Mr. THORNTON. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4661) for the relief of the estate of T. B. Cowan and others.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 22772) appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PROTECTION OF LEVEES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will yield to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], who desires to have the bill just received from the House laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read at length.

The bill (H. R. 22772) appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $350,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against impending floods the levees on the Mississippi River between the Head of Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I was wondering whether under the rules we could consider the bill, it not having been referred to a committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is that it be considered regardless of the rule, by unanimous consent. The Senate can do anything it chooses by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill can be reported to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state that the importance of this measure and of its immediate passage is very great.

Mr. OWEN. The flood will not wait.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the least objection to it, but I recognize that it is a very important matter. The only question in my mind is as to whether it is proper to take up the House bill and have it considered by the Senate without having it referred to the committee. I will say to the Senator I do not think there will be any question but that the Committee on Appropriations will report it out to-morrow morning and have it immediately considered, and I do not think there is a Senator who would object to it. If it will make no material difference to the Senator, I would very much prefer to have it go to the committee; but if there is anything of urgency so great that the short delay will interfere in any way, I will waive the point.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the Senator that the urgency is very great.

Mr. DU PONT. The only objection I have to the bill is that the President has recommended an appropriation of $500,000, and I was wondering whether the appropriation made by the House will be adequate to meet the necessities of the case.

Mr. FOSTER. I have considered that matter also, but the importance of the measure passing with as little delay as possible has forced me to accept the appropriation of $350,000 made by the House instead of urging $500,000 as recommended by the President.

Mr. SMOOT. If it becomes necessary we can make an appropriation of $150,000 subsequently.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; if it becomes necessary we can make a further appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if he does not think that to-morrow morning would be soon enough to act upon the bill to meet all questions of emergency?

Mr. FOSTER. The chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House is now present in the Chamber, and the difficulty of securing a quorum——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The President's message was sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FOSTER. I fear it is going to be extremely difficult to get a quorum of the committee together. The Senator himself knows how difficult it is to get a quorum of the committee together.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator thinks that by going over until to-morrow it will interfere with the object in view, I shall not make any objection whatever to present consideration, but if not, I think it is best that it should go over and be reported to-morrow. The committee can be polled. Of course I do not know, but I have not any doubt in my mind but that the committee will be favorable to to it.

Mr. FOSTER. This appropriation is urged by the War Department, by the Chief of Engineers, and by the President, feeling that the work should begin as soon as possible, as the river is now at the highest flood ever known in the history of that stream of which there is any record. These various departments recognize the urgency of the appropriation. The President himself has recognized it by sending a special message to Congress, and unless there be some rule or tradition of the Senate that is violated I would like to have the measure put through to-day. Of course I do not want to violate any rule or any of the traditions of the Senate, and if any of them would be violated I would rather not press it. I fear, however, if it is referred to the committee there is going to be difficulty in geting a quorum of the committee to-morrow morning. The Committee on Appropriations is a very large committee, and I very much fear there will be some difficulty in getting the committee together to act upon it; and the flood is not going to wait.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask for what purpose this appropriation is to be applied? I understand it is for the repair of levees made necessary by the floods and that it is not for the relief of individuals.

Mr. FOSTER. No, sir; it is for the maintenance and support of levees which have already been built.

Mr. WARREN entered the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is now present.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me to have the bill read?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the bill.

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana to let the bill go to the Committee on Appropriations under the rule, and a meeting will be called early in the morning to consider it, together with the President's message, which refers to the same subject. I think we can get immediate consideration in the morning.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the Senator think he can secure a quorum of the committee?

Mr. WARREN. If the members who are present will be favorable to it, we can obtain a poll of the remainder.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it simply in obedience to a rule of the Senate that the Senator asks this procedure or is it on account of objection to the bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is not only in obedience to a rule of the Senate, but it is late now, and I would like to get in telephonic communication with the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a letter from the Chief of Engineers here.

Mr. WARREN. That is as to the general subject, but as to the manner of applying it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. This is manifestly a measure that ought to go to the Committee on Commerce and not to the Committee on Appropriations. It is for improving and protecting the levees of the Mississippi River.

Mr. WARREN. I asked to-day that the President's message covering the same subject go to the Committee on Appropriations, because I considered that it was a matter of extreme urgency, not for the general improvement of rivers and harbors, but a matter of money asked for an emergency. I do not care, however, to take it from the Committee on Commerce if the chairman of the committee thinks it belongs there, but it seems to me that coming up as a matter of emergency it rather belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. NELSON. It seems to me it belongs to the Committee on Commerce, but I made no objection to-day about the reference of the message to the Committee on Appropriations, and I shall make none now.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not want to violate any of the rules of procedure of this body, but I want to impress upon the Senators present the importance and urgency of this appropriation. I know that the Engineer Department is ready, as soon as the bill passes, to prepare for the protection and repair of the levees at once. Six hours delay may mean a great deal to the people in that portion of the country, and I urge immediate action only because of the absolute urgency of work being undertaken by the department at once. The bill safeguards the appropriation. All funds must go through the Secretary of War. The different branches of the Government are ready to take up this great work, because, as Col. Townsend, the engineer in charge, states it as his opinion that the flood will be the highest of which there has been any Government record, and it is pressing down with its unrelenting force upon the people in the whole Mississippi Valley. Unless there be some good reason why the bill should be sent to the committee, I would ask the Senators present to forego the usual procedure, which we all recognize to be a wise rule, in view of the great emergency which is confronting the entire people of the Mississippi Valley, involving probably millions and millions of dollars of property and the lives of many people by the delay of a few hours.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WARREN. I am not going to insist upon an objection. Of course it is against the rules of the Senate. We so often have trouble in cleaning up work of this kind of hasty legislation that nothing except the appeal the Senator has made would cause me to refrain from requesting enforcement of the rule, but, under the circumstances, I am not going to raise any further objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been in the Senate nearly 10 years, and I believe this is the first time anything like this has happened during that time, but on account of the urgency of the matter and the appeal of the Senator from Louisiana I shall not object at all.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 3, 1912, at 2 o'clock p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 2, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we realize that we are indeed fearfully and wonderfully made. "The philosophy of six thousand years has not searched the chambers and magazines of the soul; there has always remained, in the last analysis, a residuum it could not resolve." But Thou hast made it clear that we are here for action, and since Thou hast given us the power of choice, help us to act intelligently, wisely, discreetly, without prejudice, ever keeping our minds open to conviction, that we may with all diligence and perseverance act in accordance with Thy will as revealed in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, the world's great exemplar, and thus prove ourselves worthy of the trust Thou hast reposed in us. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The business to-day is the business that would have been transacted yesterday if the transfer of business had not been made, and the Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

INDIAN DEPREDATION CLAIMS.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 14667, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations," approved March 3, 1891.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over at the present time, without prejudice, for the reason that it is also on the calendar for to-morrow and will be considered under Calendar Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

BRIDGE ACROSS WILLAMETTE RIVER, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20486) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Willamette River at or near Newberg, Oreg.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress be, and it is hereby, given to the construction and maintenance of a highway bridge and approaches thereto over the Willamette River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906. Such bridge may be constructed and maintained by the county of Yamhill, in the State of Oregon, by the county of Marion, in said State, or by said counties of Yamhill and Marion acting jointly.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also a committee amendment, as follows:

On page 1, line 4, strike out the word "highway."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 4, strike out the word "highway."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SALARY OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL, DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2434) providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut shall be at the rate of $3,000 a year.

Also a committee amendment, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a statement in regard to it.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary. The salary of the United States marshal of Connecticut, $2,000, is now the lowest salary paid any marshal in the country. The report of the committee, which shows that the matter was very carefully considered, goes into an analysis of the salaries paid to other marshals and makes comparisons, and shows the business transacted in the courts of that district, and gives the salary of the clerk of the Connecticut district, and states other facts, which seem to your committee to make it an exceedingly worthy case and one in which it was only justice to take such action as the committee did take.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HIGGINS. I would be very glad to.

Mr. MANN. I see this bill, as it passed the Senate, provides for a salary of $3,000, instead of $2,000, as is now provided.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Judiciary Committee has recommended a salary of $2,500.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If the bill passes the House in that shape, in what shape does the gentleman expect it to become a law, at $2,500 or $3,000, or does the gentleman expect to split the difference?

Mr. HIGGINS. I suppose it will go into conference, as any other disagreeing action of the two Houses would go.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Is there not a bill already pending on the calendar seeking to regulate the salaries of all the different clerks throughout the country?

Mr. MANN. This is not a clerk. This is a marshal. I would like to ask the gentleman from Connecticut if he is satisfied to increase this salary to $2,500 if he can pass the bill here by unanimous consent?

Mr. HIGGINS. I do not get the import of the gentleman's question. I will be frank with the gentleman. I do not know, and I do not usually cross bridges until I get to them.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is right at the bridge now.

Mr. HIGGINS. At one end of the bridge. I have not got over yet.

Mr. MANN. No; I know the gentleman has not got over yet.

Mr. HIGGINS. I will be frank with the gentleman and say that, so far as I am personally concerned, in my view of it the salary ought to be $3,000. And I will say further that the committee were of that opinion. The United States district attorney for that district gets a salary of $2,500 a year. The business of that court has very largely increased since salaries were fixed 16 years ago. We have 804 cases on the docket now. I think I violate no proprieties in saying that the reason the committee did not agree to give the marshal the salary fixed by the Senate was that they did not care to have the salary of the marshal higher than that of the district attorney, though I think it will certainly appeal to the judgment and fairness of the gentleman from Illinois that the salary of United States marshal for the district of Connecticut ought to be more than $2,500. I can not indulge in prophecies, which would be of no avail and exceedingly vain, it seems to me, as to what ultimately will happen.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands very well that there are four United States marshals who now receive salaries of $2,000. The gentleman desires to have the salary of the marshal in his district increased. He now offers the House a proposition to make the salary $2,500, which is an increase of $500, and in these times that is quite an increase. The gentleman brings the bill to the House for unanimous consent on that proposition. It seems to me that if the House gives unanimous consent it ought to understand whether the gentleman intends to stand for $2,500 or whether the committee intends to make the salary $3,000. The gentleman ought to state that so that the House, in considering the bill, may know what the intentions of the committee are.

Mr. HIGGINS. I think the committee have no intention at all different from that expressed in their action. I think they have expressed their views in that way.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows very well that in a matter of this sort it would be necessary for the Senate to yield to the House amendments if the House stood for those amendments in conference. I think we are entitled to frankness on the part of the gentleman as to whether it is his intention to favor a conference report increasing the salary from $2,500 to $3,000, or whether he intends to let it pass at $2,500.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I have every disposition to be frank, and if I have impressed the gentleman otherwise I do not think the fault is with me. The gentleman can not say that I have been anything except frank. I do not expect to be one of the conferees. I can not say what may happen in the conference.

Mr. HAMMOND. What is the salary of the marshal at the present time?

Mr. HIGGINS. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does he receive any fees for travel or for any other service?

Mr. HIGGINS. He receives no fees. He receives a very small allowance, about $200, as I recollect it, for travel.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does he receive mileage?

Mr. HIGGINS. No.

Mr. HAMMOND. In the service of process?

Mr. HIGGINS. No; he does not. The fees which he receives are all turned into the Government, except his mileage of 10 cents a mile for travel with Federal prisoners and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his duties.

Mr. HAMMOND. How about the commitment of prisoners? Does he receive fees for that?

Mr. HIGGINS. No; except his mileage, as I have stated.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman mean to say that the marshal does not receive mileage when he goes after a Federal prisoner to bring him to his district?

Mr. HIGGINS. I will say to the gentleman that the report of the Attorney General, which, as the gentleman knows, gives the transactions of that office in a very complete form, shows that this marshal receives about $200 a year or less than $200 a year for travel. He is allowed only one office deputy, at $1,000 a year. The State of Connecticut is the district, and it has about 1,125,000 people in it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does this allowance of $200 cover all that the marshal is allowed for mileage in carrying prisoners to the penitentiary?

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes. The gentleman knows that about 16 years ago we changed from the fee system to the salary system. This salary was fixed 16 years ago, when the method of compensating marshals was changed.

Mr. HAMMOND. So that the marshal receives no fees whatsoever, except those that may be included in the $200?

Mr. HIGGINS. I have not the report of the Attorney General before me and I do not suppose the gentleman expects me to be bound to the precise figures, but I have given substantially the amount that he receives in excess of his salary, as I remember it. The balance of his fees are turned over to the Treasury of the United States under the law that was passed about 16 years ago applying to all marshals.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does the $200 any more than actually cover the expenses of the marshal incurred in the performance of his duties?

Mr. HIGGINS. That is all.

Mr. KINDRED. I desire to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. The gentleman has stated that the marshal for the district of Connecticut now receives only $2,000. I desire to ask what is the average salary of marshals in the United States.

Mr. HIGGINS. The average salary is $3,848.10.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, along the line of questions asked by my colleague [Mr. MANN], I did not quite understand what the gentleman's statement is in reference to the amendment proposed here cutting this salary from $3,000 to $2,500, and whether it is likely this bill would go through and have it go to conference, and then the House be compelled to adopt the Senate proposition of $3,000.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, there has not been a suggestion to me of such a thing. The matter has never been discussed in my presence, and the committee made no intimation of such a thing. The suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the first that I have heard on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. The only reason that I asked the question was that I thought possibly the gentleman might be able to state to the House that it was the intention, so far as the House conferees could control the matter, to stand for the $2,500.

Mr. HIGGINS. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I did not quite catch his language.

Mr. FOSTER. I say I thought the gentleman might be able to state that the intention on the part of the House, so far as the conferees were able to control the matter when it did go to conference, would be to stand for the $2,500.

Mr. HIGGINS. Of course the gentleman knows that I could not speak for the conferees. I probably will not be one of them. It would have to be a full and free conference. I would not assume that the conferees would go into the conference with any ulterior motive, and, of course, the gentleman from Illinois would not expect them to.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I would not; but I would like to inquire if some of these other marshals who are getting $2,000 will not be likely to come to the House and ask that their salaries be raised to $2,500 or $3,000 as a result of granting this raise to this particular marshal.

Mr. HIGGINS. I can only say for myself, as a member of the committee, that I do not favor any such action; that there are no bills indicating any such legislation before the committee; and while I am asked again to go into the realms of prophecy, I say that I do not think there would be any such movement.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Connecticut knows that when one salary is raised usually there is an importuning to raise the salaries of officers of a like character.

Mr. HIGGINS. Yes; but I am quite sure that the sense of fairness which always possesses the gentleman from Illinois will compel him to see the absolute justice of this proposition. I say that, as compared with the salaries of other marshals in the 85 districts of the country, this is the most meritorious proposition.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say that the committee considered these other cases with a view of reaching a conclusion as to the identical situation which the gentleman from Illinois has pointed out, whether these other marshals that are getting $2,000 would be likely to ask to have their salaries increased. The committee reached the conclusion that in all the districts where the salary was only $2,000—and I think there were only four—there was no one so meritorious as this; that conditions did not exist in the other three districts that existed in this one.

Mr. FOSTER. So the gentleman's opinion as a lawyer, after investigation of this case, leads him to believe that the increase is fair and proper?

Mr. NORRIS. I think so.

Mr. HIGGINS. Will not the gentleman from Nebraska give me the benefit of his observation? I did not hear it.

Mr. NORRIS. I stated to the gentleman from Illinois that in the investigation the committee took into consideration the other districts where the salary is only $2,000, and while there was no one representing the other three districts, the committee looked into the facts as much as they could and reached the conclusion that this particular district in Connecticut was more meritorious and had reasons for an increase of the amount of salary that do not exist in the other districts where the salary is only $2,000.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I will print the report of the committee on this proposition, which furnishes ample reasons for this legislation:

[House Report No. 386, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

SALARY UNITED STATES MARSHAL, DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report to accompany S. 2434:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2434) providing for an increase of salary of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut, having had the same under consideration, report thereon with an amendment striking out "three thousand," in line 5, and substituting in lieu therefor "two thousand five hundred," and do unanimously recommend that the bill thus amended do pass.

The State of Connecticut comprises one judicial district, and the law provides for the holding of court at New Haven and Hartford. The salary of marshal for the district of Connecticut has remained the same for about 16 years. It was represented to your committee by those most familiar with the busines transacted that the volume of work for the United States marshals and the bailiffs and deputies whom they appoint had increased in the vicinity of 40 per cent in the last 16 years. The duties of the office require the constant attention of the marshal, and he is allowed one office deputy only, at a salary of $1,000 a year. The district since the salary of the marshal was fixed at $2,000, his present compensation, has increased more than 400,000 in population, until now, by the census of 1910, the population of the district is 1,114,756. There is no district in the United States with a population of a million or more but what the marshal receives a salary of $3,000 a year.

The salaries paid the marshals in the 85 districts are as follows:

In 1 district	$5,500
In 10 districts	5,000
In 5 districts	4,500
In 44 districts	4,000
In 8 districts	3,500
In 10 districts	3,000
In 3 districts	2,500
In 4 districts	2,000

Three districts out of the four that receive $2,000 salary, viz, Delaware (202,322), New Hampshire (430,572), and Rhode Island (542,610), have a combined population of 1,175,504, only about 60,000 more than the Connecticut district has.

There were pending July 1, 1911, 804 civil and criminal cases, and the business is increasing from year to year. The clerk was paid in 1911 $4,939.60. The average salary received by the marshals in the different districts is $3,848.10.

The bill as it passed the Senate provided for a salary of $3,000 a year. Your committee recommends that the Senate bill be amended fixing the salary at $2,500 and are unanimous in their recommendation that the bill so amended do pass.

Mr. CLAYTON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. HIGGINS. Certainly.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that this bill is not a very unusual one. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY], who has served a long time on the Committee on the Judiciary with me, will bear me out in the statement that only a few years ago a similar bill was passed in regard to a case in the State of Louisiana and a similar bill in regard to a like case in the State of Texas. Occasionally, from time to time, there is some development of business that makes it necessary to change the salaries in order that they may be fair and equitable, and I believe the gentleman from Texas was the author of the bill covering the Texas case, and I think one of the Senators elect from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] was the author of the other bill.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I will say that I was not the author of the bill, but it is a fact that we passed a bill to that effect raising the salary of the marshal of the northern district from $3,000 to $4,000, and of the southern district from $3,500 to $4,000; and we equalized the salaries of the State of Texas. In the Louisiana case——

Mr. CLAYTON. Was not the salary in the Texas case raised in one instance from $4,000 to $4,500?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. In the Louisiana case it raised the salary from $4,000 to $4,500.

Mr. MANN. And was there not a salary reduced in that bill?

Mr. HENRY of Texas. We reduced the salary of the eastern district of Texas to $4,000. The increase in the aggregate of the salaries was about $1,500.

Mr. CLAYTON. In the Louisiana case there was no reduction. There the marshal was drawing $4,000 and the salary was increased to $4,500. Now, I say that the committee took into consideration the action of the House heretofore, the merits of this case and the merits of the other cases, and did not treat this one from any narrow policy whatever. It seemed to the committee that this was a meritorious proposition to increase this salary by $500. I may say to some gentlemen who have asked what the committee of conference would probably do. I do not know who will be on the committee of conference, but I take it that the suggestion will not be made in the committee of conference that this salary be raised to $3,000 instead of $2,500. I think very likely the Senate will concur in the House amendment fixing it at $2,500.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLAYTON. I will.

Mr. KINDRED. I would like to be enlightened as to the desirability of making all of the salaries of the marshals of the United States uniform.

Mr. CLAYTON. That would not be practicable nor would it be just.

Mr. KINDRED. Why not?

Mr. CLAYTON. Because some marshals do a very large amount of work, having a large district, and other marshals do a small amount of work, having a little district.

Mr. KINDRED. Could not the districts be so adjusted that there would be a uniform amount of service?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is not possible. You might have to take territory from an adjoining State, or you might have to put more people in a district. Take a great State like New York, or a number of the other States, and then compare them with a State like Nevada, and how would you equalize the conditions?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if this bill should pass the House fixing the salary at $2,500, is it the gentleman's personal opinion that the House would maintain that salary and not yield to any proposition to increase the salary from $2,500 to $3,000?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is my personal opinion, and that was the opinion of the committee that ordered the report brought into the House.

Mr. MANN. As the gentleman from Alabama will have charge of the matter if it goes to conference, I am willing, as far as I am concerned, to accept his personal opinion on the subject.

Mr. CLAYTON. That is my personal opinion, and I for one favor $2,500. I want to be perfectly frank with the gentleman from Illinois, as he is always perfectly frank himself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, page 1, strike out the words "three thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the words "two thousand five hundred."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the amended Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HIGGINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH FORT HUACHUCA MILITARY RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21170) granting to El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the Territory and State of Arizona, a right of way through the Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, in the State of Arizona, and authorizing said corporation and its successors or assigns to construct and operate a railway through said Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill to grant a railroad company a right of way through a military reservation in the State of Arizona. I will inquire of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] if he would be willing to accept an amendment to the bill to this effect: That any other person or corporation having a franchise for the operation of a railway in the State of Arizona may, upon obtaining a license from the Secretary of War, use the track and other constructions herein authorized to be placed upon the reservation upon paying just compensation, and if the parties concerned can not agree upon the amount of such compensation, the sum or sums to be paid for said use shall be fixed by the Secretary of War; and also an amendment to the effect that the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to such an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the Territory and State of Arizona, be, and it is hereby, empowered to survey and to locate and construct a railway, telegraph, and telephone line through Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, in the State of Arizona, upon such a line as may be determined and approved by the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. That such corporation is authorized to take and use for all purposes of a railway, telegraph, and telephone line, and for no other purpose, a right of way 100 feet in width through said Fort Huachuca Military Reservation, and a right to take and use a strip of land in said reservation 200 feet in width, with a length of 3,000 feet, in addition to said right of way, for stations, station grounds, and stockyards, with the right to use such other additional grounds, when cuts and fills may be necessary for the construction and maintenance of said roadbed, not exceeding 100 feet in width on each side of said right of way, or as much thereof as may be included in said cut or fill: Provided, That no part of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be used except in such manner and for such purposes as shall be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and convenient operation of said railway, telegraph, and telephone lines and the use and enjoyment of the rights and privileges herein granted, and when any portion thereof shall cease to be so used such portion shall revert to the United States from which the same shall be taken: Provided further, That before the said El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co. shall be permitted to enter upon any part of said military reservation a description by metes and bounds of the lands herein authorized to be taken shall be approved by the Secretary of War: And provided further, That the said El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co., its successor and assigns, shall construct, maintain, and operate said railway and telegraph and telephone lines in accordance with such regulations and restrictions as the Secretary of War may from time to time prescribe, and shall construct and maintain such crossings, and shall surface and prepare its tracks in such manner, as may be required by the Secretary of War, as not to interfere with the proper use of said reservation for maneuvering and other military purposes.

SEC. 3. That the rights and privileges herein granted shall extend to and inure to the benefit of said El Paso & Southwestern Railroad Co., its successors or assigns, but subject, however, to the conditions, stipulations, and requirements herein set forth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding new sections, as follows:

"SEC. 4. That any other person or corporation having a franchise for the operation of a railway in the State of Arizona may, upon obtaining a license from the Secretary of War, use the track and other constructions herein authorized to be placed upon the reservation upon paying just compensation, and if the parties concerned can not agree upon the amount of such compensation, the sum or sums to be paid for said use shall be fixed by the Secretary of War.

"SEC. 5. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL AIDS TO NAVIGATION IN LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 22043) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill being on the Union Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The first question is the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection to that?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill; it has not been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22043) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to establish and provide the following additional aids to navigation in the Lighthouse Service, under the Department of Commerce and Labor, in accordance with the respective limits of cost hereinafter respectively set forth, which shall in no case be exceeded.

FIRST LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to use the appropriation of $200,000 for a tender for the first lighthouse district and elsewhere made by the acts of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 331), and March 4, 1909 (35 Stat., p. 970), for the construction of two tenders.

FIFTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized to complete the reestablishment of the light and fog-signal station marking Thimble Shoal, Chesapeake Bay, Va., at an additional cost not to exceed $39,000.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to use for the establishment of gas buoys and other aids to navigation in the channels leading to Baltimore, Md., the appropriation of $125,000 made by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 1431), for the establishment of range lights in Fort McHenry Channel, Md.

SIXTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized to complete the lighting and marking with aids to navigation of Cape Fear River, N. C., at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to station the light vessel for which appropriation was made in the act of May 27, 1908, or any other light vessel at such position in the vicinity of Frying Pan Shoals as he may determine to be most advantageous to navigation.

EIGHTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to purchase from the State of Texas for lighthouse purposes approximately 16 acres of land adjoining the Aransas Pass Light Station, Tex.; and the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," for the fiscal year in which the purchase is effected is hereby made available for the purchase of said land.

NINTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to use the unexpended balance of the appropriation of $15,000 for a storehouse and dock at San Juan, P. R., made by the act of May 27, 1908 (35 Stat., p. 332), for the alteration, repair, and construction of necessary buildings and docks and improvements of the grounds of the reservation at San Juan, P. R., set aside to the Department of Commerce and Labor as a lighthouse depot and headquarters of the lighthouse district by the proclamation of the President of the United States dated January 26, 1912.

A dwelling for keepers of the lights in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and improving the lighting at a cost not to exceed $14,000 is hereby authorized.

ELEVENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized to make repairs and improvements to aids to navigation in the St. Marys River, Mich., at a cost not to exceed $60,000.

That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized to reconvey to Chase S. Osborn, of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., 1.95 acres of land situated in the county of Chippewa, State of Michigan, which were granted by him to the United States by deed dated May 28, 1910, and for which the purchase price has never been paid by the Government, to be used as a site for Duck Island Range Lights, St. Marys River, Mich., which land is no longer needed for lighthouse purposes, in view of the discontinuance of said lights: Provided, That said reconveyance shall be made without expense to either party, except that incident to the preparation and recording of the necessary title papers, which expense shall be defrayed by the United States out of the appropriation made on March 3, 1903, for the purpose of obtaining title to the sites upon which range lights had been established along the St. Marys River, Mich.

THIRTEENTH LIGHTHOUSE DISTRICT.

The Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby authorized to use the appropriation of $60,000 for a tender for the fifteenth (now the thirteenth) lighthouse district made by the act of March 4, 1907 (34 Stats., 1319), for constructing a tender for general service.

Post-lantern lights may be established and maintained, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Lighthouses, out of the annual appropriations for the Lighthouse Service, on the St. Croix River, including Lake St. Croix, Wis. and Minn.

SEC. 2. That hereafter, in case of the absence of the Commissioner and Deputy Commissioner of the Bureau of Lighthouses, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor may designate some officer of said bureau to perform the duties of the commissioner during his absence.

And hereafter the benefits of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stats., 556), entitled "An act granting to certain employees of the United States the right to receive from it compensation for injuries sustained in the course of their employment," shall be extended to persons employed by the United States in any hazardous employment in the Lighthouse Service; and hereafter the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to purchase, from the appropriations for the Lighthouse Service, clothing for the crews of vessels, to be sold to the employees of said service and the appropriations reimbursed; and hereafter reimbursement, under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, is authorized to keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them, not exceeding in all $5,000 in any fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. With great pleasure.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman first in reference to section 2, concerning the extending of the act for the benefit of employees of the Government injured in hazardous service; does the gentleman recall whether we now make any provision for lighthouse keepers who are injured in the service?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not my recollection.

Mr. MANN. We make provision for the life-saving assessment and keepers, but I was not sure in reference to lighthouse keepers.

Mr. ADAMSON. The recommendation was that the same provision be extended to the workmen in the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but we make how provision for extending the law to keepers and surfmen in the Life-Saving Service under this law.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is true.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the gentleman think we ought to do that?

Mr. MANN. I do; I am not complaining about that. I was not certain, and I am not certain now, except as the gentleman states, whether there is now any provision for the benefit of keepers of lighthouses. I would not want to reduce the compensation which they might receive through this act.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think there is.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Illinois is familiar with the original act to compensate artisans and mechanics engaged in manufacturing enterprises, and since then it has been extended to cover certain employees in other services presumably engaged in extra hazardous employment.

Mr. MANN. Well, we have extended the benefit to the Bureau of Mines and Mining and the Forest Service, and I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to extending it to the Lighthouse Service, unless the result would be that it would decrease the provision that we make for the salaries of keepers, but I may be entirely in error.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not certain it should be extended to all employees of the Lighthouse Service. It does not apply to all employees of the Army and Navy—not to civilian employees in establishments where they are manufacturing. It only applies to those employees who are engaged as part of the manufacturing force as mechanics and artisans. It does not apply to other civilian employees. There is no excuse to extend it to civilian employees of the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand this is extended to civilian employees. The law in reference to compensation of employees now applies to the employees of the Government engaged in hazardous employment at the Tompkinsville station, where they manufacture aids to navigation. This bill now proposes to extend to other persons engaged in hazardous employment, which I take it would include lighthouse keepers as well as people on board lighthouse vessels, probably the lighthouse tenders.

Mr. ADAMSON. That qualification is maintained here, that it must be hazardous employment.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I was under a sort of an impression that we now had a provision; but let me ask the gentleman further about this other provision, concerning the reimbursement to lighthouse keepers for rations and provisions furnished shipwrecked persons. We put a provision in one of the appropriation laws a year or two ago making that apply to the life-saving keepers. Did it apply to lighthouse keepers or not?

Mr. ADAMSON. No; it did not.

Mr. MANN. It only applied to the Life-Saving Service?

Mr. ADAMSON. It was thought advisable to make this extension because it did not apply.

Mr. MANN. In reference to the provision on page 4 for a dwelling for keepers at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and improving the lighting at a cost not to exceed $14,000, is the gentleman able to say how much of that is for keepers' dwelling and how much for improving the lighting? Heretofore it has always been the custom to segregate the items which provide specifically for keepers' dwellings at some limit of cost, but this puts them together.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have an itemized statement here, and it is very short, and I will read it:

The dwelling at this station was destroyed during the late insurrection, and since the occupation of Guantanamo by the United States the keepers have been compelled to live in a wooden shack, with only three rooms to house three keepers. The lights in charge of these two keepers are widely separated. With the installation of acetylene lights, as proposed, the service of one keeper may be dispensed with. The following statement covers the details of the proposed work: Dwelling for 2 keepers, $8,000; 2 acetylene lights at Fishermans Point, $2,800; 2 acetylene lights at Hicacal Beach, $2,800; contingencies, $400; in all, $14,000.

I will state there is nothing in here except pending projects and emergency additional appropriations. All these large figures refer to authorizations already made in the execution of which detailed changes are thought advisable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman about the item on page 3 authorizing the purchase from the State of Texas for lighthouse purposes approximately 16 acres of land adjoining the Aransas Pass Light Station.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, while the gentleman is looking up the information, that the Senate passed a bill on this subject some time ago, and I think the cost was probably $16, more or less.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sixteen dollars?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is a strip that separates the water from the property of the Government, and they want to get to the water from the property of the Government, and I think $16 is the cost.

Mr. MANN. It is a small amount, and they need the land, and the State seemed willing to donate the land to them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, my inquiry, if the gentleman will permit me to state it——

Mr. ADAMSON. With pleasure.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It makes an appropriation from the general expenses of the Lighthouse Service for the fiscal year during which the purchase is made, and if it were a considerable amount it might seriously affect the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is right about that, but there is nothing of consequence involved in it, so far as money is concerned. The Government desires to obtain title and somebody is willing to let the Government have the title.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is a very trifling amount.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this for land in Texas?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me we got some land there not long ago.

Mr. MANN. This land is not worth anything except to the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Georgia about the first paragraph in section 2, authorizing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in the absence of the commissioner and deputy commissioner, to designate some other officer to perform the duties of the commissioner. Here is a bureau where the commissioner has a deputy, and if some other person is to be authorized to act when both of them are absent it will encourage absenteeism from Washington still more than it is at present. It is sufficiently encouraged now by the conduct of certain high officials to an extent that is hardly to be defended.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from New York willing to state to the House at this time whether the gentleman's committee has before it a proposition practically to abolish the office of deputy commissioner?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not recall.

Mr. MANN. I think the department desires, as a matter of fact, to omit the appropriation this year for a deputy commissioner, who gets a salary of $4,000, and to insert in lieu of him a place in relation to an assistant engineer there, or something of the sort, at a salary of $3,000, thus saving the Government a thousand dollars in salary; and then it would be quite necessary to have some provision like this.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have a short explanation here that will answer his question:

Owing to the extensive territory covered by the Lighthouse Service, good administration requires the Commissioner of Lighthouses, or the deputy commissioner, to be in the field at various times. Should one of these officers thus be absent and the other unable to act, through sickness or other unavoidable cause, the bureau would suffer embarrassment unless he has authority to designate some other officer to act as executive head. Under the construction of existing law, the Secretary of Commerce and Labor has not this authority, and the effect of this provision is simply to give him this authority. Similar legislation was enacted in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved March 4, 1911, as respects the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But it did not authorize three persons to act as head in the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman knows that this Lighthouse Service covers a vast deal of territory, embracing many projects and institutions. Sometimes it is necessary for one of the head officers to go out and see about some of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the next paragraph of section 2 there is a provision that I wish to call attention to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker, until I get some information about it. There are two provisions here. The first is:

And hereafter the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is authorized to purchase, from the appropriations for the Lighthouse Service, clothing for the crews of vessels, to be sold to the employees of said service and the appropriations reimbursed.

That makes in effect a permanent indefinite appropriation, and is a very bad way of legislating. The next provision, which provides for reimbursement under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the "keepers of light stations and masters of light vessels and of lighthouse tenders for rations and provisions and clothing furnished shipwrecked persons who may be temporarily provided for by them," in the same way makes a permanent appropriation. My recollection is that at present in the appropriation for the annual service provision is made for both of the matters, or if it be not can easily be provided; and inasmuch as they must be included in the explanations and estimates submitted to Congress, Congress keeps very close track in the preparation of appropriation bills of the items. But if this permanent provision is enacted it becomes lost sight of, and nobody ever makes any inquiry whatever about it. These are two matters that do not affect the desire of the gentleman from Georgia to take care of his authorizations, and I wish to inquire whether he will not consent to strike out all after the word "service," on line 6 of page 6?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course the House has control of this matter. I am not wedded to the propositions at all. Our committee reported them because they were recommended by the department as being conducive to better administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it does not conduce to better administration, and it takes from the House the scrutiny that it gives to such matters. I am calling the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should make a motion to strike it out and let the House vote on it.

Mr. COX of Ohio. May I inquire, Why did not the committee submit a report on this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say that it was omitted through inadvertence, but it was intended to be done, and it is cured in a measure by the fact that there is nothing in the bill except these little emergency items and these works that are pending, and every one of them was fully explained in letters from the department, which are House documents.

Mr. COX of Ohio. The chairman has them, but does not the gentleman think it is a dangerous practice to put bills carrying as much money as this on the Unanimous Consent Calendar without a report accompanying them?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman that a report was inadvertently omitted. After the bill and report were put in the basket it would have been something unusual then to have submitted an additional report. It could have been done by unanimous consent, but I think the lack of a report is condoned and excused in this case from the fact that every one of these items is fully explained in these letters, which are House documents.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I see in the bill provisions for Virginia, North Carolina, Texas, Porto Rico, Cuba, and Michigan. I fail to discover anything for places on the Pacific coast, either for Alaska or anywhere else.

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman that I did not locate any of these works. If we had found among the papers of the department any cases on the Pacific coast under the same circumstances we would have put them in. It was not the purpose of the committee to get up anything sectional in this matter, but simply to provide for emergencies where they existed.

We have not yet prepared, introduced, nor reported the usual omnibus bill for lighthouse projects. Later on we intend to do that, and I have no doubt that the Pacific coast will receive proper consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there are no emergency projects in Alaska?

Mr. ADAMSON. Nothing insisted on. We simply put in here things that the department said they were in a hurry to have, without waiting for us to make up the general omnibus bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Did the department recommend these, and not recommend anything for Alaska?

Mr. ADAMSON. They recommended a great many things, but they did not recommend all of them as pending projects for which they were compelled to have action taken right now or stop the work.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman say whether or not there were any recommendations for emergency matters on the Pacific coast?

Mr. ADAMSON. We did not find any that were as urgent as these or in the same condition. If we had found them, we would have put them in.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Were the projects on the Pacific coast considered in making up this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. They were considered in making up the general bill, and I think several of them will be reported.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Were they considered in making up this emergency bill? Did you go over the items on the Pacific coast, and especially Alaska, when you were making up this bill, to see whether any of them were emergency items or not?

Mr. ADAMSON. We went over every solitary recommendation, not with a view to seeing whether they were on the Pacific coast or not, but with a view to determining the character of the projects; and we reported these as emergency and necessary to be done while we were waiting to prepare the other bill.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not think the gentleman has answered my question yet. Did you examine projects in reference to Alaska and ascertain that there were none of them that were emergency?

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not examine any projects with reference to Alaska or any other section, but I examined every project.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then you examined those in reference to Alaska?

Mr. ADAMSON. No, sir; not in reference to Alaska, but in reference to every project. I have no sectionalism in my blood or bones.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I am not asking that.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have placed in this bill those things that ought to be passed at once.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How did it happen that you found nothing on the Pacific coast that ought to be passed at once?

Mr. ADAMSON. I suppose there was nothing of an emergency nature.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Do you know whether there was or not?

Mr. ADAMSON. That was our opinion.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question in that connection?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. About Pearl Harbor. In the estimate which the department has in group No. 1, public works, Pearl Harbor was placed fourth. Was there any special reason for not including aids to navigation at Pearl Harbor?

Mr. ADAMSON. I did not catch the latter part of the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. I see in the list which the department estimated for, in group No. 1, which I take it contains the urgent matters, as No. 4 they ask for aids to navigation at Pearl Harbor in connection with the naval work there.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is not in this bill.

Mr. MANN. No; but it was No. 4 in the request which they made.

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course we considered all those things, but we did not undertake to put any new projects into this bill at all. We tried simply to provide for the emergency work that was pending, and the only additional things provided for in this bill, as I remember, are two amounts for work which they said were necessary in order to start work where the money was already authorized in part, but not enough to resume the project.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to state to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] that I am the only member on this committee from the Pacific coast. The bill was brought in unexpectedly, without consultation with me or any other member of the committee that I know of, and presented for a vote. I protested that the Pacific coast had been overlooked in this matter; that there had been no consideration whatever given to any Pacific coast projects. I understood, however, from the chairman that these items had been specially recommended by the department. I have since inquired of the department, and they informed me that they did not particularly recommend these special items, though they were all in the estimates, and that they did not present this bill nor the particular items in it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know anything about that, Mr. Speaker, and I do not care to raise any question of veracity here. I simply state the facts, and the responsibility can rest where it may. The Commissioner of Lighthouses came to the committee room, we made up this bill, and he afterwards came and had a couple more items put into it that were not in it at first. The truth is as I state, and responsibility shall rest where it may.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I called up the Commissioner this morning.

Mr. ADAMSON. I can not help that.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I think there is no question about their being in the estimates.

Mr. ADAMSON. These items were in the estimates and were put in the bill by the Commissioner of Lighthouses and myself, and presented to the committee after being introduced, and the committee passed on this bill and reported. The only objection made to it was on account of some things that it did not contain; and there are some other coasts in the country on which no projects are included in this bill besides the Pacific coast. None of them have been as insistent as the gentleman from the Pacific coast, because all of them were satisfied when I told them the facts about the case. I do not think this bill ought to suffer for what it does not contain. It contains the things that the department needs right now; and without waiting to fuss about whether others shall be granted or not this bill ought to be passed, and the committee ought to be given time to make up a bill which, I think, can be made to do justice to everybody and every coast.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Reserving the right to object, I will state that I do not care to interpose an objection, because I believe that the items in the bill are necessary; but I do wish to register a protest upon this method of making up bills—in not consulting the Representatives from the Pacific coast or other sections represented on the committee when a bill of this character is being framed, in order that we may have an opportunity to give the matter careful consideration, and if there are any items that are particularly necessary that they should be included in the bill. This bill was presented to the committee without any previous notice, a vote immediately demanded upon it, and that is what I objected to. Inasmuch as I believe that these items in the bill are necessary, I will not object to the passage of the bill at this time, except to say that I hope hereafter a little more consideration will be given to the Representatives of the Pacific coast, with its great seacoast from Alaska to San Diego.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that this bill was introduced in the regular way after having been made up in consultation with the Commissioner of Lighthouses, referred to the committee, called up before the committee, as any Member has a right to do, considered by the committee, and reported. If there is anything wrong in that, the gentleman can make the most of it. I wish to say, further, that as long as we have the two distinguished Members from the Pacific coast who have engaged in this colloquy there has not been any danger, there never will be any danger, of the Pacific coast slipping up or of anybody putting anything over on the Pacific coast without hearing from them and the Pacific coast receiving full justice so far as their demands are concerned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, on page 4.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, strike out lines 6, 7, and 8.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike this provision out because, in my opinion, it is absolutely unnecessary. In an investigation conducted last year upon request for this appropriation it was shown that there is absolutely no commerce in Guantanamo Bay. It has been selected as a site for a naval station. It is expected to be a coaling station, but at present there are no coaling facilities and nothing but a coal pile. There is no possibility that the naval vessels will have any necessity to enter the harbor at night in the immediate future; no necessity of putting in high-power acetylene lights that are proposed nor the keeper's dwelling. For the present, until Congress determines that the naval station, projected for many years, but about which nothing has been done, shall be commenced, it seems to me unnecessary to authorize or provide for lights that will be necessary when naval vessels are likely to use the harbor at night.

Mr. ADAMSON. I hope that the motion will not prevail. The department considers it very important. The light keeper's residence was burned and the station is there. He has two or three other stations to serve. The amount is a trifle, only $14,000, and I see no reason in the world why we should take a back track.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that there are two or three small lights across the bay. The probabilities are that it will be necessary for the keeper to reside in the vicinity of the lights if they are to be properly attended. The keeper's dwelling would properly be authorized if the acetylene lights that are proposed to be provided there are provided for the purpose of permitting the entrance to the harbor at night. The Commissioner of Lighthouses stated that Guantanamo is a coaling station and a naval base and that very little commerce came there, and unless the station is developed as contemplated there is no necessity for these lights or the $6,500 dwelling.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FITZGERALD) there were 16 ayes and 34 noes.

So the amendment was lost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out, on page 6, all after the word "service," in line 6.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 6, strike out all after the word "service" down to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the fact that this will make a permanent and indefinite appropriation, and very greatly embarrass the Committee on Appropriations in the preparation and investigation of appropriations and expenditures for this service. In view of the fact that there will be no difficulty in the department obtaining any reasonable sum for this purpose, I hope he will not antagonize this amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman need not be alarmed about the Committee on Appropriations, as at present constituted, being staggered in dealing with a small matter like this. They are vigilant and brave watchdogs of the Treasury. They have judgment as well as courage, and they can certainly deal with two little, trifling, beneficent details of administration like this without confusing the service or disturbing the Treasury. They simply provide for giving to these men the benefit of purchasing their uniform and equipment, like some other arms of the service, at a reasonable price, and reimbursing them for such outlays as they may make for humanitarian purposes. The amounts are small, and they can be easily ascertained and looked out for and provided for by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I called attention to the fact that the inclusion of the items in the bill will take from the committee the consideration of them. This makes a permanent appropriation, and makes available a large appropriation that can be utilized for many purposes. Let me say that the statement of the gentleman from Georgia is hardly in good faith, because if it had not been for the statement by him that he would not antagonize the amendment we would not be considering this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I never stated that I would consent to the amendment or vote for it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think the gentleman stated that he would make no opposition to it.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman asked me to consent to the amendment, and I said I would not consent, but he might offer the amendment from the floor. The RECORD will show what I said.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that if it had not been for the statement of the gentleman from Georgia, from which it was clear to me that he had no objection that this portion of the bill would be eliminated, this bill would not now be under consideration in the House.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I can not allow such a statement as that to go unchallenged. The RECORD will show what I said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, whatever the gentleman may have said, the gentleman can not challenge or prevent me from stating what my understanding was——

Mr. ADAMSON. Oh, well.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Or what inference I drew from the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, while the gentleman has that understanding, as he states, I think he was not warranted in having it. I listened very attentively——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, of course the gentleman can not tell whether I was warranted in drawing conclusions or not. That is something that nobody can determine but myself.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman was not warranted, but I do not deny that the gentleman obtained that understanding.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I might have had overconfidence.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I listened to the colloquy between the gentlemen and was rather surprised that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] did not object, after having made his statement on those points and not having obtained, as it seemed to me, an agreement from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I stated the fact to the gentleman, and I understood from the gentleman's statement just what I have stated. However, forewarned is forearmed. This time it may be my fault. The next time it will not be.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I insist that the gentleman yield to me, inasmuch as I am the subject of the colloquy.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from New York asked me to consent to eliminate that provision. I refused and told him I was willing to have him make the motion on the floor. I distinctly stated in terms that it was for this House to decide whether it would strike that out by amendment or not, and the RECORD will show every one of those words.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I think it is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman made that statement. Neither he nor I could agree to strike anything out of this bill, but the gentleman very well knew that his bill could not be considered by unanimous consent unless his attitude toward such a motion was such as would be satisfactory to those proposing it.

However, since the gentleman takes a different attitude, I desire to call the attention of the committee to these provisions which I ask to have stricken out. The gentleman proposes to make permanent indefinite appropriations for certain purposes. He says they are for humanitarian purposes. No difficulty is ever experienced in obtaining sufficient appropriations for purposes of the character indicated, but it is simply the enactment of vicious legislation that can not be defended. The important thing in the making of an appropriation for the expenditures of the various services of the Government is to make them in such a way that the Congress will know specifically for what purpose the money is being expended and provide accurately the amount required, but if tucked away in this bill, supposed to contain only authorizations for various necessary projects, there are those provisions which make available for the purposes indicated very large appropriations which it is not contemplated shall be made available for such purposes. The Congress, then, loses control and has no knowledge of the amounts that are being appropriated for such purposes. It seems to me the gentleman should be satisfied to pass this emergency authorization without conflict or controversy, without attempting to add to the number of permanent provisions that every committee which has to do with appropriations of Federal money, regardless of party affiliations, is continually striving to repeal. It is bad legislation, and it should not be enacted.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RUCKER of Missouri). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and there were on a division (demanded by Mr. ADAMSON)—ayes 26, noes 32.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, the question will be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 58, nays 170, answered "present" 7, not voting 156, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the amendment is rejected, and the Doorkeeper will open the doors. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAM ACROSS ROCK RIVER, ILL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20190) to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rock River, Ill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement and completion of the construction of a dam across Rock River, Ill., authorized by the act entitled "An act permitting the building of a dam across Rock River, near Byron, Ill.," approved February 18, 1911, be extended for one and three years, respectively, from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia what was the date fixed by the act of February 11 for the commencement of work on this dam?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it was one year from the time the bill was passed.

Mr. COOPER. Then this proposes to extend it not one year from that date, making two years in all, but one year from the date of the passage of this act?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; I believe that is what it means; we want to give them a fair chance to build. They said they had the money and were ready to go ahead in good faith.

Mr. COOPER. What reason was given for the delay in the commencement of building the dam?

Mr. ADAMSON. They could not get the change; they did not have the money, perhaps; some trouble with their finances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

GRANT OF SCHOOL LANDS TO THE STATE OF LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20114) granting school lands to the State of Louisiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the unsurveyed lands in the State of Louisiana which are shown by official protraction of the Government surveys heretofore made to be embraced within sections No. 16 and which lie in the same township as lands which have been certified or patented in that State under the act approved March 2, 1849, entitled "An act to aid the State of Louisiana in draining swamp lands therein," and the act approved September 28, 1850, entitled "An act to enable the State of Arkansas and other States to reclaim swamp lands within their limits," be, and the same are hereby, fixed, reserved, and confirmed to that State as though the official surveys had been regularly extended over such townships.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say to the gentleman who introduced the bill and reported it that I think the House is entitled to have bills of this character referred first to the department and have a report from the department upon the bill before it comes in for consideration in the House, and, there being no such report from the department in this case, I think I shall have to object.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. The bill as introduced was prepared by the department.

Mr. MANN. Well, that does not make any difference. We have the right to have the department state the situation in regard to a bill. That is only fair to the House. I gave notice some time ago that I would insist upon it, so far as concerns these bills that come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. This bill was submitted to the department, Mr. Speaker, and this is the bill prepared by the department. That is the report that was sent to the committee.

Mr. MANN. I do not know by whom it was prepared in the department. Bills ought to come with a letter from the department, and they should have an expression of opinion by the department upon which we can thoroughly rely and from which we can obtain information.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. MANN. I shall object for that reason.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. I am not trying to get this bill through surreptitiously.

Mr. MANN. Oh, nobody would accuse the gentleman from Louisiana of attempting to do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get a letter from the department and can get this bill put upon the calendar again.

PATENTED LANDS IN THE YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 21535) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, for the purpose of eliminating private holdings within the Yosemite National Park and the preservation intact of the natural timber along the roads in the scenic portions of the park, both on patented and park lands, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the lands held in private ownership within the boundaries of said park, by the exchange of decayed or matured timber that can be removed from such parts of the park as will not affect the scenic beauty thereof, for lands of equal value held in private ownership therein; and also, in his discretion, to exchange for timber standing near the public roads on patented lands timber of equal value on park lands in other parts of the park.

SEC. 2. That the value of patented lands within the park offered in exchange and the value of the timber on park lands proposed to be given in exchange for such patented lands shall be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, direct; and all expenses incident to ascertaining such values shall be paid by the owners of said patented lands, and such owners shall, before any exchange is effective, furnish the Secretary of the Interior evidence satisfactory to him of title to the patented lands offered in exchange; and if the value of the timber on park lands exceeds the value of the patented lands deeded to the Government in the exchange, such excess shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior by the owners of the patented lands before any of the timber is removed from the park, and may be used by said Secretary in the management, improvement, and protection of the park. The same course shall be pursued in relation to exchange for timber standing near public roads on patented lands for timber to be exchanged on park lands: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government under this act shall become a part of the Yosemite National Park.

SEC. 3. That all timber must be cut and removed from the park under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and any damage which may result to the roads or any part of the park in consequence of the cutting and removal of the timber from the reservation shall be borne by the owners of the patented lands, and bond satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior must be given for the payment of such damages, if any, as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may also sell and permit the removal of such matured or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary or advisable for the protection or improvement of the park, and the proceeds derived therefrom shall be expended under his direction in the management, improvement, and protection of the park.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that this House bill——

Mr. MANN. I will just object to the consideration, and that will save the gentleman the trouble. There is another bill just like it on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS RUSSELL FORK OF BIG SANDY RIVER, KY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 20286) authorizing the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct a bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for the fiscal court of Pike County, Ky., to construct and maintain a wagon and foot bridge across Russell Fork of Big Sandy River, and it is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Russell Fork of Big Sandy River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Elkhorn City, in the county of Pike, in the State of Kentucky, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also, the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "it shall be lawful" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the consent of Congress is hereby granted."

Page 1, line 4, strike out the word "and."

Page 1, line 4, after the word "maintain" insert the words "and operate."

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "wagon and foot."

Page 1, lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, strike out the words "and is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Russell Fork of Big Sandy River."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "it shall be lawful" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the consent of Congress is hereby granted."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, lines 6, 7, 8, and 9, strike out the words "and is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Russell Fork of the Big Sandy River."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia why the words "wagon and foot" were stricken from line 5?

Mr. ADAMSON. It has been our policy, and it is so written in the general bridge act, just to say "a bridge"; and then there is another provision in the general bridge act authorizing the bridge to be used for other purposes, so that we usually strike out all definitions and leave the word "bridge" straight.

Mr. COOPER. It might be important sometimes to know whether it is a railroad bridge or not.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have a provision in the general bridge act so that a railroad can condemn the use of a bridge and get onto it with its tracks.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENTED LANDS IN YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5718) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of eliminating private holdings within the Yosemite National Park and the preservation intact of the natural timber along the roads in the scenic portions of the park, both on patented and park lands, is hereby empowered, in his discretion, to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the lands held in private ownership within the boundaries of said park, by the exchange of decayed or matured timber, that can be removed from such parts of the park as will not affect the scenic beauty thereof, for lands of equal timber value held in private ownership therein, and also, in his discretion, to exchange for timber standing near the public roads on patented lands for timber of equal value on park lands in other parts of the park.

SEC. 2. That the value of patented lands within the park offered in exchange, and the value of the timber on park lands proposed to be given in exchange for such patented lands, shall be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, direct, and all expenses incident to ascertaining such values shall be paid by the owners of said patented lands, and such owners shall, before any exchange is effective, furnish the Secretary of the Interior evidence satisfactory to him of title to the patented lands offered in exchange, and if the value of the timber on park lands exceeds the value of the patented lands deeded to the Government in the exchange such excess shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior by the owners of the patented lands before any of the timber is removed from the park, and may be used by said Secretary in the management, improvement, and protection of the park. The same course shall be pursued in relation to exchange for timber standing near public roads on patented lands for timber to be exchanged on park lands: Provided, That the lands conveyed to the Government under this act shall become a part of the Yosemite National Park.

SEC. 3. That all timber must be cut and removed from the park under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and any damage which may result to the roads or any part of the park in consequence of the cutting and removal of the timber from the reservation shall be borne by the owners of the patented lands, and bonds satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior must be given for the payment of such damages, if any, as shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may also sell and permit the removal of such matured or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary or advisable for the protection or improvement of the park, and the proceeds derived therefrom shall be expended under his direction in the management, improvement, and protection of the park.

Also the following committee amendments:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "equal" strike out the word "timber."

On page 2, line 5, after the word "lands" strike out the word "for."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] a question. This bill in two places provides for sales of land or timber and provides that the proceeds may be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the management, improvement, and protection of this park.

I am aware that that sort of a provision has been in a number of laws passed by Congress, but in recent years it has not been the policy of Congress to authorize the sale of property and then provide that the money derived from the sale shall be used by one of the departments without being covered into the Treasury and appropriated by Congress. I will ask the gentleman whether he will be willing to consent to an amendment in both places, so as to strike out the provision authorizing the Secretary to use the money, and to insert a provision requiring the money to be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. RAKER. Where does the gentleman desire the first amendment?

Mr. MANN. On page 2, lines 21 and 22. The amendment I suggest would be to strike out the words—

Used by said Secretary in the management, improvement, and protection of the park.

And insert in lieu thereof—

Deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

So that it would provide that if the value of the timber on the park lands exceeds the value of the patented lands deeded to the Government in the exchange, such excess shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury by the owners of the patented land, before any of the timber is removed from the park, and shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Mr. RAKER. And the next amendment?

Mr. MANN. The same thing on page 3, lines 16 and 17.

Mr. RAKER. Lines 15, 16, and 17. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that I took this matter up with the Interior Department, and Mr. Thompson, particularly, who has special charge of the parks and who last year made a personal investigation and examination of all the national parks of the Government. It seemed as though such a provision would do no harm, as heretofore in the enabling act and other acts the superintendent of the park has been allowed to collect revenue from the park, such as rent for hotels, stage lines, and from other concessions, and to reexpend the money on the park.

The purpose of the amendment would be simply to convert this money into the Treasury, and then whatever money is used in the park for its improvement hereafter would have to be appropriated by Congress. Knowing and realizing the position of Congress, and that they are willing to protect and improve the particular park from which this money would be received, and for the purpose of keeping an accounting on behalf of the men who will sell the timber, and in order that the Congress may have full information always upon these matters, I will readily say that I can see no objection to this amendment. While I would prefer to have it the other way, for at least no harm would be done, I still recognize the fact that it is a good method of accounting.

Mr. MANN. I will say frankly to the gentleman that I am not going to get in the same fix that the gentleman from New York got into a while ago. Unless the gentleman will say that he will favor the amendment, I shall object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Realizing the vote which just took place in the House, which I watched with considerable interest, and being anxious to get this bill through, and knowing its importance, and realizing that the bill as proposed to be amended will carry out the full purpose intended, will protect the Government, and in addition to that will put all the money into the Treasury so that it may hereafter be appropriated by Congress, I will ask for such an amendment if consideration is granted.

This is a companion bill to H. R. 21535, which is on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, No. 120, and which, when this bill, S. 5718, is passed, which I hope it will be, the other bill, H. R. 21535, will be asked to be laid aside.

The bill H. R. 21535 was unanimously reported favorable by the Committee on the Public Lands. This report is as follows:

[House Report No. 457, Sixty-second Congress, second session.]

TITLE TO PATENTED LANDS IN YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, submitted the following report to accompany H. R. 21535:

The Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 21535) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, report it back with amendment and, as amended, with the unanimous recommendation that it do pass.

Strike out the word "timber" in line 1, page 2.

It is the purpose of the bill to eliminate private holdings within the Yosemite National Park, and to preserve intact the natural timber along the roads in the scenic portions of the park; and to that end the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to obtain for the United States the complete title to any or all of the lands held in private ownership within the boundaries of said park by the exchange of decayed or matured timber, that can be removed from such parts of the park as will not affect the scenic beauty thereof, for lands of equal timber value held in private ownership therein; and also, in his discretion, to exchange for timber standing near the public roads on patented lands timber of equal value on park lands in other parts of the park.

The value of the patented lands and timber standing near the public road to be taken in exchange by the Government, as well as the value of the timber on the park lands to be given in exchange for such patented lands, shall be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct, and all expenses incident to ascertaining such values shall be paid by the owners of the patented lands, who are required to furnish to the Secretary of the Interior, before any change is effective, evidence satisfactory to him of title to the lands offered in exchange, and if the value of the timber on park lands exceeds the value of the patented lands deeded to the Government in such exchange, the excess shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior by the owners of the patented lands before any of the timber is removed from the park, and may be used by the Secretary in the management, improvement, and protection of the park.

The bill also provides that all timber must be cut and removed under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and any damage which may result to the roads or any part of the park in consequence of the cutting and removal of the timber from the reservation shall be borne by the owners of the patented lands, who are required to furnish satisfactory bond to secure the United States in that respect.

The last section of the bill confers upon the Secretary of the Interior the general authority to sell or permit the removal of such matured or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary or advisable for the protection and improvement of the park, and the proceeds derived therefrom may be expended under his direction in the management, improvement, and protection of the park.

It is the purpose of the bill to maintain at all times the scenic beauty of the park, but at the same time to permit the sale of such matured or dead or down timber as may be deemed necessary or advisable for the protection and improvement of the park, and gives the Secretary of the Interior the full supervision and control of the premises.

The bill was referred to the Department of the Interior, which made the following report thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, March 13, 1912.

Hon. JOSEPH T. ROBINSON,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands.

SIR: Your letter of March 9, 1912, has been received, inclosing a request for report on H. R. 21535, to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes.

In response thereto I have to state that for administrative reasons it is highly desirable that private holdings within the metes and bounds of the Yosemite National Park be eliminated, and in the several annual reports of the Secretary of the Interior the desirability of such action has been repeatedly brought to the attention of Congress.

It is also desirable that the department be permitted to sell and remove from the Government lands in the park such matured or dead or down timber as may be deemed advisable for the protection of other standing timber or the improvement of the reservation.

The bill under consideration provides a means of extinguishing private holdings in the park as well as to authorize the sale and cutting of timber. The interests of the Government are properly safeguarded therein, and the measure has my approval.

CLEMENT S. UCKER,
Chief Clerk and Chief Executive Officer.

It is quite important that this legislation become a law, and I earnestly hope that the distinguished gentleman [Mr. MANN] will not make objection to the present consideration of this bill, S. 5718. This Senate bill received a favorable report by the House Committee on the Public Lands. I made the two reports for the committee at the same time under the committee's direction.

The Government's interests are well guarded, and under the amendments it will always provide for a full accounting of all money received under the provisions of the proposed law.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Are there any amendments to the bill?

Mr. RAKER. There are two committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "timber."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the second committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, lines 21 and 22, by striking out the following:
"May be used by said Secretary in the management, improvement, and protection of the park."
And insert in lieu thereof the following:
"Shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I offer a further amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, lines 16 and 17, by striking out the following:
"Expended under his direction in the management, improvement, and protection of the park."
And inserting in lieu thereof the following:
"Deposited and covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. This ends the unanimous-consent call.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of the Speaker to the fact that House bill 16993 is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar erroneously.

The SPEAKER. That is the reason why the Chair announced that the call was finished. That bill ought to be stricken off the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. MANN. I want it stricken off the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Private bills do not belong on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, and the rest of the bills on this calendar have not been on it long enough to be considered to-day.

FLOODS IN THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY (H. DOC. NO. 662).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I am advised by the Secretary of War, whose report I transmit herewith, that the flood in the Mississippi Valley, by reason of the rise in all of the rivers tributary to the Mississippi and Missouri at nearly the same time, is likely in the lower part of the valley—that is, Missouri, Kentucky, Arkansas, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana—to reach a higher point along the levees than it has ever reached within recent memory, and that there is very grave danger that the levees may give way under this unusual pressure and that great damage may be done to property in the States mentioned, requiring, unless prompt action is taken, great future outlay in preserving the proper navigation of the streams.

These levees contribute not only to the safety of the adjoining agricultural lands and settlements, but are also a part of the great governmental projects for the maintenance of navigation in the lower waters of the Mississippi.

It seems proper, therefore, that the Government should take immediate action to make the loss impending as little as possible. In view of the character of the emergency and the safeguards surrounding the expenditures made under the Corps of Engineers, I have no hesitation in asking for an appropriation of $500,000, as recommended by the Secretary of War.

I urgently recommend an immediate appropriation, so that no time may be lost in taking the necessary steps to prevent what, but for governmental action, may be a loss not only of many millions but of lives as well.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 2, 1912.

COMMISSION PLAN OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Speaker, the same reactionary portion of the press that opposed and attempted to ridicule the existence of a money power is making an effort to get a better start, possibly in the hope of making good for the earlier failure, and are carrying on a ludicrous series of comments on a resolution of their own creation, but which I am credited with. Recently I mentioned that I might introduce a resolution, the substance of which I quote:

The Congress shall be composed of 300 members chosen by the people of the several States from districts as nearly equal as practical in population and composed of contiguous and compact territory, each State having at least 1 such district, and 15 Members at large to be chosen by all the people of the United States.

No person shall be a Member of Congress who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years and been 7 years a citizen of the United States, or a Member of Congress at large, who shall not be eligible to the office of President.

The Members of Congress chosen from the several districts shall be elected for a term of 7 years and shall be subject to recall as hereinafter provided. The Members of Congress at large shall be chosen for terms of 15 years and shall also be subject to recall.

The Members of Congress, by districts, shall be apportioned among the several States of the United States according to population, which shall be determined by actual enumeration at each decennial period as the Congress may by law direct. At its first session after each such enumeration the Congress shall prescribe the number of its Members to which each State is entitled, the people of the several districts shall elect the members by districts, and the people of the whole United States shall elect the 15 Members at large.

The 15 Members at large chosen at the first election shall hold office for terms in accordance with the number of votes received by each: The one receiving the highest number of votes shall be chosen for a term of 15 years, the next highest for a term of 14 years, the next for a term of 13 years, and so on. The one chosen for 1 year at the first election, and after that the last Member at large chosen by the people, shall act as chairman when the Members at large are acting as a committee at large of the Congress, and upon the death, resignation, removal, or disability of the President of the United States shall succeed to the office and duties of President.

On the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of each year after the first election the people of the United States shall choose one Member of Congress at large and as many other Members at large as shall be necessary to fill all vacancies; but no person elected to fill a vacancy in the office of a Member at large shall serve for a longer term than the unexpired term, nor shall such person become the chairman of the committee at large or succeed to the office of President. At the same time the people of the several districts shall choose such persons as they may elect to fill any vacancies that may occur in the office of Member from the district, elect Members for a succeeding term, and have an opportunity to recall any sitting Member or Member at large.

The Congress shall be the sole judge of the election and qualification of its Members, and may prescribe the manner of their election. But the names of all sitting Members in the several districts and the names of all sitting Members at large shall be printed on a separate ballot, which shall be designated as a recall ballot. All voters at any election shall be furnished by the judge or judges of election with a recall ballot, and he shall indicate thereon, in a manner which shall be prescribed by law, the name of the Member from the district or any Member at large whom he desires to have recalled. If a majority of the entire number of electors voting at any election herein provided for in any district shall indicate a desire for the recall of the Member from that district, or, in the whole United States, for the recall of any Member or Members at large, the office of such Member or Members at large shall become vacant and shall all be filled until the next regular election in any manner that Congress shall prescribe.

The 15 Members at large shall constitute a committee at large of the Congress, and to such committee at large shall be referred all bills which have been passed by Congress which carry appropriations or relate to the raising of revenue. In reporting such bills back to the Congress each Member at large shall sign a written report giving his reasons for so reporting for or against. If the majority of the Members at large report in favor of the bill in its entirety, it shall then go to the President for his approval. If the majority of the Members at large are opposed to the bill, or any item thereof, the bill, or the item thereof which is objected to by a majority of the Members at large, shall be acted on by the Congress. If it then receives a majority of all the Members voting, plus three votes additional for each vote cast against such bill by the committee at large, it shall be presented to the President for his approval, but if such bill or such item fail to receive the votes so required, it shall fail and shall not be voted on again during the session.

The committee at large shall have power to confirm or reject all proposed treaties of the United States with foreign powers, and shall confirm or reject all persons appointed by the President and the members of his Cabinet to office, and shall direct all inquiries as to the economic conditions and welfare of the United States, and each of the members at large shall serve as a member of the National Monetary Commission, whose powers and duties shall, from time to time, be fixed and prescribed by the Congress. In all other respects the members at large shall have the same powers and duties and the same rights and privileges as the members elected from the several districts.

Instead of commenting on the resolution I referred to, the press assumed a different one and then proceeded to be funny. There was no excuse for such error, for the reporter did not garble his statements. The New York Tribune's comments were:

[From the Tribune Bureau.]

INSURGENT PLANS NEW FORM OF GOVERNMENT—LINDBERGH WOULD HAVE COUNTRY RULED BY "COMMITTEE AT LARGE" OF 15 MEMBERS—TO BE SUBJECT TO RECALL—SENATE AND VICE PRESIDENT TO BE ABOLISHED AND HOUSE MEMBERSHIP REDUCED TO 315—SOCIALIST SCHEME OUTDONE.

Satisfied that the Senate is "unresponsive" to public sentiment, that the Vice President fills a needless office, and that the membership of the House is unwieldy, Representative CHARLES A. LINDBERGH, a Minnesota insurgent, announced to-day that he would introduce a resolution to abolish the Senate and the Vice President and to provide other radical changes in the legislative machinery of the Government.

Mr. LINDBERGH says he is convinced his resolution, which is not yet completed, but will be introduced early next week, will not receive the serious consideration of Congress, but he predicts that it will appeal to the constitutional convention which he declares to be inevitable in the near future. He predicts the abolition of the Senate when the constitutional convention meets.

The plan which Mr. LINDBERGH has worked out is as follows:

The Senate must go, and so must the Vice President. The membership of the House is to be reduced to 315 Members, and of this number 15 are to be elected from the country at large. These 15 Members shall constitute the "committee at large," which shall have absolute control and a veto power over the legislation of the House proper. This opposition could be overcome only by a two-thirds vote of the Members of the House.

The chairman of the "committee at large" is to succeed to the Presidency in the event of the death or disability of the Executive. Ordinary Members of the House are to serve for 7 years. The select 15 are to be elected for terms of 15 years, but the recall shall hang over the head of every Member.

In order to provide what Mr. LINDBERGH calls "checks and balances" for his plan, he invokes the recall of the "committee at large" whenever their actions, in the opinion of the people, should justify their removal.

The Socialist Member of the House, Representative BERGER, recently introduced a resolution providing for the abolition of the poor old Senate, but he proposed no such radical changes as are contemplated by Mr. LINDBERGH.

The Tribune seems to have attempted to state the facts. But other papers were not as near right as the Tribune. Of course many of them copied from the reactionaries. The effect is to injure the credibility of the press. That is unfortunate, for the press can be and generally is in the lead for progress. It is natural that it should be, and it would have no trouble in holding the highest place if it were not for those papers that are careless in what they publish. The most unfortunate part of it is that the carelessness of a few injures the influence of the entire press. I would not introduce the fool resolution pictured by the few newspapers. Let any person of judgment examine the resolution that I have in substance quoted and he will have to admit that if the Constitution had been so adopted to begin with we would have avoided many of the difficulties that we now confront. Our natural resources would still be within the control of the people. No one would have dared to suggest changing it for the present one. Just consider the plan a little.

If the terms of the Members of Congress are made 7 years and the term of the President is made 6 years, as is now proposed in a pending resolution, the election of a President and Congress will occur on the same day only once in 42 years. If the term of the President should be made 8 years, the election of the entire Congress and the President would occur at the same time only once in 56 years—in the absence of a recall or other cause vacating the office of President. This is decidedly in the direction of the short ballot, and the attention of the voters would be concentrated usually on one or two—rarely more than three—national candidates.

The plan which I propose for a reform of the legislative department of the National Government is well worth study for the reason that it is also eminently practical in its adaptability to the different State governments. The growing popularity of the commission plan for the government of cities is an evidence of the tendency among thinking men to believe that better results can be obtained from simpler and more responsive legislative bodies. The bicameral legislature has demonstrated its inefficiency, not only in England, where it was originated, but everywhere else that it has been tried. The demand for the mending or ending of what is known as the "upper house" and for the right to recall representatives of the people who prove unrepresentative is constantly growing and will soon be universal. The short ballot and a simple, practical, and effective method of recall are paramount necessities of the time.

The members of the committee at large are to be chosen for terms of 15 years and are to be 15 in number, so that one of them will be chosen each year by all the people and the last one elected will be the chairman of the committee—and the Vice President. At each annual election a recall ballot will be placed in the hands of every voter containing the names of all the members at large and of the member from the district in which the voter lives. The same plan could be extended so that the recall ballot would also contain the name of the President of the United States. Without the fuss and preliminary red tape of circulating petitions any voter who is not satisfied with the public acts of any of these officials may have the opportunity of marking his ballot so as to indicate his wish to retire any one or more of them. Vacancies in the office of President, by recall or otherwise, would be filled by the accession of the last member at large, already elected by the people, and vacancies in the office of members at large would be filled by the entire Congress. I do not think it possible to effect a recall simpler and more free from the influence of prejudice than what I have suggested.

The committee at large would not have the power of amending any proposed legislation, except to strike out items. It could not strike out some items and propose others in lieu of those struck out. This would do away entirely with the committees of conference of both Houses, which, under our present legislative systems, is such a prolific hotbed for the production of "jokers."

The change would not affect the powers of the President. I do not much expect to see the adoption of such a resolution in the near future. My idea is merely to hold up to view a construction plan. On account of the provisions of the present Constitution prohibiting the abolition of equal representation of the States in the Senate, the State of Nevada, with 49,000 people, will doubtless continue to have equal representation with my own State, Minnesota, which has more than 40 times the population, and equal representation with the State of New York, which has 200 times the population of Nevada.

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill which just passed the House.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman to have the House bill in reference to the Yosemite National Park laid on the table.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 21535) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to secure for the United States title to patented lands in the Yosemite National Park, and for other purposes, be laid on the table, the Senate bill for the same purpose having been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a very able and instructive article by the gentleman from New York, Mr. REDFIELD, on "A suggested Democratic policy for the Philippine Islands."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to print an article by the gentleman from New York, Mr. REDFIELD, in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Not including the illustrations.

The SPEAKER. Not including the illustrations. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

A SUGGESTED DEMOCRATIC POLICY FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

[By Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Member of Congress.]

If there is one thing more certain than another in the currents of our public thought it is that these currents are to-day moving steadily and strongly toward placing the Democratic Party in power in our national affairs with the election of 1912. Two great issues occupy the public mind concerning which the trend among thoughtful men is in favor of general Democratic national policies. On the tariff question the party holds a strong and definite position commanding the respect of its opponents, and the increasing assent of many who have differed from it in the past. This Democratic tariff policy is known not to be destructive, and even manufacturers themselves are coming to see that it is the gospel of self-help that the Democracy is preaching, and that this gospel is one that will strengthen and not weaken our industries.

The other great issues focus around the so-called Sherman law. Democratic policy, as it forbids privileges for the few at the cost of the many in tariff matters, denies the right of monopoly for the few at the expense of the many in business affairs. As on the tariff the Democracy teaches the duty of self-help to manufacturers as both best for them and for the public, so the Democracy teaches in corporate matters no lesson of destruction. No Democrat wants goods to cost more, wants wages to be reduced, wants that kind of competition known as the "cutthroat" variety. Democrats do not fear "big business"; but they do not want "bad business." They recognize that large production is necessary to low cost, and they have no quarrel with a concern because of its size. They demand that its success shall come from service to the public, and that it shall not be had at the cost of crushed competitors. They are willing that industry shall profit, but only in proportion as it serves. Even the almost bitter title, "the trusts," would lose its bitterness did we know that they could be trusted to gain by service, and only in that way. Here too, therefore, the attitude of the Democracy is constructive. It looks frankly from the consumer's end as it does on tariff matters, but those who in industry will serve the consumer and those who with the tariff will not overtax the consumer have the good will of the Democracy.

A third great subject of vital value will occupy the public mind when the National Monetary Commission makes its report in the coming spring. The very best thought of the Nation must and will center upon this question of finance. The debate will be earnest and searching, and the outcome will affect every man and woman in the land.

Amidst such great themes and in the pressure of current affairs other subjects may be lost to view, or may, at least, not receive that mature and sober thought which the Democratic Party would give to them were its mind free to do so. It is one of those questions—the Philippine question—that the writer desires to discuss briefly in the hope of suggesting a policy that will be at once democratic, considerate, humane, and in accord with all the facts, while removing the question from the danger of action that is not based on thorough and well-digested knowledge and mature thought.

Let us look first at the facts as they are to-day. The Democratic Party is not responsible for acquiring the Philippines. No one thinks that. The Democratic Party need not defend or explain an acquisition in which they had no share. Whether rightly or wrongly secured, whether wisely or unwisely obtained, the fact is that they were obtained, and are in our control to-day. It may be of academic interest to discuss whether this should be so, but it has no practical interest, for it is so. The immediate question, therefore, with which the Democratic Party has to deal is how they shall be treated now that they are ours.

It may be laid down as fundamental that Democratic policy requires that the American flag shall not permanently float over any dependent people. Democrats are not imperialists, but the reverse; and just so soon as any people that may have come under our sway are able to say for themselves what their government should be, it is sound Democratic policy that they should say it and that their will should be respected.

The Democratic Party believes in education and sanitation and in all that uplifts the life and broadens the outlook of the humblest man, and therefore wherever our flag flies it is Democratic doctrine to educate, to improve conditions of labor and health, and to secure better ways of living.

Democratic policy can not approve taxation without representation; no more can it approve the exercise of power over many by a few. The Democratic Party is, as the editor of the St. Louis Republic has recently and wisely said:

> Devoted to equal rights and equal opportunities, it would trust the whole body of the people at any time with any responsibility voluntarily assumed rather than yield control to one man or to a small group of men, no matter how wise or how good. It holds that the taxation of one American for the benefit of another American is not only robbery but tyranny. It is committed to the idea that government as a partisan of the few must be taken out of business and that business as a self-seeker must be taken out of government. It believes in personal liberty that does not infringe upon the rights of others. It is opposed to centralization, to usurpation, to imperialism.

These principles the writer approves and indorses. Let us apply them to the Philippine situation.

Before we do so, however, the spirit in which this is written should be made clear. Let us avoid both the cant of "little brown brother" and the gross ignorance that groups all men with dark skins as Negroes. No one who has met the cultured native peoples of Luzon, or who has traveled with them, but knows their personal charm. One has only to look into the story of recent years to find noble examples of patriotism and self-sacrifice among them. And to this one must in fairness add appreciation of dignity under defeat and a quiet acceptance of misfortune that has been often very winning.

The ideals of many of the native leaders in the Philippines are high, their purposes are good, their love of country deep and strong and normal. It would be unfair not to recognize these facts and un-American not to sympathize with the men of whom these facts are true.

I take it all agree that our national honor and our self-respect require that the path for the Philippines shall be an upward path and that no political or commercial or financial considerations shall be allowed to prevent this. We have put our hand to the plow in the Philippines, whether we did so wisely or not. The facts are as they are and the question is how to deal with them. In order to deal with them we need to know all the facts, for any policy based upon a partial knowledge is sure to be mistaken.

Looking at the islands from the lowest standpoint, that of material needs, we find a very backward condition. If they be compared with another tropical country of similar location, such as Java, the contrast is striking. Java with a territory of about 50,000 square miles supports 30,000,000 of people and exports foods, though a large part of Java is very mountainous. The Philippines with an area of 115,000 square miles and less than 8,000,000 people import food, although the territory available for cultivation is greater than the whole of Java. The reason lies partly in the poverty, partly in the ignorance of the Philippine "tao," or native farmer, partly in the strange divisions among the inhabitants of the Philippines in race, religion, language, and customs. In Java the Dutch have after centuries brought at least material prosperity both to the natives and themselves. In the Philippines Spain failed wholly to bring economic wealth, and left behind her a disorganized mass of discordant peoples. Yet by nature the Philippines are as richly endowed as Java, and there is no material reason why the wealth, said to be $100,000,000 per annum, that flows to Holland from Java should not be equaled or exceeded in the case of the Philippines, if mere material gain were the sole or even the principal object sought. And this material gain, were it to come righteously and with due regard for the men of humblest means and smallest opportunity, could not fail to bring them much that would improve their conditions.

The home of the Philippine farmer is usually a hut made from the branches of the Nipa palm, within which one room contains the family. Every convenience of modern life—plumbing and all its accessories, water and all it brings of cleanliness and health—are unknown. The hut is closed at night as tightly as is possible, and not for protection against the night air alone, but to keep out the night-flying spirits, in which even many of the so-called Christian tribes still believe. The tools with which the farmer works are primitive. He knows neither iron plow nor the usual harness. Agricultural machinery for him does not exist. His crude sugar mills waste a quarter of the juice they are made to extract. His carabao (water buffalo) is his most valued possession, and with this inefficient beast his wooden plow scratches the surface of his scanty acres. His land, moreover, lies idle six months of the year for lack of irrigation, and in this single cause is found another reason why he produces so much less than his Javanese fellow. In Java irrigation ditches are everywhere. Taking the Philippines as a whole, they may be said to be almost nowhere, although since the American occupation much has been done toward a beginning of irrigation. One would look long, however, to the undeveloped resources of the Philippines left in native hands for the funds from which money for large irrigation works could be soon obtained. The farmer of any of the Philippine races is in the very infancy of his craft. In a tropical land abounding in water and rich in agricultural resources he is barely self-supporting and not always that. He is a child in farming and needs to be taught.

The writer was present when the governor of La Union Province asked that well-driving machinery be loaned him by the insular government and heard the chief engineer of the latter say that they had but 43 plants for driving wells for the entire Philippines and that La Union would have to wait till some of these could be relieved from their present duty and sent him. The meaning of this will be clear from the fact that it is only from underground sources that pure drinking water can be had in large portions of the Philippines.

From this rough sketch of material conditions let us turn for a closer look at the people themselves. Only a glance is needed to show that there is no such thing as a Philippine people in any ordinary sense of the word "people." Here are a variety of racial mixtures not assimilated, but living separately, differing in language, embracing religions from the most savage heathenism through Mohammedanism up to several types of more or less developed Christianity. In social conditions they vary from the purest barbarism, the Negrito, through the half-naked and dog-eating Igorrot and the fierce Moslem Moro to the Visayan and the Tagalog, which last tribes happening to inhabit Manila and other coast towns are at once those most affected by Spanish rule, most developed in civilization, and from whom, since they are the peoples most commonly met, judgments about the entire population of the islands are apt to be made. It is not denied that among the Visayans, Ilocanos, Bicols, and Tagalogs are many people of culture and intelligence in the best European and American sense, nor is it denied that these excel in the arts of expression—music, oratory, and artistic work of many kinds. They are in these respects gifted peoples and may fairly be congratulated and held in honor for what they have done and become, but one does not have to leave Manila far to see that only a small proportion even of the Tagalog people are among the trained and able classes which have been mentioned. Civilization has touched but little the Tagalog farmers, even in the very outskirts of Manila itself. And this, if it were not evident from common observation on the spot, should be clear from the facts as to the electoral franchise in the islands.

PHILIPPINE VOTERS.

The requirements in the Philippines to qualify a voter are simple. They are that he shall have been an officeholder under the Spanish régime, or that he shall speak and write either the English or Spanish tongue, or that he shall be possessed of property to the value of ₱500 ($250), or that he shall pay taxes to the amount of ₱30 ($15) per annum, or any one of these. Yet, notwithstanding that the insurrection against Spanish rule has been thought by some to have been the uprising of a whole people, and in spite of what has been done since the American occupation in education, the entire Philippine Assembly at its first election in 1907 represented but 98,251 voters out of a population of nearly 8,000,000, and at its second election, in 1909, represented but 192,975 voters, or less than 3 per cent of the population.

It is a fact of deep significance that the entire voting force in the Philippines represents so small a part of the total population. It is equal to less than two-thirds of the total population of Manila alone, is much less than the number of the half-naked Igorrots, and barely one-half the number of the fierce Moros, and does not in any sense whatever represent a majority of any one of the numerous tribes and peoples of the islands or pretend to include within its numbers any representatives of the non-Christian tribes, who number in excess of 600,000. True, before the American occupation the Tagalogs and other peoples at the time of the insurrection tried to formulate a constitution more or less based upon our own, and in a patriotic and self-sacrificing spirit did what they could to establish it against the Spanish power, but this insurrection was in no true sense a national one, for there is no nationality in the Philippines. In that struggle large masses of the people took no part; and tens of thousands, separated by distance in a land where there were neither roads nor trails nor telegraphs, knew nothing whatever of it.

In going from Manila northward 150 miles one passes from the home of the Tagalog language through the Pampangan speech, again through the Pangasinan language to that of the Igorrot mountaineer, who was 10 years ago a head-hunter. These four peoples, not to mention others, do not understand one another's language. There is among them no common speech prevalent among the mass of the people. The educated few may speak and write Spanish, and a limited number English, but among the mass of the people there is no general tongue, and until within a few years there has been no common means of meeting one another, and it is largely for this reason that 20 or more languages have survived and exist to-day among them. The peoples of the Philippines are all too much as yet a "congeries of unrelated parts."

It is common knowledge that deep hatred exists between the Igorrots of the mountains and the Tagalogs of the plains, and that the Moros look with fanatical contempt upon the non-Moslem and physically weak dwellers in the seacoast cities. It did not need the plain statement of the Moro chiefs to Mr. Dickinson that though they had laid down the bolo at the American command they would take it up again should the American leave, to show that the removal of the strong hand of law from the Moro people would mean a continuance of that riot and bloodshed which has for centuries prevailed where they were free to follow their natural training and habits. But let the Moros speak for themselves.

At a meeting between the Secretary of War and the Moro leader at Jolo, August 24, 1910, the former secretary to the Sultan of Sulu was selected by the Moros to speak for them. He said:

"We have only a little to say, and that says we are happy to be under the sovereignty of the Americans. There has been some talking about that the Filipinos want to tear themselves off from the Americans and that they want to tear us away too—tear us away with them. If the Americans should give the Moro country over to the Filipinos they would be responsible to God for the blood that would be shed, because it would be the same thing as if you put two fighting cocks into one bag, for there would be fighting, sure."

On August 23, 1910, a public meeting was held in the theater at Zamboanga, Island of Mindanao. At this meeting Datu Sacaluran said:

"I am an old man. I do not want any more trouble. But if it should come to that, that we should be given over to the Filipinos, I still would fight."

He was followed by another leader, who said:

"I am not a civilized man, but I have learned that slavery, killing, and stealing is a bad thing; we do it no more. But if after that it should be that we shall be given over to another race we had better all be hanged."

The final speaker was Nadji Nungnui, who spoke as follows:

"The Secretary of War must look the matter in the face. We are a different race; we have a different religion; we are Mohammedans; and if we should be given over to the Filipinos how much more would they treat us badly when they treated even the Spanish badly who were their own mothers and their own fathers in generation? How did they treat them? Think about it. Think twice. We far prefer to be in the hands of the Americans who are father and mother to us now than to be turned over to another people."

Into this maelstrom of conflicting tongues and races and religions the American educator has gone, not as a matter of politics, but in the spirit of unselfish uplift. Into this seething mass of physical weakness where 6 children out of 10 still die in infancy, and a vast percentage of the people are in one way or another afflicted with tubercular diseases, the American surgeon has gone, and with him sanitation. Into this mixture of separate and hostile villages, without roads or other means of communication, the American engineer has gone, building roads and trails and developing railways. Among the heathen and Moslem tribes the missionaries of all churches have gone bringing the gospel of order and of peace, and for the first time since white men saw them the islands are policed from end to end and order is maintained.

It is true that some patriotic and enthusiastic men of the Tagalog, Visayan, Ilocano, and Bicol peoples cry for immediate independence and that they have sacrificed in the past much to get it, but apart from the question whether these men are trained for self-government the larger and more serious question is whether general conditions in the islands are such as to make it safe and sane to turn over all the peoples of the islands to the government of a minority of a few tribes among them.

Let us apply the Democratic principles suggested above to the facts as they are. Would giving the Philippines immediate independence give their inhabitants "equal rights and equal opportunities"? If so, how? There are more adult male Moros than there are voters in the islands, are more adult Igorrots than there are voters in the islands, but these Igorrots have no vote. There are at least three-quarters of a million of adult males of other races that have no vote. The Moro hates the Tagalog and the latter despises the Igorrot. In what sense is it true that the Democratic doctrine of equal rights and equal opportunities would exist in the islands were they made independent as they are?

It is sound Democratic doctrine to hate "privilege and injustice, bosses and corruptionists." Is not the turning over of the government of nearly 8,000,000 people, most of them illiterate and some of them savage, to the control of a minority of a few peoples among them the granting of privileges and the doing of injustice? Will it not mean the creation of bosses and the promotion of corruption?

It is good Democratic doctrine to "trust the whole body of the people at any time with any responsibility voluntarily assumed rather than yield control to one man or to a small group of men, no matter how wise or how good." Even were the 200,000 voters of the Tagalog, Ilocano, and Visayan peoples in the Philippines to voluntarily assume the responsibility of independence, would this be in any sense the Democratic doctrine of trusting such responsibility to "the whole body of the people"? Would it not rather be yielding control "to a small group of men"? Would it not be the creation of an oligarchy?

Democratic doctrine holds "that the taxation of one American for the benefit of another American is not only robbery but tyranny." Would it be Democratic under this doctrine to put in the hands of 200,000 voters of a few peoples the right to tax more than that number of each of several other peoples without any voice on the part of any of the latter? Is not this in the true sense "creating taxation without representation"?

Is there a way out? Is there no alternative between the creating of an oligarchy in the hands of a few of the people and the holding by conquest of the islands for commercial exploitation? The writer thinks there is, and suggests as its basis, first, that our duty toward the peoples of the Philippines, as toward the Indian tribes of this country, should be free from partisan action. He believes it to be sound Democratic doctrine that the islands should neither be held as a subject community or abandoned to a foreign power or a domestic oligarchy. He believes it to be both sound Democratic doctrine and a fine ideal that out of a group of peoples having neither common aims, nor common customs, nor common religion, nor a common language should be created a people capable of self-control. He believes it to be sound Democratic doctrine that when they shall have acquired a common language and means of communication, and have by the practice of self-government in their municipalities and provinces acquired the habit of self-government, and when a majority of them shall be able to cast a ballot which they can read in any language, it will then be for them to decide what they wish their future relation to the United States to be.

He believes it to be sound Democratic doctrine that until a majority of the people shall be able thus to decide, education, commerce, and sanitation should be promoted by all the influence and power that is available to the American people, and that in the development of commerce the rights of the people of the islands should be safeguarded scrupulously, that the widest publicity should exist in corporate business affairs, and that anything which partakes in the least of "carpetbagging" should be abhorrent to the Democratic thought.

And to the end that there may become a true Philippine people, the writer hopes that the Democratic Party may in soberness of judgment and with wise conservatism at once assure the patriots of the islands of their fixed purpose to give them freedom on the one hand and on the other hand to cooperate with them patiently and wisely through the years that may become necessary to develop them to the point where they may intelligently choose the form of that freedom for themselves.

Nothing has been said about the political consequences of our sudden withdrawal from the islands, but it needs only a superficial knowledge of the facts to show that these consequences might be grave. How would the great religious bodies of our land feel to have their missionary activities taken out from under the impartial, protecting hand of America and turned over to the present uncertainties of native rule? How would the educational thought of America regard the party that would suddenly cut off the great work of American education so well begun? How would the men interested in the great sciences of medicine and sanitation feel toward the party that suddenly ended the progress making in the Philippines along these lines? There is much more for the Democratic Party to consider than the mere following out of a political phrase. There is a question of humanity to consider, a question of national honor to take into account, great questions of religion and of education to be borne in mind. All these point one way. They all indicate that whatever policy the Democratic Party shall adopt toward the Philippines shall not be one of mere hasty "scuttle" or one of thoughtlessly leaving the islands to themselves, but one that is calm, deliberate, well thought out, and consistent with the peace and the prosperity of the islands.

FLOODS IN THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 22772, H. Rept. 483), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22772) appropriating $350,000 for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against the impending flood the levees on the Mississippi River.

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $350,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War in accordance with the plans, specifications, and recommendations of the Mississippi River Commission, as approved by the Chief of Engineers, for the purpose of maintaining and protecting against the impending flood the levees on the Mississippi River between the Head of Passes and Cape Girardeau, Mo. This appropriation to be immediately available on account of the emergency existing because of extraordinary flood in the river.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be some explanation, I demand a second.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I have been authorized by the Rivers and Harbors Committee to report this bill. It is rendered necessary by the very great floods in the Mississippi River. The Missouri, the upper Mississippi, and the Ohio are all very high. At the present moment the flood stage is higher at Cairo, the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi, than ever known before. The Weather Bureau predicted this morning that by to-morrow the flood at Cairo will be 1.8 feet higher than ever before recorded. It reports that by the last of this week at the city of Memphis the flood will be 3 feet higher than ever known. There is great danger to the levee system on the Mississippi from Cape Girardeau to the Passes.

The purpose of this appropriation is to aid the States and the local levee boards to protect the levees, which are the only means of preventing the flood waters from flowing over 30,000 square miles of the richest land in this country now peopled by several million inhabitants and one of the most prosperous portions of the Republic.

The Government has been aiding in the construction of levees on the lower Mississippi since 1879, when the Mississippi River Commission was created.

Between seventy-five and eighty millions have been expended by the National Government and the States of Missouri, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana, and smaller sums by the States of Tennessee and Kentucky, in building levees along the river. It is thought that unless a hard fight is made against the present floods by the Mississippi River Commission with its large fleet of boats, in conjunction and cooperation with the local levee boards and State authorities in all of these States, the floods in many places will overtop the levees and wash them away, for if once the waters rise above them and begin to flow over them the sand out of which the levees are constructed will speedily melt away. Thus there will be destroyed public property which has cost this Government very large sums, and private property belonging to the citizens of this Nation of the value of many millions will also be ruined. The object of this appropriation is to aid the interested communities in holding the levees and thereby preserving and protecting this Government property. The levees also aid materially in the navigation of the stream, and the engineers say that without them they could not preserve its proper navigation. Moreover, levees are an imperative necessity to the protection of the vast wealth of the Mississippi lowlands, valued at more than a billion dollars.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. How often heretofore has Congress been called upon, or has it contributed an amount like this, in the time of high flood?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I can not answer in detail the question of the gentleman, but it has been called upon in the past to contribute for protection against floods on the Mississippi. Whether it has ever been called upon or not, Mr. Speaker, we have a most unusual situation. We have, as I have stated, a combination of floods in the Missouri, the upper Mississippi, and the Ohio—something extremely unusual, something which I do not remember to have occurred before, although I believe a similar thing did take place 30 years ago, in 1882, when we had a very great flood on the river.

Mr. BARTLETT. I merely wanted to know whether there was any precedent for the Government making this appropriation now. As I understand, the Government of the United States, in conjunction with various States bordering on the Mississippi River, constructed the levees.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes; the Government has expended about thirty millions on the levees, and the States something like forty-five to fifty million dollars. The States have spent a great deal more than the Government, and I wish to say that the local communities will spend a great deal more than the Government in fighting this high water.

Mr. BARTLETT. Are the States authorized to proceed and supplement this fund which the Government may give in order to prevent the injury by the flood?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes; the States and the local levee authorities. We have on the Mississippi River the different sections divided into local levee districts which have the power of local taxation, and every species of property there is subjected to a special tax, or forced contribution, for the purpose of building levees.

Where I live, in fifth Louisiana levee district, for example, the tax is 1 per cent on all the property, 5 cents on every acre of land, regardless of its value, and $1 on every bale of cotton weighing 500 pounds. In the extreme lower end of the river they even tax oysters in some instances 10 cents a barrel on the theory that the levees prevent the muddy waters from overflowing and destroying the oyster beds.

Mr. BARTLETT. I notice that this bill comes from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is rather an emergency deficiency appropriation is it not?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. No; it is not a deficiency appropriation. It comes from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors because it is a specific appropriation made to aid in preserving and maintaining various valuable works of improvement constructed by the Government under appropriations emanating from that committee.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. And is made in the face of an emergency.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Have preparations been made for the expenditure of this money?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes. I have conferred with the president of the Mississippi River Commission, Col. Townsend, who tells me that all preparations are ready. His officers have been communicated with, and the fleet of boats is subject to immediate instructions, so there will be no delay.

I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a word or two. The Mississippi River does not know State boundaries. The Government is improving it from the standpoint of navigation, and from the same standpoint it has assisted in the construction of the levees. The people along the line of the river are highly taxed for the same purpose. I believe that the incident of protection to the lands adjacent to the Mississippi River, to say the least, is as important, if not more important, than the navigation of the river itself, and in the presence of this most extraordinary condition, from every standpoint, I am prepared to vote for the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I of course do not want to detain the House, as I hope there is no opposition to this bill; but I presume that I represent the district that is suffering most and that is now threatened more by the present flood than any district represented on the floor of this House. I think, too, that I know as much about disastrous floods such as the one that is now raging in that country as anyone else in the House. I have lived for more than a half century within 12 miles of the mouth of the Ohio River, and in the section of the country that usually suffers first and most I have seen floods almost annually during that half century. The highest water we have ever had in 50 years before this time was in 1883, 29 years ago. The flood is to-day a foot and three-tenths higher than it was at that time, and has risen seven-tenths of a foot within the last 24 hours. This indicates that it is going to reach about 54 feet, nearly 2 feet higher than it ever was before. In the district that I represent there is to-day over a half million acres of as fertile land as there is under the sun that are now under water. Some of the levees have already broken, but it may be that by an emergency appropriation of this sort some relief may yet be furnished in time to prevent greater disaster. I regret that this appropriation could not have been passed three or four days ago, so that we might have prevented or lessened the damage that is now being done to property in that country.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] asked whether the local authorities are doing anything in the way of contributing to efforts to protect levees and prevent losses from this flood. I want to say that in the local levee district in the county in which I live the railroads and the people have 1,000 men at work at the present time, and have had for three days and nights, trying to prevent the breaking of the levees and trying to prevent the destruction of property and to save the lives of the people. Even with all these diligent efforts some levees have already broken and much of the country is to-day under water and many homes are submerged. I hope this appropriation will be passed, and not only passed but passed by the unanimous vote of the House. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WICKLIFFE].

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my hearty approval of this measure. I have been laboring very long upon it myself, to-day and yesterday, in assisting in perfecting it so that it would grant the necessary relief. If there ever was a time, if there ever was an emergency, that existed for an appropriation of this kind, it is at the present time. How much better it is that we give an ounce of prevention than a pound of cure. By doing this work, by putting through this appropriation now, we may save a most disastrous flooding of the lands and of the towns and lives and property behind the levees all the way from Cape Girardeau down to the Passes. How much better it is for this House to act in time and grant this relief now than to await a situation that can not be remedied and witness sufferings of the people which can only be alleviated later, but by timely action now may be prevented. I wish to say there is absolute necessity for this appropriation at this time, and that the President of the United States himself has sent a message to Congress recommending it—not only for this amount but even a larger amount.

I hope that the measure will speedily pass and become a law. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] for three minutes.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, my district is skirted by the Mississippi River for about 75 miles. I have received telegrams from the mayor of Hickman, Ky., and the mayor of Columbus, Ky., saying that the Mississippi River is higher than ever known and still rising. The levees there have been broken, and the cities have been flooded, and the people are homeless. These gentleman call upon me for such assistance as I might be able to obtain from the Government. I have succeeded in having several hundred tents sent to people who are without homes and in having boats ordered there to save life and property. There is no question about the necessity for this appropriation. I talked with the Chief of Engineers, and the president of the Mississippi River Association, as well as Gen. Bixby. They have no appropriation available by which they may prevent further breaks in the levees or which might be used for the purpose of stopping the breaks already made. This appropriation may prevent other breaks in levees and stop some already made and save life and property. It is a great emergency, and the resolution making this appropriation should pass without a moment's delay. I am glad to see there is no evidence of any opposition to this appropriation, which I know is so worthy and ought to be passed speedily by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my motion by striking out of the bill the words:

This appropriation to be immediately available on account of the emergency existing because of extraordinary floods in the river.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does the gentleman propose to strike out all of the language that he has read?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. All that I have read.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does he mean to strike out the words "to be immediately available"?

Mr. MANN. The appropriation will be immediately available without those words.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. And I therefore ask unanimous consent to so modify my motion to suspend the rule as to strike out the words which I have read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to modify his motion to suspend the rule by striking out of the bill the words which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

This appropriation to be immediately available on account of the emergency existing because of extraordinary floods in the river.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is absolutely sure that there is no danger between St. Louis and Cape Girardeau. I understand from the reading of the resolution that relief is not intended to cover any territory north of Cape Girardeau.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I can not say positively about the situation north of Cape Girardeau. We are making this appropriation for use by the Mississippi River Commission, whose jurisdiction has never extended north of Cape Girardeau and which has never built any levees north of that point.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. My impression is the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission does not start until Cairo. It does not extend up to Cape Girardeau at all, and consequently that part of the river between Cape Girardeau and Cairo would be unprovided for.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I wish to say I examined the statute this morning, and the jurisdiction for building levees is from Girardeau to Head of Passes——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. That is the Mississippi River Commission?

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Yes. It is specifically authorized to construct levees from Cape Girardeau down.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I was not aware of that.

Mr. RUSSELL. A law was passed in 1907 by Congress extending the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission over levees to Cape Girardeau.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to ask my colleague whether in his judgment it is necessary to extend this relief further north than Cape Girardeau.

Mr. RUSSELL. My impression is it is not, as it is hilly on that side of the river. There is some lowland in the State of Illinois, but I do not know whether the levees are in danger or not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understand the East St. Louis situation is very serious and threatening, and they would not get any relief under this appropriation at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not, of course, rise to oppose the resolution upon which I asked for a second in order that there might be an explanation made to the House of the emergency which has arisen. In times of distress and emergency it is to the credit of mankind that the hearts of all beat in unison and even legislative bodies make sudden appropriations without controversy. Mr. Speaker, I do not know just what effect the passage of this resolution and the making of this appropriation will have, but I hope it will protect the property. I have some doubt whether it has any great effect upon the Mississippi River itself. Now, in the case of the Missouri River this condition has happened. The gentleman from South Dakota, possibly somewhat inspired by the notice or the introduction of this resolution, discovered that there was an emergency upon the Missouri River, a great gorge in that river north of Yankton, and he introduces a bill or resolution providing for an appropriation in order that that gorge might be blown up, but when the Missouri River heard that there was danger that Congress would appropriate money for that purpose and invade the jurisdiction of the river she bursted the gorge, and that necessity has passed away. Let us hope that the Mississippi River will subside with the passage of this resolution.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Might I suggest to the gentleman that the bursting of that gorge turns a somewhat big body of water down on us and we have to take care of that, too.

Mr. MANN. The gorge bursted to-day.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. Then the water will rise higher to-morrow.

Mr. MANN. It will take a good while to get down that far.

Mr. RANSDELL of Louisiana. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Speaker pro tempore, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass Senate concurrent resolution No. 19.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 19.

Whereas the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania did on the 13th day of May, 1909, enact as follows:

"An act creating a commission to be known as the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission, authorizing the governor to appoint nine members thereof and fill vacancies that may occur therein. The commission to consider and arrange for the observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, to invite the cooperation of the Congress of the United States, and of other States, and to report to next session of general assembly, and making appropriation for the payment of expenses of said commission.

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted, etc., That within 30 days after the passage of this act the governor of the Commonwealth shall appoint nine citizens of Pennsylvania who, when appointed, shall constitute a commission to be known as the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission, whose duty shall be to consider and arrange for a proper and fitting recognition and observance, at Gettysburg, of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, with authority to invite the cooperation of the Congress of the United States and of other States and Commonwealths. The commission to make report of its action, with recommendations, to the next session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania. The governor shall make appointments to fill any vacancies that may occur in said commission. The members of the said commission shall serve without compensation, other than their actual and necessary expenses.

"SEC. 2. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby specifically appropriated, said appropriation to be paid by warrants of the auditor general drawn upon the State treasurer upon specifically itemized vouchers duly approved by the proper officers of said commission;"

And whereas the Congress of the United States did on June 10, 1910, adopt the following concurrent resolution:

"Whereas the State of Pennsylvania has, by appropriate legislation, constituted a commission known as the 'Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission,' to consider and arrange for a proper and fitting recognition and observance, at Gettysburg, of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, with authority to invite the cooperation of the Congress of the United States, and of other States and Commonwealths, and the said commission has extended an invitation to Congress and requested its cooperation in the matter: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to appoint a committee to consist of three Senators and three Representatives to confer with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission and report as soon as may be, the recommendations of said committee as to the proper action to be taken by Congress to enable the United States fittingly to join in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg, and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House."

The following committee was appointed by the respective presiding officers:

Senate: Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER, Hon. WELDON B. HEYBURN, Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER.

House: Hon. James A. Tawney, Hon. DANIEL F. LAFEAN, Hon. JOHN LAMB.

The Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER has been selected as the chairman of the committee;

And whereas the above-named Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER has resigned and the Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON, a Senator from the State of Virginia, was appointed in his stead and is now a member of said congressional commission;

And whereas the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania did on the 14th day of June, 1911, enact as follows:

"An act making an appropriation to the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission to enable the commission to further carry out the provisions of the act of assembly approved May 13, A. D. 1909, creating said commission and defining the duty thereof.

"Whereas the act of assembly approved May 13, A. D. 1909, P. L. 1909, page 777, created a commission—

"To be known as the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission, whose duty shall be to consider and arrange for a proper and fitting observance, at Gettysburg, of the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg; with authority to invite the cooperation of the Congress of the United States and of the other States and Commonwealths; the commission to make report of its action, with recommendations, to the next session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, and made a preliminary appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of said act; and

"Whereas the commission has duly presented to his excellency, the governor of the Commonwealth, for transmittal to the present session of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, such report of its action with recommendations and plans, as far as it has been possible at this early date to adopt plans: Now therefore

"SECTION 1. Be is enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in general assembly met (and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same), That to enable the commission to further carry out the provisions of the above-recited act in accordance with the said report, recommendations, and plans of the commission, the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby specifically appropriated; said appropriation to be paid by warrants of the auditor general drawn upon the State treasurer, upon specifically itemized vouchers duly approved by the officers of said commission: Provided, That the total amount to be expended by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania in connection with this celebration shall not exceed $250,000";

And whereas at a meeting of the State and National commissioners held at Washington on January 12, 1912, it was agreed to recommend to Congress that the necessary steps should be taken for the participation of the General Government to cooperate with the State of Pennsylvania in such commemoration on the 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th days of July, 1913: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That preliminary to such legislation by Congress as may be necessary to enable the Government of the United States to be properly represented on such occasion the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to confer with the Fiftieth Anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg Commission of the State of Pennsylvania; and

First. To cause to be made such surveys, measurements, and estimates as will be necessary in regard to providing for a sufficient supply of good water for the use of those who shall attend the celebration.

Second. To investigate as to the necessary and proper provision required to be made for sewerage, sanitation, hospital, and policing during such celebration.

Third. To estimate upon the tents, camp equipment, supplies, and rations that in his judgment will be necessary to properly accommodate and provide for those who shall attend such commemoration, and to estimate what provision will be necessary to be made for local transportation and care of those who may or probably will participate in such celebration, and to give an estimate of the cost, separately stated, of the several provisions necessary to be made.

Fourth. To estimate the quantity of camp equipment, such as tents, bedding, and cooking outfits, necessary to accommodate the people attending, together with the cost per unit of a suitable ration to be issued and as to the best method of providing and issuing such rations.

Fifth. To prepare a plan of camp arrangement suitable to the occasion.

Sixth. To report to Congress upon all of these matters within 30 days after the passage of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. I demand a second.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] as tellers.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Texas has 20 minutes.

[Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify my previous motion to the extent of the amendments that I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent to modify his motion and to submit amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 3, in paragraph entitled "First," by striking out the word "those" and inserting the words "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War."

Mr. MANN. What is the other amendment? It is not an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read all of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 5, by striking out the word "those" and inserting the words "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War."

Amend, page 6, line 2, by striking out the word "those" and inserting the words "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War."

Amend, page 6, line 3 of the paragraph entitled "Fourth," by striking out the word "people" and inserting the words "the honorably discharged veterans of the Civil War."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. There is another amendment there.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of paragraph 4 the following: "Provided, That the total expenses incurred in the execution of this resolution shall not exceed the sum of $2,500."

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit a question now?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will be glad to.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I understood the gentleman in his preliminary statement to say that it was intended to have veterans on both sides attend this celebration. My friend from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] is anxious that there should be some Confederate veterans present; otherwise there would be nothing for some of the Members to do. I would like to ask if the phrase "veterans of the Civil War" is comprehensive enough to take in a few of the enemy?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understood it would be. I conferred with the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB] about it, and we agreed that it would be.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Would this include those who were not discharged and surrendered and who got away under all sorts of circumstances?

Mr. LAMB. I think it would.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania, if it is the purpose of the proponents of this measure to have ex-Confederates there, would it not be well to change the language in such a way as to provide that members of Confederate veteran camps and comrades of Confederate veterans may attend, which is perhaps the most feasible way of arriving at the question of who are entitled to recognition?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am willing, so far as I am concerned, to yield to that suggestion in the form of an amendment. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield to me, I will answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania reserves the balance of his time, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has 20 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, when the Sherwood pension bill was before the House for consideration originally, as it was introduced, we claimed on our side of the House that the language in one section of that bill, "veterans of the Civil War," would include the Confederate veterans. Upon that side of the House it was insisted that the term would not include the Confederate veterans, and I think probably in view of that it would be desirable to put in language that would clearly include both, because that is the intention.

I should like to ask the gentleman whether it is the expectation that the Government of the United States shall pay the expense of providing a sufficient supply of good water at this place; shall pay the expense of providing sewerage, sanitation, hospitals, and policing of this celebration; shall provide tents, camp equipment, supplies, and rations to accommodate the veterans who attend the celebration, and make other provisions of that sort; whether it is the expectation that the General Government, having considerately appointed a commission to join with a commission appointed by Pennsylvania to arrange this celebration, shall also pay practically the entire expense?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will answer that by stating that while it would be perfectly proper for the Federal Government, if it chooses to do so, to provide for the expenses of the celebration, the States having provided a quarter of a million dollars apiece in some cases to send their men there, yet if the Federal Government should not be willing to provide the funds for housing the veterans of the Civil War on both sides for three days at Gettysburg, I am safe in saying that the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania will do it.

Mr. MANN. That is said with a good deal of eclat, but the fact is that the Federal Government did not institute this celebration. The Pennsylvania Legislature passed a bill providing for the celebration, not at the request or solicitation of the Federal Government, not after consultation with the officials of the Federal Government. The State of Pennsylvania undertook to have the celebration there, properly enough, and asked that the Federal Government might in a way participate, which invitation we accepted in a way. Now, what I want to know is whether it is the expectation that the State of Pennsylvania, having inaugurated a celebration on one of the great battle fields, the General Government is to be called upon, first, to pay the expenses of that celebration; and if it does, whether it will be called upon to pay the expenses of a celebration on every other battle field in the country?

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MANN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. LAMB. I simply want to give the gentleman some information.

Mr. MANN. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia five minutes.

Mr. LAMB. In answer to the gentleman's question I will state that the Government will furnish these rations, will ascertain what a unit of ration will cost, and then will let the visitors there pay their own expenses. All that the States are expected to do, if I understand this arrangement, is to pay the expenses of the soldiers from their homes to Gettysburg and back. They will pay their own expenses while at Gettysburg. As we all know, the accommodations at Gettysburg are not sufficient to meet the demands of 100,000 visitors. Therefore the Government is asked to furnish these tents. The soldiers who go there to celebrate the Battle of Gettysburg will pay for their rations. I will be perfectly frank and say that it is not supposed that this great Government will escape some responsibility in this matter, and I think, after this joint resolution is passed, before these arrangements are perfected it is expected that the Government of the United States will furnish a certain amount of money. We have discussed that, and we have thought it would be reasonable, just, and fair that the United States Government should furnish a small amount of money for this enterprise.

I do not propose to discuss the merits of this resolution much. Pennsylvania and New York asked us to come there to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg. I was in that battle. [Applause.] Looking around here I do not know whether there is another man present who was there. I should like to go there and mingle with those soldiers on the Federal side as I did a few months ago. They are very genteel and pleasant fellows, I want to inform you. [Applause.] I have met them often before, and I was glad to shake their hands on the battle field of Gettysburg, as I think they would have been glad to shake my hand there had we succeeded, as we would have done had not two serious mistakes been made—one on the first and one on the third day. I want the sons of the gray and the sons of the blue to mingle there and discuss the Battle of Gettysburg. It is a study, I tell you—a better study than the Battle of Waterloo. I want the people of the United States to go there and erect a peace monument, as Gen. Walker of the Confederate Army says they will do on the third day. [Applause.] He says that the Chief Justice of the United States, a Confederate soldier, will be there and help dedicate that peace monument. [Applause.]

And he says further, which I am not saying much about right here in this presence, that a President of the United States, possibly one who is a son of a Confederate soldier, will be there with him on that occasion. [Applause.] I think, my comrades, that the future historian of this country will declare that it was worth all the sacrifices of that war, all of its bloodshed and all of its horrors, which I in part experienced myself, to have two questions put behind us forever in this country—the right of secession and chattel slavery. [Applause.] And if I, a Confederate soldier, can say that, and the philosophical historian of the future will say it, I ask, Why should we not unite with these, our northern friends there, and celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Gettysburg? [Applause.]

If I stay here long enough I am going to ask that we invite them down to celebrate the two battles of Cold Harbor. Those two battles are worth visiting and studying.

At some future time I will say something more on this question.

I ask that this resolution pass. [Applause.]

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, which comes to us from the other end of the Capitol, contains four and one-half pages of preamble to one page of resolution. It is perhaps inartistically drawn, but it gets there just the same. Two years ago I succeeded in having passed through this House a concurrent resolution under which a committee of three Senators and three Members of the House were appointed. That gallant Confederate soldier, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], who has just so eloquently addressed the House, is a member of that committee. It was charged with reporting—> the recommendations of said committee as to the proper action to be taken by Congress to enable the United States fittingly to join in the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Gettysburg.

That committee has not yet reported. It needs certain information, which can be best secured through the War Department. This resolution, therefore, calls upon the Secretary of War and authorizes and directs him to confer with the Battle of Gettysburg Commission; cause to be made certain surveys, measures, and estimates regarding a sufficient supply of good water for the many thousands who will attend the celebration; advise as to the provision required for the proper sewerage, sanitation, and policing during the celebration; and various other matters incident to such an occasion. It is expected that people from every State in the Union will attend that celebration, and particularly the veterans of the Civil War, from the South as well as from the North. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania expects to expend $250,000; other Commonwealths are appropriating large sums, and the object is to make this a grand peace jubilee. Every Commonwealth, every State, and every Territory has already appointed one or more representatives to confer with the Pennsylvania commission. Among those appointed are many distinguished veterans from either side.

Supplementing the patriotic and happy remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LAMB], I call attention to the order of Gen. C. Irvine Walker, lieutenant general commanding United Confederate Veterans. I hold in my hand his order, dated at New Orleans, January 20, 1912, in the course of which he says:

> The lieutenant general commanding advises his comrades that they have been offered by the State of Pennsylvania and the Union veterans the hand of peace and amity with such cordiality, fairness, and consideration that they should know it and, he thinks, should accept and grasp it.

He states that he has attended some of the meetings of the Pennsylvania commission—> and was met by his once enemies so cordially as to disarm prejudice and make him feel that they were honestly desirous of commemorating a peace with which the soothing hand of time has blessed our country.

These are the names of some of the representatives who have been appointed from various ex-Confederate States: Alabama, Capt. Daniel Partridge; Arkansas, Gen. J. F. Smith; Florida, Gen. E. M. Law; Georgia, Gen. Clement A. Evans (since dead); Kentucky, Col. Andrew Cowan; Louisiana, Capt. J. B. Sinnott; Mississippi, Gen. W. A. Montgomery; Missouri, A. G. Petersen; North Carolina, Sergt. John C. Scarborough; South Carolina, Gen. James W. Moore; Tennessee, Hon. Luke E. Wright; Texas, Col. R. M. Aynne; Virginia, Dr. Rawley W. Martin.

I am told that New York has appropriated $287,000. Other States have made or will make suitable appropriations to enable their veterans to attend. Surely the Government of the United States must be willing to do its part in a celebration which is to play such an important part in bringing together the survivors of the blue and the gray in amity and peace and cementing all parts of our common country in bonds of everlasting friendship and union. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] asks unanimous consent to modify the concurrent resolution to the extent of the amendments read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the Senate concurrent resolution.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative, the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 405) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to classify and appraise unallotted Indian lands, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. STONE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following resolution:

House concurrent resolution 39.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the concurrent resolution passed August 21, 1911, providing for the printing of the proceedings upon the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Washington, December 7, 1910, be amended by adding the following sentence after the last word thereof:

"There shall be included in the same volume, as herein provided for, the proceedings relating to the unveiling of the statue of Baron von Steuben in Berlin, September 2, 1911; and this document shall be compiled and printed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing."

EULOGIES.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, an order was made some days ago setting apart Sunday, the 14th day of April, for general memorial services on two late Representatives of this House. I want to separate those services, and I ask unanimous consent that the 14th of April be fixed for memorial services for EDWARD H. MADISON, late a Representative from the State of Kansas, and Sunday, April 21, be fixed for the memorial services on the late Representative ALEXANDER C. MITCHELL, of Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to modify the order of the House, to the extent of having Sunday, April 14, set apart for the memorial services on the late Representative MADISON, and Sunday, April 21, for memorial services on the late Representative MITCHELL. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 22261) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors in said war.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws—

The name of George J. Solly, late of Company I, Sixty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Nathan C. Warden, late of Company C, One hundred and twenty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Disbrow, late of Company F, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Patrick H. McBride, late of Company H, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew J. Daniels, late of Company G, Eighteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John R. Bouldry, late of Company K, Seventh Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Edwin H. Beardsley, late of Companies K and E, Seventeenth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Andrew Kepler, late of Company G, Second Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Avila Watkins, late of Company G, One hundred and ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Samuel P. Hoeffer, late of Company I, Seventieth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John Harrington, late of Company I, Twenty-first Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Emanuel Kresge, late of Company G, Sixty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William J. Davisson, late of Company A, Eighty-fourth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Robert Edmondson, late of Company E, Thirty-seventh Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Thomas Reid, late of Company D, Sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Charles H. Norred, late of Company I, One hundred and fourteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Daniel W. Getchell, late of Company H, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Abram B. Wilson, late of Company A, Thirty-fifth Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hector L. Lindsay, late of Company C, Ninth Regiment Missouri State Militia Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Christopher C. Showalter, late of Company G, Sixty-second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of John H. Scott, late of Company C, One hundred and thirty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and Company H, Third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William F. Towers, late of Company C, Forty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of William Spaulding, late of Company G, Fifth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Harvey W. Davis, late of Company C, Fifty-eighth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James W. Mackey, late of Company H, Forty-seventh Regiment Iowa Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of James A. Morris, late of Company H, Second Regiment Missouri Volunteer Light Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Hiram Haskins, late of Company G, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The name of Wilson Gardner, late of Company E, First Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). Is a second demanded?

Mr. TRIBBLE. I demand a second.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Georgia is entitled to 20 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I will detain the House but a moment. This is the regular omnibus private-pension bill reported to the House by the Invalid Pensions Committee. It has in it 296 different pensions. The total amount carried by the bill is $102,168, about one-half of which represents an increase from the pensions now being paid to these people.

I desire to state that your committee has in this case, as in all others, diligently undertaken to examine the proofs filed in each case. We do not claim to be perfect; we may sometimes make mistakes; but we have endeavored in this bill, as in all others, not to recommend an increase of pension unless it is meritorious, and that means that the claimant must be not only helpless and unable to make a living for himself or herself, but is destitute in property, with no income of any consequence outside of the pension that is being paid by the Government. We believe that this bill represents meritorious cases, and we ask that it be passed. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. The usual way of passing bills is on Friday, a day specially set apart for the purpose?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is right.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is it the purpose of the gentleman and his committee to continue to move to suspend the rules and pass these bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. Unless we believe that we can avoid a filibuster, which we had on two different days, by which two entire days were completely lost and a part of the following days. If we can feel assured that there will be no filibuster conducted against the bills we will again take them up in the way we formerly did on Fridays.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman calls what has been done heretofore a "filibuster" against the bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. It was all in the nature of delay; it was calling for a quorum, reading the engrossed bill, and it was recognized by the House as a filibuster. I am criticizing nobody; but it took a day to pass a bill that we usually pass in 30 minutes or an hour, and to save time we adopted this method.

Mr. BARTLETT. Since I have been in Congress, and beginning with 17 years ago, they used to consider pension bills at night.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, I would have no objection to that; but if they should call for a quorum, the gentleman knows how difficult it would be to get a quorum here at night.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have attended these meetings many times, and while sometimes a quorum was called for and it was difficult to get, still they passed many pension bills at night sessions. If the Committee on Pensions is to pursue this course as a permanent thing, if it proposes to take up the time devoted to suspension of the rules with these private pension bills, when there has been set aside by the rules of the House certain days upon which they have the preference, then the Committee on Rules ought to take that into consideration and put something else in on Friday to take its place.

Mr. RUSSELL. They will go right on with other business; they did last Friday after we passed a bill under the suspension of the rules. We took none of the time on the regular pension day.

Mr. BARTLETT. Because you did not have any bill ready.

Mr. RUSSELL. That was the object of this change in the plan of passing these bills. I think I betray no secret when I say that the leaders of the House, the leader of the majority, and the leader of the minority, both suggested this way as the proper one to save time.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman can move to suspend the rules and pass these bills and then on Friday, if they have other bills ready, can pass them under the rules.

Mr. RUSSELL. We would not ask it.

Mr. BARTLETT. But you can do it under the rules of the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. I suppose we could do it, but it would be betraying the confidence or not acting in good faith with those whom we told that if they would pass the bills in this way we would not ask for any time on Friday.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman says "those whom we told." Is the gentleman's committee acting under some understanding or agreement with some one as to passing these bills under suspension of the rules?

Mr. RUSSELL. It was suggested to us both by the majority and minority leaders that for the purpose of saving time we had better pass them in this way. We would be glad to go back to the old way if we can be assured that there will be no filibuster.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to occupy all the time the committee granted me to control in opposition to the bill, and I shall only take a part of it and yield five minutes to Mr. THOMAS, who desires to speak. The gentleman from Missouri refers to a filibuster inaugurated by the gentleman from Georgia. I have no apologies to make for the part we have played in the pension legislation. I take the position, Mr. Speaker, that the time has come in this country when pension legislation should receive a jolt. Something more than appearance on the floor of the House and making a few remarks in opposition seems to be necessary to check pension legislation. The filibuster, as you call our fight, or something else, has aroused the whole country, and opposition to increased pension legislation is by no means confined to the South; it comes from all sections of the country.

Mr. Speaker, as to what effect the filibuster has had on the House: You see a vast improvement in amounts to individuals; you see no more amendments increasing on the floor of the House; the record votes show a growing opposition. This legislative agitation has brought about all over this country consideration of pension legislation. The Senate has been contesting increased pensions for several days; in fact, there has never in the history of this country been such a fight on pension legislation as has been made in the Senate and House in the last few weeks, and the press all over the country has been commenting upon what the gentleman from Missouri calls a filibuster, and the gentlemen clamoring for more pensions have no doubt noted that the methods adopted to rush these bills through have not met with favor in the press.

Mr. Speaker, this question is not a one-sided question in the minds of the people of this country. I have been reading the press and I note the outspoken opposition from many of the leading papers and magazines. They do not hesitate to cry out against the increase of pensions and against pension graft in special pension legislation. I read from the New York Times, which is one of the best papers in the country, calling attention to one or two statements made in that paper to show that the sentiment of the country is not as one sided as the Members of this House seem to think:

The Sherwood pension bill, which would add $75,000,000 to the present staggering burdens of payments to real and spurious old soldiers and their families, has passed the House, but the Senate has drawn a bill of its own providing for an expenditure of some $25,000,000.

The Sherwood bill would pension noncombatants, men who never smelled gunpowder or saw real service.

This great omnibus bill is superposed upon a host of minor private pension "grabs," like the 250 railroaded through the House a week ago under a suspension of the rules, with but 20 minutes allowed for protest.

The editorial concludes with the following statement:

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 193, nays 34, answered "present" 14, not voting 152. The 14 answering "present" and the 152 recorded as not voting were ashamed, or some of them at least, to take part in this indecent procedure.

This editorial winds up by calling this procedure an indecent procedure. I do not join in this last statement. I do say, as I said in the beginning, it is an unfair procedure to the soldiers who were in actual service on the battle field and who do not belong to this favored class. It is an unfair procedure to the taxpayers of this country.

As long as the tariff bore the expense of the pension legislation, as long as the people had to pay pensions out of sugar and out of clothing and out of blankets and life necessities in common use by the poor people and the rich manufacturers were protected by tariff, the wealthy did not feel the burdens of taxes; there was little said about it; but, gentlemen, let me warn you to-day that whenever you undertake to touch the pockets of the rich with the excise tax and the income tax, if you do not change your policy in this House to reasonable and just pension laws, many men who stand here to-day advocating pension legislation will be driven out of this House by the influence of the rich of the country, because when you touch their pockets they are going to expose this pension-graft business. I put you on notice. They will have the money and many of the papers to expose it and build up sentiment against this method of legislation. When the powers that be see that they have to go down into their pockets and pay these pensions, they will not stand for it. Instead of the tariff and the poor people carrying this burden, they will have to carry it; and they are going to squeal, and they are going to squeal loud.

Mr. Speaker, we have been fair in our arguments on the floor of this House. I have been importuned by Members time and again to be personal in my remarks, and I know that my colleague, Mr. RODDENBERY, has. We have been importuned to censure certain Members for partiality in carrying in these bills such as would help them personally and not providing liberally for other Members. We have not come upon the floor of this House and censured any man or made any such charge. Men who want to make such charges must make them themselves. I propose, and I know my colleague who has been fighting with me proposes, to fight this pension graft on a higher plane.

I want to congratulate the committee and to make this statement. At first I could not get the bills, but now the committee lets them out a week in advance. I have studied the cases which are embodied in this bill which is now before the House. I must say that the bill they bring in to-day contains a great many more just claims and fewer unjust claims than the first bill that came in here, and I want to congratulate the committee upon that fact. The whole system of special pension legislation by omnibus bills is wrong. In this bill there are not so many cases that I could seriously criticize along the line that I have criticized them heretofore. In the little time that I have in which to discuss this bill I want to discuss it with gentlemen just as though we were in a committee room, and I hope they will read the cases to which I call attention as I discuss them, and possibly the committee will reach the point where they will feel like striking out such as they overlooked and manifestly should be stricken.

I call especial attention to a case on page 114 of the report. I hope every gentleman has a copy of the report before him. I have been censured on the floor of this House and charged with being unfair in trying to create a wrong impression of what was in the report. I have never stood on the floor of this House but what I have called attention to the page, and have asked gentlemen to read it with me. Is there anything unfair in that?

In this case the applicant is a woman. She filed an application for a pension under a certain act, which application was rejected. It was rejected upon the ground that the soldier was dishonorably discharged. This soldier, Mr. Speaker, was court-martialed, as the record here shows. He was condemned to imprisonment for six months and all of his pay was forfeited. While this man was serving his term in prison an honorable discharge was issued for him, so it is now claimed. In the name of common sense and reason, how can you come in here, in the face of this decision, and pass this case, when there are so many worthy pensioners at home, aged, suffering, and in want, whom you ought to provide special pensions, if you are determined to open the Treasury to special cases? Here you pension a man who was tried, court-martialed, and sentenced to six months' imprisonment.

H. R. 20432. Fannie E. Grayson, aged 58 years, is the widow of William K. Grayson, who served as a private in Company H, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, from December 7, 1861, to June 10, 1865 (3 years 6 months).

The soldier was pensioned at $24 per month, under general law, for disease of eyes. He died on October 11, 1903. He was married to the applicant on December 6, 1874.

The applicant filed an application in the Pension Office under the act of June 27, 1890, which was rejected November 30, 1904, on the ground that soldier was dishonorably discharged from the service, and that said act did not confer any title.

This case presents a number of unusual features. After serving three years and two months, the soldier was placed in arrest for "absence without leave and conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline" on February 13, 1865. A court-martial found him guilty and imposed a sentence of a forfeiture of all pay and allowances due, or to become due during confinement of six months. The records of Wheeling (W. Va.) military prison, where soldier was confined, show that he escaped therefrom on June 1, 1865. On April 14, 1866, the chief mustering officer of West Virginia furnished a discharge certificate to the soldier, to take effect June 10, 1865, the date of muster out of the company.

It is apparent that an error was made in placing the date of the so-called "escape" as June 1, 1865, inasmuch as there is on file (as shown by a report from the War Department) a letter written by the soldier while in prison which bears date of June 14, 1865.

It will be said, of course, that he got an honorable discharge, but that can not stand investigation. He might have got this discharge along with a list of a thousand or five thousand names by mistake, but there can be no mistake as to the fact that he was serving a sentence in jail or somewhere else, court-martialed, discharged dishonorably, and convicted. Is it fair to call the country's attention to that? I think it is. How can anybody criticize me for doing that?

I call attention now to a case which appears on page 14. It is similar to the one which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY] criticized. The man is drawing a pension, and it is proposed to increase his pension from $12 to $24 a month. He was but 14 years old when he enlisted. Anybody knows that when he enlisted he was a mere boy. As a matter of fact he could not legally join the Army. The committee can not put him on here legally, because the rules specifically provided at that time that no one could enter the Army under 17 years of age. He was 14. Is it fair? What service did he perform? I think the gentlemen on the committee ought to have the fairness to come on the floor of this House and strike out cases of that kind and place instead real soldiers who bore the burdens of war.

I now call attention to a case appearing on page 104 of the report. Time will not permit to lay especial stress upon this case and like cases. This is a case where the pension of a woman is proposed to be increased, and the evidence before the committee shows that she had $2,500 worth of property. I pass that without further notice.

On page 100 there is another case that ought to be stricken from this bill. Here are the facts in that case. The soldier under the general law applied for a pension at a certain time and failed to get his pension. The applicant in this case is a woman. She filed her claim in 1891. That claim was rejected at a certain time on the ground of her inability to furnish proof satisfactory of the soldier's death, or even the presumption of his death. Besides he had no pensionable right, and therefore she has none. Yet the committee has placed that woman's name in this report. The soldier and the applicant were married December 24, 1872, and lived together until about 1883 or 1884. They then separated. He afterwards tried to live with her, but she absolutely refused to live with him on account of his drunkenness. The facts presented to us are very meager, and you can not gather sufficient evidence upon which to base any judgment, but you do know there is no evidence that she is a widow. I do think that the committee ought to walk in here and have the generosity to say that these cases ought to go out of the bill. No evidence or even presumption that this man is dead, and yet she is to get a widow's pension, when he could not draw pension while in life. She ought not to be pensioned for deserting an old soldier.

Now, I call your attention to the last case in the book, and with that I am done. The soldier died on February 2, 1865. The claimant was pensioned under the general law until the date of her remarriage with Mr. Thomas in October, 1877, by a marriage contract in writing, and which marriage contract was annulled on June 29, 1910. On February 27, 1898, the claimant applied to the Pension Bureau for a renewal of pension on the ground that her marriage to Thomas was null and void from the beginning inasmuch as he had a wife living and undivorced. Now, here is a case where it absolutely shows the woman applied for renewal of pension in 1898, claiming that she was not married—null-and-void marriage—and because it was a void marriage she wanted a pension. Did she want to give up that husband? She did not get that divorce in more than 10 years after her discovery of another wife. Singular coincidence. Such a case the Pension Bureau would not accept. The bureau investigated and no doubt got the facts.

Mr. BARNHART. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman does not pretend to say this woman does not think that she is married to the man, because the report shows she was married to him and afterwards discovered the marriage was null and void.

Mr. TRIBBLE. She waited 10 years. I do not know whether she was living with him all that time or not. She was drawing pension when she married. She wanted that pension again in 1898, but "No," said the bureau. Ten years later—divorce—pension.

Mr. BARNHART. That is a mere presumption that the woman lived with the man 10 years after she found he was married to another woman.

Mr. TRIBBLE. I did not say she did, but I inquire why did she wait 10 years to apply to get the pension. Why did not she apply for a divorce when she first knew of this other wife in 1898, and then go and get the pension? I express no opinion as to where she lived or with whom she lived during the interval between 1898 and 1910, but I do say this does not look like a just claim to me. I will insert the case in the RECORD, so that all who read the RECORD may see and judge if it is a worthy claim for tax-burdened people to pay:

H. R. 21387. Charlotte Judd, aged 78 years, is the widow of William D. Judd, who served as a corporal in Company D, Eighth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Infantry, from October 7, 1861, to October 7, 1864 (36 months). Claimant's address is 3420 Eads Avenue, St. Louis, Mo. She was married to the soldier on April 15, 1852. The soldier died on February 2, 1865. The claimant was pensioned under the general law until the date of her remarriage, to A. B. Thomas, on October 6, 1877, by a marriage contract in writing, and such marriage contract was annulled, on June 29, 1910, by the circuit court of the city of St. Louis, Mo., and this claimant was restored to the name of Judd by decree of said court.

On February 27, 1898, the claimant applied to Pension Bureau for a renewal of pension, on the ground that her marriage to Thomas was null and void ab initio, inasmuch as he had a wife living and undivorced. The Pension Bureau rejected such claim on the ground that the marriage was legal and that the applicant was the legal wife of Thomas. An appeal against such rejection was made, annulment proceedings above referred to were instituted, copies of all testimony and the decree were furnished the Pension Bureau, but the action of rejection was adhered to.

I yield five minutes to Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with my brother TRIBBLE in scarcely anything that he has said. [Laughter.] So far as I am individually concerned, I believe in pensions. I do not believe there can be any better money spent in the United States. Had I been old enough and large enough, I admit that I would have been in the rebel army. My father was a Federal soldier. All my people were in the Federal Army. I believe in pensions. I believe that every man who fought in the Federal Army and who has passed that age when he can earn a livelihood should be granted a pension, and I believe that these pensions should be extended not only to Federal soldiers, but to every Confederate soldier. I am one of those people who believe that the war is over and there should be a union of the roses, of the red and the white. [Applause.] I do not believe that anything can be gained by the North or the South by keeping up the prejudices of the war. Those are things that should be consigned to the past, and, so far as I am individually concerned, I recognize that every State in this Union from Maine to Florida is now under the jurisdiction of the Stars and Stripes, and that the people of all the States, East and West, North and South, will at a moment's notice spring to the defense of our common flag. [Applause.]

As I stated, I believe in pensions for old Federal soldiers. I voted for the Sherwood bill, and for that vote out of 292 Members I got three-quarters of a column editorial by the leading paper in the State of Kentucky. I replied that they could go to hades, and I had no apologies to make for that vote and would vote it again. [Applause.] I have not heard of it since. Now, as for this Pension Committee. It is a good committee; it has got some of the finest men in the world on it. There is not a finer man than JOHN ADAIR, from Indiana, and JOSEPH RUSSELL, of Missouri. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to have five minutes more by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. RUSSELL has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have only 10 minutes remaining and 5 of it I have promised, but I will yield the gentleman 3 minutes additional.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. I thank the gentleman. As I stated, there is no finer committee in the world. Honest, yes; but it is color blind. That committee has given themselves not less than 20 special pension bills apiece. I have gotten notice of 3, and there were no braver soldiers in the Civil War than from Kentucky who fought under the Stars and Stripes and under the Stars and Bars. Now, I think, Mr. Speaker, that they have not been dividing things up properly and as they should. If they can not be elected from their districts without more pensions than they are justly entitled to, they ought to send somebody else here in their places. [Laughter.] I have over 50 prepared cases before the pension examiner, and in this bill that my friend TRIBBLE kicks against—and he ought not to do that; he is not Democratic at all—I have no bill. [Applause.] He ought to read the Democratic platform which declared for pensions.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Reasonable pensions.

Mr. THOMAS. Not reasonable pensions. You go read it and it goes a little beyond reasonable pensions, pensions such as to keep down a large standing Army in this country. The bulwark and the fortification of this Government has been the Volunteer Army ever since the Revolutionary War. I am in favor of these pensions, and I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, I want more pensions in the next bill than I have got or I am going to know the reason why. [Laughter and applause.] I am going to know the reason why Mr. RUSSELL and Mr. ADAIR can get over 20 pensions apiece and I can get only 3, when the soldiers of Kentucky fought as bravely as the soldiers from Missouri and Indiana did. Mr. Speaker, I believe in a square deal, and I want to demand a square deal in this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at that portion of the speech of the gentleman from Georgia in which he said he reflected the sentiment of the country in opposition to pensions to Union veterans. I do not believe that anyone on this floor reflects the sentiment of any considerable portion of this country who opposes liberal pensions for the veterans of the Union Army. [Applause.] I do not believe that that portion of the press that denounces pension legislation reflects any respectable portion of the sentiment of this country. I think that much of the denunciation that the gentleman from Georgia has seen in the press on pension legislation has been written by men who have been born since the war, men who knew nothing of the war, and who have given but little thought to the service that the men rendered in preserving this Union for their posterity, and I think the same is true of gentlemen who stand upon this floor and denounce pension legislation. The gentleman from Georgia would not enjoy a seat in the House of Representatives to-day if it had not been for the valor of the men who volunteered in the sixties to preserve this Union and make it possible for Georgia to be a State in this Union.

Few men stop to consider the sacrifices that these men made and the sufferings they endured. I have talked with them in their homes and at their camp fires; I have had their stories direct; I have listened to stories of hunger and of cold, of thirst and of heat, of marches, of all manner of hardships endured by the private soldiers—hardships which made the life of the soldier almost unbearable. The wonder is that as many of them survived that great struggle as did survive and that so many of them live to-day, 50 years after that great struggle is over. Instead of the denunciations and dishonor we hear on this floor and see in the press, there should be an effort to honor and to do something for these noble men commensurate with their service to their country.

It does not become any man who to-day enjoys the privileges and benefits of this country to denounce the veterans who preserved it, or to attempt in any way to prevent the Government they saved from doing justice to them by paying them the pensions to which they are so justly entitled. [Applause.]

This is the richest country in the world, rich beyond compare with any other nation on earth. These men who were boys in the sixties and who were our soldiers 50 years ago have been among the most active producers in our country. When they went to the front they were an army of boys. They won the fight for the Union; that is enough. After the war was over they went into every field of activity in the country, and they became the most active, energetic, progressive men in the country. They filled every position of honor and of trust from supervisor of roads to President of the United States. They performed every form of labor, on the farm, in the mill, the factory, the shop, and the mine; they engaged successfully in every form of business. To-day they are old, and the country has an opportunity to honor them and to honor itself in providing for their necessities. It was a promise that the Nation made to them. It is a promise that the country should keep and should keep in a larger way than it is now doing. No man should want for any necessity or comfort who enlisted to fight against an armed foe for the preservation of this Nation. Money can not pay for the service they gave; it can provide for their needs and the needs of those dependent upon them. The country in a pecuniary way can do no more; it should do no less. North and South, old and young in every walk of life should honor and revere their services to a united country, Georgia as well as Kansas. [Applause.]

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has two minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I have not time, of course, to answer all the criticisms that have been made by my friend from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] with respect to this bill, and I do not think it is necessary for us to do that in this House. Most of the Members of the House have had bills pending before our committee, and they know that our committee simply requires that Members shall establish the merits of the claims and show that the claimants are widows or old soldiers, too old or too feeble on account of disease to make a living for themselves, and that they have no income practically except their pensions.

Our committee may sometimes make a mistake, but if we do it is an honest mistake, because we have turned down a great many claims where I for one would have liked to see the pensions granted, but unfortunately such claims did not come within the rules of the committee.

Now the cases that are mentioned by my friend from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] can not all be explained in the limited time that I have at my disposal, and I will mention but two. One of them is the case of an old soldier who was honorably discharged, who is now diseased and poor. I forget his age, but I believe he is 68 years old. The gentleman from Georgia says that he ought not be given a pension because he was court-martialed during his service in the war, possibly for breach of the peace. As to that I do not know, but the gentleman from Georgia says he was court-martialed and convicted, which is true, but afterwards he was honorably discharged and is to-day helpless and poor. Now, do you believe that he, as an old veteran who fought for nearly three years in the Civil War, should not now on that account be given a pension?

Another case that the gentleman from Georgia mentions is that of an old widow who married a soldier in 1852, before the Civil War, and who lived with that soldier until 1865, all through the war, whereupon the soldier died, perhaps in the service. I do not know about that. The soldier's widow then married another man. It was afterwards learned that her second husband was ineligible to marriage, and therefore the marriage was annulled by a court in the city of St. Louis. It was found by our committee that this woman had married the second man in good faith, but inasmuch as it turned out that her second husband was ineligible to remarriage, and the second marriage having been annulled on that account, she is to-day the legal widow of the first husband, the soldier whom she married in 1852, and with whom she lived until his death in 1865. He served, I believe, three years. I submit to you whether that old lady, who is to-day 78 years of age, is not a deserving and a worthy person to whom a pension should be awarded by this committee?

The gentleman from Georgia says that the country is against pensions. I say that this country is not against pensions. If there is any pension bill in the world that is fair and just and equitable, it is a special pension bill such as this. Only within the last few days the Senate has passed a bill increasing pensions of all soldiers, and here we ask that pensions shall be granted only in meritorious and special cases, where the claimants are helpless and poor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

Mr. RUSSELL. My time has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] may have one more minute, so that I may ask him a question.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to so revise my remarks that the reading of these cases may be made intelligible.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the time of the gentleman from Missouri be extended one minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] be extended one minute. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. TRIBBLE. I would like to make an inquiry, Mr. Speaker. My inquiry is whether that can be properly done under the rules?

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS] asked unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Anything can be done by unanimous consent in the House.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the gentleman from Missouri how it is that this Invalid Pensions Committee has given in this house from 20 to 30 special bills for each member of that committee and has given other Members from 3 to 10 bills?

Mr. RUSSELL. There is nobody on this committee who has 30 bills, within my knowledge.

Mr. THOMAS. Has not the gentleman over 20 bills himself?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I have 20 bills; and I will say this, and I hope the Chair will give me time to say it: The committee of which I am a member have directed the special examiner to prepare bills to even up everybody in this House who has bills prepared and ready for consideration. I have not asked the examiner to write a single bill for me at this session of Congress. Every bill that I have had passed was written during the extra session of Congress, and I prepared my bills at that time.

There are some Members of this House who perhaps have not had over two or three, but it is because they have not prepared their cases and had the examiner write them up and get them ready for insertion in this or other omnibus bills. We have directed that everybody be treated fairly, and we are willing at the end of this session that the light may be turned upon our actions to see whether or not we have been fair.

Mr. THOMAS. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that during the extra session I had over 50 bills prepared. They are there now before the examiner, with all the proofs prepared, and I have had three bills reported out.

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman should go to the examiner about it. I do not know what bills he has had written up, but I know that is the order of the committee. If the gentleman has his bills ready he will get as many as the other Members of this House.

Mr. THOMAS. I have not got them up to the present time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] to suspend the rules and pass the bill which the Clerk has read.

The question was taken; and two-thirds voting in the affirmative the rules were suspended and the bill passed.

CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 252) to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau, with the committee amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be established in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau.

SEC. 2. That the said bureau shall be under the direction of a chief, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive an annual compensation of $5,000. The said bureau shall investigate and report to said department upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories. But no official or agent or representative of said bureau shall, over the objection of the head of the family, enter any house used exclusively as a family residence. The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations in such manner and to such extent as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

SEC. 3. That there shall be in said bureau, until otherwise provided for by law, an assistant chief, to be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, who shall receive an annual compensation of $2,400; 1 private secretary to the chief of the bureau, who shall receive an annual compensation of $1,500; 1 statistical expert, at $2,000; 2 clerks of class 4; 2 clerks of class 3; 1 clerk of class 2; 1 clerk of class 1; 1 clerk, at $1,000; 1 copyist, at $900; 1 special agent, at $1,400; 1 special agent, at $1,200; and 1 messenger, at $840.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor is hereby directed to furnish sufficient quarters for the work of this bureau, at an annual rental not to exceed $2,000.

SEC. 5. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. In order that there may be a proper explanation of the bill, I demand a second.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the Children's Bureau.

The purpose of the bureau is to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of people, and especially to investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children, employment, and legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories.

It is hoped that the establishment of a bureau of this kind will be of service to the various States in the regulation of affairs connected with children, and to the various societies that are engaged in the promotion of children's welfare. This bill is very similar to the Peters bill, which the Committee on Labor had previously reported favorably to this House.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is it proposed to pass the bill with the amendment?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. With the committee amendment.

Mr. BARTLETT. I see the report says, on page 2, line 20, strike out the words "one thousand and four" and insert the word "eight."

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Where in line 20, page 2, does that word occur?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. In the print of the bill which is now being considered it is in line 1, on page 3. As this bill came to the House it provided for a messenger at a salary of $1,440. The amendment proposes to make the salary $840 per annum, to conform to the statute upon that question, reducing the salary $600 a year as compared with the rate provided in the Senate bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. But it is proposed to pass this bill with the amendment reported by the committee, is it not, under suspension of the rules?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. And the report of the committee proposes to strike out words in line 20, on page 2, which are not in line 20, on page 2?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Georgia will recollect that the committee considers the original print of the bill, and the report of the committee always indicates a different line from that in the subsequent print, because the insertion of the amendments makes the bill longer and pushes the lines along, so the amendments do not appear in the same place.

Mr. BURLESON. It is easy to make the proper motion.

Mr. MANN. The amendments are always acted on in the bill which is in the hands of the Clerk. In this bill as reported, in the print which we are now acting upon, the amendment comes at the top of page 3.

Mr. BARTLETT. I did not know what the effect would be with reference to this particular bill.

Mr. MANN. There is no difficulty about it. It will be all right.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, is information about children of less importance to the people of this country than information about animals and bugs? Is the welfare of the latter to be considered in the light of carefully gathered information by several departments of this Government at great expense, and then are we to begrudge the trifle of cost involved in the bill before the House? Can any subject more vitally affect the future of our Nation than the care and bringing up of its children—the children of this generation, who will be the rulers of the next? The only way in which we can advance that next generation is by putting their children on a basis a little higher than that which preceded them.

For the proper study of these child problems every facility should be afforded. It is therefore proposed to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as a children's bureau. The problems of economics, science, and medicine are all being treated as the basis of careful investigation and study. To-day the problem of bringing up and handling our children is being treated with a lack of information which would not be countenanced for a moment in any other subject.

The constitutional objections to a Federal child-labor law are fully recognized, and to such a law am I unalterably opposed. The results of the work of this bureau should strongly aid the States in preserving their rights over their own citizens. The complaint that the States are not fully meeting their responsibilities toward their citizens can best be met by giving them fuller information to enable them so to do.

It was to provide for these present conditions that I introduced the bill, H. R. 4694, entitled "A bill to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau," and which has been reported favorably to this House by the Committee on Labor.

OBJECTS OF THE BILL.

The objects of the bill are stated clearly in the bill itself:

> The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, physical degeneracy, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children.

The facts which bear upon the health, efficiency, and character of the children of the Nation are to be collected by this bureau and the results rendered available for study or legislation by all States or organizations desiring to take advantage of them.

UNIVERSAL SUPPORT OF THE BILL.

The advocates of the passage of this measure have a unanimity of intelligent support, impressive as it is rare, in the advocacy of National measures of this character.

President Roosevelt sent a message to Congress urging the establishment of this bureau. A similar measure was brought before the Sixtieth Congress and passed by committees both of the House and of the Senate. In the Sixty-first Congress a similar bill was introduced and was also reported favorably by committees in both bodies, and in this Congress similar bills were introduced in the House and Senate by Senator BORAH and myself and were again approved by committees in both bodies and the Senate bill has already passed that body.

Many national organizations which exist for the purpose of dealing with the various classes of unfortunate children have all vigorously advocated the passage of a bill similar to this measure. Conferences of child-labor representatives from the National Consumers' League, the Russel Sage Foundation, and the American Association for Labor Legislation, and religious societies of all denominations, and labor organizations from all parts of the country join in giving to this measure their hearty indorsement. These organizations and their people, all actively engaged in philanthropic work, ask us to save through this bill the waste of means and energy, resulting from the absence of authoritative knowledge, by creating the proposed bureau. The arguments before the Committee on Labor are irresistible as to the need of such a bureau, and a perusal of the hearing held on the 11th of last May can not fail to convince the most skeptical that there is a deeply-felt need of such a source of information.

NO DUPLICATION.

It was claimed that this work might properly be taken up by some other bureau or department, and to ascertain this fact the House Committee in a recent Congress which was considering the bill summoned Mr. North, former Director of the Census, Mr. Neill, Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor, and Mr. Brown, Commissioner of the Bureau of Education, before them to learn whether the work contemplated in this bill could be done as effectively, or could be done at all, through existing agencies. To the question whether the service contemplated in this bill could be rendered by the Census Bureau, the following reply was received from Hon. S. N. D. North:

> We do not want to divert our energies into studies of physical degeneracy, of orphanage, of juvenile delinquency, and juvenile courts, and all that class of questions which are not statistical questions. The Census Office is a purely statistical office.

The other gentlemen answered to the same effect.

OPERATIONS OF THE CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

This bureau in its operation would concern itself chiefly with infant mortality, diseases of children, child labor, and infant delinquency.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PETERS. Briefly; yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman point out to me what authority under the Constitution there is to make these investigations, aside from taking the census every 10 years?

Mr. PETERS. There are always two views of the Constitution, one the broad and one the narrow one, and it is perfectly fair in considering which is the true interpretation of the Constitution, to determine the interpretation which is being put on it to-day. To-day we are carrying on investigations in the Department of Agriculture, in the Department of Commerce and Labor, and in several other fields on questions whose constitutional position is similar to that of the Children's Bureau, and which give us a full precedent for the investigation which is proposed to be conducted under this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PETERS. I can not yield any further, for I have only a few minutes left.

Take the question of infant mortality, for example, a problem that relates to the very existence of children after they are brought into the world. The Census Bureau reports a very low rate of infant mortality for some communities and a rate exceptionally high for others. The bulletin of the Census Bureau just issued presents interesting data on infant mortality. The Census Bureau in the collection of this data included only the area in which registration of deaths is satisfactory, known as the registration area, which now takes in a little over one-half of the total population of the United States. For the total number of children in this registration area under 5 years of age the average number of deaths per 100 deaths at all ages is 27. Of the different States included in the registration area California, with 16, has the lowest number of deaths for children under 5 years. Next comes Vermont with 18, next Colorado, Maine, and Washington with 22, and then there are various numbers up to 34, the highest, which obtains in Pennsylvania.

Registration cities present, of course, an even more varied record for deaths among infants, as compared with deaths among all others.

In New York State Albany shows but 19, while Amsterdam records 41 and Lackawana 79. In New York City the Bronx Borough 23, the Manhattan 34. In New Hampshire, Concord 11, Berlin 60, and so forth. The table giving these statistics is followed by a statement explaining two of the most extreme cases. I quote in part:

> The low ratio for California may be ascribed in part to the large number of deaths from tuberculosis, most of which are of adults, and in general to the unusual small proportion of children in the population. * * * Some exceptionally high ratios may be explained by the existence of infant homes or institutions. For example, the high proportions shown for Lackawana, N. Y., are due to the deaths of infants from the city of Buffalo.

This is followed by a more general statement of some 15 lines to the effect that no conclusions can be drawn from these statistics except those of a most superficial nature.

The explanation is satisfactory so far as it goes, but there is necessarily little in it that could not have been concluded by a most casual examination of the data furnished. The explanation, however, goes as far as it is expedient for the Census Bureau to go in a matter of this kind. What is needed now is an organ in our Government—and the children's bureau will be that organ—which will go back of these figures and find out in detail just what accounts for this wide divergence in the death rate of young children who ought normally at that early stage in life to be, from community to community, in very much the same condition in respect to their powers of successfully battling with the ills that beset childhood.

Is a death rate of 15 per cent for children of the total deaths, in contrast with a death rate of, say, 35 per cent, due to a difference in the regulations of the different health departments, or is it due to the inability of working people to employ competent doctors at childbirth in place of the poorly trained midwife? Or is it the result of conditions peculiar to a certain stage in the development or decline of different localities? Or was there an epidemic of children's diseases, or is it, perhaps, true that the seeming difference is but the result of the comparative care taken in the registration of births and deaths?

It is this sort of information which we wish to obtain, and this is the sort of information which we may expect to have available for our mutual education and betterment when the children's bureau has been instituted.

Take the question of diseases of children. We should be able to compare statistics to ascertain what regulations are effective and what limitations should be necessary to protect the homes and communities from epidemics of children's diseases.

In child labor we should be able to compare the effect on the health and vitality of the children working under the various State laws, and by comparing the physical and mental conditions of the children of different localities we should ascertain the proper degree of protection which the State should give them through its laws to protect and strengthen the community. The citizens of every State who are actuated by motives of humanity and betterment should wish to see their children brought up with vigorous minds and bodies.

To enable intelligent legislation to be passed it is necessary to know what legislation already exists, and to see the outcome in the various States of laws affecting children. The Children's Bureau, requiring only a small expenditure, really means the saving of countless human lives. I should not care to be in the position of those opposing such a life-saving institution without excellent reasons that I could render to my conscience. Consider not only the struggle of the healthy to survive, but the awful misfortunes of afflicted children, children suffering under afflictions which in many instances are entirely due to lack of the most elementary knowledge. Mr. Sherman, chairman of the New York Association for the Blind, writes:

> Our blind asylums are now full of children, supported at great expense to the State and private philanthropy, who could have been saved except for general ignorance on this subject.

Government bulletins, prepared by some medical expert, should be sent to every quarter of the Nation, just as our agricultural bulletins are now sent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I notice in lines 8 and 9 on page 2 it provides that the inspector shall not enter any house exclusively used as a family residence. Does that mean if it is not exclusively used as a family residence that they may enter; that, for instance, if it is a boarding house, or if a man lives over his store or place of business, or if it is a hotel, or if it is in a building partially occupied for other than a family residence, the inspector may enter?

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman will realize they would not have the power to enter such a dwelling house even without the insertion of this in the bill. I do not think in the suggestion the gentleman makes that there would be any possibility of their ever attempting to assert the power to enter such buildings. It is not contemplated to give any such power.

Mr. McCALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. McCALL. In the second line on page 2 occurs the expression "among all classes of our people." Does not the gentleman think it would be better not to recognize classes of people?

Mr. PETERS. I do not approve of that language myself, but it is hazardous to attempt to change it now. These words were not in the bill which I introduced, but were added in an amendment by the Senate. This bill has already passed the Senate, and it would be unfortunate to jeopardize its future by amending it and sending it back to that body. To attempt to alter the language might result in the defeat of the bill.

NEED OF COOPERATION.

At a hearing before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, January 27, 1909, the secretary of the New York State Charities Aid Association estimated that the cost of supporting 90,000 children was between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 annually. In addition to these 90,000 children he estimated that 40,000 or 50,000 more were cared for in other ways.

A sad lack of coordination exists between the agencies for dealing with children. Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House, Chicago, says:

> We have recently been startled to find that four-fifths of all the arrests in the criminal courts of Chicago are of boys between the ages of 15 and 25, of whom the large majority are under 19. This is so menacing that we should like to know whether the same condition is met in other American cities, or whether Chicago is unique in this excess of criminality among its youth. At present there is no method by which this may be determined. The proposed children's bureau could collect and distribute the very sort of information most valuable to those who are struggling with the problem of juvenile delinquency as well as with other grave matters connected with the lives of city children.

The lack of system in treating with juvenile problems is continually shown. Obsolete methods are being introduced in certain localities for the handling of children's problems, when experience with the same methods in other localities has shown them to be unsuccessful and they have been discarded.

In the great struggle which we are conducting against tuberculosis every effort is being made to stamp it out from the children. In this, too, better information is needed. Dr. Livingston

Farrand, executive secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, says:

As the organized crusade against tuberculosis develops, it is becoming more and more evident that one of the most fundamental problems is that of tuberculosis in children and the methods of dealing with it. In planning and organizing such efforts we are met at once by the lack of authoritative information regarding conditions, and the cooperation of an official children's bureau, such as that under consideration, would be of inestimable service to our movement.

The laws relating to the employment of children in the different States show most conclusively the necessity for coordinate action. In all the States of the Union, with one sad exception, laws regulating the employment of children exist, but in no two States are the laws alike. Every year in some States radical legislation is sought by enthusiastic advocates, which same legislation has proved in other States to be unavailing, and constructive legislation is often blocked by ignorance and prejudice, although its successful operation in other States has been proved beyond question.

The Government should maintain a bureau to which the people interested in this work could appeal, and it is the object of this bill to establish a bureau which will be able to furnish inquirers with a substantially accurate estimate of the number of children employed in various occupations, conditions under which they labor, and, so far as ascertainable, the facts, economical, physical, educational, and moral, of such employment.

HISTORY OF MOVEMENT TO ESTABLISH A CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

The consideration of this measure is not new to Congress. A similar measure has been introduced in the four preceding Congresses. The soundness of the bill and its purposes appealed so strongly to the judgment of the men on the committees that we find wherever the bill is considered that reports are uniformly made in favor of the measure.

In the Sixtieth Congress it was reported both before the House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. In the Sixty-first Congress it was again reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor in the House and in the Senate by the Committee on Education and Labor. In the last Congress it passed the Senate.

In the Sixty-second Congress it was heard by the Committee on Education and Labor in the Senate and was passed by the Senate, and in the House, after a hearing by the Committee on Labor, it was also unanimously reported.

Introduced in the last four Congresses, the bill has been heard by committees in the House and Senate in the last three Congresses and has been reported favorably by each committee each time.

I wish to point out to you by quotations from the reports that have been made by the committees of both the Senate and the House on the various children bureau bills the unanimity and the force with which this movement has appealed to all who have considered it.

I quote the following from the report of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, February 11, 1909, Hon. Frank P. Flint, chairman:

The committee believes that such facts as may be scientifically ascertained and may be published in popular form concerning the child life of the Nation will be of inestimable advantage. We believe it would be entirely within the province of the National Government to secure scientific and reliable information along these lines concerning the general welfare of the children of the Nation. Other nations have already advanced beyond our own in researches of this kind.

House Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, chairman, February 13, 1909:

The legislation affecting the children that is being enacted by many States could be wisely directed with the information that would be obtained through such a bureau. The light that would come up in the treatment of the problems of childhood would enable the various private individuals, organizations, and States to multiply manyfold the value of the work for the Nation that is now being done by them by giving them the benefit of each other's experience and knowledge.

The children's bureau bill was also unanimously indorsed by the committees of both Houses of the Sixty-first Congress, passed the Senate by unanimous vote, but was not reached on the House Calendar. I quote from the report of Chairman Washington Gardner, of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and Labor, June 21, 1910:

The committee believes the need for such a bureau has been proved and that the scientific investigation and publication in popular form of the facts concerning the unfortunate children of the country will be of great value; that it will tend to the saving of human life and suffering. For these reasons we recommend the passage of this bill.

The Senate Committee on Education and Labor made a second report, submitted March 18, 1910, which states:

The committee believes that such facts as may be scientifically ascertained and may be published in popular form concerning the child life of the Nation will be of inestimable advantage. Of course no legislation is contemplated beyond what may be suggested by the work of this bureau within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. But the separate States and communities which have to deal with the problems of dependency, delinquency, infant mortality, occupational diseases, and the employment of children will be able to learn from the work of this bureau what can not now be learned anywhere else in any scientific or authoritative form.

There does not now exist in any of the States such a bureau as the one contemplated, although some of the facts desired are collected by a few of the States, either through bureaus of education or of labor or of health. There are other States without even such agencies for publishing information. Some States are without vital statistics of any kind, and these States would be stimulated to investigations of their own by the aid of the proposed bureau of children.

I now quote you from the report of Chairman WILSON, of the Committee on Labor. This report was made on January 17, 1912, on my bill, H. R. 4694:

The children's bureau should be an authoritative source of information concerning all these questions, to the end that human life and health be preserved and human misery decreased. It seems to us no more inconsistent with the principles of this Government that we should be able to send out bulletins concerning the problems of childhood than that we should send out such bulletins concerning the care of fish or of hogs or of cattle, concerning the preservation of fruit trees or the treatment of the soil. It has been made clear that the bureau could make large use of the information already at hand in the Census Bureau, the Bureau of Education, and the Bureau of Labor, collecting this information so far as it bears upon the problems of childhood. The committee believes that the need for such a bureau has been established, that it will be of great benefit to the children of the country, and we therefore recommend the passage of this bill.

FURTHER DELAY INEXCUSABLE.

The nations of Europe have advanced beyond the United States in their study and legislation in this important subject. Only recently the British Parliament, as a result of investigations and Blue Books written on the Boer War, has enacted a children's charter, as it is popularly called. It has the double function, under the British system of government, of investigation and administration. The Children's Bureau outlined in this bill is confined to the first duty alone, except so far as it might report facts to Congress to affect legislation in the District of Columbia or the Territories. To the States must properly be left the duty of administration and the study and use of the recommendations or suggestions of this committee. Not only England, but Germany as well, with an eye to its future citizens, has made a very complete and careful study of the facts relating to child life. Our own students of these problems have been compelled to turn over most of their information to foreign sources and to do the best they could to apply them properly to American conditions.

There are already 32 bureaus in the 9 great departments represented in the Cabinet. If we have not neglected the creation of bureaus dealing with these many material things, what excuse have we for neglecting the most valuable asset of our national life—children. If it is a question of expenses, let us look at the outlay which last year was authorized by the Government and compare the purposes and the amounts appropriated with the purposes and appropriation asked for by this bill. The Bureau of Animal Industry had an appropriation of $1,654,750, of which there were investigations for particular subjects as follows:

For experiments and investigations in animal husbandry	$47,480
For eradication of cattle ticks	250,000

The Bureau of Plant Industry had for its use the sum of $2,061,686.

Contrast with these general sums the amount required for the children's bureau, whose total appropriation asked for is only $29,440.

There is no subject of more importance and no subject in which there is a more deplorable lack of knowledge than of American children. The matter of reliable information about them for the use of all public and private agencies can not be overestimated. The control of the diseases of orchards and fruit is no doubt of importance, as are the experiments and investigation in animal husbandry, but are they more important than the care and control of our children? Can we not at least afford to expend one-eighth as much for this subject as for the eradication of cattle ticks?

The children's bureau, by its name, is a notice to the general public that they may know what place to apply for immediate information on this subject. The information on the many questions which come up, even if it were collected by the States, could not be spread so successfully. It must be collected by one central body under the same system, so that the result in various States may be compared and prompt and intelligent conclusions drawn. It is impossible to gather from statistics collected by different agencies under different systems any intelligent or valuable results, as it would be impossible to conduct the national census by any system which would allow the States to collect their information and then announce it in their own way and methods.

Information about our children is essential for the carrying on of the proper development of our Government, and this information can be collected only by a central bureau.

NECESSITY FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Mr. Speaker, we must bear in mind that whatever we do for the children of the present we must do it now. The opportunity for aiding the children of any year or decade is a present opportunity; for the children so soon pass beyond the reach of the influences that are helpful to childhood. Others will come on and take their places, but these children that we are concerned with to-day, that may be helped if we pass this bill at this session, will be beyond the reach of help if we postpone action. The need for it is too great, the demand too insistent, for it to fail to be established among the bureaus of this Government. Why should not this Congress fairly accept this responsibility and this privilege? Why shall we not aid the children that are, as well as the children that are to be, the children of to-day and of all the to-morrows in the history of this great Nation of ours? The question ought not to be, Shall we pass this bill, but Why did not some Congress pass it long before, that the States might to-day be using the knowledge and experience that has been acquired? The past we can not remedy. The present is ours. Let us not lose this opportunity.

CONCLUSION.

Political equality and civic rights, obtained through years of struggle, have brought with them great responsibilities as well. The destiny of our Nation depends upon the way our citizens assume the responsibilities so placed upon them. To insure the preservation of our national ideals we must have citizens healthy and active, both in mind and body, and to develop from our children the highest types of men and women must be the first duty of our State, and it is a duty which this bill will help each State to perform. Let us now take the final step in offering to the children, our future citizens, the assistance of this measure.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART].

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, the original function of our Government wherein life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness were fundamental principles has been more or less neglected in recent years, owing to our tremendous growth of wealth and power and the incidental attraction of money making as of first importance in private and national life. In the early days, when we builded principally for larger possibilities for a free people, we established the public school and the moral code as foundations for future weal. But in modern estrangement from orthodox principles of having a care for others we have drifted into an era of selfishness which overshadows and overrides almost every phase of public duty except that of providing ways and means to make and spend money. We jeopardize health and risk honor and sacrifice friends and destroy confidence to make money, while the real desideratum of comfort and happiness, viz, good health, strong bodies, and clear minds, are neglected. We devote months and months here every year to consideration of public questions nearly every one of which has to do, directly or indirectly, with possibility for money making. And I am not intent upon offering criticism on any legitimate means of providing greater possibilities for financial success, but rather would I assist by urging the adoption of measures that will contribute health and strength to posterity and thereby build a mightier and more successful civilization.

Some statistician has figured it out that it costs, in money, an average of $3 a week, a total of $3,200 to bring a child from babyhood to majority. Of course, some cost much more than this, all things considered, and some less. This is the money cost, and, in addition, there is the cost to parents of brain fag and muscle fatigue and worry and anxiety and sleepless nights.

But money cost of children is a soulless proposition, and we would better be dead and out of the way of human endeavor than to hold up our hands in horror at the cost of children the while we are not trying to give posterity the benefits of our experience in life and health that the future generations may be benefited by our having lived.

I am deeply impressed with the importance of any legislation that will contribute to the health, happiness, and success of our mankind now and henceforth, and the children's-bureau bill is a long step forward in legislation that will conserve the robust that is in us and eliminate the infirm.

By reference to the hearings on this bill, I note the following, which I want to incorporate in this argument:

The total population of the United States in the 1900 census was 75,994,575 people, and of these 44.3 per cent, or 33,681,074, were under 20 years of age; 7,253,000 were from 5 to 9 years of age; 8,080,234 were from 10 to 14 years of age; and 7,553,089 were from 15 to 19 years of age. To care for the children is the one thing which always meets public approval, and no class of appropriations in the country is so generally sanctioned by the people as the appropriations for the education, the health, and the welfare of children.

I shall not assume that the care of children is generally defective, for that would be a false position. Instead the vast majority of children are cared for to the very best ability of their parents. But even if the ninety and nine are brought up under the most favorable care, the one that suffers lack of wholesome environment may thereby contract weaknesses which, in the course of time, would diffuse and detract much from the benefits which the ninety and nine gained in their properly nurtured child life. The purpose of the bill is to create a bureau which shall gather, classify, and distribute for popular use throughout the country accurate information on all subjects relating to the welfare of children. The bureau would especially investigate the question of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertions, dangerous occupations, accidents and diseases of children, employment, and legislation affecting children in the several States.

Therefore, the primary purpose of such a law will be the gathering of statistics relative to child life, but the ultimate results will be many fold, principal among which will be a healthier, sturdier, and better people than the average of this day. And in this connection I want to here submit some observations by eminent humanitarians and sociologists of our country. Mrs. Netta A. Wilson, who has had much to do with charitable and correctional endeavor in my home State and a trustee of the State woman's reformatory, says:

The establishment of a children's bureau would direct public thought and sentiment to the fact that the child has the right to be well born, of clean parentage, and born to the right environment. Forty-five per cent of the insane, 70 per cent of the criminal, 80 per cent of the feeble-minded, and 75 per cent of the epileptics are born, directly or indirectly, of drunken, neurotic, or criminal stock.

Half of our children die before they are 5 years old. Why not try, through Government organization, to conserve their lives? The economic value of children to the public is many times greater than all other interests taken together. It is far more important to conserve our race, and thereby our country, than it is to conserve the coal fields of Alaska or the forests of our Pacific States.

We have a bureau for the promotion and improvement of animal and plant life, for the investigation of all kinds of stock and crop sickness, but there is no similar institution to which we can appeal for the aid of the human race.

The establishment of a children's bureau would develop in a right and rational way the laws of heredity, prenatal culture, environment, social hygiene, education, and the broad laws of common sense.

Judge Lindsay says: The majority of parents are traitors to their children because they neglect to teach them a few simple lessons as to the anatomy and physiology of their bodies. Sex knowledge must be given to our children in a refined and scientific way and not leave their information to come from the streets and alleys. Over 90 per cent of the delinquent children in the entire country come from the cities. Idleness plays havoc. A children's bureau would promote industrial training, one of the greatest safeguards of youth.

A children's bureau would improve the quality of children, lower the death rate, develop the children normally and righteously, eventually depopulating our charitable, reformatory, and penal institutions; as it were "beating the devil to the children."

From my observation and experience in defective, delinquent, and penal work, the establishment of a children's bureau would mean to begin at the right end; the solving of the problems of better citizenship. Prevention rather than reformation should be the policy.

Dr. Charles Carroll Brooks, founder of Southern Mountain Preparatory School for Children, and whose fame as an exemplar of right-living methods is Nation wide, wrote me concerning the children's bureau bill which I introduced, as follows:

The Nation needs homes, and it needs every movement looking forward to the placing in the mind of the child that love of country that will eventually bring them into a citizenship that is worthy of every human effort planned for their growth and development.

The child is the ward of the State, and the State's best asset is a useful citizen, and the passage of a bill looking toward the welfare of the child is a move in the direction of fostering the future manhood and womanhood from the very beginning of the future citizen.

And as the child which begins its life in many cases is deprived of the foundation of growth, the home nest, the Nation will do well to consider the growth of the child and its development, for citizenship and civic righteousness must begin with the infancy and be followed on through adult life. The creation of a bureau where the child can be thought about and planned for will become a national asset that the country may well feel proud of and continue to foster in the interest of the child life.

It means that more children will be reared in an atmosphere of home surroundings, that the institution child will get an opportunity that it does not possess to-day, and that with the printing of what the child-welfare bureau means to do will educate the public to the idea of assisting the children of the Nation. The hope of the Nation is in its children; the citizens of the future will be what its children have been; and the progress in every avenue of life will be the story of the preparation in the child of the Nation.

Another eminent authority on physical welfare is Dr. Hurty, head of the justly celebrated Indiana Health Bureau. He writes me:

The conservation of child life is the greatest question before us to-day. We have on the average 150 children born in Indiana daily, and of this number 20 die in their first year of infantile diseases.

This class of diseases is due to food poisoning. In other words, parents do not know how to raise their children, and food poisoning, otherwise known as cholera infantum and diarrheal diseases, step in. Of the 150 children born 40 must die of easily preventable diseases by the time they are 5 years of age. This 40 includes the 20 in the first-year period.

And still another friend of the children's bureau method of providing ways and means of giving children better health and strength and opportunity to make a success of life is Prof. David Starr Jordan, of Leland Stanford, Jr., University. He says:

Every child has the inalienable right to be born free from disease, free from deformity, and with pure blood in its veins and arteries. Every child has the inalienable right to be loved; to have its individuality respected; to be trained in mind, body, and soul; to be protected from disease, from evil influences, and evil persons, and to have a fair chance in life. That people is delinquent which does not unceasingly strive to secure these inalienable rights to its children.

It is declared that a million young American mothers are annually bringing children into the world with no qualification for the proper care of their health except love and devotion. The Nation and the States have bureaus of scientific research which disseminate information on all topics of animal and industrial welfare, but scarcely a line is printed for free distribution which would prepare young parents for such care of their children as would make of them sturdy and successful citizens.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BARNHART. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not mean to give the impression that the Government is doing nothing as to the rearing of children. I know that that impression has got into the public print, but I hold reports from the chiefs of different bureaus, showing what has been done, and if we could have a real debate on this question I would like to give them to the House.

Mr. BARNHART. I recall that not long since on a given Sunday in a certain State in our country, after attention had been called to the depravity of child labor, a hundred pulpits proclaimed the divine law that it is the duty of the parent to lay up for the children, not the duty of children to support the parent; that children are not an encumbrance nor an asset for exploitation in the labor market but a heritage of the Lord; that the parents should be enabled to earn enough to support their children; that childhood is a sacred thing; that the child is the hope of the race, and the harbinger of the golden age. The press reported it. By this the people got it into their minds and consciences that contract child labor is wrong. Then the papers all published startling facts about the soulless employment of children in the factories of the State, and the doctrine of right became immediately a burning question. The lawmakers were in session. They heard from people whose consciences had been awakened by the pulpit and quickened by the press, and that State was given a most effective law to restrict the labor of little children; and thus great improvements are effected.

I have said heretofore, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat it, that the innocent child blood which bespatters the window panes of so many factories in this country, or which is polluted by neglect of proper parental care and attention, is a stain upon the character of every man and woman who tolerates such conditions.

The Senate has passed a children's bureau bill, and the House is asked to approve it. I heartily concur in the suggestion as does the Committee on Labor for this branch of the Congress; but there is or, at least, has been objection to it. They say they are afraid it would be unconstitutional to prepare to care for children's health and morals as we now furnish their education by compelling mental training in school. As usual the Constitution is made to serve as the breastwork from behind which the attack is made on a measure that is not wanted for reasons which are really far remote from any suggestion of infraction upon the Constitution.

The truth is, the bill is not wanted by some, not because it is in violation of any constitutional provision, but because if enacted it will become a big obstacle in the way of the use and abuse of child labor and women labor in many of the States. In some of the States enlightened legislation has been passed and enforced on these subjects. In other States the conditions that are allowed to obtain are not merely disgraceful to civilization, but they are calculated to impair in grave degree the welfare of coming generations of the American people.

But for the reason that it is found to be to the profit and advantage of various special interests to have such flagrant conditions continue, the authorities wink at these conditions. If a permanent bureau of the Federal Government is established whose business it will be perennially to turn the light of day on these conditions, something will happen. An aroused public sentiment will see to it that needed reforms are set in motion.

Gentlemen may imagine they are fooling somebody by arising in Congress and prating about the infringement of the Constitution when seeking to block the passage of a piece of legislation; that is, if not all that could be desired, at least in the right direction, in the direction of what is humane and enlightened. But they are not.

It may not be germane to this subject, but I hope no one will raise a point of order against my comparison of a single health endeavor by Government agency which accomplished marvelous results. I refer to the eradication of yellow-fever contagion by experiments of Army surgeons. They found, by daring and fatal experiments, that yellow-fever germs were broadcasted by mosquitoes, and from that day to this there has been no yellow-fever contagion among civilized peoples of the world, and there probably never will be if precautions which were found to be effective by Drs. Reed and Carroll are carefully observed.

There is no reason whatever of compelling any human being against his will to be made healthy if he doesn't want to. But there ought to be rules that would prevent one human being from needlessly jeopardizing the health and life of another, either through indifference or because he happens to cherish some asinine idea concerning disease. And there ought to be methods of safeguarding the well-being of children who, through misfortune, neglect, or ignorance, are liable to grow up weaklings and inflict their frailties of mind or body or soul upon others who deserve to be born strong in health and character.

This bill, as I understand it, merely provides means of ascertaining facts concerning neglected or misdirected child life—statistics of factory, school, and health environment of children. We who live in the country or in small cities or towns know little or nothing of the needs of child life in the congested industrial centers of the country. Only the other day I heard an undersized boy of 14 testifying in the House investigation of the Lawrence strike as follows:

STATEMENT OF JOHN BOLDELAR.

(Extracts.)

Mr. WILSON. How old are you?
Master BOLDELAR. 14 and 5 months.
Mr. WILSON. How long have you been working?
Master BOLDELAR. Since I was 14 and 5 months.
Mr. WILSON. Where does your father work?
Master BOLDELAR. Wood mill.
Mr. WILSON. What does he do?
Master BOLDELAR. The same job as I was doing.
Mr. WILSON. What does he get?
Master BOLDELAR. $5.10. (Per week.)
Mr. WILSON. John, what rent does your father pay?
Master BOLDELAR. $2.
Mr. WILSON. Per week?
Master BOLDELAR. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILSON. What furniture have you in the house?
Master BOLDELAR. Oh, a couple of beds; that is all.
Mr. WILSON. Have you carpets on the floor?
Master BOLDELAR. I guess not; I guess some horses live better than we do.
Mr. CAMPBELL. How many brothers and sisters have you?
Master BOLDELAR. I had a lot of brothers, but they are dead.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Have you any sisters?
Master BOLDELAR. Yes, sir; two.
Mr. CAMPBELL. How many rooms have you in your house?
Master BOLDELAR. Three.
Mr. CAMPBELL. How many stoves?
Master BOLDELAR. One.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you have water in a well, or have you water in pipes in the house?
Master BOLDELAR. Pipes.
Mr. CAMPBELL. What do you do Sundays?
Master BOLDELAR. Well, go to church and come home.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you read any books?
Master BOLDELAR. Well, I read sometimes when I get a chance.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Do you read the papers?
Master BOLDELAR. Not much; don't have much money to buy it.
Mr. POU. I have heard quite a number of you people talk about living on bread and water Has there ever been a time when you were compelled to live on bread and water?
Master BOLDELAR. Yes, sir.
Mr. POU. How long were you compelled to live on it?
Master BOLDELAR. Well, sometimes we did not have enough money to buy bread one day or two days.
Mr. POU. How often do you have meat upon the average during the week?
Master BOLDELAR. Once a week, about.
Mr. POU. Once a week; don't you have it oftener than that, John?
Master BOLDELAR. No, sir.
Mr. POU. You say that even now you only have meat once a week?
Master BOLDELAR. Yes, sir.
Mr. POU. What do you live on during the other six days?
Master BOLDELAR. Oh, just a piece, you know, of black bread; that is what we usually eat, and coffee and some molasses.
Mr. POU. Is that all you have?
Master BOLDELAR. Yes, sir; and sometimes beans.
Mr. POU. And then one day in the week, you say, you have meat?
Master BOLDELAR. Yes, sir.
Mr. POU. What day is that.
Master BOLDELAR. Sunday.
Mr. POU. Sunday? That is all.

Mr. Speaker, this is but a single instance of many similar recitals in this investigation. And it is more than likely that it is only one of thousands of similar instances in the thousands of factories where children are employed. God pity the youths who must start life in such a struggle, for it must be apparent to any discerning man that a life started under such conditions can never be anything but one of slavish misery, because the physical and mental depression which must become chronic in such cases can never be relieved; it can be nothing but a blighted life, which all the science and environment of after years can never cure.

Think of the pitiful story of a family of five being compelled to live on the father's wages of $5.10 per week, of which he pays $2 per week for house rent. Think of the family living most of the time on a diet of black bread, molasses, beans, and coffee. Think of the home with "no carpets," "one stove," and "a couple of beds" as furniture, with no money to spare for books or newspapers, and then tell me that the children therein will be fitted for ideal citizens. Tell me if this "lot of brothers, but they are dead," to whom this poor boy referred, died from nonpreventable causes, or if they were but a fragment of a common slaughter of innocents which a public knowledge of their environment, and incidental humane care, would most likely have prevented.

I am not a lawyer, and therefore not competent to judge of constitutional prerogatives, but if our national code of ethics will not permit systematic endeavor for relief of such abused child life in behalf of mercy and the common weal, let us override the faulty Constitution in emergency's name and take neglected and abused childhood by the hand and lift it up, rather than by the throat and continue to choke it down.

But I hear some say, "Oh, this outcry to help children is but a fad—a gushing whimsicality." No, sirs; it is not. Instead, the willful or unavoidable neglect of proper rearing of children is as old as the history of man; as old as human frailty, and the man who sees it and sanctions its continuance is helping to maintain direct communication between the cradle and the sewer, between the nursery and the poisonous swamp, and beside, helps to transmit moral and physical delinquency to posterity.

I believe the Government has other and more important missions than the fixing of tariffs and the financial and industrial development of the country. Money is worth nothing to people in ill health, and money is really a curse to those who, through inheritance or neglect in youth, are depraved. Money can not buy health and happiness. These can come only through sound bodies and right living, and the Government has no higher duty than to provide ways and means of enabling parents and guardians to give good health and good morals to children.

The future greatness of our people depends on how useful they can be in contributing to the avoidance of misery rather than how much money they can make. And if we are to check the growth of disease, of intemperance, of crime, and of trouble making generally we must inaugurate a liberal system of protecting children from conditions harmful to them and to posterity. We all admit that our penal and benevolent institutions are becoming too full of delinquents and dependents of all sorts, and the only way to prevent much of this misfortune is the proper rearing of children, not only for their own sake, but for the sake of their offspring, "even unto the fifth generation."

Before us stands a mighty throng of young men and young women. They ought to be equipped to stand up clear eyed and clean minded and look all the world in the face. It has cost countless sacrifices to bring them up—to feed, clothe, doctor, and educate them. But they are worth all they cost, and more, if they are made of the stuff they ought to be. They have cost father many long hours, hard knocks, short meals, and already his hair is turning gray. They have cost mother years of toil, sleepless nights, self-sacrifices, and constant care. They can never fully pay the debts they owe parents, and we should not expect it of them. But they can largely repay their cost by being always manly men and womanly women, and sturdy bodies and strong minds will conduce much to such a triumph.

I hope the time may soon come when we will give as much attention to the health and strength of the race as we now give to money making, for health and strength are more important factors in successful being than any amount of wealth. No civilization can fulfill its mission of justice and inspiration through frail bodies and feeble minds, and a national children's bureau will point the way to help those who can not help themselves, protect those more fortunate from degenerate contamination, and lift each succeeding generation to a more vigorous and successful realm of human life than those who have lived before.

This bill will conserve human life and make of us for us a sturdier, better, and happier people and posterity, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not demand a second upon the bill for the purpose of opposing it, but for the purpose of having a discussion of the bill. I am quite willing now to yield all of my time to anyone who may desire to oppose the bill—to take charge of that opposition. Otherwise, I shall use a minute or two myself, and then yield time to anybody who may ask for it.

Whatever else I do, Mr. Speaker, I try not to disguise to myself the reasons for a proposition or the authority which is behind it. The report in this case states that the authority to take the census is the authority for this bill, the constitutional authority, and the authority for various other bills. The Constitution provides, referring to the number of inhabitants in the different States—

> The actual enumeration shall be made within 3 years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and then every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

That is all there is in the Constitution authorizing the census to be taken. Any gentleman who undertakes to find authority in that for this bill, or for any of the other numerous activities of the Government, finds a very easy method of solacing his soul.

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. No; I have not the time. I do not know under what authority we may justify the bill. I am not that strict constructionist that makes it bother me very much. I think that the same authority, whatever it may be, which authorizes us to maintain the Bureau of Soils, a Bureau of Animal Industry, a Bureau of Plant Industry, a Bureau of Mines and Mining, a Bureau of Education, a Bureau of Standards, and various other bureaus of the Government, is probably the same authority under which we could maintain this bureau.

I regret that this matter does not come before the House in such a way that it is subject to both discussion and amendment. I have forgotten who originally introduced the bill, a good many years ago. In the last Congress it was introduced by Mr. Parsons, of New York, and in this Congress by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] in practically the same language as the bills have been for years introduced. The Senate bill is practically the same, except that it inserts words which the gentleman from Massachuettts [Mr. MCCALL] finds objectionable, "Among all classes of our people," a sentence which was inserted by the Senate in the old bill, and also inserts a provision with reference to the representatives or agents having no authority to go into family residences.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman at that point how he construes those lines?

Mr. MANN. I do not construe them.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What do they mean?

Mr. MANN. No one knows what they mean, but we will find out when we put the bill into operation. Then the bill creates a number of employees in the department, a useless proceeding, an improper method of legislation. Employees, when this bureau is first organized, will have nothing to do, and when they do have something to do this number of employees will not be sufficient; but the law will, happily, prevent an enlargement of the activities of the bureau beyond the number of employees now authorized, so that in the end, if they desire, they can not engage in great activities.

For years a good many of the good people of the country have been endeavoring to obtain legislation which would make special study and investigation of the conditions surrounding the children of the land. If that investigation is purely and simply for the purpose of obtaining ordinary information, no one would complain, but this is another one of the instances where it is intended that the General Government shall overlap the powers of the State governments. The purpose of obtaining information like this will be, in the main, for the purpose of procuring or influencing legislation both by the General Government and by the State governments.

However, so far as I am personally concerned, in deference to the opinion of such women as Jane Addams, who has given her life work to the study of conditions surrounding children and the poorer people, and who has done such noble work in that direction, who believes that this investigation would be productive of great good in the care of children, in the end I shall vote for the bill, although fully conscious that it overlaps other work done by various bureaus of the Government in every direction. It overlaps the work done by the Public Health Service, by the Bureau of Labor, by the Bureau of Education, by a dozen other bureaus of the Government performing now the same work which it is proposed shall be performed by this bureau. Yet I hope that in the end the results of the creation of the bureau may be of great benefit to the country.

Mr. KENDALL. I will ask the gentleman if it is not designed to transfer the work now being done by these various bureaus to which he has referred to this special organization that is created by this bill?

Mr. MANN. I think not.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, whenever the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] confesses that he has been unable to find any authority for proposed legislation this House may rest assured that no such authority exists. With his industry and ingenuity he will find authority for legislation where, perhaps, more fertile but less resourceful minds would be unable to do so. I recognize that a great public sentiment has been built up in favor of the creation of this bureau, and yet whoever reads the bill and attentively studies its provisions will find great difficulty in determining exactly the limitations of the bureau's functions and exactly the jurisdiction proposed to be conferred upon it.

If those most interested in the legislation could have their way, this proposed bureau would have the most comprehensive power that could possibly be conferred upon it. I am in receipt of a number of communications both favoring this legislation and opposing it. From the investigation I have been able to make I can not bring myself to support the bill. It is another one of those demands to inject the Federal Government into activities in which it has no legitimate place. It is another effort to have the Federal Government placed in lines of work which more properly belong to the several States of the Union. The only redeeming feature of the bill is that pointed out by the gentleman from Illinois, that in the enumeration of the positions created by this proposed bill it will be impossible, without the utmost difficulty, ever to extend the activities of the bureau. Mr. Speaker, I have no sympathy with this method of passing legislation of such an important character with but 40 minutes of debate limited upon the bill, without opportunity for amendment, without opportunity to do anything else than to propel it through this House with the sentiment behind it, and without any opportunity to consider and to perfect its various provisions. I shall not attempt to analyze the provisions of the bill. It is impossible to do so in the allotted time. Outside of the many good people, among them Miss Jane Addams, referred to by the gentleman from Illinois, who are earnestly supporting the measure, there are others who are interested in this legislation. As a very distinguished citizen of this country has written:

> I am not against the promotion of child welfare, but I am against child sentiment being exploited by professional philanthropists, professional child workers, professional college settlement workers, and their hangers-on using child sentiment for their own selfish ends.

Anyone who is familiar with the course of this legislation, those who have been advocating it from time to time, those who have been most industrious in endeavoring to promote it, will recognize the familiar names of those who have been assiduously seeking comfortable places in the governmental service for many years. I at least wish to voice my protest against this indefensible extension of the activities of the Federal Government into a field in which it has no legitimate place.

If opportunity were given I should propose amendments which would at least perfect the measure. If time were available I should be glad to set out at some length objections to this legislation which deserve at least to be considered by those endeavoring to legislate intelligently. It would be a pleasure to gratify many who earnestly advocate this measure if my judgment approved it. I have carefully examined the reasons advanced in support of the bill as well as in opposition to the creation of the bureau. Much erroneous information has been given publicity, and some so-called comparisons have been made to justify the legislation. In my opinion the legislation is both unwise and unnecessary. I should be glad to please the many really honest advocates of the bill if it were possible to do so. But in this and in all other matters I am compelled to exercise my own judgment rather than accept the judgment of others, and I am therefore unable to support the measure.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has five minutes remaining.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox].

[Mr. COX of Ohio addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I have more than that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who was presiding temporarily informed the Chair that you had five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Well, I can not help myself, although whoever it was was mistaken. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] was in the Chair keeping the time.

Mr. MANN. I knew how much time I had left.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman say he had left?

Mr. MANN. I had eight minutes left. But I do not care.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has five minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] has one minute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, two minutes have been yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I had no intention, and at present very little desire, to undertake a debate of this question. It was made impossible to properly debate it in the time now at the disposal of the House, and it is an indictment of this procedure of the House that this bill should be considered under a suspension of the rules, with only 20 minutes' debate on a side.

I undertook to interrupt the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox], but being limited in time, he declined to yield. My desire to interrupt him was with a view of calling atention to the mistaken impression he was giving to the House that we were expending large sums of money in the investigation of insect pests and plant and animal life and doing nothing for the child. That charge has been carried in every newspaper of the land for months; it has been said that we contribute for the hog but do nothing for the child. A more misleading statement and a more unjustifiable statement of facts never was made.

If I had the time I could read to this House information obtained from the various departments that I took the trouble to write to, asking how much they had expended in investigation and help of the children of the land. The amounts run into a good many thousands of dollars.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman put those letters into the RECORD?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will. In addition to that fact, it ought to be borne in mind by everybody that nothing is done for the hog or any animal or insect or plant that is not done with the idea of helping the human race, and to undertake to put Congress or any other legislative body in the position of declining to help the human family and being willing to help every other form of life is to try to prove one of those absurd things that the mere statement of destroys.

Now, we ought to have the opportunity to examine at this time into whether this bill does not propose the creation of an unnecessary bureau; whether, as stated by the head of the Department of Education, his bureau is not prepared now to do all of the work that is being asked to be done by this proposed bureau; whether you will not bring about just here what we have in many instances elsewhere—a duplication and multiplication of work. If the bureau is to do those things that the advocates of it hope it may do, then the number of its authorized employees is absolutely inadequate. If it is not to do those things, then there are already existing agencies of the Government sufficient to do it.

Now, I believe that some of us who have not seen our way clear to vote for the bill in its present form are not quite subject to the indictment——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. SHERLEY (continuing). Are not quite subject to the indictment of being totally lacking in any humanitarian instincts or desires. I happen to know some of the people who are agitating this matter. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Cox] refers, for instance, to Mr. Flexner, of my city. He is a very excellent gentleman, with whom I have had elaborate correspondence in regard to this matter. I do not question in the slightest the motives of such men, though their knowledge of the need of such a bureau and the present facilities of the Government to gather the data is no greater than that of Members of this House. My sole purpose now is to say this: It is perfectly apparent that we shall be in session for some months; there is not the slightest excuse to insist that this House shall to-day, with only 20 minutes to a side for debate, and without power of amendment, pass this bill.

As to its constitutionality I entertain no reasonable doubt. Whatever in early days may have been thought of the right of the Federal Government to exercise such powers as are granted in this bill, at this time in view of the many bureaus exercising similar power without question by anyone I can not see how the right can be questioned. It may be that one bad precedent has led to another; in some ways that is true, but it is now too late to successfully question the exercise of such powers by the Federal Government.

After giving the matter much thought I have about determined to vote for a proper bill, fully considered and perfected by the free action of the House, but I am not willing to vote for this very uncertain bill under suspension of the rules, when no one can even offer an amendment. It is either inadequate or unnecessary. Under the leave given to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I add the following letters from various departments of the Government:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, February 26, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives, United States, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the absence from the city of the Commissioner of Education I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 22, asking that you be furnished with a general statement showing what the Bureau of Education is doing for the children of the country. In reply I am sending herewith a copy each of two letters of the Commissioner of Education to the Secretary of the Interior, prepared at the request of the Secretary. In these letters the commissioner states the things that the Bureau of Education is doing for children, and also the amount of money that is being expended by the Division of School Hygiene and Sanitation. I am inclosing herewith a list of some publications of the Bureau of Education dealing with child welfare. You will understand, of course, that this list does not include all of the publications relating to children that have been issued by this office. If the material sent you does not give you the exact information that you desire, I shall be glad to try again if you will kindly indicate more specifically the nature of the material desired.

I may say that practically all of the work done by the Bureau of Education is in the interest of the children of the country. The total appropriations for the bureau amount to $79,800.

Very respectfully,

L. A. KALBACH,
Acting Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, January 3, 1912.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I have read carefully all the correspondence on file in this bureau in regard to the proposed children's bureau, the arguments submitted at the hearing May 12, 1911, before the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives, and the report made August 14, 1911, by Senator BORAH for the Committee on Education and Labor, and I find no reason to modify the opinion expressed in my letter of December 21, 1911, to wit: That the work specified in this bill to be done by the proposed bureau can be done more effectively and with better results in the Bureau of Education, and that, therefore, the appropriation asked for the new bureau should be made to the Bureau of Education for the creation of one or more new divisions for some portions of this work and for strengthening the divisions already engaged on important parts of it.

In section 2 of S. 252, the purposes of the proposed bureau are set forth as follows: "The said bureau shall investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children, employment, legislation affecting children in the several States and Territories, and such other facts as have a bearing upon the welfare of children. The chief of said bureau may from time to time publish the results of these investigations."

The phrase "all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life" would cover the greater part of the work of the Bureau of Education, and as pointed out in my letter of December 21, all the items specified, with one possible exception, are either direct or indirect problems of education with which the Bureau of Education now deals or should undertake at the earliest possible moment.

Permit me to submit the following reasons for my position in this matter:

1. The Bureau of Education is already doing much of the work specified in Senate bill 252. It collects and publishes statistics of school population and school attendance, summaries of school and child-labor laws, facts as to school buildings, grounds, and sanitary arrangements, and statistics in regard to schools for exceptional children, including the deaf, dumb, blind, feeble-minded, and children of criminal tendencies. In its annual reports and in special bulletins it has frequently dealt in a special way with various phases of the subject of child welfare. Within the last few months there has been established in this bureau a Division of School Hygiene and Sanitation to which is allotted for annual support $5,950, exclusive of the help given by clerks in the Correspondence Division. Estimates recently submitted by me and now embodied in the estimates of the Department of the Interior include an addition of $9,300 for this division. If this appropriation is made this division will then have a total annual fund of $15,250, and will be able to do for the health of children all that can be done with a like fund in any bureau. School sanitation necessarily includes the health of children out of school. The same individual can not be a healthy child in school and a sick, diseased, or uncared-for child out of school. School hygiene necessarily takes hold of the home. It happens that the chief of this division has in the last week submitted for my approval a letter which he is preparing to send to all the State and city boards of health, offering the cooperation and services of this division of the bureau in all matters pertaining to the health of children. He suggests especially that help be given by making this division a clearing house for all matters pertaining to the health of children.

2. For most of its information, except such as is gathered by the Census Bureau, the proposed bureau would have to depend largely on the agencies on which the Bureau of Education depends and with which the Bureau of Education is more closely allied than the proposed bureau would be. These agencies include school boards, superintendents, and principals of schools, teachers, and truant officers, and school physicians. For carrying into effect any plans for improving the condition of children the dependence would be greater still. Other agencies could and would cooperate with the Bureau of Education just as readily as with the new bureau.

3. To unite in the Bureau of Education all things which pertain to the welfare of children would aid much in giving to the people the right conception of education, which is too often supposed to be merely the results of formal lessons in school.

I therefore renew my suggestion that the appropriation asked for the establishment and maintenance of a children's bureau be made to the Bureau of Education for such of the purposes specified in S. 252 as are not now served by this bureau.

Respectfully submitted.

P. P. CLAXTON, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION,
Washington, December 21, 1911.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: In the modern acceptance of the meaning of education it includes all the controllable influences that contribute to the development of children and to the making of a fuller manhood and womanhood, whether physical, mental, or moral, in so far as these can be differentiated and assigned to the periods of infancy, childhood, and youth. Of course, the problems of scholarship and of professional education and training, belonging largely to adult life, are not excluded.

All the things enumerated in Senate bill 252, Calendar 119, as pertaining to "the welfare of children and child life" belong either directly or indirectly in the province of education, and most of them are so closely related to and bound up with problems with which the Bureau of Education now deals or which it is preparing to take up as its legitimate work that to attempt to separate them and assign them to another department or another bureau would, I believe, not be wise from the standpoint either of economy or of efficiency. The only items mentioned in the bill that do not belong directly to the province of education and this bureau are infant mortality, the birth rate, desertion, and dangerous occupations. The first two and the last of these are at least secondary problems of education in the large sense in which it is considered in this bureau.

These are all important matters, and there is need of more money for their proper handling, but because of the nature of the work and its intimate relations with the proper work of the Bureau of Education any appropriations for their consideration and handling should, I believe, be made to this bureau, in which one or more new divisions should be created for that purpose. One strong bureau, with funds and organization sufficient to enable it to deal adequately with the full round of problems naturally belonging to it, should be more efficient than two small and disconnected bureaus, both dealing with the same problems so closely related that none can be dealt with effectively apart from the others. If, therefore, the present Congress is willing to appropriate money for the purposes set forth in Senate bill 252, I would recommend that it be appropriated to the Bureau of Education in the Department of the Interior, to be used in strengthening the divisions of the bureau now engaged in phases of this work and for the creation and maintenance of new divisions for other parts of the work.

Respectfully submitted.

P. P. CLAXTON, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, February 23, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SHERLEY: I am in receipt of your letter of February 22, making inquiry with regard to the work done by the Census Bureau in collecting statistics affecting children.

The only annual work which the Census Bureau does which involves statistics affecting children is on mortality. In publishing mortality statistics we give, for each separate disease, the number dying according to age periods; for the ages above 5 figures are not given of individual years, but only for groups of five years, but separate figures are given for each individual year of age under 5. For children under 1 still finer age distinctions are made. The reason why so much greater detail is given for the ages of children who die than for older persons is because of the extremely high death rate among children.

In connection with the quinquennial census of manufactures and the decennial census of population two or three questions are asked which have little significance except in their bearing upon the condition of children, and in the tabulation of two or three other questions a greater degree of analysis is applied to children than to adults.

In the manufactures census the question with regard to wage earners distinguishes between those above and those below 16 years of age, and in the tabulations for each State and for each industry in each State the figures for these two classes of wage earners are separated, the obvious purpose being to discover the extent of child labor in manufacturing industries. A similar question is also included in the schedule relating to mines.

In the population schedule there is a question with regard to school attendance, which of course has its chief significance with respect to children. In addition to tabulating the answers to this question in considerable detail—the distinguishing age periods, sex, color, and native or foreign birth and parentage—the Census Bureau also tabulates with especial fullness the returns for children with respect to occupations and age.

In tabulating occupation statistics it has been customary in the past, and we are planning to do the same at the present census, to show the number in each occupation by age groups consisting of 5 or 10 years each. In the case of children under 15, however, the age classification is carried into greater detail by showing the number employed in each principal occupation for each individual year of age.

In the tabulation of ages the returns for the adult population are shown for individual years of age only, but in the case of children under 1 year of age five groups are distinguished according to the month of age. This is done for the purpose of facilitating comparisons with the statistics of deaths of children already referred to.

What has been set forth above may be briefly summarized in the statement that the Census Bureau publishes statistics dealing with age, occupations, school attendance, and mortality for children in considerably greater detail than similar statistics are published for adults. Such statistics relating to mortality are published annually; relating to persons employed in manufacturing industries, quinquennially; and those relating to occupations in general, to age, and to school attendance, decennially.

You will find the information particularly relating to children, which was published in connection with the Twelfth Census, as follows:

Statistics of occupations, scattered throughout the entire volume of the report of that census entitled "Occupations."

Statistics of school age and of school attendance, in volume 2, on "Population," pages 151 to 249 and 349 to 410.

Statistics of the ages of children, in volume 2, on "Population," pages 2 to 149.

Supplementary and special statistics regarding child labor, in Bulletin 69, issued in 1907, a copy of which is forwarded herewith.

Statistics of children employed in manufacturing industries, scattered throughout the entire series of reports on manufactures, with a summary and analysis in Part 1 (Vol. VII of the entire series of reports, pp. cxxv to cxxxiii).

I am also sending you a copy of Bulletin 109, containing the mortality statistics for 1910, and call your attention particularly to the table beginning on page 154.

I am quite unable to make any even approximate estimate of the cost of the work which the Census Bureau thus does with regard to children. The work is all inextricably mingled with the more general lines of work. It would not, for example, be proper to attempt to calculate the cost of compiling statistics regarding the occupations of children by taking the entire cost of the occupation work and proportioning a part thereof to the statistics concerning children in the ratio of the number of occupied children to the total number of occupied persons. All that could be charged as a special cost due to the statistics of children would be the additional cost of handling the occupation statistics for children as compared with adults. I think it is safe to say that the special work relating to children, performed by the Census Bureau during the last three years, has involved an additional cost of not less than $100,000. The conditions, however, during the decennial census period are, of course, entirely different from those between censuses. I do not suppose that the extra cost of the work we do concerning children in our annual mortality statistics amounts to more than a few thousand dollars.

Regretting my inability to give a more specific answer to your inquiries, I am,

Very respectfully, E. DANA DURAND, Director.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF LABOR,
Washington, February 28, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of February 22, inquiring what this bureau has done in the matter of investigating the welfare of children and the approximate amount expended annually for this purpose.

In February, 1897, the bureau published a report made in response to a joint resolution of Congress, directing an investigation into the "conditions attending the employment of women and children," etc., "and the effect, if any, their employment has had upon the wages and employment of men."

This investigation was carried out as part of the regular work of the bureau, and it would be practically impossible to determine what portion of the expense in connection with the investigation and report should be charged to that part of the work relating to children. The agents in visiting establishments secured data relating to the wages and working conditions of children in addition to data relating to women and men. In this way the travel involved and the work in gathering data in the establishments and the work in the preparation of the report itself would have been very nearly the same had the investigation related only to men and women. On the other hand, if the matter is turned around, it might be said, if the investigation dealt with children, it added comparatively little to the cost to get the data concerning men and women. It would be difficult now to go back and determine even what the report cost, but making a rough estimate I should say it might easily have been $100,000, and possibly the fairest way to estimate what was expended on the investigation of children would be to apportion the amount equally among the three classes of employees.

Again, in the fiscal year 1903–4, the bureau conducted a small investigation into child labor in the United States which cost approximately between $3,000 and $4,000.

In July, 1905, the bureau published a digest of the laws relating to child labor in the principal European countries. This work was done as a part of the regular work of the bureau from time to time during that year, and it would be very difficult now to find just what the cost was, but I assume it was not over $1,000.

In January, 1906, the bureau published in its bulletin the text of all the laws of the various States relating to the employment of children. This did not cost over a few hundred dollars.

Up to 1907 the work of the bureau in connection with the welfare of children was, as indicated above, occasional or included in the general studies relating to men and women in industry. In 1907, however, the bureau began an investigation directed by Congress into the condition of women and children wage earners in the United States, and for this work Congress appropriated $150,000 for the fiscal year 1907–8, and another $150,000 for the fiscal year 1908–9, the second appropriation being made available until exhausted. The entire amount of these two appropriations was used in the investigation directed. In this case, as in the earlier study published in 1897, it is impossible to apportion the expense. Part of the investigation related directly to children and part directly to women, but in other parts of the investigation, such as in the textile and silk industries, the establishments visited employed both women and children, and the same amount of travel and practically the same expenses would be involved had the investigation related to only one of these classes. It would probably be fair to assume that one-half of the total expense was expended on the investigation of the wages and working conditions of women and the other half on the wages and working conditions of children.

In the above figures no account has been taken of the printing and distributing of the reports published. The reports embodying the results of the recent investigation directed by Congress, for which $300,000 was appropriated, are being printed as a Senate document, and I have no information as to what the cost of this printing is. The printing and distribution of the other reports referred to in this letter would probably come to $20,000, of which one-third might be arbitrarily charged to that part of the work relating to children.

I am, very truly, yours,

CHAS. P. NEILL, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, March 4, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In response to your inquiry of February 22 relative to governmental education of the Indian children, I beg to say that the aim of the bureau is to give to Indian children an education in the common branches taught in the white grade schools and also sufficient industrial education in special branches to fit them to earn a livelihood and support themselves and their families after they leave the schools.

Pursuant to this end the Government has established reservation boarding schools and day schools and nonreservation boarding schools. The reservation boarding schools, conducted for those Indian children belonging on the reservation, teaches them English, brings them up to the third or fourth grade, and also gives them the rudiments of industrial training. When, however, they reach the age of 14, it is expected that they will then be sent to a nonreservation school, where they pursue their academic work to the eighth grade and also receive full industrial training. The nonreservation schools are well equipped for industrial education, domestic science, and manual arts, and especially agriculture, and every Indian who desires to farm his allotment has every opportunity to learn agricultural methods—farming, gardening, dairying, and care of stock.

On the other hand, more especially in the communities where the Indian is brought in close contact with the white man and has to some extent adopted his customs, the Government day school or the public school takes the place of the reservation boarding school for the Indians. The policy of the office at present, however, is to encourage attendance in the State public schools of all Indian children who are entitled or may be permitted to attend under State laws, and many are now so attending district public schools.

When, however, they arrive at an age where they should have industrial and special training, which the public-school system does not offer, they may still be received in the nonreservation schools for completion of their training along special lines.

In addition to the Government schools, in some cases contracts are made with private or mission schools, payable out of the Indian tribal moneys, and also with public schools to which the Indians would not be entitled to admission under State laws.

Many Indian boys and girls have profited by the educational opportunities afforded, and have made a creditable place for themselves in the world and among white people. Some have failed, of course, but it can hardly be expected that the fullest education and mental equipment of this race can be accomplished in one generation. In the school system of the service every effort is made to educate, train, and civilize these people, to inculcate a correct understanding of moral obligations, and to care for their bodily health and teach them to care for themselves after governmental supervision has ended.

During the fiscal year 1911 there was expended for strictly educational purposes approximately the sum of $4,542,777.

Respectfully,

F. H. ABBOTT, Assistant Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, February 24, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SHERLEY: Your inquiry of the 22d instant was received yesterday. In reply I have the honor to advise you that the amount disbursed for pensions in behalf of minor children during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was $1,087,488.24.

Very respectfully,

J. L. DAVENPORT, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 28, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: The department is in receipt of your letter of February 21, addressed to Dr. Wiley, asking for a general statement showing what the Bureau of Chemistry is doing for the good of the country with reference to the children of the United States.

The Bureau of Chemistry is doing a great deal in this respect, but I fear it will be impossible to give the amount annually expended in the work. In the enforcement of the food and drugs act the welfare of children, as well as the welfare of adults, is considered. I refer not merely to those general foods whose adulteration may affect the welfare of the whole community, but especially to foods which are used particularly by children, as, for instance, the milk supply and infant foods. I may say that the Bureau of Chemistry pays particular attention to products which are used especially by invalids and children and regards their adulteration as grave cases of the violation of the food and drugs act.

Respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 28, 1912.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 22d instant requesting a statement of any investigations made by the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service regarding the diseases affecting children and the approximate cost of such investigations.

In reply, you are informed that in accordance with existing laws the above-mentioned service conducts systematic investigations of contagious and infectious diseases and matters pertaining to the public health. Many of these diseases affect children in greater proportion than adults, and some of them, as infantile paralysis and measles, are almost wholly confined to the period of childhood and early adolescence.

In addition to investigations, there is authority in law for the Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service to cooperate with and aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards and in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of this department to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States and their spread from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to another State or Territory or the District of Columbia.

Among the first and most important studies conducted by the above-mentioned service and having a direct bearing on the welfare of children were those in 1894 and 1895 relating to the serum treatment of diphtheria. Soon after the reported discovery of diphtheria antitoxin an officer of the service was sent abroad to make a careful study of the new remedy, and as a result the propagation of antitoxin was begun in the Hygienic Laboratory on November 9, 1894, with the view to demonstrating its methods of preparation and value in the treatment of diphtheria. During the following year further studies were made of the prevalence of diphtheria in the United States and the value of diphtheria antitoxin to combat the disease.

The enactment of the law of July 1, 1902, governing the propagation and sale in interstate traffic of viruses, serums, toxins, and analogous products afforded opportunity for further studying not only diphtheria antitoxin, but other prophylactic agents, such as vaccine virus, which are used in large quantities to control contagious diseases. A standard of potency for diphtheria antitoxin was devised, the use of which assures uniform strength of all this product sold in interstate traffic. Coincident with the systematic testing of diphtheria antitoxin and other biologic products, exhaustive investigations have been carried on to determine the cause of sudden deaths following the use of animal serums. These studies, which were successful, have thrown light both from practical and scientific standpoints on the precautions to be observed in using diphtheria antitoxin among children and adults.

Studies have likewise been made of the influence of antitoxin upon post-diphtheritic paralysis. Reports of some of the above-mentioned studies are contained in Hygienic Laboratory Bulletins Nos. 38, 45, 50, and 64, copies of which are forwarded herewith.

As having a bearing on the control of diphtheria and scarlet fever, reports have been issued on the management of outbreaks of such diseases, the prevention of the spread of scarlet fever, and the application of disinfectants to be used in their prevention. Copies of these reports are inclosed herewith.

A report is also inclosed of studies made of an eruptive fever known as the "fourth disease."

Since 1902 the bearing of hookworm disease on the health of children in the Southern States has been systematically investigated. As a result of these studies it has been shown that hookworm infection is extremely prevalent among children in certain districts, interfering with their physical development and reducing their mental efficiency. In accordance with an act of Congress authorizing investigations of child and woman labor cooperation was rendered to the Bureau of Labor to determine the influence of hookworm disease and insanitary conditions on the health of children in cotton mills and cotton-mill villages. Investigations have likewise been made to determine the prevalence of amebæ and lambia among children in one southern district. These latter data are awaiting publication. The reports of studies of hookworm disease are contained in numerous bulletins, one of which is inclosed herewith.

In studies of typhoid fever in the District of Columbia during a period of five years beginning July, 1906, special attention has been paid to the prevalence of the disease in this class of the population and their influence on its continuance in the District. Reports Nos. 2, 3, and 4 on these investigations are forwarded herewith.

Coincident with the above investigations exhaustive studies have been made of milk and its relation to the public health. A report of these studies is contained in Hygienic Laboratory Bulletin No. 56, copy of which is forwarded herewith. This latter bulletin, among other things, contains compiled data of epidemics of typhoid fever, scarlet fever, and diphtheria spread by milk; the results of laboratory investigations of the frequency of tubercle bacilli in milk; statistics of infant mortality in relation to milk; bearing of pasteurization on infant morbidity; an extensive discussion of infant feeding; data regarding the production of certified milk; and the number and influence of infants' milk depots on health in cities of the United States. Similar data regarding operations of infants' milk depots in 1909 and 1910 have also been collected, those for the latter year having been published in a publication, copy of which is inclosed herewith.

In relation to investigations of leprosy in Hawaii, statistical studies have been made as to the occurrence of the disease in relation to school age. Investigations have also been made relative to heredity versus environment in leprosy. Copies of bulletins containing these studies are inclosed herewith.

Advantage has been taken of the occurrence of acute anterior poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) in the United States within the past two years to make somewhat extensive studies of the disease. These studies have been made in Iowa and New York and at the Hygienic Laboratory in Washington, and publications issued on the subject are inclosed herewith. Investigations have likewise been made of epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis within two years in Georgia, Ohio, and Texas. A copy of a publication bearing on the disease, with special reference to public measures for its control, is forwarded herewith.

In connection with investigations of sewage pollution of interstate and international waters with special reference to the spread of typhoid fever, particular attention has been paid to the bearing of sewage polluted water supplies on child mortality and diarrheal diseases. Some reference is made to these investigations in Hygienic Laboratory Bulletin No. 77, copy of which is inclosed herewith. A full report on the subject, however, is now being prepared for publication.

Experimental investigations of measles have been successfully conducted in the Hygienic Laboratory and are of special importance, because the disease is largely confined to children and is responsible directly or indirectly for a high death rate among them. During these experiments measles was for the first time transmitted to lower animals, which result is an essential step to further successful studies.

The laws and regulations in the United States relating to ophthalmia neonatorum have been brought together and an analysis made of them. This analysis is contained in a publication, copy of which is inclosed herewith. An analysis has likewise been made of the laws and regulations of the various States relating to the reporting of cases of sickness. This latter study has a special bearing on child welfare, since most of the data relate to contagious and infectious diseases to which children are specially liable. A copy of the bulletin containing these data is forwarded herewith.

In connection with recent epidemics of cholera in the Philippine Islands an officer of the service has made special investigations of the disease among children. The results of these studies prompted the same officer to undertake an exhaustive study of infant mortality in Manila; 48.8 per cent of the total deaths in that city is among infants under 1 year of age, many of them incorrectly diagnosed. As a result of these studies it was shown that the largest single factor in producing infant mortality in Manila was due to a preventable disease, which the officer referred to called "infantile beriberi."

Other investigations made of contagious and infectious diseases might be mentioned as applicable to the welfare of children. The health of this class of the population, especially within the first year of life, is largely dependent on their food supply and the hygiene of their surroundings. Among the most important of the above-mentioned investigations, therefore, are those relating to milk. All of these studies were made by medical officers of the service as a part of their regular duties. For this reason it is impracticable to give a definite statement of the cost of such investigations. The items of expense were for salaries, necessary traveling expenses, and a limited amount of laboratory and other supplies, some of which could subsequently be used in other investigations.

Opportunity is taken to invite attention to the importance of such studies in relation to the public health, and should Congress appropriate additional funds the investigations could be extended with great benefit to the country.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PICKETT].

[Mr. PICKETT addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Speaker, I know that two schools of political thought have grown up in this country with reference to the rights of the General Government as against the States. I am a good deal of a Federalist myself. I believe it is necessary that our Government should be an affirmative agency in the betterment of human conditions and the progress of the American people. It seems to me, from the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, that the same authority which authorizes these other bureaus is a sufficient constitutional authority for this. I am not a constitutional lawyer, and I have not seen this bill before, but I do regard it as vital to this country that we have the means of information as to what the rising generation of this country is doing, to know its habits, its thought, and its education, and to know where we are drifting as a people. We have not had a more important bill before this House at this session. If this Nation is to survive and its institutions endure we must not be blind to the welfare of the rising generation. There are dangerous tendencies already apparent to thoughtful people, and another 25 years may disclose a degeneracy in American citizenship not now foreseen. The moral and intellectual wellspring of our social and industrial life if pure must be kept so, and if not pure should be made so. You may say this is the work of the home, and, no doubt, that is of the first importance. But there is an essential and vital work to be done, not by the individual but collectively—that is, by the whole people in their sovereign capacity, both National and State. The first step in the direction of better conditions is information. We must ascertain the facts; we must first know the actual conditions. This bill merely improves the governmental machinery by which these facts are to be ascertained. The child life of to-day will be the real life of the Nation 25 years from now. The individual, the home, the State, and the Nation must all work to conserve this greatest of national resources—human character and energy—without which our wealth will turn to ashes and our national glory be but the hollow boast of a day. Greater than questions of tariff, of commerce, of mines, or mills or farms, is the question of our future national life and character.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
When wealth accumulates and men decay.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am for the purposes aimed to be accomplished by this bill. In so far as the Federal Government has power to do so, I favor the exercise of its power to protect the interests and promote the welfare of the children of this country.

I do not believe the phrase "all classes of our people" is wise. I do not believe we should formally recognize or declare that there are "classes" in this country. Nor do I believe a man's rights should be determined by the character of the house in which he lives. In lines 7, 8, and 9 we find the following provision:

But no official or agent or representative of said bureau shall, over the objection of the head of the family, enter any house used exclusively as a family residence.

Suppose a man lives in a boarding house; suppose he lives in a hotel; suppose he lives in the rear of his store or on the second floor above his place of business; is he to be deprived of the same protection against invasion as the man who can afford to live in an exclusive family residence?

Why not bar inspectors against entering "the home of any family," whether it be in a hotel, a residence, a boarding house, or a business house and residence combined?

As there is no chance under the rules to amend the bill, I shall vote for it, because I sympathize with its beneficent underlying purposes, but I believe it would be improved by the amendments I have outlined.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to establish in the Department of Commerce and Labor a bureau to be known as the children's bureau, which is to be charged to investigate and report upon "all matters pertaining to the welfare of children and child life among all classes of our people, and shall especially investigate the questions of infant mortality, the birth rate, orphanage, juvenile courts, desertion, dangerous occupations, accidents, and diseases of children in the several States and Territories," and the chief of the bureau is to publish from time to time the results of his investigations. The requisite machinery is provided.

I am in favor of this bill.

The average mortality in this country among infants under 1 year of age is woeful to contemplate. I have no doubt that, through the instrumentality of such a bureau, much can be accomplished for the health and safety of children, their protection from disease, and, perhaps, for their mental as well as their physical welfare.

Whatever helps the child helps the mother of the child. Whatever helps the mother and the child is helpful to the father, whose duty it is to support and care for them. In short, any measure having for its object the protection of children from disease and death is for the general welfare of all the people.

This bill is being considered under suspension of the rules, which does not permit of its amendment. If it were possible, I should like to strike out the words "among all classes of our people," occurring in the second line of the second page, as it is wholly unnecessary and, to my mind, very objectionable.

I do not believe in creating or recognizing "classes." We are legislating for all the people and for the children of all the people. We are not legislating for classes. Our Constitution and form of government treat all people as equal in opportunity and in claims for Government protection. Classes we do not recognize.

I am not disturbed about the constitutional authority of Congress to pass such a measure. Indeed, it is rather late to raise that question, after all the bureaus which have been created for various purposes. We have already a Bureau of Mines, a Weather Bureau, a Bureau of Animal Industry, a Bureau of Plant Industry, a Bureau of Chemistry, a Bureau of Soils, a Bureau of Entomology, a Bureau of Biological Survey, a Bureau of Manufactures, a Bureau of Labor, a Bureau of Fisheries—and I do not know how many other bureaus. They are all useful and amply justify their creation. There is as much authority for a children's bureau, and perhaps there is fully as much necessity for it. If it does not yield an immediate return in dollars and cents, it will yield an even more valuable return by improving the health of our children, reducing the mortality among them, and in helping to a stronger and healthier race of people. Nothing we can do here in Congress is of greater importance than that. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

[Mr. SISSON addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

[Mr. RAKER addressed the House. See Appendix.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question being taken; on a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 89, noes 11.

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 17, answered "present" 8, not voting 190, as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded. A quorum being present, the Doorkeeper was ordered to open the doors.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 3, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Postmaster General submitting estimate of deficiency in appropriation for City Delivery Service for fiscal year ended June 30, 1909 (H. Doc. No. 663); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, submitting claim adjudicated by the Chief of Engineers for damages rendered private property by Government boats used in river and harbor improvements (H. Doc. No. 664); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. HAMILTON of West Virginia, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 77) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan certain tents for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic encampment to be held at Pullman, Wash., in June, 1912, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 482), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 21821) to authorize the city of South Sioux City, in the State of Nebraska, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River between the States of Nebraska and Iowa, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 484), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22387) granting an increase of pension to Louis G. Murray; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 20934) granting an increase of pension to Lauderdale L. Tabor; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 21639) granting a pension to Bishop Karshner; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 22551) granting a pension to Richard E. Goodwin; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 19918) granting a pension to William Sullivan; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 20267) granting a pension to Adam Emmetsberger; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11228) granting a pension to Myrtle S. Bryan; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 18277) granting a pension to James V. Smith; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 21723) for the relief of Hiram Argersinger; Committee on Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 22760) to compel railroad corporations issuing mileage books to receive same for transportation on all lines owned, leased, or operated by such corporations; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CLAYTON: A bill (H. R. 22762) to authorize and regulate the issuance of search warrants for stolen or misappropriated property belonging to the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22763) prescribing conditions of bail bonds and recognizances and relating to proceedings in forfeiture; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 22777) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a Federal building at Sante Fe, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22778) providing for a site for a public building at Alamogordo, Otero County, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JAMES: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 286) authorizing the Secretary of War to use tents and rations for the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. RUSSELL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 287) authorizing the Secretary of War to use tents and rations for the relief of destitute persons in the district overflowed by the Mississippi River and its tributaries; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. VREELAND: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of New York, favoring the enactment of a law to protect migratory game birds; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DYER: A bill (H. R. 22761) granting an increase of pension to Emma C. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ADAIR: A bill (H. R. 22779) granting a pension to Martha J. McMiller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22780) granting a pension to John R. Perkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANDERSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 22781) granting an increase of pension to Henry J. Dayringer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 22782) to correct the military record of Jesse P. Dayton; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina: A bill (H. R. 22783) for the relief of Bethesda Baptist Church, of Bamberg County, S. C.; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CARTER: A bill (H. R. 22784) granting an honorable discharge to William Moran; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22785) granting an honorable discharge to Noah Abbott; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22786) for the relief of Sarah Jane Pirtle; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 22787) for the relief of William R. Price; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 22788) granting an increase of pension to Mary McCaskey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOREMUS: A bill (H. R. 22789) granting an increase of pension to Loviah S. Osborn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22790) granting an increase of pension to Ezra Craft; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 22791) for the relief of Carlos Sharpe; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22792) granting a pension to Christian Lederer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 22793) granting an increase of pension to James Seaton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GALLAGHER: A bill (H. R. 22794) granting a pension to Sophia M. Human; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
